When the idleness starts entering your soul, hiddenly, and it turns from the darkened ones behind your soul, and the house start being filling up with darkness, there will emerge these signs: you feel within you, secretly, that your faith weakens and you are too worried about the seen things, that your trust diminishes and you hurt your neighbor and the whole your soul and your mouth are filled up with contempt, and you tend with your heart to thoughts and feelings and in all the things you come across, you are against any man, or even against the All-High; you fear the hurting of your body, and by that you are dominated by your lack of courage all the time, and from time to time your soul meets the fear, to that you are afraid and you feel spied on yourself even by your own shadow. This is because you have covered the faith with the faithlessness. And we are speaking not about that faith that is the foundation of the general confession, but we are speaking about that power that upholds the mind with the light of the understanding and that wakes up within one's soul, through the witness of the conscience, much trust in God, so that the soul won't take care of himself but he will throw upon God his careless care in anything.

And when you go ahead, you will see these signs manifested in an unmediated manner within your soul. Then you will be strengthened in everything and you will be enriched in prayer, and the spring of the (spiritual) earning won't ever miss from your cogitation, in everything which you come across with. But you will still feel the weakness of the human nature and by each of those you guard on yourself against pride. On the other hand, your eyes will overlook the mistakes of your neighbor. And you will be filled up with the desire for getting out of your body, to the extent of your desire to reach the future things. And all the troubles happening to us, when they meet you in aa appearance of hidden manner, you reckon them as justified. You search in details the things from near to you, in order you to get rid of your self-appreciation by doing that. You will give confession and thanks for everything. These are the signs of them who take vigil and who guard on themselves and who persevere in quietude and who desire to reach the true living[76].

And they who are idle do not need these subtle signs of the traps of the falling, because they are far from the hidden virtues. When one of these starts emerging within your soul, you will be able to understand on the same instant what part you will have started leaning to. This is for you will be able to immediately know what sort that will be. May God bestow us the true knowledge! Amen.

To Them Who Appease on Themselves It Is Useful the Ceasing of the Damaging Worries, the Entrance and the Exit

He who worries about many things he won't be able to be gentle and peaceful, because of the images of the things which he reckons as necessary to him and which he is troubled with, they will force him to move among them and to occupy on himself unwillingly with them and so they will scatter his peace and his quietude. Therefore, the mons must place on himself before God's face and him to focus in an unchanged manner his eye on Him, if the monk wants to guard his mind and to clean up and to transform the small movement emerging within him and if he wants to learn how to peacefully discern among the things which com in or go out. And the many occupations of the monks are a sign of drowsiness regarding their assertiveness in working the commandments of Christ. They show the monks' mistakes regarding the godlike things.

Do not search for light within your soul without carelessness, neither search for peace and quietude in the drowsiness of your feelings. And if you occupy on yourself with diverse things, do not multiply your occupation lets your mind will be scattered when you will pray. This is because one cannot come close to God without the ceaseless prayer. And if you give to your mind another worry after the tiredness of the prayer you will cause to your mind its scattering into cogitation.

The tears and the slapping on the head during prayer, and the rolling on the floor with warmth, they will bring their warmth within the heart and the heart will fly in the worthy to be praised kidnapping towards God and it will shout out: "My soul got thirsted of You, You the strong and living God. When will I come and show myself to your face, Lord?" (Ps. 41: 3[77]). Only him who has drunk this wine and after that he missed it, only him know what wickedness he has fallen into and what has been taken away from him, because of his drowsiness[78].

Of, how damaging is the looking at and the talking to them who live in quietude! Verily, brothers, it is worse than to them who are far from quietude. This is because, as the harshness of the hails suddenly falling upon the tips of the plants it will wither and destroy the plants, likewise are the encounters with people, even if those encounters will be very short and seemingly useful, because of withering the flowers of the virtues which have been recently flourishing up out of the company of the quietude, and which dress ups with simplicity and with tenderness the tree of the soul planted near the water

[77] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 2: "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 41: 2: "My soul got thirsted of the living God; when will I come and show myself to the face of God?" (E. l. t.'s n.)

springs of the repentance. And as the harshness of the frost falling on the recently sprouted out plant will burn them, likewise will burn the encounter with people the root of the mind which the greenery of the virtues has started sprouting out from. And is the dialogue with them who restrain on themselves in a certain regard, but they still commit small mistakes in other regards, it will hurt the soul, how much more will hurt the soul the dialogue with the stupid and mindless, not to say worldly, and seeing them? This is because, as to the man of noble and honored lineage, when he gets drunk, this feature will be hidden away, and his state will be dishonored, and the honor is mocked by foreign thoughts entering to him through the power of the wine, likewise the righteousness of the soul will be disturbed by looking at the people and by dialoguing with the people; and the soul will forget about the duty of guarding on himself and it will be erased from the soul's cogitation the target of his will and it will be uprooted from within that soul the whole foundation of his worthy to be praised state.

So, if the encounters and the unrestrained looks happening to him who lives in quietude, or the coming close to them due to the desire for seeing and hearing the things entering the gates of the sight and of the hearing, they will reach to cause the straying and the disturbance of the cogitation at the godlike realities, and in a short time they will cause so much harm to the monk who restrains on himself, what will us say about the ceaseless meetings and about the long impeding they cause it?

In addition to those, also the steam arising from the stomach won't let the mind to receive the godlike knowledge, but it will darken the mind, like the mist raising up from the moisture of the ground it makes the air foggy. And the pride cannot see that it walks into darkness and it doesn't know the thoughts of the wisdom. This is because how could the pride know the things happening into its darkness? That's why, through its darkened thought, it raises above all the things, while being inferior and more helpless that all the things and not being able to find out the ways of our Lord. And the Lord hides His will form the pride, because the pride doesn't won't to walk the way of the humble. May the glory be forever of our God! Amen.

Word XIV

About the Change Appointed by God to Them Who Walk on the Way of the Appeasement

He who has accepted with his mind to live in quieted, let him organize his life so that to spend the rest of his days in the state of quietude. It can happen to you, as it is the habit into the state of quietude provided to you by the godlike grace, that inside your soul to be overflown the darkness and, like the sunrays are covered by the mist of the clouds coming out of earth, you too to be deprives, and a short while, of the spiritual comforting and the grace's light from within you to be covered by the cloud of your passions, and the producing-of-joy power to withdraw a little and your mind will be covered by an unusual fog. Do not allow yourself to get disturbed on those moments and so to help the nescience of your soul, but endure that and read the books of the teachers and force on yourself to prayer and ask for help. And the grace will immediately come to you, without you even noticing it. This is for the face of the earth is unveiled to the sunrays from under the darkness of the fog that masters upon it, likewise can the prayer to scatter away from within soul the clouds of the passions and to lighten up your mind with the light of the gladness and of the comforting. This light usually stretches also over our thoughts, especially when receiving power out of the godlike Scriptures and when it finds our mind shining into vigil[79]. This is for the continuous occupation with the writings of the saints will fill up our soul with a non-understood light and with the godlike gladness. And the glory to be of our God forever! Amen.

[79] He who takes vigil won't have the power to persevere in his vigil if he doesn't have God before him, or the depth of God's meanings and love. And these ones fill up our mind and heart with shininess and joy. But he who takes vigil he also prays. That's why it is said about prayer that it penetrates through the darkness set over the soul.

Word XV

About Them Who Appease on Themselves; When They Start to Understand where They Have Reached with Their Deed on the Infinite Sea, namely in the Peaceful Living; and When They Can Hope a Little for Their Toils Will Have Started to Bring Them Forth Fruits

I am going to tell you a thing, and do not doubt about it; do not despise either the other words of mine as belonging to someone too unimportant, for the things I show are true. This is because until now, the hidden things of yours have been serving to the world, namely you have been staying in the service of the worldly things and you have been doing the work of God only through your external man. But your internal man has been fruitless. This is because the fruits start from the tears. Only if you reach their land, you will know that your mind will have escaped the prison of this world and you will have set your foot on the road of the new age[80], and you have been started smelling that new and wonderful air. Then the tears will start flowing. This is for then the birth of the spiritual child will have come near[81]. This is for the grace, the general mother of all things, it hurries up to give birth within soul a godlike image according to the light of the future age. But when the time of the birth arrives, the mind starts moving in some realities from there, like the breath inhaled by the child inside his limbs, which he usually is nourished through. And because he doesn't easily endure what he is not accustomed to, the child immediately starts moving his body in a crying mixed with the wetness of the honey. And as the inside child is being nourished, the tears will increase in abundance[82]. This rule of the tears that I have been speaking about, it is not that done with interruptions within them who appease on themselves. For this comforting emerges from time to time, it can be had by anyone who lives in quietude: sometimes, when they are in a state of vie (contemplation), some other times when they understand the words of the Scripture; and some other times in the dialogue of the prayer. But I am speaking here about him who ceaselessly sheds tears, day and night.

[81] "The birth of the soul of him who sheds tears consists of feeling the state of our souls into the future age. Above he says: "the mother of everyone hurries up to give birth within soul to a godlike image matching the light of the future age", namely it thinks to embody within the soul a spiritual image, in order to mysteriously see the realities form the future age. And beneath, after tears, there is the peace; after the peace, the resting; after the resting, the view; after the view, the unveiling; after the unveiling, the godlike dwelling; and after that, there is the spiritual fruitfulness. Then he adds: "and this one feels the change it will receive the nature in its inner part of it, within soul, to the renewal of all things". This is for the whole creation will be renewed, according to eth word of Blessed Peter, who says: "We wait for new skied and for a new earth, according to His promise" (2 Pt. 3: 13). This birth was called by the Prophet with his loud voice as "ghost of salvation". This is for Isaiah says: "For your fear, Lord, I have taken into my womb and I felt the pains of the birth and I have given birth to ghost of salvation, whom I made on earth" (6: 18). So, this is the cleanness, out of the godlike bath of the tears. This grace is provided to us by the streams of tears and through this grace we feel the happy state form the future age even before us to be changed".

Anybody who has truly and exactly found out the truth of these two kinds (of tears) he has found it in state of quietude. His eyes reach to be as a water spring for two years of ever for longer. After that he will enter the peace of the thoughts. And form the peace of his thoughts he will enter that resting which Saint Paul spoke about (Hebr. 4: 3), as much as the nature can contain it. And from the resting of the peace, the mind will pass to seeing the mysteries, for the Ghost wills starts unveiling to the mind the godlike realities and God will dwell within him and God will produce within him the fruit of the Ghost and by that his inner nature will feel as receiving the future change in the general renewal, in a covered manner and as in a riddle. I have written these things in order I to remember them, and for everyone who reads this writing, as I received it from reading the Scriptures and from true mouths and a little from experiencing those, in order they to be of help to me through the prayers of them whom they will be beneficial to. This is for I have made much effort for that.

Listen again to what I am going to tell you now, and what I have learnt from a non-liar mouth. When you enter the land of the peace of your thoughts, the abundance of the tears will be taken away from you, and after that there will come to you the tears, with measure and at the due time. This is the undiminished truth, to say it shortly, as it is believed by the whole Church.

[82] The ceaseless and unforced tears are the sign of the mind's getting out to the new life, as downpayment for the future age.

Word XVI

About the Kinds of the Virtues

The ascesis if the mother of the holiness. And out of the last one it will be born the first tasting of the feeling of the mysteries of Christ, that is called as the firth step of the knowledge of the Ghost. But let no one delude on himself and hallucinate some spells. This is because the defiled soul won't ascend to the clean Kingdom, neither will such a soul be united with the ghosts of the saints. Gild up the beauty of your righteousness by tears and fasting and the quietude from within yourself. A small trouble for God is greater than a great thing dome without trouble. This is for it willingly tries the faith by love. And the state or resting is born out of the top of the conscience[83]. That's why, in troubles proved the saints their love for Christ, and not in resting. This is because that thing that is done without tiredness it is the righteousness of the worldly ones, who give alms out of the external things and who do not gain anything within themselves[84]. But you, the reader, you fight for following the example of the sufferings of Christ, in order you to be found worthy of tasting His glory. This is for if we suffer together, we will be glorified together. Christ won't be extolled with the mind if the body hasn't been suffering for Christ. So, he will be found worthy of the glory of God who despises the human glory. And his body will be glorified together with his soul. This is for the glory of God comes out of his obedience through righteousness to God. And the glory of the mind is the true view (contemplation) of God. This is for the true obedience is, at its turn, twofold: in deeds and in conscience. Therefore, when the body suffers, the heart suffers together with the body. If you do not know God, His love won't be able to move without you. And you won't be able to love God, [83] Out of the higher conscience, that one that knows that it must not get agitated by passing things.

[84] "He calls here as worldly them who cogitate at and who do the things of the world. There can be some righteousness within them too. For instance, they love and they do good to them who do good to themselves, and they lend to them whom they hope to take back from. But this righteousness is not well-received by God (Lk. 6: 32; Mt. 5: 20). And giving alms from exterior things, it means doing that in order us to be seen and extolled by people. And they who give alms for that they won't benefit anything of that. "Verily I say to you, they have taken their payment". (Mt. 6: 4).

if you cannot see Him. And seeing God comes out of knowing Him. This is for seeing God doesn't precede to knowing God.

Prayer

> Make me worthy, God, of knowing You and of loving You, not through the knowledge that is into the scattering of the mind, and that is born out of toil, but make me worthy of having that knowledge which the mind, by seeing You, it extolls with the sight Your nature with, that one that removes the feeling of the world from cogitation. Make me worthy of being elevated form the seeing through will, that gives birth to hallucinations, and to see You while I am forced by the tie placed on me by cross, through the second crucifixion of the mind, that rests form the work of the thoughts into ceaselessly seeing You, a sight that is above-nature. Make growing within me Your love, in order I to come on the traces of Your love, existing the world.
> Sow in me the understanding of Your humbleness manifested by You while living on earth, under the cover You have made out of our limbs, through the mediation of the Holy Virgin, for, by ceaselessly and non-forgettingly remembering Her, I to receive with pleasure the humbleness of my nature.

There are two ways which one can climb the cross into: one is the crucifixion of the body, and the second one is the climbing to view. The first one is the deliverance of passions, and the second one is the working of the deeds of the Ghost. This is because the mind won't obey if the body hasn't obeyed firstly. The kingdom of the mind supposes the crucifixion of the body. And the mind won't obey God, if the free will doesn't obey the rationality. It is a difficult thing to entrust high things to him who still is a beginner and a child with his age. "Woe to you, city, when your emperor is young" (Eccl. 1: 16). He who submits on himself to God, he has come closer to the power to submit everything to him. This is for in the self-knowledge there is the fulness of the knowledge of all things. And in the obedience of your soul there is comprised the obedience of everything. When the humbleness masters your life, your soul will obey you and together with your soul all the things will obey you[85]. This is for within your soul will be born the peace from God. As long as you are outside this peace, you will ceaselessly we upset not only by passions, but also by all sorts of happenings. Verily, Lord, if we do not humble on ourselves, you will continue to humble us[86]. And the true humbleness is the daughter of the knowledge. And the true knowledge is the daughter of the trials[87].

Word XVII

Interpretation of the Diverse Virtues. And about the Strength and about the Discerning of Each of Them

The bodily virtue cleans up the body of the lusts from within body, in the state of the quietude. And the virtue of the mind humbles the soul and it cleans up the soul of rude and perishing thoughts, in order the mind not to passionately think those thoughts, but in order the mind rather to move itself in the contemplation that is characteristic to it. This contemplation (understanding) characteristic to the soul is the emptying of the mind[88] that is called as immaterial sight. And this is the spiritual virtue. This is for it elevates the mind form the earthly realities and it bring the mind closer to the first contemplation of the ghost and it directs the mind towards God and towards contemplating (seeing) the non-comprised glory

[85] It is worthy of being remarked this tying of all things to the soul. He who knows on himself he knows all the things within himself. He who controls him soul he will control all the things together with his soul. All the things are connected to man. And that man who controls on himself he controls all the things. And the man controls on himself when he obeys to God, Through God, therefore, the man controls all the things.

[86] God humbles us through troubles and passions, because we do not humble on ourselves willingly. God wants our humbleness. Through humbleness, paradoxically, we master upon all things, for in God we are free of all things.

[87] The knowledge is understood as a gift gained through the lived life, through its difficulties and by enduring those difficulties. It is an existential meaning of the knowledge. Of course, it is about man's self-knowledge, and not about knowing the objects.

[88] It is about "emptying" the mind of any thoughts as these. But as the mind cannot stay unoccupied with something, then the mind will occupy on itself with seeing the endless God, regaining for itself too the feature of the infinite.

that is the movement of the thoughts towards the greatness of His nature. That separates the mind from this world and from feeling this world. And by this we are strengthened in the hope sown within us and in the entrustment found in it. This is the entrustment which the apostle spoke about, or the confirmation which the mind enjoys of, in an understanding manner[89], through the new hope promised to us (Gal. 5: 8). But what are these and what each of them is like, we are going to tell in the followings.

First, about that living according to God, that one with the body. Bodily deeds are called those done for the cleaning of the body through the work of the virtue; they are shown deeds which somebody cleans on himself of the uncleanness of his body.

And the living through cogitation is the work of the heart, ceaselessly done with the care for the judgment or for the justice of God and for the judgments God will issue, and with the ceaseless prayer of the heart and with the thought at the providence and at the care of God shown in this world for each one individually and for all together. This living consists also of taking heed at the hidden passions, lets they would occur in the hidden and spiritual side. This work of the heart is therefore what it is called living through cogitation. In this work of the living through cogitation, which is called souly doing, the heart will be thinned and separated from the partaking to that disorganized life that is contrary to nature. Starting from here, the mind will understand and it will discern in the contemplation of the created realities, those which have been created for the need and for the growth of the body and the use of which give power to the four natural elements form the body[90].

[89] It is an understanding that is a confirmation, surely, or a sight, or a touching and a living of the understood realities.

[90] "The fact that the things created towards the need and the growth of the body, namely the foods and the drinks and the others requires for the need of the body, taken in a due measure and at the due time and by choosing them through judgment, they will bring powers to the natural elements which compose our body, according to each one's quantity and to the equilibrium among them, we are though by the outside philosophy. Maybe this is called by the saint "living with the mind and souly doing". This is for the philosophy truly is an exercise of the mind and cogitation and contemplation that thinness up the heart and it separates it from the disordered and contrary to nature life, namely the passionate and animalic life… And it is obvious that the ethical philosophy speaks a lot also about providence and about guarding against passions. That's why the psalmist says that God will

And the spiritual living is a doing without senses and it is described by the fathers. When this one is received by the minds of the saints, the seeing of things into substance and the thickness of the body will be removed. Since then, the sight will become understanding. This is for the seeing into hypostasis and into substance it is called as seeing the prime creation of the nature[91]. From this seeing into hypostasis, he will easily get elevated him who toils to the knowledge of that unified living, which means wondering of God into the understanding of the seen realities. This one will see in advance that high state of the future goods, which is bestowed into the freedom of the immortal life, in that living from after resurrection. This is for the human nature wont' cease there to forever wonder of God, by no longer cogitating at anything from the created realities. This is for, if something among these had been like God, the mind would have moved towards that something, better said sometimes towards God and sometimes towards that something like God. But since the whole beauty of the created things is inferior to the beauty of God, how could the mind, with its sight, to get out of the seeing of God? So, what? Will the mind be saddened by thinking at dying? Will the body's burden upset that mind? Or will the memory of the committed deeds will upset that mind? Or the nature's needs? Or the dangers? Or the unnoticed scattering? Or the engulfing into natural elements? Or the meeting of another? Or the boredom, or the tiresome labor of the body? By no means. This is because despite all of these taking place in this world, at the time when the cover of the passions is being removed from the mind's eyes, and at the time when the mind looks at the glory of God, that mind will get angry if we do not take learning (Ps. 2: 1 (in KJB we have: "WHY do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?"; in ROB we have: "What the nations got furious for, and what the peoples cogitated vanities?" (E. l. t.'s n.))), and the Apostle bears witness that that can make us wise towards salvation" (2 Tim. 3: 15).

[91] The note from the Greek text means, through the "hypostatical seeing" (in substance), that sight of the soul while still united with the body and composing with the body a sole hypostasis. When the thickness of the body ceases, the soul's sight becomes spiritual. But there can be also about seeing the things in their substance, and not in their rationalities unified in God. The hypostatical seeing is, in this case, the seeing of the creation, of the "prime nature", for in its first form in creation too there prevailed the substance. Only in the creation's future form (the second one), the Ghost will overwhelm the material substance.

immediately fall into kidnapping[92]. But if God hadn't placed a border to this (spiritual) life, for how long would the mind have been tarrying within them? And if God had allowed it to the man during this life, the man wouldn't have ever come out from looking at those. And how much more the man won't come out of there, where the material realities no longer are and where the virtue is borderless? Still, there we will have also the things in hypostasis (in substance), but inside the imperial courts, if we will be found worthy of them by our living[93].

So, how would the mind be able to come out again and how could the mind get far from that wonderful view, in order the mind to fall into another occupation? Woe to us, because we do not know our souls, neither what living we have been called to, but instead we reckon that this live of the helplessness and the state of the realities form this life and the tribulation of the world and the world's evil things and delectations are something valuable.

Prayer

But, oh Christ Who are the only powerful, blessed is him whose help comes from You, and him who has placed high spiritual values into his heart. You, Lord, turn away our deeds from the world, for us to desire You, until we will see what the world is and we will no longer believe the shadow as being the truth. You Who have created us, You renew our mind, Lord, and our endeavor before our death, so that at the time of our exit us to know how it was our entrance in and our exist from this world, until we have accomplished the things which we have been called according to Your will int his life and after that us to hope that we will receive within our full of [92] The passions are a thickening of the material cover placed over mind. Better said, the matter is created for being overwhelmed by spirit and to become, by that, transparent. But the passions impede the matter to be crosses through by spirit.

[93] The Greek text is very altered. That's why it allows diverse interpretation, as it is shown in the footnotes to it. Therefore, also the Romanian translation can differ. By and large, we think that Saint Isaac reckons that the things, despite no longer being seen there in their substance, they won't lose this substance, but this substance will be covered by the light of the "imperial courts", or of God. By having there the borderless virtue, the power of our sight will be borderless too, without the border imposed by the body. This is for the virtue is a removal of the thick cover from over the mind, form over the soul, or the transparency inside us, one that had not end. By and large, in this Word the author speaks about three kinds of living (or virtues) according to God: with the body, with the cogitation or with the soul, and that one with the ghost or spiritual.

entrustment mind the great goods, on which, according to the promise of the Scriptures, You love has prepared them for us at the second creation of the renewed world. May us guard their remembrance, secretly, by faith!

About the Cleanness of the Body, or the Soul, and of the Mind

The cleanness of the body is the piousness achieved through the deliverance from the defilement of the flesh. The cleanness of the soul means to be the soul free of the hidden passions which move in cogitation. The cleanness of the mind will be shown in the unveiling of the mysteries. This is for then the mind will be cleaned up of all the things which fall under senses, in the way of their thickness[94]. The little children are clean with their body and dispassionate with their soul, but nobody calls them as clean with their mind. So, the cleanness of the mind is the consummation through the living into the heavenly sight characteristic to those groups moving outside senses, through spiritual power, in the countless wonders of that heavenly world. The living of this wonder, they share it among themselves, in their unseen serving, those thin groups, who have the understanding of the unveilings, by being in a connection in their constant changing[95]. And may our God make us too worthy of always seeing Him with our emptied mind, and after the life from here, in an unmediated manner, for ever and ever. Amen.

[94] The cleaning up of the body of passions, as thickening of the material thickness, then the cleaning up of the soul of the passionate thoughts; finally, the cleaning up of the mind of the itself material substance of the world, perceived through senses as thoughts. But by removing this thickness, there will appear in front of the mind the mysteries of the godlike world. So, the cleaning up of the mind is not only something negative, but it is also something positive: it is the seeing of the godlike horizon that is unveiled to that cleaned up mind.

Word XVIII

How Big is the Measure of the Knowledge and How Big Are the Measures of the Faith

There is a knowledge that precedes the faith and there is a knowledge that is born out of faith. The knowledge that precedes the faith is the natural knowledge. And the knowledge that is born out of faith is the spiritual knowledge. And there is a natural knowledge that discerns between good and bad. This is also called as natural discernment. By it we can discern between good and bad in a natural manner, without benefiting of a learning. But this gains growth and adding by learning. There is no one not having this natural discernment. This rational soul's natural power of knowledge consists of discerning between good and bad which ceaselessly move within the soul. They who miss this, they are inferior to the rational nature in order His rational creatures to be honored with. And they who have lost this knowledge which they discern between good and bad through, they are condemned by the prophet who said: "The man didn't understand the honor he was in" (Ps. 48: 13[96]).

The honor of the rational nature is the discernment between good and bad. And rightly so, they who have lost this discernment they have resembled to the non-understanding animals, which have no rationality or discernment power. By this power we are able to find out wat towards God. This is the natural knowledge that precedes the faith, and that is the way towards God. By natural knowledge we can discern between good and bad and we can receive the faith through it. So, itself the power of the nature bears witness that the man must believe in Him Who brought all the realities to existence, and to believe the words of His commandments and to fulfill them. And out of faith is born the fear of God. And when the man follows to it a little by hid deeds, and when he will ascend a little through work, there will emerge the spiritual knowledge, which I told about that it is born out of faith.

[96] In KJB we have: Ps. 49: 12: "Nevertheless man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish."; in ROB we have: Ps. 48: 12: "And the man, while being into honor, he didn't understand; he joined the mindless beasts and he resembled to them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

The natural knowledge, that is the discernment between good and bad is sown by God into nature, it persuades us to believe in God Who brought all realities to existence. And the faith produces within us the fear and it forces us to repent and to work the good deeds. And by this the man is given the spiritual knowledge, which is the feeling of the mysteries and that give birth to faith out of the true sight (contemplation). So, not out of the sure and simple faith will be born the spiritual knowledge, but the faith gives birth to the fear of God and out of the fear of God, when we are found worthy to work through it, namely out of the work of fear of God within us, it will be born the spiritual knowledge. This is for, as Saint John Chrysostom said, when somebody achieves a will that obeys to the fear of God and to the right-reckoning, that man will soon receive the unveiling of the hidden realities. And by the unveiling of the hidden realities, he means the spiritual knowledge.

But not the fear of God gives birth to this spiritual knowledge (this is because what is not hidden within nature it cannot be born), but this knowledge is given as a gift of the work out of the fear of God. When you will study well the work of the fear of God, you will see that that it is the repentance and into repentance there is the spiritual knowledge. About That one I said that its downpayment is received in Baptism and that this gift we have received it by repentance. So, the gift which we told about that we receive it by repentance, it is the spiritual knowledge, or the spiritual knowledge is the gift give us through the work of the fear.

And the spiritual knowledge is the feeling of the hidden realities[97]. This is for, when somebody feels these: unseen and much-overwhelming goods, he will give this feeling the name of spiritual knowledge. And out of this feeling there is born another faith, that is not opposite to the first faith, but it will strengthen that first faith. I call this faith by sight (by contemplation). Until here it has been the hearings and now it is the sight. And the sight is surer than the hearing.

All of these are born out of that (natural) knowledge which discerns between good and evil, and that is sown within nature. And this is the good seed of the virtue, as it was said before. But when we cover up this natural knowledge with our loving-of-pleasure will, we will fall off all these goods.

And this natural knowledge is followed by a pricking of the conscience, a ceaseless remembrance of the death, a worry that torments us until we leave this life[98]. After this, it will come to us the grief, the sadness, the fear of God, the natural shame, the sorrow for the previous sins, the striving for the due deeds, the remembering of the general road and of the victuals for our travel and of the ask directed towards God with crying, in order us to enter this gate that is the crossing above all the nature, the despising of the world and the much struggle for virtue. All of these are in the natural knowledge.

Let them anybody to liken his deeds to these ones. And if the man is in these, he will walk the way of the nature. And when the man is elevated above these and when he reaches the love, he will be elevated above nature and the struggle and the fear and the tiredness and the toil will leave him in all aspects. This is for these ones belong to the natural knowledge. And we find these within us when we do not cover up this natural knowledge with our loving-of-pleasure will. And the natural knowledge is within us until we reach the love that liberates us from all of these.

Out of the said things, let the man look at himself and to examine which are the deeds he walks in: in those contrary to nature, int hose according to nature, or in those from above-nature. Out of their kinds one can find limpidly and quickly how he governs his whole life. And when he is not in those called by us as according-to-nature, as we showed them, and he is neither in those above-nature, it will be obvious that he will have been thrown into the ones form bellow-nature. And forever be the glory of our God! Amen.

[98] "Three or the man's states, as the saint is going to tell a little further: that according to nature, that contrary to nature, and that above-nature. When, by falling off the nature, we end to be in the contrary-to-nature state, the natural knowledge ceaselessly pricks our conscience and it keep ceaselessly awake the remembrance of the death and a worry that torments our soul until we will get out of it, namely until we will get out of this contrary-to-nature state and until we come back to that according-to-nature state. Then, again, the natural knowledge gives birth to trouble and to sadness and to the fear of God and to the shame, and to the striving, and to the remembrance of the death and to the taking care for the victuals for our travel. And it is even persuading us to ask from God, with much crying and tears "to enter that gate", namely to enter that above-nature state".

About Faith and about the Humble Cogitation

You all-tiny creature, do you want to find the life? Keep within you the faith and the humbleness, for through them you will find the mercy, the help, and the words spoken within heart by God, and you will also find Him Who guard you into hidden and Who remains with you manifestly[99]. Do you want to earn these which are blessings of the life[100]? Walk before God with simplicity and not into knowledge. This is because to simplicity it follows the faith, and to the thinness and to the dispute of the thoughts it follows the self-appreciation. And this one is followed by the getting far from God. When you come before God through prayer, you will make on yourself in your thinking as an ant and as the creatures crawling on earth and as a worm, and as a stuttering little-child. And to not say before God something bases on knowledge, but you come closer to God and walk before Him as you would have a little-child thinking, in order you to be found worthy of the parental taking-of-care that id directed from the parents towards their sons who still are little children. This is for it was said: "guarding of the little children is the Lord" (Ps. 114: 6[101]). The little child gets close to the snake and grabs the snake by its neck and he won't be harmed by that snake. The little child walks naked the whole winter. When other walk dressed up and covered and the cold still penetrates through all their limbs, the little child sits naked on the cold day, when is frost and ice, the little child doesn't suffer, for his innocent body is covered with another unseen coat through that hidden care that upholds his delicate limbs in order no harm to come close to them from anything.

[99] By faith and humbleness, we will feel the word of God spoken by Him on each moment within our heart, namely not like some words uttered yore by God and not detached from Him. That's why, we feel God Himself as Person too, as talking to us. We o feel God, hiddenly, as talking to us, and we feel God manifestly, by helping us in our deeds.

[100] The word of God felt within heart are therefore blessings of God, addressed to us now and which uphold our life with the power of God communicated through His words.

[101] In KJB we have: Ps. 116: 6: "The Lord preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and he helped me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 114: 6: "He Who guards the little children is the Lord; I was humiliated and I was delivered." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Do you believe now that there is a hidden taking-of-care, through which the delicate body, easily exposed to any harm because of its delicateness and weakness, it still is guarded among the unfavorable circumstances, and it is not allowed to suffer from those? This is for the Lord says: "The Lord guards the children". And not only the children, who have small bodies, but also the wisemen from the world who have left their knowledge and they lean on the simple wisdom, and who have made on themselves children in their will, and to they have learnt that wisdom that cannot be learnt through toils. Those are they whom the wiseman in the godlike realities, Paul, said: "He who reckons about himself that he is wise in this world let him make on himself insane, in order him to reach to be wise" (1 Cor. 3: 18).

So, you ask from God to give you to reach at the measure of the faith. And if you feel the delectation of the faith within your soul, it won't be hard to me to tell you again that nothing will impede you to reach at Christ. And it won't be difficult you to be kidnapped all the time from the earthly realities and to forgive about this helpless world and about the memories of the world's things. You pray, unhesitatingly, for this, and beg for it warmly, and ask if with much zeal, until you will receive it. And neither you will weaken that effort even after you have received that. And you will be found worthy of that if you, firstly, strive to cast your worry upon God with faith, and if you change your worry for the taking-care from God. And when you will see that your will trusts God more than yourself, with the whole cleanness of your thought, and when you see that you strive to hope in God more than in your soul, then will come and dwell within you that power unknown to you. And you will feel the power of Him Who is within you, in a doubtless manner; that power that many of them who feel it enter the fire and they do not fear trampling on water and they do not doubt their thought by reckoning that they will sink. This is for the faith strengthens the soul's senses and the soul will feel Somebody unseen Who convinces the soul not to take in account the fearsome things neither to look at some view that exceeds the senses[102].

Maybe you reckon that that spiritual knowledge it received by somebody in the souly knowledge? But it is not only impossible that somebody to receive the spiritual knowledge into the souly knowledge, but he won't even be able to feel it with the feeling[103], as they cannot be found worthy of it, they who strive impropriating it in their souly knowledge.

Thus, if some of them want to come closer to that knowledge of the Ghost, they won't be able to come closer to it at all, until they forsake the souly knowledge and the whole occupation with its subtleties and with its very intricate (complicate) craftsmanship and if they do not turn back to their children-like souls. This is because of experiencing strong impediments by being accustomed to it, until they will remove it little by little. The spiritual knowledge is simple and doesn't shine through souly thoughts[104]. Until the cogitation is not freed of the many ideas, and until the cogitation hasn't come to the simplicity of the cleanness, he won't be able to receive the knowledge of the Ghost. The step of this knowledge consists of feeling the delectation of the future age. That's why, you must despise the many ideas! This is for this souly knowledge cannot know something else that ideas; it cannot know what is received into the simplicity of the cogitation[105], according to Him Who said: "If you do not turn back and become like the little children, you won't be able to enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Mt. 18: 3). But many do not reach this simplicity but they trust their good deeds, by reckoning that through those good deeds a place in the Kingdom of Heavens will be prepared to them. This is the way they understand the Blessings from the Gospel[106]. They say that the Lord showed those good deeds as diverse, so that we could see that He made us known many types of living

[104] The souly knowledge, regardless how complicate, it moves among the realities of the world, or even when it talks to God it moves in definitions and subtleties construed about God form distance. The spiritual knowledge is the unmediated experience of God. This knowledge about God out of experience it cannot occur except into that soul cleaned up of any ideas which keep the man into the things thought by him and in separation from God. Through this knowledge one can perceive the life of the future age and one can speak spiritually about that.

[105] "Perhaps this word wants to say that they who have the soul's knowledge, namely the wisemen according to the body, except many syllogisms and conclusions do not receive anything from the things understood by them who have achieved, through the simplicity into Christ, the spiritual knowledge". The spiritual knowledge it means knowing by experience the work of God. Only thus can be truly known, and not through the multitude of ideas construed by us, ideas that rather interpose between us and God.

[106] By this, Saint Isaac doesn't contest the value of the good deeds, but the good deeds do not have an intrinsic value, but only if they transform the man or make the man better.

according to those Blessings. They say that to each man, according to all measures he walks on any way towards the Lord, the Lord will open him a door towards the Kingdom of Heavens. But that spiritual knowledge won't be received by somebody except if he turns and become like a little child. And out of this one can feel that delectation of the Kingdome of Heavens.

The Kingdom of Heavens they say (the saints) that is the spiritual sight. And this is not in the deeds of the thoughts, but it can only by tasted by grace. And until the man doesn't clean up on himself, he won't be able to hear about it (with his understanding), because no one can achieve that by learning. If you reach, oh, my son, to the cleanness of your heart, by faith, one achieved by leaving in peace far from people, and if you forgive about the knowledge of this world, in order you not to feel it anymore, the spiritual knowledge will suddenly occur before you, without any research regarding it. "Stick, he says, a pillar and pour oil on it and you will find a treasure within your bosom". But if you are hold back by the chain of the souly knowledge, it won't be wrong if a tell you that it is easier you to unchain on yourself from the iron chains than from it. And you won't ever escape the traps of the straying, and you won't eve achieve the daring and the trust towards Him, but you will constantly go towards the edge of the sword and you won't even be able to get rid of grief. You pray in weakness and simplicity, in order you to live rightly before God, and you will be worriless. This is for, as the shadow follows the body, likewise the mercy follows the humbleness. Som if you want to walk into these, you won't stretch your hand to the helplessness thoughts, by any means. And even if you are surrendered and scarred by all the harms and evil things and dangers, you won't be worried about those, neither will you take them in account.

If you have believed once in the Lord Who suffices for your guarding, and if you walk on Lord's traces, you won't ever be worried again by some of these, but you will tell to your soul: "It is enough to me Him Whom I have surrendered my soul to. It is not me here. He knows"[107]. And then you will see the wonderful realities of God. You will see how close is Him always, in order Him to deliver them who fear Him; and hos He surrounds them and receives them with His taking-of-care. You mustn't doubt about Him, by reckoning that He is not present, for Your guardian Who is with you, He doesn't look with human eyes. And He often unveils on Himself even to the human eyes, in order to encourage you.

[107] When you throw all your worries upon God, you will be able to say: it is not me here, for it is not me worrying about the thing I need. He knows and He fulfills.

When the man casts away from him any seen help and any hope in people and when he follows to God faithfully and when he looks at God with his heart, then the grace will immediately come and unveil him his helping power in many ways. In the first place, in the shown things and in the things referring to body, showing him help by His taking-of-care, so that he will be able to feel in these even more the power of His taking-of-care regarding him. And by seeing these in the shown things, he will be assured about the hidden things too, as he owes to be in his child-like cogitation and behavior. And he will be assured that his need will be satisfied without his deed or care. And this helps him crossing over many happenings which come upon him, often full of dangers, without him seeing those. This is for the grace unnoticeably banishes those away from him, in a very wonderful manner, and the grace guards him like a mother who stretches her wings over her chicks, so that no danger will come close to them; and it will show him that his perdition was near to him but he has still remained unharmed. So, the grace accustoms him also to the hidden realities and it unveils him the trap of the reckonings and of the difficult thoughts, which are non-understandable. And thus, he will easily find their meaning and their connections and their delusion and on which one he has attached on himself, and how the thoughts are born one out of another and how they together destroy the soul.

And he will shame in his eyes all the devil's traps and the dwelling of the thoughts, and he will bring understanding within himself, in order him to know the future things. And it will make to occur in its simplicity a hidden light, so that to be able to understand in all things the meaning of the subtlest thoughts and it will show him as with the finger what he could suffer if he didn't know those. And then it will be born within him, out of this, the thought that each small of big thing must be asked for, by him, in his prayer addressed to his Maker.

And when the godlike grace strengthens his thought through all of these, in order him to trust God, he starts entering, gradually, in trials. This is for God allows to be sent him trials according to his measure, in order him to be able to endure their burden. And even in trials it comes close to him the help in a felt manner, in order him to have courage, until he will get gradually accustomed and he will achieve the wisdom and so he will be able to despise his enemies, by trusting God. This is for it is impossible him to get wise without these in his spiritual fights and him to know his care-Taker and him to feel his God and his faith in God to strengthened within him in hiddenly, except though the trials he has received.

But when the grace sees that it has started to occur a little in his thought the self-appreciation and he has started thinking something big about himself, the grace will immediately allow the trials coming upon him to get stronger, until he will know his weakness and until he will try to achieve God into humbleness. And by this the man comes to the measures of the consummate man into the faith and into the hope into the Son of God and he will ascend to love. This is for the love of God I it will be shown wonderful to the man, when the man is among circumstances which cut off any hope of his. In those God shows His power that saves the man. This is for the man won't even know the godlike power when he is in peace and at large. And GO has never shown His work in a felt manner except in the land of the peace and in wilderness and in placed where lack any encounters with the people and which lack the disturbance coming from the together-living with people.

Do not wonder when, by setting a beginning to the virtue, there will spring out harsh and big troubles against you from all quarter. This is because of not being reckoned as virtue that one that is not accompanied by hardships in working it. This is for itself the name of the virtues comes from here, as Saint John said: "It is usual to come upon virtues the hardships. And it is worthy to be despised that virtue that is accompanied by peace". This is for Saint Mark the Monk said: "All the done virtue ids called as cross, when it fulfills the commandment of the Ghost. That's why, let all of them who live in ascesis to live in the fear of the Lord and into Jesus Christ they will be persecuted" (2 Tim. 3: 12). This is for he says: "If somebody want to follow Me, let him reject on himself and take his cross and follow Me" (Mk. 8: 34). If one doesn't want to live in peace, but he loses his souls for Me, he will find his soul. That's why he has taken in before you and he has placed your cross before you, in order you to choose the death against you and so you will persuade your soul to follow Him.

There is nothing stronger than not having hope (in the earthly ones). This cannot be defeated by anything, either from the left or from the right. The greatest courage will be had by that monk who has cut off from his mind the hope in this life. Then there won't be any enemy to stop him in his way and there won't be any trouble whose gravity to weaken up his thought, because any trouble that can come upon him still will be bellow death. And he has accepted to receive the death. If everywhere and in everything an at any time and in everything you want to do, you set as your target in your thought to endure the trouble, not only that you will be courageous and tireless in fighting any hardship, but by the power of your thoughts will run away from your all your feelings of fear which scare you and which usually are born within man out of the thoughts which tend to peace. And all the difficult and harsh things which happen to you, they will seem to you as easy and facile. And often the things coming to you will be contrary to your troubles expected by you, and it might be that no troubles will happen to you. You know that the hope to the peace always removes form withing people any thought as great and good works of the virtues. And they who take care in this world of the things of their body, they won't be able to reach the consummation of their will, if they do not reckon in their cogitation that is better to them to endure the hardships. And again, for the experience bears witness about this, we do not need to prove it by words. Among each generation of people since now, we cannot see anything else weakening the people so that they not to be victorious and not to be deprived of the good things, except by this. That's why we also say it briefly, that one doesn't despise the Kingdom of Heavens except by trusting the things from here. And he doesn't suffer only this, but harsh troubles and hard trials will be prepared to each man who fulfills his will and whose thoughts go and move towards this. This is because of him being guided by his lust.

Who doesn't know that the birds are caught in the snare when they search for resting? Won't be our knowledge inferior to that of the birds by the similar things happening to us in the hidden things, or by the things coming upon us un an unveiled manner in some aspects, or in some places, or in other which the devil hunts us through, since the beginning, by the promise of and by the thought at resting?

But lo that, by the nature of that thought that wants to run on the line of the word, we have deviated from the purpose declared by us at the beginning of our word. This is for we have started to show that all the time we must think at all troubles coming upon us in all things which we want to start with, our road towards our Lord, and in our advancing towards the end we must zealously lean on ourselves on that beginning. But for how many times does the man ask on himself when he wants to start a thing for the Lord: it is there any resting in this? Or it is possible I to do that easily, without toil? Or it is in this some trouble that will cause pain to my body? Don't we search for the resting? What do you have to say, man? Do you want to ascend to heavens and to achieve there the Kingdom of God and the partaking with Him and the resting of the happiness from there and the partaking with the angels and that life without death, but you still ask if this road is tiresome? Behold a bewildering thing: They who want the things of the present life which disintegrate, they cross the fearsome waves of the sea and they dare to start traveling on harsh paths, and they still don't want to know that there is a tiredness sin those things and a sadness in the things which they want to do. And we ask in all places about resting. But if we want all the time to start walking on the road of the crucifixion, we will understand that any hardship will be easier than this.

Is it there anyone who is not totally convinced that nobody has ever obtained the victory in war, that nobody has even received the unshown crown, that nobody has reached to fulfill this desire, which is one among those worthy of praising, or that nobody has served something from among the godlike things, or nobody has ever received a virtue among those virtues worthy of praising, if he hasn't firstly despised the troubles and banished from near him the thought urging him to rest and that gives birth to idleness, to hesitation, and to fear, out of which comes the drowsiness in all things?

When the mind aspires to virtue, the shown senses, namely the sight, the hearing, the smelling, the tasting, and the touching, they won't allow to be themselves defeated by opposite, foreign, and different from the usual ones, and over the border of the natural power hardships. And when the natural wrath does its work at its appropriate time, the body's life will be more despise than the garbage. When the heart zealously beats withing body, that body won't get sad in troubles, neither that body will shun the troubles because of fear, but the mind will uphold that body in all trials so that that body to remain steadfast in its perseverance. Let's therefore strengthen the zeal of our ghost for the will of Jesus and the whole idleness will be banished away from us, because of out of idleness is born within our though the whole carelessness. This is for the zeal gives birth to daring and to the power of the soul and to the endeavor of the body. What power will the devils have if the soul moves his zeal powerfully against them? The urge towards work it is called as the daughter of the zeal. And when the work passes its power into deed, it will strengthen all the force within soul, and it makes that force fearless. And themselves the crows of the confession received by heroes and by martyrs in their perseverance, they are achieved through these two things: by zeal and by the good urge, which are born out of the power of the natural wrath. This is for they reach to be dispassionate in the awful pain of the torments[108]. May God gives us too such an urge, in order us to be well-pleasant to Him! Amen.

How Much Honor Achieved the Humble-Cogitation and How Much Higher Its Step Is

I want to open my mouth, brothers, and to tell you about the high theme of the humble-cogitation. But I am getting full of fear, as one who knows that I am going to speak about God Himself, in the way of my words. Actually, the humble-cogitation is the coat of God. This is for the Word by embodying on Himself, He put the humble-cogitation on and through this humble-cogitation He spoke to us while bearing our body. And everyone who has put on the coat of the humble-cogitation, he has truly become like Him Who descended from His height and Who hid the power of His greatness and Who covered His glory into the humble-cogitation, in order the creation not to be burnt by seeing Him. This is because the creation couldn't have looked at Him if He had not taken a part of it and if He hadn't talked to the creation; neither could have the creation listened to the words of His mouth face to face[109].

This is because neither the sons of Israel could have heard His voice when He spoke them out of the cloud. And that's why He told to Moses: "Let God to speak through You and you to tell His words, so that not to talk God to us and us to die" (Exod. 20: 19). So, how could have the creation received His view? "This is because so fearsome is the view of God, so that the mediator said: (I am full of fear and of tremble" (Acts 7: 32). This is for the power of His glory was shown on Mount Sinai. And the mount was smoking and trembling because of the fear of His unveiling, so that the wild beasts which came near to the lowest parts of the mountain died. And the sons of Israel prepared on themselves by washing on themselves up, according to Moses's commandment, for three days, in order they to be worthy of listening to the voice of God and to be worthy of seeing God's unveiling. And when the time came, they couldn't stand the sight of His light and the power of His thunder voice.

But now, when His grace has been pored over the world by His coming, he didn't descend in earthquake, neither in fire, nor in fearsome and powerful voice, but as in a smooth rain and as in a droplet smoothly falling on the ground. And He showed on Himself talking to us in another manner. This happened when He covered His glory as a treasure, under the cover of His body, and He talked to us from among us, through that cover composed by His will out of the bosom of the Virgin and Birth Giver of God Mary[110], in order us by seeing Him as belonging to our kind and talking to us, us not to get scared by seeing Him.

That's why everyone who has put on the coat which Jesus showed on Himself in, into the body which dressed the Creator up, that one has dressed himself up in Christ Himself. This is for the countenance which He showed on Himself in to His [109] This text and everything that follows is anti-Nestorian. The words of Jesus Christ were the words of God, and not of the man.

creation and which He lived in His creation with, He wanted that to be put on His inward man[111] and in its He showed on Himself wearing it, to those who were together-slaved with Him. And instead of putting on an exterior coat of glory and honor, He has adorned on Himself with it (inwardly). That's why, by looking at every man who has put on this likeness, the speaking and quiet creation[112] worships its Master, for the honor of its Master Who the creation saw dressed in itself and living in itself. This is for what creature won't get ashamed if seeing him who is humble in thought[113]? But until the glory of the humble-cogitation hadn't been unveiled to everyone, its full of holiness look was easily despised. But now it has sprung out to the world's eyes its greatness and the man honors everywhere the seen likeness of it[114]. And in this Mediator the creation was found worthy to receive the view of its Creator and Maker[115]. That's why too, neither the enemies of the truth can easily despise this one. This is for, despite he who has achieved it is poor in those of the creation, he is honored for having it as for having a crown and a purple coat, by him who knew it[116]. Him who is humble in thought he will never be despised by man; he won't be offended, and he won't be disregarded. Once the Master love him, he will be loved by everyone. He loves the poor and everyone love him. Everyone desire him and everywhere he [111] He didn't put on the human nature only exteriorly, but He made the human nature interior to Himself, namely He made on Himself man inwardly as well, like the body becomes interior to the soul and inversely. But this means that He put on our humbleness all the way to the interior of His godhead. The humbleness is His human coat, because if doesn't belong to the human nature, but it is a coat that penetrated into His interior as hypostasis, as Person.

[112] "All the speaking and quiet creation", namely endowed with spirit and without spirit, it worships that man who has dressed on himself in that humbleness as the embodied Word. The humbleness is the true likeness of the man to the embodied Word Who has imbued it in with His godlike greatness.

[113] He who is humble in his thought he is like Christ.

[114] "He honors everywhere its seen likeness", namely the humble-cogitation of Christ, imitated by a man or another, or better said, which the believer has been penetrated by, in union with Christ.

[115] It can be about Christ, or about that man who imitates the humble-cogitation, or who is full with it, by the union with Christ. This is for both Christ and the man who imitates the humble-cogitation, or who is full with it, he is a mediator of the Creator or of His glory, for by humbleness the Son of God has made on Himself as Mediator between God and people.

[116] They who tormented Christ they unwillingly honored His humbleness, with crown and purple coat. Likewise, are honored unwillingly, all the ones who imitate His humbleness, as by wearing a crown and a purple coat, especially the monks who despise all the glory form the world. Even those who are embarrassed by it, they showed by that that they honor the humbleness.

goes he will appear as an angel of light, and much honor it will be shown him. And when the wise and the teacher speaks, they stop, for they pass the word to the humble. Everyone's eyes look at his mouth in order they to see what is coming out of it. And every man waits for his word as for the words of God. His few words are like the wisemen's words who research the meanings of the words. His words are to the hearing of the wiseman sweeter than honey. Everyone receives him like on God, though his word is simple and unadorned and humble at sight.

He who speaks with contempt against him who is humble in thought and who doesn't honor him as a living man, he is like one who has opened his mouth against God. But even if he is despised by the whole creation, his honor will still last. The humble one is approached by the killer beats and when those look at him their savageness is tamed up and they come to him as to their master. And they lean down their heads and they lick his hands and feet, for out of them it is being spread that fragrance that was being spread out of Adam before his falling (when the wild beasts gathered around Adam and he gave them their names, in Paradise). That is the fragrance that was take from us and that has been renewed and it had been give to us by His coming, by Jesus. This is the good fragrance that is spread as a chrism out of the man-kind (2 Cor. 2: 15).

And again, when he comes closer to the bringing-of-death reptiles and, immediately he touched their body with his hand, the harshness and the strength of their causing-of-death venom stops, and he break them in pieced with his bare hands as on some locusts. When he comes closer to people, they look at him as at the Lord. But what am I saying about people? Even the devils, with their harshness, and with their evilness, and with the pride of their thought, when they come close to him, they are destroyed. And the whole their cunningness is getting stupid and their plots are scattered away and their evilness it stopped.

But now, after we have shown the glory and the honor of the humbleness coming from God, and that power hidden within humbleness, let's show, finally, what the humbleness itself is, and when the man is found worthy of fully receiving it as it is. But let's discern between the shown humbleness and that one from him who has been found worthy of the true humbleness.

The humbleness is a mysterious power received by the consummate saints after the consummation of their entire living. This power is given only to the who are consummate in virtue, by the power of the grace, as much as it can be contained within the borders of the nature. This is for the virtue contains in itself everything. That's why, one cannot reckon any man, haphazardly, as humble in thought, but, as I said, only on those who have been found worthy of this step.

Not everyone who is gentle and peaceful, or understanding and gentle by nature, has reached the step of the humble-cogitation. But truly humble in his though is him who secretly had something worthy of boasting with but he doesn't boast with it, but he reckons that, in his thought, as totally insignificant. But we do not call as humble in his thought either on him who get humbled while remembering his sins and his mistakes, when he remembers those before getting crushed in his heart, and for lowering his cogitation form the thoughts of pride during their coming, thought his thing is worthy of praising too. This is for, as long as he still has a thought of pride, he will still hasn't achieved the humbleness, but he attempts to bring it closer to him by diverse craftsmanships. Even if this thing too is worthy of praising, he still doesn't have the humbleness but he only wants it. The consummate humble-cogitation it had by him who doesn't need to search for reasons for his thought to be humble, but he who has achieved the humble-cogitation he has it in all aspects in a consummate and natural manner, without forcing on himself to it. This is for he has received it within himself as a great gift (charisma) that surpasses the whole creation and nature. But he sees on himself in his eyes as a sinner and worthy of being despised. Although he has entered the mysteries of all spiritual beings and he is consummate in detailed knowledge of the whole creation, he reckons about himself as not knowing anything. And this one is like that within his heart without using any craftsmanships[117] and without forcing on himself.

But, is it possible to the man to become like this and to change on himself like this by nature, or it isn't?

Do not doubt the fact that the power for these mysteries, which the man has received it, it consummates these within him, by helping him to progress in all virtue with the deed. This is the power received by the blessed apostles as a fire (Acts 1: 4). In order to be the Apostles given this, our Savior commanded them not to get far from Jerusalem, until they will receive the power from above. Jerusalem means virtue, and the power means humbleness. The power from above is the Comforter, or the Ghost of the comforting. That's why is told in the godlike Scripture about Him that through Him are unveiled the mysteries to them who are humble in soul[118]. On this Ghost of the unveilings Who shows the mysteries, are found worthy of receiving Him within themselves, they who are humble in their heart. And that's why was told by some of the saints that remaining humble when seeing godlike view it will consummate your soul. Therefore, let the man not to cogitate that he has reached in his soul the measure of the humble-cogitation, through a thought of pricking that has ascended to him somewhen, or for a few tears coming out of him, or for a sole good had by him naturally or forcedly; let him not think that he has reached the fullness of the mysteries and that he is the dwelling place of the virtues, or that by small dee3ds he has gained all of these and by himself he has reached at this charisma.

But only when he will have defeated all the enemy ghosts, and when he will have not misses any part of all the virtues which he would have not worked it in a proven manner and which he would have not gained it, but he will have defeated and submitted all the fortifications of the enemies; only after that he will feel this charisma within himself and only then "The Ghost will confess to his ghost", according to the word of the apostle (Rom. 8: 16), in order him to know that he has achieved the consummation of the humble-cogitation. Blessed is him who has gained this, for he always kisses the bosom of Jesus and he embraces Him.

But is somebody asked: "What should I do" What can I gain it like? How will I become worthy of receiving it? Because, lo, I am striving on myself, and when I reckon that I have achieved it, I see in my thinking moving thoughts which are opposite to humbleness. Abd that's why I fall into despair". Him who asks such questions, you will answer: "It suffices to the disciple to be like his teacher, and to the servant to be like his Lord" (Mt. 10: 25). Look at Him Who said that and at Him Who has bestowed the charisma, as you have achieved it, and be yourself like Him, and you will find that. This is for Himself said: "The ruler of this world comes and finds nothing within Me" (Jn. 14: 30). Can you see that only in the consummation pf all the virtues can one achieve the humbleness? Let's follow the example of Him Who said: "The foxes have dens and the fowls of the sky have nests, but the Son of Man has no place where to lean His head down" (Mt. 8: 20). This is for He has the glory of all of them who have been consummated and sanctified and fulfilled in all generations, together with the Father Who has sent Him and with the Holy Ghost, now and ever and forever and ever. Amen.

What Helps the Man to Come Close to God in His Heart. Which is the True Cause Hiddenly Giving the Man this Help and Again Which is the Cause Leading the Man to Humbleness

Blessed is that man who knows his weakness. This is for this knowledge becomes to him a foundation and a root and a beginning of all kindness. This is for when somebody finds out and he truly feels his helplessness, he gathers his soul out of the drowsiness that darkens his conscience and he gathers his treasure under guard. But no one will be able to feel his weakness if he is not allowed a little to experience the things which cause pain either to his body or to his soul. This is for, at that moment, by comparing his weakness to the help coming from God, he will know the greatness of God. And again, while seeing the multitude of his craftsmanships and his guarding and his restraint, and his cover and fencing up of his soul, which he trusted to gain trust in himself through, but he hasn't gained that, and he sees that his heart has not peace because of fear and tremble, he will understand and he will know that his fear shows him that he misses somebody to help him. This is for the heart bears witness of the fear burning it and waging war to is inwardly, that it misses somebody. Ant that's why the heart is rebuking on itself and it won't be able to dwell into trust.

This is for the one that saves, he says, if the help from God[119]. And when somebody knows that he is deprived of the help from God, he does many prayers and the more he multiplied his prayers the more he gets humbler in his heart. This is for to anybody who prays and asks it will be impossible not to get humbled. And "the crushed and humble heart God won't curse it" (Ps. 50: 19[120]). So, until he doesn't get humble in his heart, he won't be able to stop on himself from scattering. This is for the humbleness gathers the heart together. And when the man gets humbled, the mercy surrounds him immediately, and then the heart feels the help from God. This is for there is a trust power moving within it. And when the man feels the godlike help as present and helping him, his heart immediately is being filled up with faith and he understands by that that the prayer is the means which he can find help through, and it is a spring of comforting and it is a treasure of trust and it is a realms saving him from storm and it is a light to them who are in to darkness and it is a support to the weak and it is cover during trials and it is a help into the hiding of the illnesses and it is a deliverer shield in wars and it is a sharp arrow against his enemies and, simply speaking, he understands that the whole multitude of these goods have their entrance within him by his prayers. And that why he is delighted now into the prayer of the faith.

And his heart is lightened up by trust and he no longer is in the petrifaction and in the simple speaking of his mouth which he was in before. And when he knows these ones thus, he achieves the prayer within his soul as a treasure. And due to much gladness, the way of his prayer changes in voicing thanks. This is the meaning of the word said by him who appointed to each thing his image, that "the prayer is a joy

[119] It could be the Psalm 120: 2: "My help comes from my Lord". (In KJB we have: Ps. 121: 2 (E. l. t.'s n.))

[120] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 17: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 18: "The sacrifice of God; the humiliated ghost; the defeated and humble heart won't be cursed by God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

raising up thanks"[121]. And by that he meant to that prayer that consummates the knowledge of God, namely that prayer sent by God. This is for then the man no longer prays with tiredness and toil, as the prayer from before has been done before sensing the grace of this last kind of prayer, but it is being done with the joy of the heart and with the kidnapping which ceaselessly spring out of, the movements of thanking, and with untold kneelings; and due the grace's movement into knowledge and on the bewilderment produces by the grace of God, he raises his voice praising God and extolling God and raising Him thanks and, while being very bewildered, he moves his tongue.

If somebody has truly reached here, and not only in his imagination, he has noticed some signs or this state within himself and he has known many exquisite goods for his much testing. He understands what that says and he doesn't resist it. That's why not he stops thinking at the vain things and he perseveres next to God by ceaseless prayer, because of fearing to be him deprived of the multitude of the help from God.

All these goods are born within man by the fact that he knows his weakness. This is for, due to the much desire for the help from God, he close closer to God by persevering into prayer. And the closer he comes to God, the closer will come God to him as well, with His gifts, and God won't remove form him His grace, due to his great humbleness. This is for him, as the widow, he ceaselessly shouts out towards the Judge to be him granted his justice. That's why the Guide God stops bestowing his grace to the man, so that to be cause for the man coming closer to God, and by feeling his need him to persevere next to Him Who all the useful things spring out of. And which [121] There are three kinds of prayers. First, for instance: "Praise my soul the Lord, I will praise the Lord in my life" (Ps. 145: 1 (in KJB we have: Ps. 146: 1)). Then, the giving of thanks, for instance: "Confess yourself to the Lord, for He is good" (Ps. 117: 1 (in KJB we have: Ps. 118: 1)). Then the asking, for instance: "Heave mercy on me, God" (Ps. 50: 1 (in KJB we have: Ps. 51: 1)), or: "Mys God, take heed and help me" (Ps. 69: 1 (in KJB we have: Ps. 70: 1)). And He Who has appointed to all the things their image, He is the God of all the things. This is for He not only has brought all the things to existence out of nothing, but He also gave to each thing its image. And the Only Begotten Son and the Word, by descending form heavens and by embodying on Himself, He taught us these three kinds of prayers. He extolled the Fathers by saying: "I have extolled You on earth" (Jn. 17: 5); he thanked Him saying: "I thank You, Father, for You have heard Me" (Jn. 11: 41); and He asked like this: "I am praying for them… You Holy Father guard them in Your name" (Jn. 17: 12). And the word that "the prayer is that gladness raisin up thanks" the saint might have taken in from: "I am saying you these things for you to have My consummate joy within you" (Jn. 17: 18).

of his asks will be answered more quickly? Those ones which one cannot be saved without.

And in some circumstances, He removes and banished the heat of the enemy from the man, while in others He allows the man to be tempted, in order this temptation to become to the man cause for getting closer to God, as I said before. And for the man to learn as well and to gain experience in temptations. Thus says the Scripture's word: "The Lord allowed many peoples and He didn't destroy them and He didn't surrender them in the hands of Joshua, son of Navi, in order Him to tempt the sons of Israel through them, and the minds of the sons of Israel to be advised and they to learn the war" (Jud. 3: 102). This is because that righteous who do not know his weakness, he stays as on the knife edge, and he never is far from falling, nor from the killer lion, namely from the devil of the pride. And he who doesn't know his weakness he is lacking the humbleness. And he who lacks the humbleness he is also lacking the consummation. This is because of not being his city founded on iron pillars and his city is not surrounded by brass circles, namely it isn't founded on humbleness. And one cannot achieve humbleness except through those ways of the humbleness, which the heart becomes humble through and which are destroyed through the thoughts of the self-appreciation. That's why the enemy often finds cause to deviate the man. This is because without humbleness the man's thing cannot be done. And there hasn't been put on the letter of his liberation the sela of the Ghost[122], but he rather still is a servant; and his thing is done because of fear. This is for one doesn't straighten his thing without humbleness and no one learn except out of trials. And without trial no one knows the humbleness.

That's why the Lord brings upon the saints causes for humbleness and for heart-crushing and for pained prayer, in order they who love Him to come closer to Him. And often He frightens them with the passions of the nature and with the slidings in ugly and filthy thoughts. And on occasions, with illnesses and with bodily helplessness; and on some other times, with poverty, with the lack of the utterly needed things.

[122] This is a beautiful saying. A freedom that is not sealed through the Ghost it will serve the arbitrariness and it won't be the freedom of the Ghost's communion with God and with the fellow humans; it won't be that freedom free of the narrowing of the egotism.

And sometimes, with the pains of a dreadful fear and with the forsaking and with the shown war of the devil, which he uses to scare them with. And on some other times, though diverse fearsome things. And all of these happen to them in order they not to fall into the sleep of the idleness, or because of some things which he who lives in ascesis is weak towards, or for waking up the fear of the future realities.

Therefore, the trials are absolutely useful to the people. I am not saying that the man should willingly get drowsy through the ugly thoughts, in order their memory to become to him a cause for humbleness, neither I say the man should strive in other trials; what I am saying is that, while working the good, he must take vigil all the time and he must guard his soul and to thinks that he is created and because of that, he ca easily fall. This is because each of us, because of being created, we need the power of God to help us. And everyone who need someone's help he presents a natural weakness. And everyone who knows his weakness he will necessarily pray for reaching to be humble, so that he will accomplish his need through him who can help him. This is because if he knew and if he saw his helplessness at the beginning, he wouldn't be lazy. If is he wasn't lazy, he would not sleep and he would not be surrendered in the hands of those who torment him, in order they to wake him up.

Therefore, it is appropriate to him who walks the path to God to give thanks to God for all the things coming upon him and to blame and to reproach his own soul, and he must know that he would not be forsaken by the Care-Taker if he was not lazy; he has been forsaken in order his cogitation to wake up; he was forsaken for he was proud and in order him not to get crazy because of that, neither him to leave the battle stadium, neither him to fight without self-blaming; and in order not to get his evil be twofold because of that. This is for there is no injustice to God out of Whom springs the justice. God forbid that! His be the glory forever! Amen.

Word XXII

About the Kinds of the Hope in God. And which Things Must Be Hopes from God. And Who Is Him Who Hopes Foolishly and Unwisely

There is a hope in God born through faith out of heart. This is the good hope and with right-reckoning and into knowledge. And there is another, a liar one, that is born out of lawlessness. He hopes rightly and wisely into the Lord, he who isn't at all caught into the worry for the perishing things, but he is bestowed, day and night, entirely to God, not worrying about any worldly thing due to his much-occupation with the virtues, and the whole his preoccupation is directed towards the godlike things and that's why he doesn't care to prepare his food and his clothes and to adorn the place of the dwelling of his body and of all other things. This is for the Lord will prepare him the things he needs. This truly is that true and all-wise hope.

It is right that one like this one to hope in God, for he has made on himself God's servant and for he perseveres zealously in God's thing, without any laziness coming to him because of some reason. And it is right that God to show His care to one like this one in a special manner. This is for he observed God's commandment, that says: "Search, firstly, for the Kingdom of God and for His justice, and all these things will be added to you" (Mt. 7: 33); and "No not worry about your body" (Rom. 13: 14).

When we behave like this, the world prepares everything for us as it would be a servant to us, and it obeys our words, unhesitatingly, as to a master, and it doesn't resist our will[123]. And one like this won't stop to ceaselessly stay before God, and he won't surrender on himself to the need of his body. And he takes care of nothing except of stopping on himself, for the fear of God, from any unimportant or important worry which he tends through to pleasure, and which urge him to scattering. He will be given the necessary things in a wonderful manner, [123] The world obeys our words because our words are equally numerous conscious rationalities applied by will to the unconscious and without-own-will-or-choice rationalities of the world. Our being is elevated by these applied rationalities, through consciously choosing, above the nature and that's why our being won't be called to obey the death, or the total decomposition which are taken to, through its rationalities lacking the free choice, the nature's units. The man has a different destiny, one superior to the nature.

But him who has his heart totally sunk into the earthly things, and who always eats dirt together with the snake, and who doesn't care at all of the things which are pleasant to God, but he toils for all the bodily things and he is detached and empty of any virtue, because of the ceaseless meetings and because of the scattering due to pride, by searching for others and others occasions for that, he truly is fallen from good because of this carelessness and non-working. You say that him, on occasions, when he is in need for something, or tormented by some fruit of his lawlessness, such a man says too: "I hope in God and He will get me rid of worry and He will give me alleviation"? I tell him: You fool, until this moment you haven't been remembering God, but You have been cursing Him through the wickedness of your deeds and "His name was blasphemed because of you among Gentiles as it was written" (Rom. 2: 24), and now you dare to say with the whole your mouth: "I hope in Him and He will help me and He will take care of me"? Towards some like these ones God said through the prophet, shaming them up: "From day to day they search for Me and they want to learn My ways; as one who did the justice and the right things of their God they didn't deserted, they ask form me judgment and justice" (Isa. 58: 2).

As one like these ones is this fool who, by not coming close to God even with his thought, when enveloped by troubles he raises his hands, with trust, towards God. One like this must often be burnt with the hot iron, in order him to learn from one and from another. This is for he hasn't done anything worthy of hoping in God. But for his deeds and for his carelessness of the due things, he has made on himself worthy of punishment. But the long-suffering God, for His mercy, He suffers him too. Therefore, let not such a man deceive on himself and to forget about his behavior and to say that he hopes in God, because he will be punished. This is for he hasn't enriched on himself at all with the deeds of the faith. Let him not stretch his feet lazily, and say: "I believe that God will bestow me the good things, as one who have been living into the things of God"; or to insanely throw on himself into the well by not thinking at God at all. Let him not say after he has fallen: "I hope in God and God till escape me". Do not delude on yourself, you fool! The hope in God must be preceded by the toil for God and by the sweat in His thing. If you believe in God, you are right, but your faith needs deeds and the hope in God is shown in heavy sufferings for virtue. Do you believe that God takes care of all His creatures and that he is powerful in all things? Then let your faith to be followed the due work and then God will hear you. Do not try to grab the wind with your fist, namely to have a faith without deeds.

Often, somebody crosses, without knowing it, s path endangered by a wild beast, or by some thieves, or by something similar. Thei usual taking of care of God it is shown in the fact that He escapes the traveler from such a perdition, or God impedes him from leaving for that journey by bringing him some impediments, until that wild beast will cross away from there, or God brings somebody in his way and that one turns him back. Again, sometimes there is a venomous snake in the middle of the road without being seen, And for God doesn't want to surrender the man to that trial, God makes that snake to suddenly whistle and to leave, or to move and the man sees the snake and escaped from being bitten, despite that man was unworthy because of his unshown sins known only to God. But God saves him for His mercy. And again, sometimes happens that a house collapses, or a wall, or a stone falls and rolls down noisily, and there happen to be some people. But God commands to the angel, with His love for people, to hold those not to fall until the people leave from there are cross through there, or God makes them leave for some reasons, so that there do not remain anyone under. But immediately that those people left, He allows those things to collapse or to fall. And if it happens somebody to be caught under those, God makes him escape unharmed. By this God wants to show the infinite greatness of His power.

These things, and similar things, are committed by the general-taking-care, of God. And the righteous has God's taking-of-care unseparated from him. This is for to the other people God commanded with right-reckoning they to administrate themselves their business and they to mix their knowledge with the taking-of-care of God. But the righteous doesn't need to administrate himself his things with this knowledge[124]. For he has achieve instead of this knowledge the faith, by which he "tears down all the heights rising against the knowledge of God" (2 Cor. 10: 5). And he doesn't fear anything form among the mentioned things, for it has been written that "the righteous is confident like a lion" (Prov. 28: 1), daring towards anything by faith, and not like one who tempts God but like one who sees God, as one who has been armed with the power of the Holy Ghost. And for his care is ceaselessly at God, God says about him: "I am in trouble with him, I will deliver him and I will glorify him and I will fill him up with length of his days and I will show him My salvation" (Ps. 90: 15-16[125]). So, he who is drowsy and careless in his thing, he cannot have this hope. But this hope is had by him who always perseveres into God in all his things and he comes close to God by the kindness of his deeds and he ceaselessly aims the sight of his heart towards God's grace, as the godlike David said: "My eyes weakened, hoping towards my God" (Ps. 68: 4[126]). For Him is due the glory, the honor, and the worshipping forever. Amen.

exclusively bestowed by God, to him who is totally surrendered to God. he who administrates his things by himself, he uses a knowledge he has earned on the basis of his natural aspiration to the knowledge sown in him by God. But he is helped by the taking-of-care of God. The righteous is defended and guided exclusively by God's taking-of-care. But neither the righteous stays passively in front of God, but he too works thus to receive within him the care-taking power of God. The analyze of this theme and of the theme of the humbleness are among the especially remarkable in the Words of Saint Isaac.

[125] In KJB we have: Ps. 91: 15-16: "He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him. // With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation."; in ROB we have: Ps. 90: 15-16: "He will shout out towards Me and I will hear him; I am together with him in trouble and I will get him out of it and I will glorify him. // I will fill him up with the length of his days, and I will show him My salvation." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[126] In KJB we have: Ps. 69: 3: "I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 68: 4: "I got tired of shouting out, my throat got numbed, my eyes weakened hoping towards my God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

God. This is for the attachment to God is preceded by the detachment from the world. The little child is nourished with bread after being weaned up. And that man who wants to broaden on himself into the godlike things, he must firstly estrange on himself from the world, like the little child from his mother's arms and breasts. This is for the bodily work preceded the soul work, as the dust preceded the soul instilled to Adam. He who hasn't achieve yet the bodily work he won't be able to have the souly work either. For the last one is born out of the first one, as the wheat ear from the simple grain of wheat. And he who doesn't have the souly work, he will miss the spiritual gifts (charismas).

The toils for truth from the present life do not match the delectation prepared to them who heavily suffer for the good things. As they who sow with tears are waited for by the sheafs of gladness, likewise the joy follows to the heavy suffering for God. That bread earned with sweat tastes sweet to the plowman and the deeds for righteousness taste sweet to that heart that receives the knowledge of Christ. You endure the contempt and the humiliation with a gentle will, in order you to have daring to God. That man that endures any harsh word into knowledge, without that word be preceded by a lawlessness committed by that man, that man will place on that moment a thorns crown on his head, but he is happy for at a time unknown to him he will be crowned with the incorruptibility.

He who runs away, into knowledge, from the vain-glory, he will feel within his soul the age to come[127]. He who says: I left the world, but he still fights the people for a certain need of his, in order nothing to be missing among the things which rest him, he is totally blind. This is for he willingly has deserted the entire body, but he still wages war and fight for one of its limbs. The mind of him who runs away from the peaceful life of the present era, it looks at the age to come. And he who is tied to the love for earning, he is slave to the passions. Do not reckon that only amassing gold and silver means love for earning, but anything which your will depends on. Do not praise him who torments his body but who has his senses untied, meaning his earing and his mouth open an unrestrained and his eyes wandering. When you lay down borders to your soul, in order you to benefit through mercy, you accustom your soul not to search for justice in other things, so that you not to be gathering with one hand and wasting with another. This is for in the first thing one needs supervision, and in the second thing one need the broadness of his heart. You know that forgiving the sins to them who have mistaken belong to the deeds of the righteousness[128]. Then you will see the peace shining from all quarters within your mind. When you will be elevated above the way of the justice, you will be free in all things[129].

[127] Saint Issaac uses, usually, for the living with the soul of the godlike realities, present or future, the word "feeling". But this "feeling" isn't a simple sentiment, but it is a perception, an unmediated touch of them, like we perceive or like we touch with our senses the external realities. This fact will be accentuated especially by Saint Simeon the New Theologian.

Someone among the saints, while speaking about this, he said that if the merciful is not just too, he will be blind. I understand by that that he must give to somebody else some of the things he earned by his toils, but not out of the things he gained by lying, by committing injustice, or by other evil craftsmanships. This is for the same saint said again, in another place: "If you want to sow within the poor, sow out of your things; and if you want to sow out of things belonging to others, be aware that what you are sowing thus it will be more bitter than the tares". And I am saying that, if the merciful doesn't raise above his mercifulness, he actually won't be merciful. This means that he must not only give alms to the people out of his things, but he also must joyfully endure the injustice from other people, even if he has given them alms and he has had mercy on them. This is for, when he overcomes the justice by mercy, then he will be crowned not only with the crowns of the righteous of the law, but with the crown of the consummate ones form the Gospel. This is for giving to the poor out of his things and clothing up the naked and love his neighbor as on himself, and not doing injustice, and not lying, [128] In justice it is needed the mercy, in mercy it is needed the justice. There is no strict border between them. So must be understood the words: "When to lay down borders to your soul (the restraining of your life), in order you to benefit (to be saved) through mercy, you accustom your soul not to search for justice in other things", namely do not let yourself to behave as guided by a rigid justice towards people; you must not be, for instance, unforgiving with their mistakes. "In mercy it is needed supervision", namely let not be your gift a wasting caring not about the real needs of others; and the second thing, namely the righteous judgment, you use the broadness of your heart.

[129] You won't be mastered even by the way of the justice. You will be led only by love, that, despite to him who doesn't have it yet it is a law too, to him who has it the love is above any law. It is the consummation of the surpassing of all the laws, or of all the godlike commandments.

all of these were commanded also by the old law. But the consummation of the oikonomia of the Gospels commands us like this Him who take away your things, do not ask him to give those back to you, and you give to anyone who asks. And one even must joyfully endure not only the injustice regarding the things and the exterior aspects, but he must even put his own soul, for his brother. This is for this one is him who have mercy on his brother and not him who gives him some alms. This means that he is the one truly giving alms who, by hearing or seeing that something saddens his brother up, he will burn in his heart. So is him, who has been hit by his brother by he won't answer likewise, without feeling shame for that, and who neither will get upset in his heart[130].

Honor the work of the vigil, in order you to find the comforting coming closer to your soul. Persevere reading in silence, in order your mind to be guided always towards the wonderful things of God. Love the poverty into patience, in order your mind to be gathered up form scattering. Hate the scattering in order you to guard your thoughts undisturbed. Gather up on yourself form the many things and take care only of your soul, in order you to save your soul form scattering, in the deepest peace. Love the righteousness, in order you not to be ashamed during your prayer before God[131]. Achieve the cleanness sin your deeds and be the joy ignited into your thought by the remembrance of your death. Guar the insignificant things in order you not to fall into big mistakes. Do not get bored by your work in order you not to be ashamed while amid your companions. Do not be without victuals, lest they leave you at the half of the road. Fulfill your things into knowledge, in order you not to lose your road[132]. Achieve freedom in your living, in order you to be set free of worries[133]. Do not bond your freedom due to causes of delectation, in order [130] He doesn't not have mercy on his fellow human by giving him something form his external things, but he who gives him his soul, his love. This one truly comforts that one and heals his suffering caused by the conscience of his loneliness.

[131] He who hasn't guarded his virginity, he will often be troubled during his prayer by the memories of his sins and he will he ashamed before God.

[132] If you fulfill your ascetic toils without keeping your actual thought at God, it is like you would work automatically. In such a case you won't souly advance. The road you travel is external and it is like you wouldn't travel it.

[133] Freedom is only there where it is freedom from the burdening caused by the tendency towards pleasures, towards egotistic needs, namely there where it is the freedom even from oneself.

you not to become their slave. Love the baggy clothes, in order you to despise the thoughts occurring within yourself, namely the pride of your heart. This is because him who loves the luxury won't be able to achieve humble thoughts. This is because the heart is imprinted within by the exterior countenance.

Who is the lover of much-speaking who can achieve a clean cogitation while loving the much-speaking? Who is that hunter of vain-glory from people who can achieve humble thoughts? Or who is that debauched having his soil poured into his senses who can become clean in his cogitation and humble in his heart? When the mind is attracted by senses it will eat the food of the beasts. And when the senses are attracted by mind, they will be shared the food of the angels[134].

To the humble cogitation it follows the gathering into oneself (the withdrawal). And the vain-glory is the servant of the fornication and it is the deed of the pride. The humble cogitation, by its ceaseless restraint, it will reach the sight (the contemplation) and it will adorn the soul too with the righteousness. And the vain-glory, because of the ceaseless disturbance and because of the mixing of the thoughts, it gathers dirty treasuries out of the encounter with the things and it defiles the heart. And itself looks at the nature of the things with an unrestraint look and it pushes the mind to ugly hallucinations. But the humble cogitation restrains on itself through the spiritual look and it moves him who have achieve it towards God.

Do not liken they who do signs and unusual things and powers within world, to them who appease on themselves into knowledge. Love the work of the quietude more than the satiation of them who are in the world and more than the turning on many nations to worshipping God. This is for it will be better to you to be untied form the tie of the sin than to liberate a slave form slavery. It will be better to you to reconcile on yourself by uniting into a though the trinity from within you, namely your body, your soul, and your ghost, than to reconcile through your teaching the separated ones. This is for Gregory the Theologian says that is good to theologize for God, but it is even better to clean yourself to God[135]. It will be better to you to be unskilled to speaking than knower and skilled in overpouring the teaching as a river, with the sharpness of your mind. It will be more useful to you to take care of resurrecting your fallen soul from passions, through the motion of the thoughts given you by God, than you to resurrect the dead.

Many committed powers, they resurrected dead people, they toiled to turn back the strayed ones, and they did great things, and many were guided through their hands (in another manuscript: They lips*, t. n.*) towards the knowledge of God. And after they did that, they who resurrected dead people, they fell into defiled and filthy passions and they committed suicide and they were offence to many by their seen deeds. Because they still were ill in their souls and they didn't take care of their own health, but they surrendered on themselves to the sea of this world in order to heal the souls of those ones while themselves were still sick, and their souls lost their hope in God, as I said. This was because the weakness of their senses was unable to withstand the encounter with the flame of the things[136]. This was because they had to, for instance, to guard on themselves not to see women, not to rest, not to earn money and material things, and not to master over others and not to raise above others.

It will be better you if they suspect you of stupidity, as not being able to resist in word because of the fewness of your education, than to be reckoned among the wisemen for your cheeky daring. Be poor for the sake of the humbleness, and not rich so that to be cheeky. Prove with the strength of your virtues on them who dogmatize against you than by the seeming conviction power of your words. Shut your mouth up and bring to silence the cheekiness of the disobedient with your gentleness and with the peace of your lips. Shame up the fornicators with the decency of our living and shame up them who are shameless in their senses, through the restraint of your looks.

[135] Properly-said, that one knows God within himself, by experiencing God's work, he who is cleaned up of worldly thoughts which narrow his mind and steal his peace from him.

[136] The whole phrase is: "Because the weakness of their senses was unable to withstand the flame of the things, which uses to weaken the strength of the passions and to resist the passions." We have chosen to translate by omissions the part in Italics, because it seems to us as exactly the opposite. (E. l. t.'s n.)

You reckon on yourself as a stranger, wherever you reach at, in order you to be delivered from the harm coming to your out of daring. Reckon on yourself, all the time, as not knowing anything, in order you to get rid of that defamation coming to you out of others' suspicion on you that you would argue a different opinion. Persevere in always blessing with your mouth and you won't be reproached. This is for the reproach gives birth to reproach and the blessing gives birth to blessing. Reckon on yourself, everywhere, as lacking any education, and you will be reckoned as wise for the whole your life. Do not teach somebody what you haven't understood and what yourself haven't done yet, in order you not to be shamed up and to be unveiled, by comparison to your behavior, your lie. But if you say to somebody something necessary, you will speak as one who wants to learn himself, and not authoritatively and daringly. And go ahead and judge on yourself and show that you are inferior to another, in order you to show the image of the humbleness them who listen to you, and to conquer them by determining them to listen to your words and them to start working; and thus, you will be honored by them. And if you can, speak about these things with tears, in order to benefit both you and them who listen to you, and the grace of God to be with you.

If you have received the gift from God and if you have been found worthy of being delighted with the contemplation of the judgments of God and of the seen creatures, that is the first step of the knowledge, prepare on yourself and arm on yourself against the ghost of the blasphemy. Do not stay in this land without weapons, in order you not to be quickly killed by them who set traps against you and who delude you. And your weapons will be your tears and your consummate fasting. Guard yourself against reading the dogmas of the heretics. This is because that reading arms up the most the blasphemy's ghost. And do not start shamelessly examining the godlike things and teachings with a full belly, or you will repent of doing that. Take heed at what I am telling you: in the full belly there is no knowledge about God. read continuously and insatiably the books of the teachers about the care-taking from God. This is for these books guide your mind in order your mind to see the order of the creatures of God and of God's things and these readings will prepare your mind for achieving luminous meanings out of their subtlety, and they will make your mind travelling with cleanness towards understanding the creatures of God. Read also the Gospels bestowed us by God in order they to be knows by the entire world, in order you to take victuals out of the power of His Providence shown to each generation, and your mind will dive into the wonderful realities of God[137]. Such a reading will be helpful to your soul. But read when you have peace from anyone and during reading be free of the much-worry for your body and from the disturbance form the material things, in order your soul to be shared with the sweetest tasting of the godlike realities, through that sweet understanding that is above all feeling, so that your soul will feel those realities during while occupying on yourself with them[138]. Do no reckon the words of the experienced as of those who falsify and sell the godlike words, lets you will remain in darkness until the end of your life and you will miss their use and you will be troubled and lacking the limpidness during war and you will fall into that seeming-good pit.

And you will have as sign of the things which you want to enter, in order not to get out of that place: When the grace starts opening your eyes in order you to truly feel the sight of the things, your eyes will immediately start shedding tears, so that those tears often wash up your cheek with their abundance. Then the war from the senses gets appeased and your heart will gather inside[139]. If somebody teaches you against these ones, you won't believe him. This is because you must not search for another proven sign of your body, besides your tears. But when you mind is elevated from creatures, then your body too will get out of tears and out of any movement and work of your senses.

"When you find honey, eat with temperance, lets by getting satiated you will vomit it" (Prov. 25: 16). The soul's nature is a nimble and light thing. Sometimes the soul jumps and wants to ascend above himself and to find out things above his nature. And the soul often understands something from the reading of the Scriptures and out of contemplating (understanding, seeing) the things. But when the soul is allowed to liken himself to those understood by him, the soul will find on himself inferior, according to the measure of his oikonomia, by understanding which things his knowledge entered at. That's why the soul's thoughts will be filled up with fear and with tremble and the soul will hurry up to turn back, because of fear, to his lowered state, because of reckoning that he has dared to raise to things above his understanding. This is because of the fears of these things there will occur within the soul a fear and the right-reckoning (the discernment) will urge his mind to embrace the silence and not to allow be himself tempted by daring, in order the soul not to be lost and to search for unreachable things and not to inquire the realities which are superior to him.

[137] From Scriptures we learn how to know the world too, for the same God has created it too, and God teaches us through His supra-natural revelation how can we be saved within it, and how can we see the world as transparent to God and as a word of His. Still, if we are preoccupied with the care for the world and for the things from within the world as ultimate reality, that will impede us from being saved. The supra-natural Revelation presents us the world as transparent to God, as a word of God, as a gift from God, and as a road towards God.

[138] The reality of God is tasted, felt, and understood in the same time. So followed to tell Saint Simeon of the New Theologian. But this is an understanding differing form that purely intellectual understanding that takes place from distance.

[139] When the spiritual feeling is very strong due to seeing the godlike realities, the bodily senses will get appeased, for they will be overwhelmed by the spiritual feeling.

Therefore, when you are given the power for understanding, you may understand; but to not grab the mysteries shamelessly, but you bow down and extoll God and thank Him in silence. This is because, as it is not good to eat too much honey, likewise, it won't be good to inquire too much the godlike words, lest, by wanting to look at greater things while we still cannot understand them yet, out seeing power to weaken and to be harmed because of the harshness of the way towards them. This is because sometimes, instead of truth, one sees hallucinations. And when the mind gets tired because of searching it forgets about the darkness that is in. So, the wise Solomon said that "the impatient man is like a city without walls" (Prov. 25: 28). So, man, clean up your soul and banish away the care for the things which are outside your nature and you hang before the meanings and the understanding movements the curtain of your righteousness and of your humbleness, and through them you will find Him Who is inside your nature. This is for the mysteries are unveiled to them who are humble in thought[140].

If you want to give to your soul the work of the prayer that cleans up your mind[141], and if you want to give to your soul the perseverance into the night vigil, in order you to achieve a luminous cogitation, you get far from the sight of the world and you cut off the meetings; and do not get accustomed to receive friends within your monastic cell, not even for kindness, but only on those who are like you and who think like you and who have the same mysterious understanding as you have. Fear the wallowing into spiritual dialogues[142], which usually are unwillingly stirred up. And after you have cut off and after you have undone and after you have totally stopped the external dialogue, you will unite your prayer with the mercy and your soul will see the light of the truth. This is for, as much as the heart is getting appeased of the external things, as much the mind will be able to receive, by understanding the meanings, the content of the godlike works and the kidnapping by them. This is because of being the soul's habit to change a meeting for another, if we strive to manifest a little care[143]. Occupy on yourself with the reading of the Scriptures and that will show you the way of the subtle contemplation (of the understanding), and read the lives of the saints even if you do not feel their sweetness since the beginning because you still are closet to the things which bring darkness. due to the closeness. And you do this in order to change a meeting for another[144].

[140] The humbleness is penetration within the unadorned inward realities. And there is God.
[141] The true prayer cleans the mind up of any thought that is not thinking at God.

And when you get up for your prayer and for your rule, instead of cogitating at the worldly realities seen and heard by you, you will think at the godlike Scriptures which you have read. And thus, your mind will come to cleanness. And this is what it was written[145], that the soul is helped by reading when staying at prayer. And again, the prayer brings light into reading[146]. And again, instead of the mixing with the worldly things, it will bring content to the kinds of the prayer, so that out of reading the soul will be lightened at prayer, in order the soul always to pray unhesitatingly and undisturbed.

[142] The souly realities are inferior to the spiritual realities. The souly things are the purely human realities which are not crossed through by the Godlike Ghost, and which are not preoccupied with God.

[143] If you take away from your soul the preoccupation with the souly things, because the soul must occupy on himself with something, the soul will occupy on himself with the spiritual realities.

[144] It is about changing the meeting with the material things for the meeting with the godlike reality, namely to looking at the things into God by contemplating their godlike rationalities.

[146] In prayer you meet God Who lightens Himself the things He unveils. Then the prayer will remove other thoughts, so that you will be able to focus on what you will read.

Ugly thing is to them who are in love with their body and with their belly to speak about the spiritual realities; that would be like a debauched speaks about virginity. When your body is very ill, it rejects the fat foods and it is disgusted by them; likewise, that mind occupied with the worldly things cannot come closer and study the godlike realities. The fire doesn't start in wet woods, and the godlike warmth doesn't ignite in that heart that loves resting. The debauched doesn't persevere in love for only one partner, and that soul that is tied to many things won't remain within the godlike teachings. As he who doesn't see the sun with his eyes, he won't be able to describe the sun by hearing, neither will he feel the sunlight, likewise, he who hasn't tasted with his soul the sweetness of the spiritual realities.

If you have a little more than your daily need requires, share that to the poor and then come and bring your prayer daringly. Namely you talk to God as the son to his father[147]. Nothing can get your heart so close to God as the giving of alms. Nothing can sow so much peace within your mind as the willing poverty[148]. It is better for you to be called as stupid by the many, because of your simplicity, and not to be called by them as wise and having a consummate mind, because of your glory. If one mounted on a horse stretches his head towards you in order to receive alms, you won't refuse him. This is because, surely, at that time he is in need as one or the poor. And when you give, give with a wide heart and with a glad face; and give more than you are asked to. "Send, he says, your bread towards the face of the poor and after a short time you will find reward" (Prov. 11: 1). Do not discern between rich and poor and do not attempt to discern between worthy and unworthy, but all the people to be equally good to you. This is for thus you will be able to attract to good also the unworthy. This is for the soul is quickly attracted from the bodily things to the fear of God. And the Lord sat at the table together with the publicans and with the debauched, and He didn't discern the unworthy, in order Him to attract thus everyone to the fear of God; and through the bodily things, to bring them close to the spiritual realities. For [147] That heart that is tied by parsimony to the material things it won't be able to meet God. Only him who has opened his heart to another will be able to open his heart to God as well.

[148] The willing poverty is the untying of any thought referring to the things which limit. Then the mind can gather into the endless God, by coming back itself to its indefinite state.

that, you will reckon all the people as equals in good and in honor, even if there would be a Jew, or an ungodly, or a suicidal, especially for he is your brother and he is of the same nature with you, and he was strayed, without science, from truth.

And when you do the good, do not expect consequently to that a reward, and you will be rewarded by God for both these two things[149]. And if it is possible to you, do not do the good even expecting the future reward. If you set to your soul the law of the poverty and by the grace of God you have been liberated form worries and you have been elevated above the world into your poverty[150], take heed lest for your love for people you will love the richness in order you to give, allegedly, alms, and thus you to throw your soul into the disturbance of taking from one and giving to another. By that you will lose your honor[151], by obeying the need for asking from people and you will fall off your freedom and off the height of your cogitation, down into the life's worries. This is for your step is higher than that of them who give alms. I beg you not to obey on yourself to these worries. The giving-of-alms is like the baby food. And the quietude is the peak of the consummation. If you have wealth, you must scatter it at once. And if you do not have wealth, you must not try to gather one. Clean your monastic cell of things bringing you delectation or which are redundant. This is for, if you do this, it will take you unwillingly to restraint. This is for the fewness of the material things teaches the man the restraint. But when we are covered from the side of the things, we won't be able to abstain.

They who are victorious in the exterior war, they will gain daring towards the fear from within and they will no longer be dominated by any necessity. And they do not wobble either in [149] For both the facts that you give alms and you do not expect a reward for that.

[150] A paradox: he who willingly have nothing, he will no longer be the slave of the world, but he will be above the world.

[151] Here it is not about the worldly honor, but it is about the height of the virtue, it is about the step of the consummation, which have been elevated to, them who live in poverty and in quietude, liberated form the narrowness caused by the measure of the things. This is for he says further on: "for your step is higher than the step of the giving-of-alms". This is for the apostles too they preferred the preaching of the world to serving at the tables… So, this father too, he places the poverty and the quietude above the taking from one and giving to another, though this one too is a worthy of respect deed, and it is a deed pleasant to God.

the war from in front of them or in the war from behind them[152]. And I call as exterior war that one stirred up by senses and by laziness against our soul, as for instance from that urge to give and to receive by hearing and by tongue[153]. These ones by being brought within our soul, they will sow within our soul a blindness, and because of the external disturbance our would will no longer be able to take heed at himself during the hidden war stirred up against him, and therefore the soul won't be able to defeat by silence on those from within who stir the soul up. But when somebody closes the city's gates, namely his senses, he will fight within and he won't fear them who plot outside the city.

Blesses is him who knows these things and who remains into silence, and who is not disturbed by the multitude of his deeds, but he transforms all his bodily deeds into the toil of the prayer[154] and he believes that as long as he works with God, he has the whole his care put on His behalf day and night. This is because he won't lack anything from the unavoidable need, given the fact that he restrains on himself for God, from what is unnecessary and from material things. But if one cannot persevere into quietude without some handwork, let him work using his work as a helper. But let him not work too much for the sake of the earning. This was appointed to the weaker ones. And to the consummate ones, this will be a disturbance. This is for the fathers ruled to the poor and tending to idleness ones that they must work, as it is an absolutely necessary thing to them, but the work hasn't been appointed to anyone as such.

During the time which God pricks your heart within, you will surrender on yourselves ceaselessly to the prostrations and to the kneelings and you won't allow your heart to worry about something, lets the devils will start persuading you to occupy on

[152] "What are those wars from ahead and from behind? That war from in front of you is the manifest and full of daring war, and that war from behind is hidden and unnoticed".

[153] After he talked about that war stirred up by senses and in general, he has focused on himself only on hearing and speaking. This is for we both give and receive only through these ones. Through the other senses we only receive. Better said, we give only through our tongue, but we give as a reaction to what we receive through hearing. So, these two, the hearing and the speaking are especially connected to one another.

[154] One can understand this not only about the ceaseless prayer, but also about the need for uniting all his deeds with hid thought at God, transforming his deeds into prayer, that is toil because of the difficulty of keeping the thought focused on God. But the consummate ones, who can continuously keep their thought at God, they no longer have to work in order they to be urged by deeds to think at God.

yourselves with other things too. BY doing so, you will see and you will wonder what will be born within you out of those. There is no greater and more tiring and more envied by devils, during the struggles of the ascesis, than somebody to throw on himself before Christ's cross and he to pray day and night and he to tie his hands at his back[155]. Do you want your warmth not to get cold and you not to pe deprived of your tears? You hold on these ones and you will be happy if you observe, day and night, the things said to you and if you do not search for something else. Then the sun will rise within you[156] and your righteousness will shine quickly and you will reach to be like a flourishes Paradise and as an inexhaustible water spring.

Take heed at what goods are born to the man out of fight. He often kneels in prayers and has his hands stretched upwards to the sky and he keeps his face focused on Christ's cross, and he gathers all his thoughts towards God, in prayer. And suddenly, while he prays to God with tears and with pricking of the heart, it starts moving within his heart a spring out of which is spread the delectation. And his limbs get soft and his eyes get cloudy and his face bows to the ground, and his thoughts get changed, so that he no longer is able to do prostrations because a joy resisting that and moving throughout all this body[157]. Take heed, man, at what you are reading. This is because if you do not toil in ascesis you won't find that. And if you do not knock on the door with warmth, and if you do not stand at the door ceaselessly, you won't be listened to.

Who, after hearing this, he will still desire the righteousness from outside[158], except him who is unable to endure the quietude? Still, if one is unable to toil in the second one (for it is a grace form God to be the man inside the gate), let him not leave the other way, in order him not to be deprived of [155] In order him not to work anything.

[156] God shines like the sun within them who continuously pray, and He keeps their look focused on Him. If might be this where the hesychastic teaching was born from, about the seeing of the light while praying.

[157] That joy actually softs up the body and it warms the body up.

[158] "He calls as righteousness from outside that virtue with the deed. This is for he says further on: in order him not to be deprived of the two ways of the life. And the two ways of the life are: the contemplation, that is the natural and inwards work, and the doing, that is bodily and that does the pleasant to God deeds". The teacher of the first one is Mary, and the teacher of the second one is Martha. The Lord welcomes both of them, but the Lord cherishes more that one of Mary.

both ways of the life. Until the exterior man dies to all the world's things, not only towards the sin but also towards any other bodily work, likewise the inward man must die towards all the evil thoughts, and until the body's movement get weakened so that the sweetness of the sin will no longer be stirred up within his heart, the sweetness of the Ghost of God won't move within man and his limbs won't be cleanness up in his life and the godlike meanings won't enter his soul, neither will him feel those ones nor he will see (contemplate) them. And until the worry for the things of the live doesn't cease within his heart, except the care for the things absolutely necessary to the nature, and until he doesn't allow God to take care of those, there won't be born within him the spiritual drunkenness and he won't feel that insanity that was comforting the apostles[159].

But I have said these not in order to cut off the hope of the others. This is for I am not saying that if somebody doesn't reach the peak of the consummation, he won't be found worthy to receive the gift from God, or that he won't be welcomed by any comforting. The truth is that, when somebody weakens his urge towards undue things, and if he totally stops on himself from those, and fi he runs towards the good things, in a short time he will feel the help. And if he toils a little too, he will find comforting to his soul and he will earn the forgiveness of his sins, and he will be found worthy of grace and he will receive multitude of goods. Still, he will be smaller in comparison to the consummation of him who has separated on himself from the world and thus he has found within his soul the mystery of the happiness from there and he has understood why Christ descended to us. Him to be the glory, together with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, now and forever and ever! Amen.

[159] "What is the insanity that was comforting the apostles?". It is not else but that of crucifying on themselves together with Christ and to no longer living into body, but into Christ, and into the faith in the Son of God, an insanity that is an ecstasy and it is reckoned, by them who live into body, as insanity. "This is for we are insane for Christ" (1 Cor. 4: 10). This insanity not only was comforting the Apostle and it made him rejoicing into sufferings, but it convinced him to reckon the death as a gain and way more precious than the life is: "This is for, to me live, he was saying, it is Christ, and dying it is interest" (Phil. 1: 22). (In KJB we have; Phil. 1: 22: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." (E. l. t.'s n.))

Word XXIV

About the Signs and the Fruits of the Love

The love for God is an above-nature-warmth and when it comes within somebody without measure, it will make that soul to get out of himself (ecstatic). That's why, the heart of him who feels the love for God, it cannot comprise and endure it, but on the measure of the quality of the love coming out of him, it will be shown within him an unusual change.

And the felt signs are these ones: the man's face becomes as of fire and full of charm and his body gets warmed. The fear and the worry get far from him and he gets out of himself (he enters the ecstasy). That power that keeps his mind together it leaves him, and be becomes like one who is out of his minds. He reckons the fearsome death and a joy and the sight of his mind won't ever find an interruption in understanding the heavenly mysteries, and while not being present, he speaks as he is present, without being seen by somebody. His nat5ural knowledge and sight stop, and he no longer feels his movement in a bodily manner, while moving among things. Even if he does something, he won't feel that at all, as one who has his mind elevated into sight. And it seems that his cogitation is always directed towards somebody else.

By this spiritual drunkenness were yore engulfed the apostles and the martyrs. The first ones walked throughout the whole world, toiling and being condemned. The others, with the limbs cut off, they shed their blood as water and by enduring the most dreadful torments they weren't discouraged, but they endured those torments mainly; and while they were wise, they were reckoned as insane. Other wandered through deserts, through mountains, in caves, and in the cracks of the earth and while missing a steadfast dwelling place, they were the most steadfastly settled down people. May God found us too worthy of achieving this insanity!

About humbleness

If you see that you have achieved resting from passions, you won't believe to yourself before entering the city of the humbleness. This is because the enemy would be plotting you some trap. So, after resting, you will wait for much disturbance and grief. This is because, if you do not cross through the settlements of the virtues, you won't find resting of your toil; and you won't have resting of them who plot against you, until you reach the city of the holy humbleness. God, by your grace, make us worthy to reach there! Amen.

About the Patience for the Love for God and about the Help We Find in It

As much the world despises this world, and as much he strives into the fear of God, as much the taking-of-care of God will come closer to the man and the man will feel, in a hidden manner, its help, and the man will be given clean thoughts in order him to understand it. And as somebody deprives on himself of the world's goods, as much as he deprives on himself of those as much the mercy of God will come to him, and the God's love for people will bear him. Glory to Him Who saves us through the things form the right and through the things form the left[160] and by all of these He gives us occasion to find our true life! This is for them who get weak in gaining their life by will, He brings their soul towards virtue by unwilling troubles. Thus, the poor Lazarus was unwillingly deprived of the goods of this world, and he even had his body covered in wounds, so that he had two bitter sufferings, and each one of those was worse than another. Still, in the end, he was honored to be sent in Abraham's bosom. God is near to the heart of him who shouts out his trouble to Him. And if somebody is need of bodily things, or he is in a trouble (until through our patience that will become towards our help, as a physician who, by performing a surgery upon a grave disease, he will bring us health), the Lord will show in his soul Hid great love for people, according to the harshness of his pains and grief.

So, when the longing for the love for God hasn't over come within you to the extent that you have reached dispassionate in your trouble for that joy into Him[161], you know that the world still lives within you more than Christ does. And when the illness and the need and the exhaustion of your body, or the fear of them who can harm your body, they disturb your thought getting it out of the joy for the hope into the Lord, you will know that inside you there still live your body and not Christ. And, simply speaking, that one whom your longing is stronger for, that one will live within you. And when you have no need and you are healthy and you do not fear the enemies and you say that you can cleanly walk into Christ, you will know that you are sick in your mind and you are lacking the tasting of the glory of God.

But I do not judge you because of being you like that, but, rather, I want you to know how much you still miss of consummation, despite you live to some extent according to the rule of the holy fathers who live before us. And do not say that there was no man whose cogitation to totally be raised out of weakness, when the body swims into temptations and troubles, and whose longing for Christ would have overcome the sadness of the thought. I am not going to mention here the holy martyrs, lets I won't be able to stand before the deep of their sufferings. I will keep my silence, therefore, how victorious the patience was within them, right out of the power of their love for Christ, over the much trouble and over the desire of their body. I will overlook those, because even by mentioning them it will scare the human nature off, disturbing it by their greatness and by the wonderful cogitation at those.

I will also keep my silence on the so-called ungodly philosophers. This is for one of them set as law of his cogitation to keep his silence for several years. And the Roman emperor wondered about that and he wanted to test the philosopher. So, the emperor ordered that one to be brought before him. And when the emperor saw the philosopher remaining silent to any question the emperor asked him, the emperor got mad and ordered the philosopher to be killed, because of not fearing his throne and crown. But the philosopher didn't get scared and he serenely prepared on himself to die. But the emperor ordered to his guards: “if he gets scared of sword and so he transgresses his own law, you will kill him; but if he perseveres in his will, bring him back to me, alive”. While they were getting closer to the place for his killing, the servants tormented him to transgress his law and so to escape dying, but the philosopher thought: It is better to me to die instantly while keeping my law, which I strived so much for, than to allow to myself to be overwhelmed by the fear of death and to make my wisdom reproachable and to cowardly obey a commandment imposed me forcedly”. Abd the philosopher lied down serenely and waited for to be cut with the sword. And the emperor was announced about that and he wondered about it and he ashamed let the philosopher go.

Other consummately trampled on the nature’s lust. Others easily endured reproaches. Others persevered in grave ills without getting troubled. And others showed their strong patience in troubles and misfortunes[162].

And if these ones, for a vain-glory and for a vain-hope endured those things, how much more we the monks - who are called to the partaking (communion) with God – must we endure? May us be found worthy of that through the prayers of the All-Holy our Master and Birth-Giver of God and forever Virgin Mary, and of all the ones who in the sweat of their ascesis were pleasant to Christ! This is for Him is due the glory, the honor, and the worshipping, together with His Father and together with the eternal and of-the-same-nature and of-life-beginner Ghost, now and forever and ever! Amen.

About the Ceaseless Fasting and about Tarrying in One Place. And about the Things Following to Those. And about the Fact that Their Exact Using Is Learnt out of the Knowledge with Right-Reckoning

By being tempted for a long time into the things from the right side and into the things form the left side, and by often testing on myself in these two kinds of tests, and by receiving countless hits from my enemy and by being I secretly found worthy of great helps, I have earned experience for several years and I have learned, by testing and by the grace from God, these things:

Thet the foundation of all the goods and the liberation of the soul from the slavery to the enemy and the way leading to light and to life, it is composed of these two things: you to gather on yourself in a place and to always be fasting, namely to submit on yourself wisely and sapiently to the restraint of your belly, in a motionless sitting and in a ceaseless meditation and cogitation at God[163]. From here comes the submission of the thoughts, out of it comes the watchfulness of the mind. By this the wild beasts which move within body are tamed. This one brings the gentleness of the thoughts. Out of this are born the luminous moves of the cogitation. From here comes the striving for the deeds of the love. This causes high and subtle understandings. Out of this start the immeasurable tears everywhere, and the remembrance of the death. These bring the clean righteousness that restraints on itself from any hallucination that tempts the death. Out of this comes the penetrating and sharp sight and even the seeing of the things from far. From here come the meanings of the deep mysteries uncovered by the mind in the content of the godlike words and the more-internal moves which emerge within soul, and the gift for discerning the spiritual powers form the holy powers, and the true views form the vain-hallucinations. Then, the fear of the ways and of the paths form the mind's ocean[164]; namely the fear cuts off the carelessness and the idleness. After it, it will be born the flame of the zeal that overcomes any danger and any fear. Then, that warmth despising all the lusts and that erases any cogitation at the passing things, and it causes the forgetfulness, together with others[165]. And to say it shortly, out of these emerges the freedom of the true man and the joy of the soul and that resurrection together with Christ into the Kingdom of Heavens[166].

[163] Even this father knew about motionlessly sitting in a chair and cogitating at God, or about the ceaseless prayer.

[164] The mind or the cogitation is a true moving ocean, which all sorts of big ways or of small paths can be opened in, some of them leading to the godlike realm, while others sinking into an abyss him who chooses them. That man who feels a true fear while choosing the true way out of the countless other ways, he proves to be a spiritually-advances man.

And if somebody disregards these two[167], he will lose not only all the things mentioned before, but he will also shake the foundation of all the virtues by despising these two virtues. And as these will be the beginning and the end of the godlike work within soul, and they will be door and wat to Christ, if somebody keeps them and he perseveres in them; but if he gets far from them and he parts with them, he will reach into the things opposite to them: I mean the bodily scattering, the shameless covetousness of the belly, which are the beginning of the opposite things mentioned before, and he will give room to the passions within his soul.

And the beginning of one of them it firstly unties the senses submitted to the restraint. And what will follow out of this? It will follow the inappropriate and unexpected meetings which are near to falling. Then will follow the disturbance of the strong waves waken up through the sight and through the sharp heat of the eyes that takes the body under its control and that makes easier the slidings taking place into thought. Then, there will occur uncontrolled thoughts hurrying up towards falling. After that, it will come the cooling down of the longing for the thing of God and the gradual weakening of the power for discerning the quietude from anything else and finally the total forsaking of the rule of his living. It will follow the renewal of the forgotten sins and the learning of other sins too which were unknown to him and which are continuously born within him by the unwilling views, of many sorts, which he comes across to by moving himself from a county to another and form place to place. Then the passions, which were killed form his soul by the grace of God and which were lost by forgetting the memories from the cogitation, they start moving again and to force the soul to work them. And in order I not to mention all the other ones, these ones are opened within him out of that prime cause, namely out of the scattering of the body and out of notwithstanding the narrowness of the quietude.

[166] The peak one reaches through cleaning of passions it is the freedom of the soul of the passions' chains, of their burdens, and with this, the resurrection or the elevation above all the enslaving laws and powers. And in it the joy is full and eternally uninterrupted.

[167] The fasting or the restraint and the ceaseless cogitation at God. These two accompany on one another.

But what follows out of the another, namely out of starting to work the porky work? What else is the porky body except letting the belly without restrictions and always filling your belly up and not having an established time for the need of the body, as the speaking beings have? And what will be born out of this? From here comes the burdening of the head and the much wight of the body joined with the weakening of the shoulders. Then, the need for leaving the liturgy (the serving) of God. This is for it will occur a laziness of making prostrations during the liturgy a disregarding of the usual kneelings, a darkening and the straying of the cogitation; a thickened mind that cannot understand anything because of the disturbances and because of the many darkened thoughts; a thick and darkened mist stretched over the whole soul; much idleness in doing all the things of God, and even in reading, because that one doesn't taste the sweetness of the words of God; much non-work of the necessary things; an uncontrolled and scattered mind all over the earth; much wort gathered within all his limbs; unclean imaginings during night, caused by filthy hallucinations and by indecent images arising a lust that passes into the soul and it will accomplish its wills in an unclean manner.

And even the beddings of this miserable man and his clothes and his entire body will be defiled by the abundance of the dirty leaking that gushes out of him like from a spring. And this happens to him not only at night but also in daytime. This is for his body always leaks and it defiles his thought. By that he loses his virginity. This is for the sweetness of the tickle cause within the whole his body a continuous and insupportable heat. There occur within him deceiving thoughts imagining a beauty in front of him and which incite him continuously and which tickle his mind by the imagined dialogue. And he mates with those imaginings by occupying on himself with them, and by lusting them, because his discernment power has been darkened. And this is what the prophet said: "This is the rewards of the sister of Sodom, that, by delighting on itself, it ate bread to satiation"; and the others (Exod. 16: 49).

But this too was said about a certain wiseman: if somebody nourished his body with much delectation, he will cause war to his soul. And then, if he comes to his senses and starts striving to control on himself, he won't be able to, because of the overwhelming heat of the movements of his body and because of the uncontrollable movements of his body and because of the uncontrollable force of the incitements and of the tickling which enslave his soul to their will. Can you see here the subtlety of these ungodly? And the same one says: “The delectation of the body with foods during the early youth that is full with wort it wilk make the passions to quickly enter the soul and they make the death engulf that soul”. And thus, this one falls under the judgment of God.

But that soul that always lives thinking at the due things, that soul will rest in his freedom and his worries are small and that soul doesn’t feel sorry for something, but it takes care of virtue, by restraining the passions, by guarding the virtue, and by working for growing the virtue. That soul has a worriless joy, a good life, and an unendangered shore. But the worldly pleasures not only that strengthen the passions and make them callous against the soul, but they also uproot the soul. And together with these ones, they ignite the belly towards unrestraint and towards the ultimate and borderless disorder of the unrestraint. And they will force him to satisfy, timely and untimely, his body’s needs. This is because him who is dominated by these, he won’t want to endure the slightest hunger, or to control on himself, because he is mastered by passions.

These are the fruits of the shame coming out of the covetousness of the body. And those ones form before these ones, are the fruit of the patience for living in one place and in quietude. That’s why also the enemy, by knowing the times of fulfilling our natural needs, which the nature moves towards its need, and by knowing that our mind wanders because of the scattering of our eyes and because of the satiation of our belly, he will strive and fight to entice us to give to out nature more than it needs, and to sow within us the images of some evil thoughts during those times, and, if possible, to make the passions to overcome the nature by over-satiating it, and in order to sink the man into fallings. That’s why, as the enemy know the time, at out turn we must know our weakness and the power of our nature; we must know that our nature is helpless to the impulses and moves from those times, and to the subtlety of the thoughts which are like a foam before our eyes and thus we cannot see on ourselves and to fight what is happening to us. Based on our long experience, consequently to the temptations form our enemy and to the troubles we have often been enduring from him, let's be wise from now on, and let's not allow on ourselves to be pushed to fulfill our lust for delectation and to let ourselves be defeated by hunger, and so, even if we suffer the pain of the hunger or of the need, we will stand non-budged from the place of our appeasement, and we will avoid going there where easily happen such temptations to us, and neither will we give to ourselves occasions and reasons to leave the wilderness. This is because these ones are the plots of the enemy. And if you endure into wilderness, you won't be tempted. This is for you won't see women, neither something else that harms your living, nor will you hear indecent words.

"What is it to you and to the way to Egypt, that you drink the water of Ghion?" (Jer. 2: 18). Understand what I want to say to you. Show your enemy your patience and your state proven in the small things, in order him not to ask from you the big things. Let it be to you as ruler the small things, so that through them you will topple your enemy over; so that he won't plot against you and dig up bid traps to you. This is for he who doesn't listen to his enemy and that's why he doesn't get even five steps out of his monastic cell where he is appeasing on himself, how could him convince on himself to leave the wilderness and to go near to some village? And him who doesn't accept even to look through the small window of his monastic cell, how could he persuade on himself to get out of his monastic cell? And if him who only in the evening accepts to share the least food possible, how could he be deceived by the thought to eat earlier? And he who feels shame to satiate on himself with the poor food, how could he satiate on himself with fat foods? And he who cannot persuade on himself even to look at his body, how could he be deluded to look in a spying manner at foreign beauties?

So, it is obvious that by being somebody careless in the small things, he will be defeated by those and by that he will give his enemy occasion to war him through the big things. This is because, he who doesn't take care of his temporary life, how will he fear the evil things and the troubles leading to death him who desires it? This is that war waged with right-reckoning, for the wisemen don't allow to be themselves carried towards the big battles, but the patience shown by them into the small things guards them against falling into the great toils.

Firstly, the devil fights to stop the ceaseless taking heed of someone's heart. Then the devil persuades that heart to also despise the times appointed to the taking of heed and the rule fulfilled with the body. And then the devil makes that someone's thought drowsy, by urging him to share on himself, before the established time, with some light food – almost nothing. And after this falling, by loosing the restraint, that someone will slip into unrestraint and in debauchery. In the first place, he is defeated when reckoning an insignificant thing to look at the nakedness of his body, or at the beauty of his limbs, when he gets off his clothes, or when he goes out for his needs, to the water well, and so he will make his senses drowsy, and he will stick his hand under his clothes and he will touch his body. Then there will rise up other things too. And him who guarded in the beginning the steadfastness of his mind and who was sad for each of these things, he will later open big and dreadful entrances against it. This is for the thoughts, if I may use a parable, are like the water and as long as they are controlled from everywhere, they will move in good order, but when they escape even for a little towards the things from outside, they will tear down the wall and they will cause many desertions. This is because the enemy stays looking, stalking, and waiting day and night before our eyes and spying which open entrance of our senses he might come in. And by occurring a certain carelessness in one of the things mentioned before, the cunning and shameless dog will send his arrows too. Sometimes, the nature by itself, it loves the resting and the daring and the laughter and the scattering and the carelessness and it becomes spring of passions and a mirky ocean. On some other times these ones are thrown within the soul by the enemy. But let's change our big toils into small toils, which we reckon them as nothing. This is for, if these ones, as despised by us, as I have shown, will bring us so many big and difficult to endure wars and crowded and entangled battles and big wounds, who won't hurry up to find the sweet resting through these small toils of the beginning?

Oh, wisdom, how wonderful you are and look at how you can see everything form far! Blessed is him who has found you. The wisdom has set us free form the carelessness of our youth. By a small trade or care, it buys the healing of the big passions. A certain philosopher among the philosophers of yore, when he was moved towards the idleness of his thinking and he felt that, he immediately corrected on himself by suddenly standing up. And some other philosopher saw him and laughed at him because of that. And he answered: "I haven't feared this one, but I fear the recklessness. This is because, often, a small disregarding (of a weakness) can be cause of big dangers. But when I reached into disorder and because I immediately corrected on myself, I have proven myself as awake and I haven't disregarded even that that seemed to be worthy of being disregarded". Actually, this is the philosophy, as even in those very insignificant and small thing one does, him to be always awake. This is for by not sleeping, he gathers treasures of resting, lest something opposite will happen to him. And he cuts off the cause earlier; and because of the insignificant things he endures a small sadness, but by that he avoids enduring a big sadness.

But the mindless ones value more the small resting that is near to them, than the Kingdom form far, because of not knowing that is better enduring torments during the fight than to rest on the beddings of the earthly kingdom, and so they prepare their condemnation because of their idleness. This is for the wisemen desire rather their death than to be condemned for doing something without watchfulness. That's why the wiseman says too: "Take vigil and keep your life under watchfulness. This is for the sleep is a kinship and image of the true death". And the God-bearer Basil says: "Him who gets lazy into the small things, you won't believe him as being worthy of great things".

Do not be lazy to do the things which will make you alive, neither will you hesitate to die for them. This is for the lack of courage is the sign of the idleness. And the mother of both of them is the not-paying-attention to them. The fearful man is sick with two illnesses, namely with the love for his body and with the fewness of his faith. And the love for the body is a sign of the faithlessness. But he who despises these ones he will be strengthened, for he believes in God with the whole his soul, and he waits for the realities to come.

If one got close to God without danger or fights or trials, you too follow his example[168]. The daring of the heart and the despising of the dangers comes out of one among these two causes: either out of the callousness of the hearth, or out of the much faith into God. The callousness of the heart is followed by the pride, while the faith is followed by the heart's humble cogitation. The man won't be able to gain his trust in God if he hasn't straightened, at least partially, his own will. This is for the trust into God and the manhood of one's heart are born out of the witness of one's conscience; and out of the true witness of our thought we will have our trust into God. And the witness of one's thought consists of not being one condemned by his conscience, because he would have disregarded to fulfill, according to his power, something among the things he owes. And if our heart doesn't condemn us, we will have daring towards God. So, the daring comes out of the deeds of the virtues and out of the good conscience. It is a difficult thing one to enslave his body. And he who feels a little the greatness of the trust into God, he won't be convinced that he necessarily must serve this harsh enemy, that is his body.

About Silence and Quietude

The continuous silence and the guarding of the quietude are born out of these three causes: or for aiming at the vain-glory from people, or out of the warmth of the zeal for virtue, or for one has a godlike dialogue within him and therefore his cogitation is attracted towards that dialogue. So, if one doesn't have the last two ones, it will be obvious that he is mastered by the first helplessness.

The virtue doesn't consist of showing many and diverse deeds committed through the body, but it consists of an all-wise heart by its hope. And this one is united with those-according-to-God-deeds, by the righteous purpose. This is for the cogitation can commit the goods without deeds, but the body cannot benefit without the wisdom of the heart. But the man of God can't stand, when there is place for his good love, not to show his love into the toils of the work for God. In the first state he always progresses, while in the second state he sometimes progresses and sometimes he doesn't[169]. Do not reckon as a small thing that somebody always remains far from the causes of the passions. And may the glory be forever of our God! Amen.

[169] In the ceaseless cogitation at God the heart continuously progresses. And in showing this state in deeds, sometimes it manages to maintain itself at height and to progress, while on some other times it doesn't. This is because it could come to it also troubles and temptations.

Word XXVII

About the Movements of the Body

And the movement of the body's lower limbs, that is done without the sharper thoughts of the inappropriate pleasure that moves with heat and it will attract the unwilling would to wickedness, it is doubtlessly born out of the satiation of the belly. And if the belly keeps his good rule of his diet, but the limbs still move unwillingly, regardless how little, you will know that your passions gush out of your body and you will reckon as strong and undefeatable weapon in this fight, the restraining from seeing women. This is because the enemy cannot work within us the things which the nature can work by its power. Do not reckon that the nature forgets the things sown within it in a natural manner by God towards the procreation of children and towards proving them who live in ascesis. But the restraining form deeds it kills the lust from the limbs and it sows within them the forgetfulness and the lost (of the lust).

Something else are the thoughts of the things from far, which simply cross through mind and they cause a brief and unclear movement, and something else are those thoughts sinking the mind into the seeing of the matter, without allowing the mind forgetting about the matter, and which ignite the dead and quench passion, as the oil fuels the burning of the candle, and troubling the sea of the body through the ship of the cogitation[170]. But this natural movement having its dwelling place within us, it cannot disturb our nature and it cannot touch our virginity by its own impulse. This is for God hasn't given to the nature such a power that the nature could defeat its own impulse directed towards Him. That's why, when somebody is stirred up by anger, or by lust, he won't be forced by his natural power to get out of the border of his nature, and so him to reach outside the due things, but that is caused by the adding we do to the nature through the occasions received by our will.

[170] This is a beautiful image that couldn't have been born except out of people used to the sea. The cogitation, by bearing the thoughts about the tempting things seen into the deep and complex sea of the body, it will make that sea stormy.

This is for God has created everything good and with measure. And as long as the measure of the natural balance is preserved, and as long as the righteous impulses from within us are preserved, the natural movements cannot force us to leave the due way. And the body will move only in the well-ordered movements. So, we know that we have within us the natural passion, but not in order that passion to entice us and to disturb us in such a way that to impede us form walking the road of the righteousness, neither in order to darken our mind through wrath nor to move us form peace to anger. But is we are sometimes attracted by those things submitted to the senses (which sometimes the wrath takes through the occasion towards an impulse contrary to nature too), either towards eating, or towards drinking, either towards an overwhelming quantity, or toward the closeness to a woman, so that we to tarry in looking at them, or in conversations about them, out of which will be ignited the flame of the lust and it will jump into the body, by that we transform the gentleness of our nature into savageness, either because of the multitude of the juices or because the diverse sights of the things.

Sometimes this movement occurs because it is allowed to (by God), because our self-appreciation. But this one is not like that one mentioned before. We call the wars from before as freedom wars. They are the usual way of the nature. But that war allowed by God, that occurs because of our self-appreciation, we will know it after we have spent a long time in taking of heed and in toils, so that we have reckoned that we have achieved something. Then we are allowed to be warred up, in order us to learn the humbleness. The others, which come without this cause and which are above our power, they come because of our carelessness. They come because our nature, when it received some adding form those submitted to the senses, through the covetousness of our belly, it won't allow to be persuaded to keep its rule had by it by creation. This is because him who rejects those willing troubles and difficulties, he will be force to love the sins. This is because without troubles we cannot part with the flattering urges of our thought. This is for, the more the toils are multiplied, the more will the sins be diminished, given the fact that the troubles and the dangers kill the sweet addiction to the passions, while the resting fuels them up and makes them grow up.

So, one has been able to limpidly see that God and the angels rejoice of the tribulations which we reach in. And the devil and his hirelings rejoice of our resting. But if the commandments of God are fulfilled in troubles and in tribulations, and we despise these, we doubtlessly will despise Him Who Himself issued these commandments, and we will make unworking the cause of the virtue, namely the tribulations and the trouble. And on the measure of the resting which we share on ourselves with, we will give room to the passions within us. This is for in no restraint body can take place thoughts which are scattered towards the vain realities. But if somebody joyfully endures the toils and the troubles, he will be able to powerfully restrain his thoughts as well. This is for such thoughts cease in toils. But if the man remembers his previous sins and he punishes on himself, then God will take care to rest that man. This is for God rejoices of the fact that that man has given to himself the rebuke for deviating from God's way. And this is the sign of the repentance[171]. And the more one forces his own soul, the more it will be multiplied his honoring from God. But any joy not having its cause into virtue, it will rise up within him who is mastered by it, the movements of his lusts. But you must understand that I said all these things about the passionate lust and not about the natural lust. And the glory be of God forever and ever! Amen.

Word XXVIII

About the Vigil during Nights and about Diverse Kinds of Dees

When you want to stay in the service (the liturgy) of your vigil, by the help from God, do as I am saying to you: bend your knees as usual and then get up and do not start your service

[171] This is the role of the canon or of the penances, received form the father confessor, willingly, by him who confesses his sins. It is like he himself would give to himself those penances. The priest serves him rather as an adviser.

(liturgy) immediately. But after you have prayer and after you have finished your prayer and after you have sealed your heart and your limbs with the life-maker-sign of the cross. Then, stay for a moment in silence, until your feeling become peaceful and your thoughts become appeased, and then after you will raise your inward look towards the Lord and you will beg Him with grief to strengthen your weakness and to make your verses and the good will of your heart pleasant to His holy will. And then you will peacefully utter in the prayer of your heart, like this:

Prayer

> Lord Jesus Christ, my God Who examine Your creation, You Whom my passions and the weakness of our nature and the strength of our enemy are visible, I beg You to Yourself cove me against by evilness. This is for Your power is strong while our nature and power are weak. So, You the good one, You Who know our weakness, You Who do not bear the burden of our helplessness, You guard me against the disturbance of my thoughts and against the deluge of my passions and You make me worthy of this holy service, lets I break its sweetness with my passions and I to be shameless and full of daring before You.

So, we must start with the whole freedom[172] to our service (liturgy), outside any childish disturbed cogitation. And if we see that there is no much time before the day comes and we are not going to finish our prayers, let's willingly and consciously skip one or two glories of the usual ones, in order not to give room within us to disturbance and so to lose the taste of our service (liturgy) and to mix up the psalms of the first hour.

If, while you are serving, your thought whispers and tells you: "Hurry up a little, in order the work to advance and you to finish earlier", you won't listen to that. And if this thought will trouble you even more, you will immediately go back to the previous glory, or to whatever previous glories you want, and you will utter each verse that wears an image of prayer, with taking-of-heed, for several times. And if you are again troubled and thronged by this thought, you will leave the verses and you will bend your knees at prayer and you will say: "I do not want to measure the words but I want to reach the dwelling places"[173]. This is for, on every way which you guide me, I will travel quickly. That people who cast the calf into desert, they walked for forty years, crossing, climbing, and descending the mountains and the hills, and they didn't see the Promised Land even from far.

And if during your vigil the tiredness of standing defeats you, and if you weaken, and if you thought – better said the cunning plotter – tells you in your thought, as through the snake: "End this at once, for you can no longer stand", you will tell him: "No, but I'll rather sit down during the reading of a chapter of psalms" (for this is better than sleeping). "And if my tongue is silent and it doesn't utter psalms, my mind is occupied with God into prayer and dialogue with Him". The vigil is necessarily better than the sleep. But the vigil doesn't consist only of standing, neither it consists only of uttering verses and psalms, but it also takes vigil him: who utters psalms for the whole night; and him who is in repentance and in the prayers of the pricking and in kneelings; and him who is crying and who is in tears and in mourning for his sins. (It was said about one form among the first ones of us, that his prayer was for forty years of a sole word: "I have sinned like a man, but You like a God forgive me". And the fathers felt his cogitating at the content of the verse with sadness. And when he was crying and refusing to be consoled, instead of service he was doing only that prayer day and night). Take vigil him who utters verses for a short time in the evening, and then he spent the whole night in singing troparia; he who is in doxology and in reading and he [173] "To reach the dwelling places". "In the house of My Father there are many dwelling places", told us the Only-Begotten Son of God (Jn. 14: 2). And Gregory the Theologian said: "Is it there something to take me to these dwelling places" (For he said previously that dwelling place is the resting and the glory from there, prepared to the blessed ones). Of is it nothing there? Ther it is, certainly. But what is that? It is about the diverse way of living and impulses, among which each one leads to another place, according to the measure of the faith. We call these ones also as ways. Must we travel all these ways or only some of them? It is possible to us, we must travel all of them; and if not, we must travel on as many as possible of them; and if not, at least on some of them. And if cannot do even that, we must travel at least one of them, but one that is especially great, as I think" (In Word I – About Theology). This pious one urges us to desire to walk through all the ways of living of the virtue. This is for he adds: "On every of my way which You will guide me, I will travel quickly".

who has set to himself as a law not to bend his knee after that cunning thought waged him war[174]. And be the glory and the mastery of our God, forever and ever! Amen.

About the Ways Leading Close to God and Whis Are Shown to the Man out of the Sweet Deeds of the Night Vigil. And that They Who Take Vigil They Nourish on Themselves with Honey all Their Days

Do not reckon, oh, man, that in the whole monks' work there is a greater work than the night vigil. Rightly so, brother, the nigh vigil is the greatest and the most necessary to him who restraints on himself. If him who lives in ascesis is not scattered or troubled by the bodily things and by the worries for the passing realities, but he guards on himself against the world, his cogitation will fly in a short time as it would have wings and it will raise towards the beauty of God and it will reach to His glory and it will float into that above-human-understanding knowledge, through its nimbleness and lightness. You will no longer reckon that monk who perseveres in vigil with the right-reckoning of the mind (with discernment) as a bearer-of-body. This thing truly belongs to the angelic level. This is for it is impossible that they who always live in this king of living to be left by God without graces (charismas), due to their vigil and due to their worriless thinking at God. That soul that toils living into this vigil and that is adorned with it, that soul will have cherub eyes in order him to always look at the heavenly realities.

I reckon as impossible that him who has chosen with knowledge and with right-reckoning (with discernment) this great and godlike toil, and who has decided to bear his burden, him to toil in this glorious thing which he has chosen for himself and not to guard on himself against the disturbance of the meetings or against the worry for material things, so that him not to be emptied of its wonderful fruits and of its delectation waiting for him to pick those out of it. I dare saying that him who get lazy in doing this, he doesn't know what himself is toiling for and why he doesn't enjoy his sleep. He torments on himself in uttering many verses and in tiring his tongue and in standing for the whole night, by not having his mind in his singing of psalms and in his prayer, but he recklessly tires on himself as one led by his habit. If these things are different, how comes that he doesn't reap out of his ceaseless and tiring sowing, the greatest benefactions and fruits? This is for, if instead of these toils he occupied on himself with the reading of the godlike Scriptures that strengthens the mins and it especially water the payer and helps the vigil, being the vigil-s companion and the light of the mind, and sowing of content into the contemplation of the prayer, in order him not to get strayed and to get lost into the vain things. And if he had this one ceaselessly sowing the remembrance of God into his soul the ways of the saints who were well-pleasant to God, making his mind to gain subtlety and wisdom, we would find the ripen fruit of these movements.

Why, therefore, you man, you manage so recklessly your things? You stand for the entire night and you torment on yourself by singing and by reading psalms, in praises and in prayers; but it seems to you such a difficult and big thing to be you found worthy through a very short cogitation during the day, of the grace of God, due to the bad sufferings from your friends[175]. Why do you torment on yourself and during the night you sow but during the day you waste your toil and you are purposeless and you waste the vigil, the watchfulness, and the warmth which you have gained, by losing your toil vainly in meetings with the people and with the things, without no blessed reason? This is for it you followed the night cogitation with the day plowing and you preserved the warmth and you didn't place the separation in the middle[176], you would attach yourself in a short time to the chest of Jesus[177]. But not it is obvious that you live without right-reckoning (discernment), and you do not know why the monks must take vigil. You reckon that those things have been established only for the sake of tiring you up, and not for something else that it will be born out of them. But him who has been found worthy of being taught by the grace what the fighters against sleep resist the sleep for, and what the force they nature for, and what they raise their prayers on each night for by taking vigil with their bodies and with their thoughts, that one will know the power born out of the guarding during the day and what help it gives that to the mind during the night quietude, and what mastery it receives this over the thoughts, and what cleanness he achieves and what will him be given unforcedly and without fight the swarm of the virtues, and how that makes him understand, into freedom, the good breed of the thoughts. And I even say that, if the body weakens because of its lack of vigor and the body won't be able to fast, the mind can achieve even only by taking vigil the due state of the soul and the mind can give the understanding to the heart, in order to know the spiritual power, only if the mind doesn't get lost by scattering into the daily worries.

[175] The meetings and the discussions with the people bring bad souly sufferings, by the disturbances they cause.

[176] It might be about the "distance" between cogitation and God, or a separation between the last night's cogitation and that following to take place the next night.

[177] This is an allusion to Apostle John, who at the Last Supper was leaning his head against Jesus's chest.

That's why I am praying you who want to achieve an awake mind for God and the knowledge of the new life, not to ever disregard during your life the rule of the taking vigil. This is for though its your eyes will be opened so that you will be able to see the whole glory of this living and the power of the way of the righteousness[178]. And if it comes again to you – but that would be better not to take place – and it nests into you some thought of drowsiness, as a test from your Upholder Who usually allows you to change into these, either towards heat or towards cold, either because of some reason, or because of the weakness of your body, either because of not being you able to endure the tiredness of the much psalmody you usually do, and of the prayer with strength, and of the many kneelings which you have been accustomed to do, I am praying you with love, if you are forsaken by these and you cannot fulfill them, you don't sleep, and you at least take vigil by praying into your heart while sitting down, and you don't sleep, by taking the whole diligence you can seat and thing good thoughts. And do not make your heart harsher and do not darken you heart by sleeping. By doing so, there will come again to you, by grace, that warmth from before and that nimbleness and that power and you will jump up and rejoice and give thanks to God. This is for the coldness and the burdening come to the man out of the lenience (of God) towards being the man tested and proven. And if the man gets up with warmth and if he scatters off all of those from himself, by forcing a little on himself, the grace will come close to him as it was before.

And there will come another power that has hidden within it the whole good and all the kinds of the help. And the man will wonder amazed, by remembering the heaviness form before, and by seeing the vivacity and the power which have come to him, and by seeing the difference between heaviness and vivacity. The man will wonder about what that change unexpectedly occurred like. And from now he becomes wise in such a way, that fi a similar heaviness comes to him he will know it out of having experienced the first one. But if the man doesn't toil from the beginning, he won't be able to achieve this knowledge with the work. Can you see how much the man gest wise when he wakes up a little and when enduring in time of war? Only the body's nature not to be weakened, because if that was the case being the nature wared won't be useful. But otherwise, it is good that somebody to force on himself in all the things good for him.

So, the ceaseless quietude, joined with the reading and with the temperate sharing of food and with the taking of vigil, they will wake up the cogitation to be amazed by things[179], if there is nothing that scatters the quietude. The meanings occurring within them who appease on themselves, without their contribution or thinking, those meanings will make both eyes as baptistery, through the tears shed by eyes and the cheeks will be washed up by those tears.

And when you body gets appeased by restraint and by taking vigil and by attentive appeasement, and when you feel that the subtlety of the passion of the fornication had left the movement of your nature, you will know that you will be tempted by the thoughts of the pride. Then you will mix your food with ashes and you will glue your belly to the ground, and you will examine what you have been thinking and so you will find out the changing of your nature and yours against-nature-deeds, and God might have mercy on you and He will send you [179] To be amazed by their wonderful meaning, by their rooting into God.

His light in order you to learn how to be humble, so that your evilness won't increase. Therefore, let's not cease living in ascesis and toiling and striving, until we will see within us the repentance and until we will find the humbleness and until our heart will rest into God Whom are due the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen.

Word XXX

About the Giving of Thanks One Must Bring to God and a Few Main Teachings

The thanks from the receiver entices the given to give even more and greater gifts than before. He who doesn't thank for small gifts he is a liar and unjust in the big things as well. He who is ill and he knows his illness he will search for healing. And he who confesses his pain he gets closer to his healing and he will find that healing easily. Withing the callous heart the pains will multiply[180], and the torment of that ill man who resists his physician it will increase. There is no unforgivable sin, except that sin which one doesn't repent for[181]. No gift remains unadded, except that gift which we don't give thanks for. The share of the mindless is small in his eyes[182].

Remember them who surpass you in virtue, in order you to always see on yourself and unreached to their measure. You always cogitate at the biggest troubles of the poor and persecuted, in order you to give thanks for your small and insignificant troubles, so that you to be able to endure your troubles joyfully. During your restraint, drowsiness, and idleness, when you arere given and kept by your enemy in a more painful unworthiness and under the tormenting pressing of the sin, you think in your heart at the time form before your [180] The callous heart, because of not having love for another, it won't either accept another's love, and that's why it suffers.

[181] Where there is not repentance, that heart won't get mellow because of its pride, and that's why there will remain both the sin of the egotism and the sufferance of that man seeing that he is forsaken.
[182] The proud one, the egotist one, he always reckons that he has and that he has received, from God and from the "life", too little.

striving and what you have bene taking care like even of the tiniest things, and remember the ascesis have been proving, and how you have been moved by zeal against them who attempted to impede you on your road. In addition to that, you think also at your sighs which you have been sighing with for your mistakes done because of your carelessness, and how in all of these you have been taking the crowns of the victory. This is for by these memories your soul will be waken up as from an abyss[183] and you soul will be dressed up with the flame of the zeal and your soul will rise as from dead out of his sinking, and the soul will get elevated and the soul will turn back to his state, through the warmth of the fight against the devils and against the sin.

Remember the falling of the powerful ones and humble on yourself in your virtues. Remember the big mistakes or them who fell yore and who repented later, and remember their height and their honor they experienced after repenting, and you will take courage in your repentance. You persecute on yourself and your enemy will be banished away from your closeness[184]. Reconcile with yourself and the sky will reconcile with the earth[185]. Strive to enter the inner chamber and you will see the heavenly chamber. This is for these ones are one, and in one entrance you will see both of them[186]. The ladder towards that Kingdom is inside you, hidden into your soul. Baptize on yourself into yourself, from the side of the sin[187], and you will find therein steps which you will be able to climb on.

[183] As from an abyss of sleep, of forgetfulness, of unconsciousness, of darkness, of something similar to death.

[184] Those who fight within you when a war is wages within you are the earth and the sky, which reach you. The earth fight through your body against the sky while the sky fight through your soul helped by grace, against the earth from within you.

[185] By persecuting your sinful and untrue self from within you, you will banish your enemy away from you, you enemy whom you have allowed to work within you and therefore he gave birth to this illusory self of yours.

[186] That room from the inner treasury is transparent, as a membrane, to the endless chamber or treasury of the sky; or, they are in communication, as the river with the sea.

[187] This immersion of baptism into the self, which contributed to be one freed from sin, and it contributed to the exit from the narrowness of the egotism into the wideness of the communion with God, it makes sense only when taking in account the communication taking place within man between the deep self of the man and the ocean of the godlike energies. "What does it mean: you baptize on yourself into yourself, form the part of the sin, except that in the deep view (contemplation) and in the inward meditation, you cogitate at your sin. This is for of this consists the climbing on the steps into God. In fact, the profligate son, when he came to his senses, and when he took heed at his sins, he found the climbing to his father". It

The Scripture didn't tell us what the things of the future age are. But how we can receive even from here the feeling of their delectation, without a changing of our nature and without leaving this world, the Scripture taught us easily through the names given to some desires and glorified things, whose sweetness and honor the Scripture placed them within us, in order to entice our longing for them. This is for it says: "The things which the eyes haven't seen and the ear hasn't heard" and the others (1 Cor. 2: 9). By this the Scripture has shown us that the future goods are non-comprisable and they have no resemblance to the goods from here.

The spiritual delectation cannot be found in the use of the things existing in a substantial (hypostatical) mode, outside the soul (Lk. 17: 21). If it had not been so, the word: "The Kingdom of Heavens is without you" (Mt. 6: 10), combined with the word: "Your Kingdom come", it would have meant that we take inside us the matter of the things submitted to the senses, as a downpayment to that delectation. This is for it is necessary that, what we are going to have then, to be similar to the downpayment, as the part is similar to the whole. And what is known as in a mirror, though it cannot be seen hypostatically (in substance), it necessarily has the feature of the likeness. But, if it is true the testimony of them who interpreted the Scriptures, this understanding feeling of the Holy Ghost it is also a part of that whole[188].

Not him who does good deeds loves the virtues, but him who joyfully receives the evils things following that. It is not such a big thing enduring the troubles for virtue, as it is not hesitating the mind in choosing its good will, when it is allured by the body's lust. The sorrow born after losing the self-control, it won't spring joy out of it, and it won't bring reward to them who have it.

might be that through the Orthodox expression: "It is being baptized the servant of God", the priest ascertains not only an immersion of him who is being baptized form the part of God, but it might be also about an immersion of the baptized one into himself, or a climbing of his into God.

[188] The author rejects that opinion that itself the Kingdom of Heavens would be a part of the Kingdom of Heavens. Feeling the closeness of the Kingdom of Heavens it is not one with the feeling of the things, but it is a work of the Holy Ghost.

Cover him who has mistaken, when you have no loss because of that[189], and you will encourage him[190], and you will make on yourself to bear the mercy of your Master[191]. Uphold the word of the weak ones and uphold them who are sad in their heart, and you will be upheld by the right hand of Him Who bears everything[192]. Make on yourself partaker to them who are sad in heart, into the pain of your prayer and into the squeezing of your heart, and a spring of mercy will be open before your asks[193]. Always toil in asks before God, with a heart bearing a clean thought, full of pricking, and God will guard your heart against unclean and dirty thoughts, lets the way of God to be defiled within you. Always persevere in cogitating at what you have read into the godlike Scriptures, in order you to understand the Scriptures exactly, lest by not working your mind your sight to be defiled by looking at foreign debauched filthiness[194]. Do not load up your cogitation with debauched thoughts, or with faces which tempt you, by reckoning that you won't be defeated by them. This is for on this way many wiseman darkened and went insane. Do not pill up flame within your bosom, without stronger troubles of your body[195].

If it difficult to the youth to submit on itself to the yoke of the holiness, without ascesis. The beginning of the darkening of the mind (when its sign is seen without the soul) it is firstly shown in the getting lazy at the service (at the liturgy) and at prayer. There is no other way of soul's straying except by falling, firstly, from there (from service and from prayer). When the soul is deprived on the help from God, the soul will easily fall into the hands of his enemies. And another: when the soul forsakes [189] Cover him up, but don't approve him. This is because otherwise you will damage on yourself, and you won't be useful to him.

[190] You will give him courage to correct on himself.

[191] This too is a burden.

[192] In the hand of him who upholds the weak there is the power of the Right Hand that upholds all the things. This is for God works in order to unite all us by through love. That's why God doesn't directly uphold that one, but Gd wants him to be upheld through us.

[193] By nothing we meet the mercy of God more than in the prayer done because of feeling pain for others. It is here a participation to the pain of Christ for us. And this is a twofold clean sensitiveness. This is for God is the deep of the clean, all-generous sensitiveness.

[194] The mind cannot stay neutral. When the mind isn't occupied with the clean thoughts regarding God, or when the mind is not broadened by those thoughts into God, the mind will narrow on itself or it will be dirtied by defiled, egotistic thought referring to the limited things, which the mind can use for its passing pleasure.

[195] When your body feels troubled by the thoughts and by the tempting faces, they won't have power un you.

the deeds of the virtue, the soul will be necessarily attracted to those opposite to the deeds of the virtue. The moving away from any side is the beginning of the living on the opposite side[196]. If you do the things of the virtue and the things of the soul and if you do not take care of the vain things, you always show your weakness in front of God and so you won't be tempted by foreign things, even fi you are left alone by your Upholder.

The work of the cross is twofold because of our twofold nature, that is composed of two parts. One of them consists of enduring the troubles of the cross, by working the wrath (anger) of the soul, and it is called as doing. The second one consists of the subtle work of the mind and of occupying oneself with the godlike things, but also in persevering into prayer and in the following things, that is fulfilled by the lusting part, and it is called as view (contemplation). And the first one, or the doing, it cleans the passionate part of the soul, by the power of the zeal, while the another produced the love of the soul, that is a natural desire that cleans the understanding part of the soul[197]. So, when somebody before getting totally accustomed to the first part, he crosses to working the second part, out of love, not to say that out of laziness, the anger will come upon him because of not killing firstly his earthly limbs, namely because of not healing firstly the weakness of his thoughts by enduring the reproachable deed of the cross[198]. This is for he has dared to make shining within his mind the glory of the cross[199]. This is what the old saints said that if the mind wants to climb the cross before appeasing its senses of weakness, the anger of God will come upon that mind. That climbing that brings the anger [196] The moving away from virtue is the beginning of the sin, and inversely too. There is no neutral state.

[197] We are noticing here the fact that also the contemplation (the souly sight) is placed in connection with the cross of the Lord. This is for it comes after the cleaning up the lust of the impulse towards the inferior things, so that it is intertwined with some sufferance. But cleaning up the lust means also the apparition of the clean love within man, and the love means also focusing the mind towards God Who is the spring of the love, or cleaning up the mind of everything that defiles it, of everything that is egotistic. Thus, it is made the connection between the cleaning up of the lust and of the mind, between love and knowledge. And in both of them works the power of the cross of Christ.

[198] Enduring the defamations with the gentleness of the thoughts comes out of the power which Christ has endured the reproaches and the death with, namely which He endured the reproachable deed of the cross.

[199] He who doesn't want to cross through the disgrace of the cross, he imagines that the cross is suddenly bringing glory. The glory of the cross is lives in bearing the cross's disgrace.

of the cross, it is not the suffering of the troubles from the first part, that is the crucifixion of the body, but it is the elevation to the view (contemplation), that is the second part, that one that comes after the healing of the soul. That one whose cogitation is defiled by the dishonoring passions, but he runs to hallucinate through his cogitation the imaginings of the thoughts, he will be hit by rebuking, because of not cleaning up firstly his cogitation into troubles, and because he hasn't brought under control his body's lusts, but from hearing with his ears and from reading the ink of the letters, he has hurried on himself up to walk that full of defilements way, while having himself blind eyes[200].

But even they who are healthy at their sight and who are full of light and who have gained penetrated-by-grace guides, they still are in danger day and night, even when their eyes are full with tears and while they serve into prayer and into crying for the whole day and night, because of the fear of travel and of precipices which the come across to, and because of the deceiving images which are mixed with the true ones.

Those belonging to God, he says, they come by themselves, without you noticing that. Yes, it is so. But only if the place is clean and not dirty. If the apple of the eye of your soul is not clean, do not dare to focus it upon the solar disk, in order you not to lose even the small light you have, that is the simple faith and the humbleness and the confession form your heart and the small deeds according to your power, and you to be thrown in one of the places of the thoughts (intelligible) ones, that is the darkness from outside God, that bears the image of the hell[201], like that one who shamelessly dared to enter the wedding place while wearing dirty clothes. And out of the cleanness of the thoughts will come the light of the minds. And from here the mind will be guided by grace where the senses have no power to teach neither to learn.

[200] There is also a cross that must be imposed to the egotistic, bragging cogitation, and not only to the body. It is the cogitation's unpleasant renunciation to inappropriate thoughts which are foreign to God, thoughts which don't represent the cogitation's bestowing of itself to God, a bestowing which the mind reaches through the true, deep, and of-life-maker understanding of the existence's meanings.

[201] Each group of the thought realities (opposite to those felt with the senses) – namely the groups of the angels – it occupies a place, or a thought state. One place belongs to the fallen angels, namely the hell.

Imagine that virtue is a body, and the sight (the contemplation) is a soul[202]. And both of them compose a consummate man, united into ghost out of two felt parts[203]. And as it is impossible the soul to come to creation and to birth without the consummation of the body's creation, together with all hits limbs, likewise it is impossible to come the soul to the second view (contemplation), that is the ghost of the unveiling, that can be imagines as being formed inside a mother womb, that receives the content of the spiritual seed, without the consummation of the virtue, that is that house where the knowledge is dwelled in, and which received the unveilings[204].

The view (the contemplation) is the feeling of the mysteries hidden into things and causes[205]. When you hear about your parting with the world, or about the comprising of the world within you, or about the cleanness of the world, you must understand from the beginning and you must know not in a simple manner, but in thoughts meanings, what does it mean the name "world" and of how many different parts the world consists of, and then you will be able to know your soul, how much it is separated from the world and how much mixing your soul has with the world.

The "world" is a comprising name that embraces also the mentioned passions. This is because, if the man doesn't firstly know what the world is, he won't reach to know by how many limbs he is separated from the world or by how many he is tied to the world. There were many who parted with the world through two or three limbs, and because they reckoned that they were composed only of those limbs, they called on themselves as strangers in the world in their behavior, and they didn't limpidly see that through these two limbs they died to the world, but through the other limbs of their they still lived to the world right within their body, but they weren't able to feel that [202] The virtue is a body for it is done with the body. And the sight is soul, because it is obtained through the mind.

[203] The ghost has taken the form of the whole man, by the fact that it has made the matter a body, by prolonging the soul's power within matter. And the man works like a living whole into the Ghost. The two parts are felt, for we live into the body the feelings of the soul and, through the soul, the feelings of the body.

[204] In virtues or in the ensemble of the virtue, or in the body spiritualized through them, it is conceived the soul as view (contemplation) of the godlike things.

[205] The author permanently identifies the contemplation, of the knowledge of the godlike things, to the feeling, and therefore to an unmediated contact between them. This idea is at this author equally insistently affirmed as at Saint Simeon the New Theologian.

either within their passions. And because of not feeling those, they didn't take care of healing them[206].

The world has its name from being known by contemplation, and from the comprising content that embraces the divided passions, in their entirety. This is for when we want to call them passions in their entirety, we call them world. And when we want to show the passions according to their names, we call them passions. And the passions are parts of the world's road advancing from a state to another (which succeed to one another) and where the passions end, there the world stops from this passing from one to another (from its succession)[207].

And the passions are these: the lust for richness, namely for gathering some things, the delectation of the body (by eating), after which there comes the passions of mating, the passion for desiring honors, out of which springs the envy, the will of ruling over others, the boasting for being a clerk of the government, the adorning and the luxury, the human glory that is the cause of keeping the evil in mind, and the fear for the body. Where these stop from going, there the world will die. And to the extent which some of their parts remain to, to that extent remain also the outside world, but without working (upon man) by its composition. It is like somebody said about the saints: "When they were living, they were dead. This was because while living into their body they didn't live bodily". So, you take heed which of these you are living in, and you will know which parts (passions) you are living to the world through, and which parts you have died to the world with. After you have learnt what the world is, out of that discernment you will know what souly

[206] They didn't feel that they were intertwined with the world, because they didn't feel these passions of their, by blunting them up. That's why they didn't' take care either of healing them, namely to setting on themselves free from the intertwining with the world. Of course, the man can be united with the world through clean love as well, when he sees God through the world, and by that, he sees the truest and deepest meanings of the world. But then he won't be mastered by the world, but by God.

[207] The passions are so much intertwined with the opaque world, seen as the ultimate reality, so that the world, instead of unveiling its true meaning given to the world by cleanly contemplating the world, the world will receive the meaningless meaning imprinted to the world by the passions. In this case the meaning of the world is covered by the totality of the passions. Somebody successively goes with the world, in this meaning, as the world passes from a passion to another. To some people the world is at the beginning what satisfies the covetousness of the belly, and then it is a source of getting rich, and then an occasion for debauchery, and then a platform for affirmation or mastery or of pride. When somebody has liberated on himself from all these passions, the world - in this sense - will have died to him, and the transparent and deepened into God world will have resurrected to him.

states you are in the world through, and which soul states you will have been untied from the world through. And to say it shortly, the world is the bodily living and the bodily thoughts. By being somebody elevated out of these ones, one will know that that one has exited the world.

And somebody's estrangement from the world can be known out of these two things: out of his good living and out of the special quality of his mind's thoughts. So, out of those who sprout out in your cogitation at the things, you will find out the measure of your living. You will find out what things your nature desires, without effort, and which are the thoughts ceaselessly sprouting out, and which move haphazardly, and if your mind has received the feeling of the bodiless realities, or it still moves entirely in a material manner.

And all the seen things stir up the passions. But the seals embodied into things, which the mind imagines unwillingly in everything that the mind does, they can be motifs for virtues. And out of virtues the mind receives the cause of the unweakened warmth and of the gathering of the thoughts on the good purpose of the bodily toil, in order the thoughts to get accustomed, if the mind doesn't work them passionately. Take heed, therefore, you cogitation (your mind) not to weaken in encountering the seals of the thoughts hidden with the higher flame from God, that has the custom to cut off the memories of the vain things[208].

These few signs shown in this chapter will be sufficient for the man to be enlightened - if he appeases on himself and if he withdraws -, more than many books. The stronger is within man the fear for his body, the more he remains unworking [208] The world can wake up not only the passions – because of being the source of the passions and by providing content for satisfying the passions – but it can also be a cause for virtues and it can be material which the beauty and the generosity of the virtues can be imprinted in. A man can imprint in the world his industriousness, another imprints his brotherhood with his fellow humans. But the world urges us to virtues and it is the environment which the virtues can be unequivocally imprinted only when the world is transparent to God, only when through the world shines the flame of God like the fire shines in an oven built up with limestones. This highlights the cosmological character of the passions and of the virtues and the anthropological character of the cosmos. In this sense, the world id dead in its meaning of occasion for passions, but it is alive as environment which the virtues are practiced through, and which the virtues are imprinted in.

This teaching about the union between world and man through passions and virtues, it is one of the many interesting teachings which Saint Issac brings one of the most interesting contributions through.

because of that, among the glorious and honored things. But if over the fear for the body there it emerges the fear for the soul, the fear for the body will weaken in front of the fear for the soul as the wax in front of the flame[209]. And be the glory forever and ever of our God! Amen.

About the Diverse Power of Discernment in State of Quietude. And about the Mastery of the Mind and the Extent to which the Mind Has the Power of Defeating the Movements in the Diverse Kinds of the Prayer. And Whis is the Border Given to the Nature in Prayer. And which Is the Extent You Can Pray to. And which Is the Border over which, by Crossing It, the Prayer Is no Longer a Prayer, though that what Is Doe It Is Called with the Name of Prayer Glory to Him Who has abundantly poured His gifts within people! This is for He has made them who are bodily to serve Him in the rank of the bodiless natures and He has made the nature of the earthly realities worthy of speaking about such mysteries. And even on sinners as we are, who are not even worthy to hear such words. But by His grace He has open our blind heart, in order our heart to understand them out of contemplating the Scriptures and out of the teaching of the great fathers. This is because of not being I found worthy by my own even to experience one thing out of one thousand, which passed through my hands. But I have wanted to present in this writing especially the aspects related to our enticing and to the enlightenment of our souls and of those souls whom will read it, so that they might get waken in order to willingly get closer to those.

Other is the pleasure of the prayer and something else is the sight of the prayer. The second thing is more precious than the first one, as the man is more consummate than the unconsummated little child. Sometimes, the verses become sweet in the mouth and there is born, in prayer, out of a verse, a countless repetition of that verse, one not allowing us to pass to the next verse; and that man doesn't achieve the satiation. Some other time out of prayer is born a certain view that cuts the prayer off the lips, and that man becomes by seeing a kidnapped body, breathless. We call this as the sight of the prayer, and not as the mindless ones say that it would be an image of something or a composition of a hallucination. And again, in the sight of this prayer there is a measure and a diversity of the gifts. And until here it is prayer. This is because the cogitation hasn't yet passed beyond, so that its work no longer be a prayer but above the prayer. This is for the movements of the tongue and of the heart are keys into prayer. And the movements form after that are entrances to treasuries. Here must stop any mouth and tongue and heart, treasurer of the thoughts, and the mind, guide of the senses, and the cogitation, a quickly flying and daring bird, any of their craftsmanships. They who ask, let them remain here! For the Master is present[210]!

About the Clean Prayer

As the whole power of the laws and of the commandments given by God to the people, are ordered, according to the word of the fathers, until the cleanness of the heart, likewise all the kinds and all the ways of the prayer which the man occupies on himself with, are ordered up to the clean prayer. The sighs and the kneelings and the asks from the heart and the all-sweet weeping, and all the types of the prayer stretch their border and the power of moving on themselves, as I said, up to the clean prayer. And from the clean prayer and up to the inside realities, [210] They who want to ask something from God through prayer, let them remain here. This is for if they advance higher, they will no longer be able to ask for anything. Here is present the Master and their preoccupation with themselves and with their needs is made to stop. This is for they forget about themselves in the bewildered contemplation of His greatness; they are in a state of kidnapping, or forgetfulness about themselves.

after it crosses that border, the cogitation will no longer have the possibility to work either in prayer, or in movement, either in crying, or in mastery, either in self-control, or in asking, either in desire, or in pleasure, for anything among the things hoped in life, or for the things from the age to come. That's why, above the clean prayer there is no other kind of prayer. And the whole its movement and all its ways bring the mind up to here by its self-control (of the freedom) power[211].

Something else is the prayer and something else is the sight from the prayer, though they have their causes one into another. This is for the first one is the seed, while the second one is the gathering of the sheave. When him who reaps goes out of himself through an untold view, the very small and unwrapped seeds which he has sowed, they have sprouted out in front of him as some flourished wheatears. This one reached into his plowing outside any movement. This is for all the done prayer is and ask, or it is giving of thanks, or it is praising. But there won't be any of these or any ask for something, when the mind has crossed this border and it has entered that country! I ask him who knows the truth. This is because this power of discernment is not given to everybody, but only to the seers who have reached to the servants of this mystery or who have been advices by the fathers and so they have learnt the truths by fathers' mouths and they spent their life in these and in similar trials.

About Truth, by Question and Answer

As from tens of thousands of people there barely can be found one who has fulfilled, even for a little, the commandments and the laws, and who has reached the cleanness of his soul, likewise, out of thousands of people, barely one has been found worthy to reach – with much [211] Up to here, there is a freedom of movement, a mastery upon the own movements of the cogitation. Here one passes into a motionlessness, into a kidnapping of the looking at the overwhelming glory of the Master. But this surpassing of the state of freedom isn't experienced as an unpleasant forcing, but it is felt like a sweet lack of preoccupation with choosing something from diverse alternatives. Into the glory of the Master, in His unmediated love, all of those will have been forgotten.

guarding – the cleanness of the prayer, and him to cross over it border, and him to be imparted with that mystery. This is because most of them haven't been at all found worthy of the clean prayer, but only few of them. And that mystery after the clean prayer, barely one in a generation has reached it, by the grace of God.

The prayer means asking, it is care and desire for something, or for deliverance form the things from here, of for the future realities, or for we desire to have the fate of the fathers; it is the ask of the man for being helped by God. The soul's movements are limited within these. And the lack of cleanness of the prayer is this: when, on that moment when the mind prepared to make some of the movements which I have spoken about, some foreign thought mixes in it, or some deviation towards something else, and then the prayer is unclean; this is for the prayer has brought of the alter of the Lord some of the unclean animals. And the intelligible altar of the Lord is the heart[212]. And if somebody, by remembering about that prayer called by the Holy Father as spiritual, but he still doesn't understand the meaning of the fathers' words, he said: this one is inside the borders of the spiritual prayer, I reckon that if he studies a little its meaning, he would see that is a blasphemy to say that the spiritual prayer leans towards something. This is because that prayer that leans towards something it is inferior to the spiritual prayer. This is for any spiritual prayer has been liberated of movement. And if barely somebody prayed into cleanness, what should we say about the spiritual prayer? The Holy Fathers had the habit to call all the good moves and all the spiritual deeds with the name of the prayer. But not only them, but also all the ones enlightened through knowledge used to reckon even the good deeds as prayer.

Still, it is obvious that something else is the prayer and something else are the committed deeds. And some people say that the deeds of this s-called spiritual prayer are "way", others say "knowledge", and other say "understanding seeing". Can you see how the Holy Fathers change the names in the spiritual realities? This is because the names can fully match only the things from here. But there isn't any fit of true name for the realities of the age to come. For those there is only a simple knowledge, above any name and above any natural element and a shape and a color and an image, combined by their names. That's why, when the soul's knowledge is elevated above the seen world, the Holy Fathers could use whatever names they want, because no one knows exactly the names of the future world. But the Holy Fathers used names and examples in order to support the soul's movements by those, according to the words of that one among saint Dionysus, who said that "we use syllables and names and words which we have at hand because of our senses"[213]. But when through the work of the Ghost the soul is moved towards the godlike realities, our senses and the works from within them are useless. Likewise, the soul's powers are useless to the spiritual work when the soul becomes alike the godhead through the non-understood union, and when the soul is illuminated by the ray of that high light, in its movements[214].

So, brother, believe that the mind has power to discern its movements up top the place of the clean prayer. When the mind reaches there and it doesn't turn to the previous realities, or it doesn't leave the prayer, the prayer becomes like some kind of mediator between the souly life and the spiritual life. When moving, it is in the souly country; and when it enters the other country it ceases to be a prayer anymore. This is for the saints, in the age to come, they do not pray with the prayer, their mind being drowned by the Ghost, but they dwell, through kidnapping, into the glory that gladdens them. It is likewise to us. When our mind is found worthy of feeling the future happiness, and it forgets about the itself and about all the things from here, the mind no longer has any movement towards something. That's why somebody dares to say, and he is convinced about that, that any committed virtue and the whole order of the prayer, either into body, or into mind, it is led and moved by the freedom of the will; and itself the mind, that is the empress over passions, it is led by freedom through [213] Nicephorus Theotokis gives a note: "Dionysus the Areopagite, in his writing About the Godlike Names (Chapet I), saying: "Now we are covering according to us… the thought realities through the sensitive things and through the realities which are above-existence and we envelope through shapes and images the shapeless and imageless realities, and we multiply through the variety of the shared symbols that imageless simplicity".".

senses. But when the Ghost takes over the leadership, and when over the mind reigns His oikonomia, and when He becomes the Manager of our senses and thoughts, the freedom is taken away from nature and the mind is led by His ruling, and the mind no longer leads[215].

And where the prayer will be, when the nature no longer has power upon itself (against itself), but the nature it led by another power, where the nature doesn't know and it also no longer can direct the movements of the cogitation towards the things it wants, but during that time the nature is kept in slavery and it is led there where it doesn't feel? And it doesn't have either will then, neither "it knows whether it is within body or outside the body", according to the testimony of the Scripture (2 Cor. 12: 2). So, within him who is thus enslaved and who no longer knows about himself, can there still be prayer? That's why, let nobody blaspheme nor daring to say that is possible somebody to pray with a spiritual prayer. This daring is used by them who pray with pride, but they lack the knowledge. They lie to themselves, by saying that, when they want to, they pray with the spiritual prayer. But they who are humble in thought and sapient, they accept to learn from the fathers and to know the borders of the nature and they cannot stand to surrender their cogitation to such a daring.

Question: But why, once it is not a prayer, this untold grace still is called as prayer?

Answer: We reckon that the reason for that is the following: for it is given to the worthy ones during their prayer and for it takes is occasion out of prayer. For this glorious state has no other time of dwelling, but this time, according to the testimony of the fathers. That's why it is called with the name of prayer, for the mind is led out of prayer towards that happiness and for the prayer is its cause, and because of not taking place on other times, as the writings of the Holy Fathers show. This is [215] This is an idea belonging to Saint Isaac, that that soul who has reached to be spiritual, that soul has surrendered his freedom to the Ghost and then that soul is led and no longer leading. But surely the freedom allows to feely be led by the Ghost. The freedom is strengthened by that and not weakened. This is for the man is no longer the slave of any passion. The man is led by love and the man doesn't move on himself so freely in anything as in love. One can say that itself the consummate freedom of the Ghost, that is a consummate freedom of the love, it has become that soul's freedom, or his love.

And if somebody asked why these great and untold gifts (charismas) take place only during the time of the prayer, we would answer him: for during the time of the prayer the man is more prepared than on any other time, and the man is gathered within himself, so that he can take heed at God and the man desires and he waits for God's mercy. And for telling it briefly, this is the time when somebody stands at the gate of the Kingdom and begs. And the request of him who asks for and who prays it is appropriately fulfilled in the same time. This is because, at what any other time is the man prepared and in state of guarding, as at the time he prays? Or, would it be appropriate the man to receive any of these gifts while sleeping, or while working on something, or when his mind is disturbed? This is for, behold, though the saints have not time of unworking, for they are constantly preoccupied with the spiritual realities, they aren't always prepared to stay at prayer. This is for often they cogitate at something of the present life, or they contemplate the creatures, together with other useful things. But during the prayer, the look of the mind takes heed only at God and towards Him it stretches all its movements and to Him it brings it requests from within heart with effort and with continuous warmth. And that's why, during this time when the soul has only this sole care, it will appropriately spring out of God the godlike benevolence.

This is for we see that the Holy Ghost descends over the bread and the wine placed on the alter, during those moments when the priest is prepared and he stays at prayer and he asks God for lenience and he gathers his mind into this request. And to Zachariah too the angels showed during prayer and the angels heralded him about the birth of John. Likewise, to Peter while he was praying in the house, it appeared him that vision that led him to summon the nations through that fabric descending form heavens, with the creatures in it. Also, to Cornelius, the angels appeared him when he was praying, and the angel told him what he wrote. And to Joshua the son of Navi, God spoke to him when he was standing on his face at prayer. Likewise, the hierarch heard next to the alter, above the Ark of the Covenant, the words of God; and from there he was receiving in a mysterious manner, from God, the views for all the things useful to that time; where the hierarch entered only once a year, at the fearsome time of the prayer of all the gathered tribes of Israel, he was hearing the words of God through a fearsome untold vision, when he was entering the Holy of the Holies, and when he was throwing on himself on his face at the ground. Of, what fearsome was that mystery like, that was served by that!

Thus, all the views shown to the saints take place during prayer. This is because, what other time is so holy and so appropriate for receiving the gifts (the charisma), as during the prayer which somebody talks to God in? This is for during this time, when one addresses his asks to God, and when the encounters with God take place, the man effortfully gathers all his moves and all his thoughts from all quarters and he no longer thinks except at God, and the man has a heart full of God. That's why the man understands the non-understood ones. This is for the Holy Ghost moves on Himself within the man according to the man's measure. The Holy Ghost moves on Himself within the man taking occasion out of the things which the man prays for. So, the prayer gets interrupted during prayer from its movement and the mind is lit up and immersed into the bewilderment of the kidnapping and the mind forgets about its desire and request. And the mind's movements are baptized in a deep drunkenness, and the mind no longer is in this world, and there is no longer a difference between soul and body, neither is there the memory of something, as the godlike and great Gregory said: "The prayer is the cleanness of the mind and it is cut off through kidnapping by the light of the Holy Trinity". Can you see what the prayer is cut off like, not by the bewilderment of the understanding of those born out of it, as I said at the beginning of this writing and in other places? And again, that one says: "The cleanness of the mind is a trip at height of the thoughts, and it competes with the heavenly color which shines during the prayer in the light of the Holy Trinity"[216].

Question: Ane when is somebody found worthy of receiving the whole this grace?

Answer: During the prayer, he says, when the mind disrobed the former man and the mind puts on the new man:

that man of the grace. "Then the mind sees its cleanness alike the heavenly color, which has been called as the place of God by the old men of Israel, when God showed on Himself to them on the mountain"[217].

So, as I said, this gift of the grace mustn't be called as spiritual prayer, but it must be called as the fruit of the prayer sent through the Holy Ghost. Then the mind reaches above the prayer and, by finding out something that is higher, the prayer stops. And them somebody no longer prays with the prayer, but he goes out of himself (he reaches the ecstasy) in the non-understood realities which are above the world of the mortals; and in its nescience the mind keeps its silence about the things from there. This is that nescience from above-science, which we were told about. This is that one which was said about, that blessed is him who has received the nescience unseparated from the prayer, which may us too be found worthy of, by the grace of the Only Begotten Son of God Whom are due the whole glory and honor and worshipping, now and forever and ever. Amen.

Word XXXIII

About the Kind of the Prayer and about the Other Things Regarding the Ceaseless Remembrance, which are Absolutely Required and which are Useful when Somebody, after Reading Them, He Guards Them with the Right-Reckoning

The best part of the faith's grace is one to be entrusted about the fulfilling of his prayer, through his hope in God. But the surety of the faith into God is not given by the non-diminution of the confession, thought that is the mother of the faith, but it is given by that soul that knows the truth of God out of the power of the living. Once you find in some of the Scriptures the faith united with the living, do not tie up the knowledge of the faith by remaining to the simple right-confession of it. This is for that faith that gives the certitude of the hope it cannot be ever understood by the unbaptized ones, neither by them who broke the meaning of the truth. This is for the certitude of the hope is given them who have a high life within their soul, on the measure of the virtues, and who take heed at fulfilling the commandments of our Lord.

Ceaselessly mediating at the Scripture, it is the light of the soul. This is for this one imprint within soul useful memories, for guarding one against passions and for persevering into the longing for God, into the cleanness of the prayer. And it also opens in front us the way of the peace on the traces of the saints. Still, do not doubts the verses of our prayers, when are done with much watchfulness and with ceaseless pricking of the heart either the prayers of the reading at any time.

You necessarily admit the words said out of experience (out of trying), even if he who utters those words is illiterate. This is for the great treasuries of the earthly emperors joyfully welcome the adding of a beggar's penny, and the rivers are filled up by small creeks and out of those the rivers' flowing increase.

About Guarding Up the Memories

If the memory of the goods will renew within us the virtue, if we cogitate at them, it is obvious that also the memory of our debauchery it will refresh within our cogitation an ugly lust, if we remember about that. This is because the memory of each one of these imprints to us the different types of the deeds and it brings withing our cogitation and it show us, as by pointing it with the finger, the ugliness of our thoughts, or the height of our living, by imprinting within us the meanings and the impulses either of the things from the right or of the things from the left; and we are thinking at them in the hidden of our mind. And in the cogitation of our mind take image one or another kind of our living and thus we always see on ourselves. So, not only our cogitation harms us, but it harms us also our souly sight and the memory caused by these ones. On the other hand, not only working the virtues helps him who consummate the virtue, but also the kind of the work that takes image out of the memory of the persons working it. And out of this one can know that most of them who have reached the level of the cleanness, are always found worthy, during their nightly cogitation, of some holy views, and these views imprinted within their souls are to them cause for joy in the understanding[218] occupation of their mind. And that's why they warmly come closer to the work of the virtues and an abundant flame occurs within them, according to their desire. And they say that the holy angels take the countenances of some holy, honored, and good views, and thus the angels show on themselves in the imaginings of the soul, towards elevating the soul's thoughts, towards joy and comforting and gladness. And the day moves their soul to contemplate the new thoughts. And the work of their soul is eased by the joy for the holy realities.

Likewise, in the occurrence of the wars. He who has the habit to cogitate at the evil things is attracted by devils to hallucinations matching the evil thoughts. This is because the devils take countenances and they show to the soul hallucinations that frighten the soul, working that within the soul more in the memories of the day. And sometimes they make the soul weaken because of that imagining frightening the soul, and on some other times they show him the hardship of the living into quietude and into loneliness, and some other things like these.

Therefore us, brothers, let's always use in taking heed at memories and in unveiling the state of the soul in them, the discernment. Let's take heed at the memories of our cogitation, which memories are we tarrying with in dialogues and which memories we quickly banish away when they come closer to our soul; whether we tarry into those coming to us form the will of the devils which throw occasions to the passions, or in the things belonging to the lust, or to the wrath, or in those things coming to us from the holy angels, which bring to us as causes for joy and for knowledge the memories which wake us up through the thought stirred up by them, by their closeness to us, or through those coming to us out of our evil habits which got strengthened from before through senses, out of which move within the soul those thoughts kidnapping us, apart, by one sense or another. And we achieve the experience of these two things by occupying on ourselves with them, with the due discernment. It is about seeing them and accomplishing them with the deed. But we follow to do to each of them a special prayer.

About the Differences of the Love

The love occurring out of some things is like a small candle nourished with oil, which its light is sustained by; or it is like a creek born out of a rain, whose flowing will stope if the rain ceases fueling that creek up. But that love that has God as its cause, it is like a spring always gushing up and whose flowing will never stop (this is for Him alone is the spring of the love) and whose content will never get exhausted.

How You Can Pray in an Unscattered

Do you want to get delighted in the verses of your religious service and you to receive the feeling of the words of the Ghost, when uttered by you? Let totally go the quantity of the verses and do not take care at all of their measures, or of the care for uttering the verses characteristic to the kinds of prayer; and you forsake any uttering out of habit and you think at what those verse tell you and you thing as what story they tell you and you think at what is told about the reading of some of those who were guided by God. Let your mind tarry in cogitating at those until your soul will get woken up by their high meanings, amazed by God's oikonomia, and but that your soul will move either towards extolling God, or towards the useful sadness. You receive everything is within them towards prayer, and when your mind gets strengthened into these ones, then the disturbance will have left your mind. This is for there is not the peace of the mind into the work of the servant[219], neither is in the freedom go the sons the confusion of the disturbance. This is because the disturbance has the habit of stealing the taste of the understanding and to rog it out of its meanings, like a leech sucking up the life of the bodies together with the bodies' life. This is because one must call the disturbance, if possible, the chariot of the devils, and this is because satan always has the habit to mount the mind and to bring with him the whole burden of the passions, and to enter the weakened soul and to sink that soul into confusion. Take heed at this, with the whole your discernment. Do not be during the utterance of your verses as one receiving the words from another, in order you not to imagine that you multiply too much the work of your cogitation, or else you will get out of the pricking of your heart and from all their joy, but you imagine that those words belong to you so that you will be able to utter your words as an ask full of pricking and with the penetration of the discernment, as one who truly understands his work[220].

Mark up where the Idleness Comes from and where the Scattering Comes from

The idleness comes out of the scattering of the cogitation. And this one comes out of non-working, of non-reading, and of useless meetings, or out of a too full stomach.

We not Resist the Thoughts but to Surrender Them to God

He who doesn't resists the thoughts sown within us by our enemy, but he cuts off the dialogue with them by praying to God, he shows that his mind has received the wisdom from the grace and that his true knowledge has liberated him of many things; and by finding out the short path that he has reached at, he has cut off the scattering of the long path. This is for we do not have all the time the power to resist all our thoughts rising against us, in order to stop them, but we often receive from them a wound that remains unhealed for a long time. This is for you have as enemies some ones who are six thousand years old. And even if you defeat them, the defilement of those thoughts dirties up you cogitation and their evil stench will remain into your nostrils for a long time. In the first place, you must liberate on yourself from all of these, by fear. This is because there is no other help from God.

[220] To read the read words as expressing your asks and pains and praises you address to God.

About Tears

The tears form your prayer are sign of God's mercy, which you soul have been found worthy of, in your repentance; and that is also a sign that your prayer have been accepted and that your prayer has started to enter, by tears, the plain of the cleanness. This is because the eyes won't be able to shed tears if the thoughts at the passing realities are not removed; and if your thoughts do not throw away from them the worry about the world, and if there doesn't occur out of them the contempt for the world; and if your thoughts don't state preparing the victuals for exiting this world; and if thoughts regarding some realities from the future world don't start moving within your soul. This is for the tears come out of the unscattered clean cogitation, out of much, ceaseless, and non-deviated thinking at the mentioned things, and out of the memory of some subtle thing occurring into cogitation and saddening your heart by its memory. Out of these the tears will be multiplied and they will increase in abundance evermore.

About the Handwork and about the Love for Money

When, by persevering into your quietude, you start doing some handwork, you must not make out of this commandment of the fathers a cover for your love for money. Let your handwork be an insignificant thing to you, one destined only for removing your idleness; let it be a thing that doesn't disturb your mind. And if you want to occupy on yourself with the handwork a little more, for the sake of the giving of alms, be aware of the fact that the prayer is superior in level to the giving of alms. And if your world for the need of your body, if your body isn't insatiable, it will be enough to you need that what God sends to you. This is for God has never left His workers deprived of the passing things. This is for the Lord said: "You search firstly for the Kingdom of God and for His righteousness, and all of these will be added to you, before you ask for them" (Mt. 6: 33).

This is for somebody among the saints said that not this is the worthiness of your living to satiate the hungry, neither your monastic cell to become a house for foreign guests. This living is appointed to them who live within the world and it is rather left as a good thing for them, and not for those who have withdrawn on themselves form within world and who are free of the seen realities, and who guard their mind into prayer.

Word XXXIV

About Prostrations and about Other Things

Do not reckon as non-work the going out of yourself (the ecstasy) of the unscattered, focused, and prolonged prayer, because you have left the psalms. And more than occupying on yourself with uttering verses, you must love in prayer the prostrations. This is for, when the prostrations help you, they will keep the place of the religious service. And when in this service the grace (the charisma) of the tears is given to you, you won't reckon the delectation brought by tears as a non-work. This is for in the grace of the tears stays the fullness of the prayer.

During that time when your cogitation is scattered, you must persevere more in prayer and in reading. But not any writing is useful to you. And you must love the quietude more than the deeds. You must cherish the reading, if possible, more than the standing. This is for this one is the spring of the clean prayer. So, do not let yourself to become lazy by any means, but you gather on yourself up, with watchfulness, out of scattering. This is for the root of the living is the psalmody. But you must know also this: the body's deeds are more useful than the singing of psalms with a scattered mind. And the sadness of the thought is more precious than the body's tiredness. In time of idleness wake yourself up and move your zeal a little. This is for this wake the heart up much and it warms up the soul's thoughts. During idleness, the wrath helps the nature against lust. This is for the wrath scatters the coldness of the soul. And the idleness usually comes upon us because of these reasons: either because of the burdening of our belly, or out of the much-work.

The good order is the light of our soul. There is nothing more precious than the knowledge. Any prayer brought by you at night, let is be in your eyes more precious than all your deed during the day. Do not burden your belly so that your thought won't be confused, and you won't be disturbed by scattering when you wake up at night; and your limbs won't get drowsy and you won't be full of feminine softness; and you soul won't be darkened and your thoughts won't be mirky and you will be able to gather your thoughts up when singing verses. Otherwise, the taste of all of these will be bitter within you, and the singing of verses won't become sweetened to you – namely that sweetness which the mind uses to taste it by the nimbleness and by the light of the cogitation.

And when the good order of the night gets disturbed, the mind will be confused in the day work and, by walking into darkness, the mind won't be delighted – as it is due – either by reading. This is because like a blizzard blows upon the thoughts, either the mind occupies on itself with the prayer or with the meditation. This is for the pleasure given to them who toil during the day, it springs out of the night work into the clean mind. Any man who hasn't tried the prolonged quietude, let him not expect to find out within himself something of the goods of the ascesis, even if he is great, wise, and teacher, and he has many virtues.

Take heed at not letting your body to get too weakened, otherwise the idleness will get stronger against you and your soul; will be hurt by tasting the idleness. Each of us must weigh in, as on a scale, his living. During that time when you are satiated with food, you will guard on yourself against trusting to yourself. Let your sitting down be righteous and only when needed. Especially, you must be temperate and clean during the dinner, and you must take heed at your thoughts and at your limbs. You must guard on yourself against your self-appreciation during your changes into good. You must be zealous in showing your weakness and your simplicity to the Lord, in order you to be guarded when praying against your subtle self-appreciation, and in order you not to be allowed to be tempted by ugly things. This is for the pride is followed by fornication, and the self-appreciations is followed by straying.

Do your handwork for your need, better said you do it in order to tie on yourself up into your quietude. Do not weaken your trust in the Care-Taker. This is for He orders in an illuminated manner the things of His household. He order them who trust Him and who don't trust the people's hands, to dwell the inhabited wilderness. If the Lord help you in the bodily things without yourself working, when you strive into the care for your soul it will move within you, because of the plot of the killer devil, the thought that the cause of that taking-of-care would be you. And then, with that thought, it will cease God's taking care of you. And on the same instance there will gush up against you a multitude of trials, either because you will be forsaken by the Care-Taker, or because of the renewal of your pains and illnesses move within your body. And God won't forsake you because of the simple movement of this thought, but because your cogitation tarries upon that thought. This is for God won't punish the man and God won't judge the man for the unwilling movement, not even if we consent to that movement for an instance. This is for, if on that very moment we prick up the passion and there will occur within us the pricking of our heart, our Lord won't take in account that carelessness of ours, but the Lord will only punish us if we truly have accepted that into our cogitation and if we have looked at it with insensitiveness and then we have accepted it as one due to us and useful to us and we haven't reckoned it as a damaging worry. And let's always pray to our Lord like this:

Prayer

> You Christ the fulfillment of the truth, may Your truth sprout up within our souls; and may us know how to walk according to Your will in your way.

When a cunning thought is being sown within you, either regarding the things from far, or regarding your habits from before, and when that thought continuously shows itself to your mind, you will truly know that that thought hides a trap to you. That's why wake up on time and take vigil. And if that thought belong to those from the right side and good, you will know that God wants, on a certain mode, to give the life to you and that's why He always moves something within you outside the habit. And if that is a dark thought and you doubt about it, but you cannot reach to limpidly know whether it comes out of your things or it is a thief, or whether it is helpful or it is a trap, hiding itself under the countenance of the good, you better prepare yourself in prolonged and deep prayer, day and night, with much taking of vigil. Do not reject it, but neither agree it, but pray zealously and warmly relatedly to that thought. And do not cease calling up the Lord. And the Lord will show you where that thought is from.

About Silence

More than everything you must love the silence, for the silence brings you close to the fruits. This is because the tongue is weak in interpreting the godlike realities. Let's firstly force on ourselves to keep our silence. Out of silence will be nor within us something leading us towards silence. May God give you to feel something born out of silence. If you start this way of living, I won't know how much light will be risen to you from here.

Do not reckon, brother, that the things said about this wonderful Arsenius, when the fathers and the brother came to see him, and he sat together with them in silence and he let them go in silence, and that he did that only for he wanted to, but he has been forcing on himself to that since the beginning. Out of getting accustomed to this work it will be born within heart, after a while, a pleasure, and he who has learnt that he will make his body forcedly to persevere in silence. And out of this living will be born within us the multitude of tears. And in a wonderful view, the heart feels something in those tears, through the gift of the discernment, sometimes with tiredness while sometimes in awe (kidnapping/ecstasy). This is for the heart will be diminished and it will become a little child[221]. And when the heart starts praying, there will first flow out the tears.

Greta is that man who, by the patience of his limbs, he has achieved this habit within his soul. When you will place all the deeds of this way of living of yours, on one side, and the silence on the other side, you will find the last one weighing more. People have may ways of comfort. But when somebody get closer to silence, the work of guarding the other ways of comforting will become useless. And all the works of that one will become useless[222]. And himself is elevated above them for he has got closer to consummation.

The silence if the helper of the mind. How so? This is because, as long as we live among many, it will be impossible us not to meet somebody. This is because, not even Arsenius who was like the angels, and who loves the silence more than anybody, he wasn't able to stay separated from them. This is for we unexpectedly meet the father and the brothers living together with us. That worthy of happiness Arsenius, he knew that avoiding them while in church or elsewhere it was not possible, as long as we live among people. And because he was often unable to avoid, in that place where he was living, the encounter with the laymen and with the monks inhabiting those places, he has learnt by grace the way of the ceaseless silence. And if on some occasion, because of an absolute need, he opened his door to some of them, those rejoices even only of seeing him. And the use of the word and the need for word has become useless among them.

Many of the fathers reached, by seeing him, at the state that they guarded on themselves against receiving any adding of spiritual richness to the teaching they received by seeing the blessed Arsenius. And some of them tied on themselves to a rock, with a rope, and they were melting down their bodies with the hunger at times when they felt the urge to go out and see people. This is for the hunger is much useful to restraining one's senses.

I knew, brother, many great and wonderful fathers, who rather took care of the good order of the senses and of the life due to the body, than of deeds. This is for by doing so there will be born the good order of the thoughts. Many causes come upon the man without his will, and they make him get out of the border of his freedom. And if he doesn't guard his senses through a steadfast habituation gained by him previously, he won't be able for a long time to enter back within himself in order him to find his previous state of peace.

The progress of the heart is being done by persevering into hope. The progress of the way of living is being done by [222] The works of guarding against evil thoughts will be useless, for in silence there is comprised the guarding too. That is the deep focusing on those godlike realities which overwhelm the attraction power of the thoughts. In it there is also comprised the prayer and the ceaseless thinking at God, and therefore the cleanness of thoughts as well.

detaching it from everything. Remembering the death occasions the good mastery of the limbs from outside. The enchantment of the soul is that joy flourishing up within heart out of hope. The increase in knowledge comes out of the good trials received inside by the mind, on each day, out of the two changes (in good and in temptation). This is for, though on certain times it comes upon us the idleness too, because of the loneliness (and it might be that idleness too is allowed out of oikonomia), we thought have also the comforting from the hope overwhelmingly gushing up out of the work of the faith, a work that we have within our heart. This is for well said somebody among the bearers-of-God, that it is enough to the believer the longing for God, in order to comfort him even if he loses his soul (life) for God. This is because hos could the troubles harm him who despises the delectation and the comforting of the future goods[223]?

But I am asking you, brother, this too: let always overcome within you the balance of mercy, until you will feel within you the mercy (of God) on the world[224]. We become mirror by seeing within us the resemblance and the true imprinting of Him Who is God by nature and by being. By this and by those as this one we are lightened to move on ourselves according to God, by a limpid assertiveness. This is because the harsh and unmerciful heart won't even be cleaned up[225]. But the merciful man is a physician right to his soul, for he banishes away the darkness of the passions from within himself, as by a powerful blow. And this is a good duty towards God, according to the word of life from the Gospels.

When you get close to your beddings, tell to it: "Oh, my beddings, you might become my tomb this night. I do not know it whether, at night, instead of a temporary sleep it will enter me the eternal sleep". So, as long as you still have feet, you keep running towards working, before you will be tied with that tie that cannot be undone. As long as you have fingers, crucify on yourself into prayer, before you reaching your death. As long as you still have eyes, you fill them up with tears before they will be filled up with dirt. This is for as the rose is blown by wind and it withers away, likewise it will happen to one of your sides and you will die. Put within your heart, man, the thought that you will leave from here, by always saying to yourself: "Lo, the envoy sent after me has reached my door! Why am I sitting down? The eternal departure is waiting for me, that one without turning back". He who wants to talk to Christ, he will love the loneliness; and him who loves to be among many, he is a friend of the world. If you love the repentance, you must love the silence too. This is for, outside silence, the repentance cannot be accomplished. And if somebody resists you by word, in this regard, you won't quarrel with him. If you love the silence, the mother of the repentance, you must love with pleasure also the small loss of your soul and the defamation and the injustices coming upon you consequently to that. This is because without this preparation, you won't be able to live into wilderness, in freedom and undisturbed. And if you despite those ones, you will become partaker to silence, according to the will of God, and you will persevere in silence, as God wills. The love for silence is united with a ceaseless waiting for death.

[223] We have translated this phrase verbatim. But we kindly draw the reader's attention on the fact that we reckon the content of this saying as at least unusual, if not totally wrong. How could one despise the future delectation and goods?!... (E. l. t.'s n.)

[224] It is about the mercy our Lord has it on people (Mt. 9: 36, or about the mercy of God on the world: "Full is the earth of His mercy (Ps. 32: 5 (in KJB we have: Ps. 33: 5 (E. l. t.'s n.))), and: "Be merciful as your Father merciful is" (Lk. 6: 36). In the mercy of the man there is shown the mercy of God. The man becomes an organ whom God manifests on Himself through.

You must also know this, you who have the gift of the discernment, that we do not dwell with our soul into loneliness and into silence and that we do not lock up on ourselves, for those deeds which exceed the deed appointed by canons. This is for it is a known fact that such deeds are more easily dome in the congregational life with many, for the zeal it occasions to the body. If such deeds were necessary, there wouldn't be some of the fathers who, by leaving the live of meetings and the community with the people, they chose to live in tombs, and other locked on themselves up in a lonely monastic cell. By doing that, they weakened their body to a certain extent that their body was no longer able to accomplish the canons; and they even endured with pleasure the grave illnesses which came upon them for the whole their life. Because of that, they weren't even able to stand up, neither to make the usual prayer, or to make doxology with their mouth; and they didn't even utter the psalms, nor they did something of the things dome with the body. It was enough to them only the helplessness of their body and their quietude, in exchange for all canons. And this was their way of living during all the days of their life. And in this apparent work, no one of them wanted to leave his monastic cell and, because of not fulfilling some rule, they to walk outside, or to be glad when hearing the voices form within churches of the serving of others.

He who feels his sins is better than him who rises the death, when living amid many. He who sighs for an hour, for his soul, he is better than him who is beneficial to the whole world by his thinking. He who has been found worthy of seeing on himself, he is better than him who has been found worthy of seeing the angels. This is for the last one communicated through his bodily eyes, while the first one communicates through his soul's eyes. He who follows to Christ in the weeping in loneliness, he is better than him who is praised in assemblies. Ad let nobody mention the Apostle's word: "I prayed to be anathema from Christ" (Rom. 9: 3). This is because only him who has received the power of Paul, only him has been ordered to do that too. And Paul received out of the Ghost dwelling within him, that power, towards the benefit of the world, as himself confessed it, for he wasn't doing that by his will: "For it is of big necessity to me, and woe to me if I don't herald it" (1 Cor. 9: 16). And Paul was chosen not for his repentance, but in order him to herald to the people. On this purpose Paul received that overwhelming power.

But let's love the quietude, my brothers, until the law from within our heart will be killed; and let's always remember the death and by that thought let's get closer to God within our heart and let's despise the world's vanity; and the world's pleasure will be despised in our eyes and we will endure, with pleasure, within our sick body, the ceaseless working, that one out of the peaceful living. In order us to be found worthy, by that, of the delectation together with them who live in caves and in the cracks of the earth, waiting for the praised unveiling of God, form heavens. This is for His and of His Father's and of the Holy Ghost are the glory, the honor, the mastery, and the worshipping, forever and ever. Amen.

Word XXXV

Why the Souly Men Look at the Spiritual Realities, Knowingly, according to the Thickness of the Body. And How the Cogitation Can Be Elevated out of That. And which Is the Cause of not Being Freed of that. And When and How the Cogitation Can Persevere Outside Imagining During Prayer.

Blessed in the extolling of God Who opens the door before us, in order us no longer have any other request except desiring Him. This is for, by that, we leave everything and our soul goes out only to follow God, for the soul no longer has any worries which to impede him from seeing God. This is for, the more the cogitation forsakes the worry for the seen realities, on the measure the cogitation is elevated form the taking care of the body and from being occupied with that, the more the cogitation will be thinned and it will be enlightened in prayer. And the more the body is liberated from the ties to the things, the more the cogitation will be liberated as well. And the more the cogitation is freed of the ties of the worries, the more luminous the cogitation will be (it becomes transparent). The more the cogitation is lightened, the more the cogitation will be thinned and it will ascend out of the meanings of this age that is bearer of the thickness of the images. And then the cogitation is able to contemplate God appropriately to Himself[226]. And not as we do it. This is because, fi the man doesn't become, firstly, worthy of unveiling, he won't be able to know that unveiling. And if the man doesn't' firstly reach to cleanness, his thoughts won't become transparent so that him to be able to see (contemplate) the hidden realities. And until the man is not freed of all the seen realities, according to their creation, he won't be freed of the thoughts regarding those, neither will he get rid of the occupation with the dark thoughts. And where there is darkness, there are also entangled thoughts and passions. And if the man is not freed of those, as I said, and of their causes, his cogitation won't see the hidden realities. That's why our Lord has commanded us, before everything, us to keep the non-earning and us to part with the world's disturbance, and us to detach on ourselves from the worry of all people. "This is for him who doesn't detach on himself from any man and from all his things and who doesn't' deny on himself, he won't be able to be My disciple" (Lk. 14: 33).

So, in order the cogitation not to be harmed by all of those, by sight, by hearing, by worrying about material things, by worrying about losing them, by taking care of multiplying them, by somebody, and in order the man to tis on himself only to the hope in Him, our Lords has asked us the rejection of all thought of worry and of the sadness of all things, in order us to desire only the dialogue with Him. But the prayer takes much accustoming to it, so that, by spending a long time in prayer, our cogitation to become wise. This is for, after the non-earning that detaches our thoughts from ties, the prayer requires perseverance. This is for by persevering a long time, the cogitation will gain habituation and it will be able to banish away from itself the thoughts and the cogitation will learn out of mush experience aspects impossible to be receives from somebody else. This is for, any kind of living which one has reached to, it takes its power from the previous kind of living, and it requires the previous aspects in order to find the current aspects. The prayer has before itself the withdrawal. And the withdrawal has been done for prayer. And the prayer itself, it has bee done in order us to achieve the love for God. This is for in prayer we find out the reasons for loving God.

But you must also know this too, my beloved ones, that each speaking that is done hiddenly, and with the whole care for correctly understand God, and with the whole cogitation at the spiritual realities, it has its guide and it spring into prayer, and it is reckoned inside the name of the prayer, and they are gathered inside this name, whether it is about the kinds of readings, or about the voices of the mouth raised towards extolling God, or it is about the sad care for the Lord, either it is about the prostrations of the body, or about others, out of which come, successively, the clean prayer, and it is born the love for God.

This is for the love is out of prayer; and the prayer is out of living into withdrawal. And we need the withdrawal; in order us to be able to occupy on ourselves only with God. And the withdrawal is preceded by the rejection of the world. This is because, until the man doesn't reject the world and until he doesn't get appeased of all the world's realities, he won't be able to get lonely. And before rejection it takes place the patience. And before patience there is the hatred on the world. And before this one, there are the fear and the longing. This is because, if the heart doesn't not get afraid of the Gehenna, and if the heart is not determined by its longing to come to the desire of the Blessings, the hatred for this world won't move within that heart. And if the patience won't precede into cogitation, the man won't be able to choose a place wild and desert of inhabitants. And if the man doesn't choose a more withdrawn life, he won't be able to persevere into prayer. And if the man doesn't persevere in occupying on himself with God, but he remains into the thoughts mixed in prayer and in the things following to that, which I spoke about, he won't reach to feel the love.

So, the love from God comes out of talking to Him. And the occupation with the prayer comes out of quietude, and the quietude comes out of non-earning. And the non-earning is born out of patience and out of hating the lusts. And hating the lust come out of fearing the Gehenna and out of waiting for the Blessings. The lusts are hated by him who know the fruits prepared to him out of them, and who knows also form what kind of happiness he is impede by his lusts. Thus, any kind of living is tied to the previous kind of living and it progresses out of that one, and it will be moved to a higher kind of living. And if one of the ways of living misses, the succeeding way of living couldn't come to existence and it won't be seen. This is for everything gets scattered and lost. And what is more than these, it exceeds the border of the said things. And to our God are due the glory and the extolling forever. Amen.

Word XXXVI

It Is not Appropriate to Desire and to Search for – without an Absolute Need – to Be Done Visible Signs through our Hands

At any time, the Lord is nigh to help His saints, but He doesn't show His power at any time in a visible manner in some deed, in order us not to get mad because of the help we receive and so that to bring us some harm. And the Lord does this by taking care of His saints, namely by wanting to show them that they are not, even for a moment, deprived of Hid hidden care of them. But the Lord lets His saints to work in everything according to their power and so toil in prayer. But in that thing that overwhelms them because of its difficulty and because they got tired and because they have been forsaken by Him, and because of their nature not being on the measure of that thing, the Lord will work Himself according to His power, for they benefit, and the Lord helps them as only Him knows. And the Lord strengthens them until they take power against their trouble. This is for the Lord helps them through the knowledge He has bestowed them, to undo the much-intertwining of their trouble, and the Lord wakes them up, by the undertaking of that trouble, to extoll Him Who is useful to them in both ways. And if there is the need to be shown the deed and the thing, He does absolutely that. But His ways of working are all-wise and He commits those when the saints need that and when they are distressed and not in a regardless manner.

He who shows daring into such a thing and he asks God and he wants to do wonders and power through his hands, he is tempted by the devil that laughs at him, in his cogitation, as one who boasts on himself as one who has weakened in his conscience. We must ask God for help when we are in trouble. But tempting God without an absolute necessity is dangerous. And he who desires to do that he is not truly righteous. To many saints God has fulfilled something through His benevolence. But he who asks for this and who desires this with his will, without this being necessary, he will fall off the guarding for himself and he will slip away from the knowledge of the truth. This is for, he who asks is listened to in what he asks for, as he dares towards God, the cunning one too will find place within himself and the cunning one will move him to bigger sins that this one. But the true righteous, not only that they do not desire this but when they are given these, they reject them. And they do not desire those not only in the eyes of the people, but even secretly within themselves.

This is because, lo, some of the Holy Fathers received into his cleanness, by grace, the gift (charisma) to know in advance the people who were to come to him, and he begged God, together with other saints whom he asked to pray together with him, that that gift to be taken away from him. And if some of the Holy Fathers received gifts (charisma), they received those because forcedly or due to their simplicity. The godlike sign did not move the others, but they saw that as a happening. That blessed, Saint Amon, when he left to prostrate before Anthony, and he got strayed, what did he say to God? And what God did? Remember Abba Makarios and the others. The true righteous always reckon within themselves that they are unworthy of God. And in this they are proven as true, for they reckon on themselves as sinners and as unworthy of God's care for them. And they confess that in a hidden manner and in a plain manner and they are made wise towards that by the Holy Ghost, in order they not to be forsaken by the care due to them and by the urge to work as long as they still are in this life. This is for the time for resting is appointed to the future age. They who have the Lord as dwelling within them, they do not lust for being into resting or to be delivered from troubles, though they were given, from time to time and for a while, in a mysterious manner, also some comforting into the bodily things.

It is not a virtue that one that, when achieved, it allows the man to forsake its care and its toil. And the dwelling of the Ghost within man can be seen in that that that man always forces on himself to obey[227], despite he could do his thing also restfully. For this is the will of the Lord in them whom He dwells within, that they won't get accustomed to idleness; neither He urges them to search for resting, but they must rather search for toil, and they to surrender on themselves to some abundant troubles. And in trials He strengthens them and He makes them come closer to wisdom. This is the will of the Ghost, that they to be His into toils.

Within them who live in peace, there isn't the Ghost of God, but there is within them the will of the devil, as said one among those who loves God: "I have sworn to die on each day". Of this consists the difference between the sons of God and the others: that they live in troubles while the world shines in delectations and in resting[228]. This is for God hasn't deigned that they who are His beloved to get rest while they still are within body, but God rather wanted them, while they still in the world, to be in trouble, to be burdened, to the in toils, in needs, [227] Even in the striving and in the effort of the man towards the good things, there is a sign that God urges him and gives him power to do that. So, it is always maintained the collaboration between grace and the man's freedom.

[228] "Lux" comes from light. The luxury is a light too; but it belongs to the world, as an exterior light, and it doesn't belong to God, because of not starting from interior.

in nakedness, and in loneliness, in illnesses, despised, hit, into the crushing of their heart, in the exhaustion of their body, in straying from their kins, in saddened thought, with a countenance differing from all creation, living a live unlike the ordinary people, in a monastic and peaceful settlement, one unshown to the people's sight, far from people's sight and form all the things gladdening the people here.

They cry while the world laughs; they are sad while the world is glad; they are fasting while the world delights. They toil; day and night and they urge on one another to toils into narrowness and tiredness; some of them, into willing troubles, others tormented by their own passions; and again, others persecuted by people; and others, in the dangers of the passions, of the devils, and of others. Some of them were persecuted, others killed; other wore sheep skins and similar things. And into them has been fulfilled the Lord's word: "In the world you will he troubles, but into My you will be gladdened" (Jn. 16: 43). The Lord knows that it is impossible, while being us into the resting of our body, us to live into His love. And that's why He impeded them from resting and from tasting the resting's pleasures. And may Christ - our Savior Whose love is greater than the bodily deaths – show us the strength of His love!

Word XXXVII

About Them Who Live Night to God and Who Spend Their Days into the Live of the Knowledge

A certain old man wrote on the walls of his monastic cell words and thoughts of many kinds. And he was asked: "What are those?". And he said: "These are the thoughts of the righteousness[229] coming from the angels living together with me, and the right cogitations of the nature which are moving within me. And I write them down at the time they occur to me so that at the time of my darkening to occupy myself with them and they to deliver me from straying".

[229] Righteousness means in the Holy Scripture the totality of the virtues.

Another old man, being congratulated by his thoughts telling him: "Instead of the perishing world you have been found worthy of an unperishing hope", he answered them: "While I still am on the road, you are praising me vainly; I haven't finished my travel yet".

If you work the things of a great virtue but you do not feel the taste of its reward, you won't donder. This is for, until the man doesn't humble on himself, he won't get the payment for his word. And the reward is not given to the work, but to the humbleness[230]. He who disregards the first one, he will lose the first one. He who has taken it forwards, and who has taken the rewards of the goods, he surpasses even him who have the work of the virtue[231]. The virtue is the mother of the sadness; and out of sadness is born the humbleness; and to the humbleness is given the grace. So, the reward is not given to the virtue, neither to the toil for achieving that virtue, but it is given to the humbleness born out of those. If the humbleness misses, the first ones are done vainly.

The work of the virtue consists of keeping the Lord's commandments. The abundance of the virtue is the good composition of the cogitation. And this one consists of humble cogitation and of guarding. When the first one kiss the power, the power will be received instead of them. This is for Christ doesn't ask for the working of the virtues but He asks for the straightening of the soul. For this He ordered the commandments to them who are under the law. The body works bot the things from the right side and the thigs from the left side. And the cogitation, as it wishes, it either corrects on itself or it wrongs. There are some people working the wisdom in the things from the left side, and there are others who commit the sin under the countenance of some godlike deeds[232].

The shortcomings[233] of some people who guard on themselves, those shortcomings are guardians of their [230] This is for the humbleness doesn't brag itself with it, because he who has the humbleness, he won't feel that he has the humbleness.

[231] It is about that one who has achieved the humbleness before committing the deeds of the righteousness.

[232] By committing the deeds of the virtue and by getting proud for them, you work the evil with godlike appearance, while, by apparently doing the evil, because of your humbleness, you live in the wisdom of God.

[233] "The natural shortcomings, as the helplessness, the lack of courage, the lack of skillfulness, the lack of culture, and the ones alike, are to them who know on themselves occasions for righteousness. A gift (a charisma) without temptation it will be perdition to them who receive that gift. If you work the good in front of God and if God gives you a gift, you must persuade God to give you also the knowledge on how you must humble on yourself, so that that gift not to become a cause of perdition to you. This is because of not being all the people able to guard the richness without they being harmed.

That soul that has taken upon himself the care for virtue, by living attentively and in the fear of God, that soul won't be without sadness on each day. This is for the virtues have intertwines within them the sadness. He who gets out of troubles, he will doubtlessly separate on himself from virtues as well. If you wish the virtue, you will surrender on yourself to any trouble. This is for the troubles give birth to humbleness. God doesn't' want the soul to be worriless. He who wants to be worriless he is in his thought outside the will of God. But we call worry not that regarding the bodies, but that regarding the things paining us and that follows to the good deeds. Until we reach the knowledge, that is the unveiling of the mysteries, we come close to humbleness through trials. Him who is in his virtue without trouble, a door to pride has been to him.

Wo wants; therefore, to be non-saddened in his through? The cogitation is unable to tarry into humbleness without causes of passions, neither into the occupation with the clean prayer towards God, without the humble cogitation. In the first place, the man gets far from the worry due in his thought and then he will bring closer to him the ghost of the pride. And, by tarrying the man into that, the angel of the taking-care gets far from him – who is nigh to him -, and so the angel will move within man the worry for righteousness. And when the man commits injustice against the angel and so the angel gets far from the man, the enemy will come closer to the man. And then will no longer be within man the worry for righteousness.

"Before the crushing of the heart, there is the haughtiness", says the wiseman (Prov. 16: 19). And before the gift (charisma), there is the humbleness. On the measure of the pride that can be seen within soul it will be the measure of the crushing, or of the advising-rebuking coming him form God. The pride is not when it's through quickly crosses through humble cogitation, and they are to them who take heed at themselves, as guardians of the virtues".

cogitation, neither when somebody is defeated by pride for an instant, but it is when the pride tarries within soul. To the first thought it follows the pricking. And the second state, which the pride is loved in, it won't know any pricking. And to out God be the glory forever! Amen.

Word XXXVIII

About the Need for Somebody to Know, out of the Thoughts Moving within Himself, what Measure Does He Reached at

The man, as long as he is in idleness, he will fear the death. And when the man come nigh to God, he will fear the judgment. But when the man has fully advanced, he will have advanced into love[234]. Out of these ones, there are two by two are tied. How comes? When somebody is in the bodily knowledge he will fear the death. But when he is in the souly knowledge and in the good living, his cogitation will move on each moment to remember the judgment. This is for the nature itself stays righteously and it move on the soul phase and it walks into the self-knowledge and in a living that desires to get closer to God[235]. But when he reaches the knowledge of the truth, through the awakening of the feeling of the mysteries of God, and by the strengthening of the hope for the future realities, the bodily man who fears the death, - as an animal taken to the slaughterhouse -, he will be swallowed by the loves the rational man fears the judgment, while he who has reached to be a son he will be beautified (consummated) into love[236] and he will no longer be guided by the frightening staff. "And I and [234] There are three steps: the preoccupation with the body that coincides to the fear of death; the soul knowledge that has a longing for getting nigh to God and that it has the fear of judgment; and the progress into the closeness to God that coincides to the love for God.

[235] If the first stage is a living beneath the nature's level, the second is matching the nature, but it still isn't out of the grace's power. Only the third one is out of grace. In this is the desire of getting closer to God, but there misses the power of the grace for an actual closeness. But when one crosses from a stage to the next one, the first one is engulfed by the second one.
[236] He whom the love from God dawns in, he will have by that a first effect upon the bodily man, by waking up within him the fear of death.

the household of my father will serve God" (Wisdom of Sirach[237] 24: 15).

He who has reached the love for God he will no longer want to remain here. This is for the love removes the fear. My beloves ones, because I have made myself insane[238], I cannot stand anymore to keep the mystery in silence, but I behave like a mindless one, for the use of the brothers. This is for such is the true love, that it cannot keep something secret any longer form the beloved ones. Often, when I have been writing these things, my hand stopped writing and I was no longer able to move my fingers because of the pleasure emerging within my heart and that was bringing me to the silence of the senses. So, blessed is him who always occupies on himself with God and he stopes from everything that is worldly, and the whole his knowledge is occupied only with God. And if he is long-suffering, there greater fruits won't delay from appearing.

That gladness into God is stronger than the life from here. Ane he who has found it, he not only will no longer look at the passions, but he won't even turn towards his own life; and he will no longer have any feeling of his life, if this joy has come to him out of truth. The love is sweeter than the life[239]. This is for it is sweeter that understanding according to God, out of which is born that love that is sweeter than the honey or than the honeycomb. The love doesn't get sad when it must receive fearsome death for them whom it loves. The love is the daughter of the knowledge[240]. And the knowledge is the daughter of the soul's health. And the soul's health is that power born out of much-suffering[241].

[237] The Book of the Wisdom of Sirach also called in the ROB as The Ecclesiastes (NOT to be confounded to Ecclesiastes (Romanian: Eclesiatul), it is not given in King James Bible. The interested reader can find it on www.academia.edu and freely downloaded, grouped together with other 13 book not given in KJB, under the title: Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[238] Insane for the love for God, due wot which he no longer values the realities from here.

[239] It is sweeter than the life from here. This is for the love is life too, at its turn. But it is a different life. The love is a totally superior and unperishing life.

[240] When you know the great, the deep personal reality - one that is infinitely loving - of God, and when you know the inexhaustible deep and immortal deep of love of your neighbor, you will no longer be able to love one and not to love another.

[241] It is to be noticed this identification of the soul to the power, and it is to be remarked the explaining of the power through patience. Thus, the suffering of the cross by Christ has strengthened the human souls, as the suffering of the cross and of any trouble bring within us the fruits of power and health. On the opposite, the drowsiness and the lack of patience are sign of and cause to weakness.

Question: And what the knowledge is?

Answer: It is the feeling of the immortal life[242].

Question: And what the immortal life is?

Answer: The feeling of God[243]. This is for out of knowledge there is the love[244]. And the knowledge of God is the empress of all lusts, and that soul that receives it will no longer need any sweetness from on earth. This is for nothing is like that sweetness of the knowledge of God[245].

Prayer

"Lord, fill up my heart with the eternal life".

The eternal life is that comforting into God. And he who has found the comforting into God, he will reckon as no longer needed any worldly comforting.

Question: Where can the man feel from, that he has received the wisdom from the Ghost?

Answer: From that feeling that teaches him in his hidden and in feelings the kinds of the humbleness[246]. And it is unveiled into his understanding that he has achieved the humbleness[247].

Question: And which are the causes of the passions?

[242] The knowledge of the decomposing realities doesn't place us in contact with the imperishable essence of the reality and it doesn't give us the power of the everlastingness. "This is the eternal live, they to know You, the true God" (Jn. 17: 3).

[243] In itself the feeling of the immortal and endless life of God, there is the immortality, for this feeling is united with that life.

[244] If out of knowledge there is born the love, the true knowledge must be through the communion with a person whom we can love and in the last analysis through the communion with God's Person Who, by His imperishable love gains our imperishable love, and so He makes us immortal. This knowledge, by giving birth to love, it is itself born out of feeling the love from God. This knowledge has no theoretical and deductive character, but it is an encounter through a feeling of spiritual order. The teaching about knowledge as feeling didn't firstly appear at Saint Simeon the New Theologian as J. Hausherr affirmed.

[245] The knowledge of God is sweet for it is the knowledge of God's love.

[246] The "mode" or the "modes" of the humble existence. The humbleness is the true wisdom, or it sprouts out of the true wisdom.

[247] The feeling is one with the understanding, and vice versa. There is no non-understood feeling, as there is not an understanding lacking any feeling.

Answer: They are bites placed in the things of this world which move the body towards the things absolutely necessary to the body. And they won't stop baiting as long as the world exists. But that man who has been found worthy of the godlike gift and who has tasted and who has felt something above all of these, he no longer will allow them enter his heart. But they will remain outside, and unworking. And not because they are bites of the passions, but because of the heart that receives them being dead towards them and for that heart lives something else; and not because that heart has stopped on itself from guarding the right-reckoning (the discernment) and its work, but for is that man's cogitation there is no longer any disturbance cause by something. This is for his conscience has been satiated by the delectation with something else.

That heart that has received the feeling of the spiritual realities and the exact-seeing of the future age, it will remember, in its conscience, of its passions, like a man who is satiated with fine food will look at the poor food placed before him. He won't pay any attention to that poor food and he won't lust it at all, but he will rather feel disgusted by that poor food, and he will turn away from that poor food, not only because of that food being disgusting and unpleasant, but also due to the fact that he has got satiated by the fine food he has eaten before. He won't be like that one who has wasted his share of wealth and now he is searching for roots to eat, after he has wasted his parental inheritance that he had. And won't sleep him who has been entrusted with a treasure.

If we guard the law of the watchfulness and the work of the right-reckoning into knowledge, out of which the live is bringing forth fruits, the war of the baits that stirs up the passions it won't come close to our cogitation by any means. But not the fight impeded the passion to enter our heart, but it does that the satiation of the conscience and the knowledge which the soul has been filled up with, and the desiring of the wonderful views which are in it. These ones will impede the baits from coming closer to the soul, not because they have parted with the guarding, as I said, and not because they have parted with the deeds of the right-reckoning (of the discernment)[248], which guard the knowledge of the truth and the light of the soul, but this is because now the fight is of the cogitation, for the reasons mentions by me. This is because the food of the poor disgusts the rich, while the food of the rich sickens the healthy. But the richness and the health are born out of watchfulness and industriousness. Thus, as long as somebody lives, he will need watchfulness and industriousness, and vigil, and guarding his treasure. This is because, if he leaves his rule, he will get sick and he will be robbed. And he must not work only until seeing the fruits, be he must work until his death. This is because often the hail destroys the ripen fruits. He who mixes on himself with the things and who scatters on himself into discussions, let him not believe that the health will remain within him.

When you pray, tell this

Prayer

"Lord, make me worthy of truly becoming dead to the discussions from this age".

And you will know that you have gathered all the heavenly treasures in one. Strive to fulfill this thing within you. This is for if this thing follows to your request, you will truly be free in front of Christ[249]. And to die to the world consists not only of somebody getting far from the partaking to the world's things, but it also consists of no longer desiring any of the world's good things in the dialogue of his cogitation[250].

If we get accustomed to the good cogitation, we will get ashamed of passions when we meet them. This fact is known to them who have achieved the experience. But we must get [248] The guarding and the discernment must be maintained on any level. So, the temptations no longer come to us not because the man is so strengthened that he no longer has to guard on himself, but for he is too much delighted with the higher realities.

[249] He who is dead to the world he will be free in front of Christ and through Christ. Nothing from within the world keeps him in slavery anymore or impeded him from being free in front of Christ.

[250] The cogitation, by occupying itself with the material things, it dialogues with those, or with itself about those. The dialogue with the man with God, occasioned by material things, it has been atrophied in a false dialogue with them, or with himself about the material things. The man in unable to totally stop talking, even when he reckons that he is alone, even when he no longer knows a true partner of dialogue.

ashamed also by the closeness of the causes of the passions. When you want to fulfill a certain thing due to your love for God, you will cross with that desire even the death's border[251]. And so, you will be found worthy, through that thing, to ascend to the level of the testimony above any passion[252] and you will suffer no harm from them who meet you from inside this border, if you endure to the end and you do not get drowsy. The tarrying into the weak thought it will weaken the power of the patience. And the steadfast cogitation bestows him who pursuits to persevere in it, also a power not had by the nature[253].

Prayer

> "Lord, make me worthy of hating my own life, for that life into You".

The living into this work is like them who show, by drawing some lines, things which still are in the state of some sketches. Each one adds or erases from them what he wants, changing the previously drawn lines. And the living into the future realities, it is like those manuscripts written on clean materials and sealed with the imperial seal, which no one can add or erase anything. So, as long as we are on course of changing, let's take heed at ourselves. And as long as we are [251] "Maybe this is the meaning: when somebody wants to do a thing for the love for God, he must cogitate that he must even give his own life for God and therefore he must prepare on himself for his death. This is for, thus, he will overcome not only any passion and he will be above any harm coming from the things that can happen to him, but he will also be worthy of the level and of the group of the martyrs, as one who has decided even to die for that thing that he has chosen to fulfill for the love for God".

[252] He no longer feels any pain, he who confesses Christ out of fiery love for Him.

[253] Staying firmly in your thought at God, it will give your mind a power above its natural power. We have here, again, the mystery of the synergy, of the collaboration between grace and freedom. He who stay strong into the cogitation directed towards God he seems to stay such by himself. But he actually stays strong for the grace hiddenly helps him to make this effort. The grace doesn't exclude the effort of our will, but just the grace shows its work in this effort. When you make effort to succeed in good deeds and you succeed in that, that is a sign that God too helps you. Just the fact that you stand into the firm One it makes you too firm. Just by this we are in an above-nature state. But even in this firm state it is involved an effort of ours. It is true that we keep this firmness more easily, or we keep it only for the grace works within us, but our effort still is implied in the possibility of the nature.

masters upon the manuscript of our life[254], let's strive to write in it adds of good living and let's erase from it the mistakes of our previous living. This is for, while we still are within the world, God doesn't seal either our good or our bad things, until the moment of our exit, which our work in this country will end in, and we depart for our final trip[255]. As Saint Ephraem said: "We must reckon that our soul is like a ship ready for departure without knowing where the wind will carry it; our soul is like an army not knowing what moment the trumpet will call them to war". And if he tells these about them for the small difference of living happening to them, for they might as well come back, how much more must we adorn and prepare on ourselves before that day that comes suddenly, before that bridge and door of the age to come? May Christ, the Mediator of our life, give us the due preparation, in order us to be supported by that decision we wait for[256]. He Who has the glory and the worshipping and the giving of thanks forever and ever. Amen.

About the Angelic Movement towards the Progress of the Soul into the Spiritual Realities Waken Up within Us by the Taking-of-Care of God

The first thought coming within man out of God's love for people, and that guides the soul towards life, it is that occurring within our heart about the exiting form this world. This thought will be naturally followed by despising the world. And out of it comes within man all the good movement guiding the man towards life and that, the godlike power following to it, it will [254] We still are masters upon the manuscript of our life as long as we can intervene for completing it and for strengthening it. But in the moment of our death, we will no longer able to intervene. Our life's manuscript will be then a definitive one, whether good or bad.

[255] On the moment of our death our life will be definitively rounded ads a whole, with its meaning. It might be that, even if we lived longer, we would only prolong the manuscript of our life in the same direction.

[256] To be us supported by the decision of Christ from after our death, so that we won't collapse into the precipice of the darkness and of an inconsistent experience non-founded on His life and into His immortal love as man resurrected to the immortal life.

place this thought within man as a foundation, when God wants to show the life within that man. If the man doesn't' quench this thought mentioned by us, by intertwining on himself with the things of the life and with the vanity, but if the man weighs it in though quietude, and fi the man continuously perseveres in that thought and he occupied on himself with that thought, this thought will lead the man towards the deep sight (contemplation) that cannot be explained[257]. Saten hates this thought a lot and he fight it with the whole power to pluck it out of man. And if satan could, he would give the man the whole power over the world only to erase, through scattering, this thought form man's mind. And is satan could, as it was said, he would do that with pleasure. This is because the cunning one knows that, if this thoughts tarries within man, the man's cogitation won't remain in this land of the deceit, and satan's plots will no longer come close to that man.

But we do not think at that first thought that moves within us the remembrance of the death, but we think at its fulness that makes the man no longer part with remembering the death and with cogitating at the death, by keeping the man in a continuous kidnapping. That first thought is a bodily one, while the last one is a spiritual view and it is a wonderful grace. And this view is dressed up in luminous meanings. He who has that he will no longer inquire this world and he will no longer tarry into the things regarding to the body.

Rightly so, brothers, if God had left this view to the people even only for a little while, this world would have remained without inheritors. This view is a tie catching us in itself and in front of which the nature cannot stand, and he who has received the occupation with it within his soul he has from God a grace more powerful than any of his works[258]. And that has been given them who are on the middle level[259], who desire the repentance into the straightening of their heart. It has been given them who doubtlessly know that they really must [257] The ceaseless thought at death is a foundation for the new life placed by God within man, for this thought is also a deep sight (feeling) of that endless life that makes transparent, in the same time, the earthly life that is limited and perishable.

[258] That is a view tying the soul to itself, but that also gathers the man out of the scattering that cannot be removed by the nature by any of nature's works. That is a gift from above that is stronger than any of these works.

[259] It is about them who are on the level of contemplating the rationalities of God from within world.

withdraw on themselves from within this world towards a higher life, for His good will, sown by Him, within them, and that remains and increases within them, in their recluse and lonely dwelling. Let's ask for this in our prayers. Let's take long vigils for this and let's ask God to give it to us as an unparalleled grace. And let's no longer get weak again in the toil for this world. This is the beginning of the thoughts of life, which consummates within man in the fullness of the righteousness[260].

Word XL

About the Second Work within the Man

Another work after this will take place after the man assertively starts into the good living and he comes close and tastes its view and it work, and when, form above, the grace catches him and he tastes the sweetness of the knowledge of the Ghost. The beginning of this one is from here: firstly, the man is convinced by God's taking-of-care regarding the man, and the man is enlightened by his love for his Creator and he wonders about the composition of the rational beings and of God's much care for them.

Out of this comes within man the sweetness of God and the warmth of God's love, and it is lit up within heart and it burns off the soul's and the body's passions. This power is felt by somebody while cogitating wisely at all the natures of the creation and as all the things he comes across and he studies and he spiritually discerns.

From here, through this much and godlike occupation and good conscience, the man starts moving towards the godlike love and he suddenly gets drunk with it as of a wine; and his limbs relax; and his cogitation passes into awe (in ecstasy); and his heart is enslaved to following God. That man reaches to be, as I said, as drunk with wine. And the more his inward senses are strengthened the more he will also find worthy of the view itself. And the move he strives to live better and to guard on himself and to work in readings and in prayers, the more he will be strengthened and the more their power will become more steadfast within him. Verily, brothers, this happens while he remembers about himself that he still wears this body[261], but he doesn't know that he is in this world.

This is the beginning of the spiritual view (contemplation) within man and this is the beginning of all the unveilings of the understanding and in this view the understanding grows up out of the hidden realities and it gets strengthened; and though it, it passes towards other levels which are above the human nature. And to say it briefly, through its hand (through its mediation) are brought closer to man all the godlike view and all the unveilings of the Ghost received by the saints in this world, with all the charismas and with all the unveilings which can be known by the nature in this world. This is the root of our feeling sown within us by our Maker. Blessed in that man who has guarded this good seed when fell into his soul, and who raised in up and who hasn't wasted it in the vain things and in the scattering into the perishing realities[262]. And may the glory be of our God forever! Amen.

Word XLI

About the Willing Sains and about the Unwilling Sins and about the Sins Committed Haphazardly

There is a sin made because of weakness, which the man is unwillingly attracted to; and there is a sin done willingly and [261] Probably this must be read as: "while he forgets about having a body and he doesn't know that he is in this world". But it might mean also that he paradoxically realizes that, though he sees that he still has a body, he sees his body spiritualized sand no longer submitted to the laws from this world.

[262] It is sown within our nature the thought at death together with the feeling that the life from here cannot be everything. This is for this is the reality. It is a thought places within our nature, according to reality, because without it everything would seem meaningless. But if we cultivate this thought, we will reach to seen the realities from above-nature. Thus, between natural and supra-natural there is no contradiction. The supra-natural is the last conclusion of the true natural.

because of nescience. Sometimes, somebody sins haphazardly; and again, because of tarrying and getting accustomed to evil. All these sorts or the sin, though all of them are worthy of being rebuked, when looked form the point of view of the punishment due to them, they are not identical, but some are bigger than others.

To some of the sins it due the harshest rebuke and one expects a great repentance with much toil for them. The sin committed by another is closer to forgiveness. And as Adam and Eva and the snake received, all of them, from God, the same rewards for their sin, but they took very different curses, likewise their descendants: each one takes the harshness of the punishment according to his intention and lust for sinning. And if somebody is draws to sin unwillingly, but because of his carelessness for virtue, because of not occupying on himself with the virtue, though it is unpleasant to him to live with the sin, he still will receive a harsh punishment[263]. But if it happens to commit sin to somebody who takes care of virtue, to be tempted to commit some mistake, the mercy in order to be him cleaned up of his sin it will be close to him.

Another is, again, the sin of him who takes care of virtue and who perseveres in working the virtue and who takes vigil at night in order him not to lose in any of the things which he takes care of, and during the day he bears his burden in the diverse occupations, the whole his care paying taking heed at virtue; and him who while he is in these and in the similar things, either because of his nescience or because of the things which he comes across with on his way, namely on the way of the virtue, or of the waves continuously rising in his limbs, either because of the tendency happening to rise up within him in order his self-control to be tested, and his scale leans a little on the left side, and he is attracted by the weakness of his body towards some sort of sin which saddens him and makes him grief and he feels sorry for it and he sighs painfully in his soul, for the misfortune happening to his form his enemies.

And another is that (sin) when the man is drowsy and careless in working the virtue and he has totally left the way and he is running as a slave to obey any pleasure of the sins and he is zealous in contriving all sorts of craftsmanships in order to multiply the pleasure and he is ready, as a slave, to carefully fulfill the will of his enemy and to make his own limbs as weapons of the devil into the whole obedience and he doesn't want at all to take care of repentance, neither he wants to come close to virtue, nor to interrupt and put an end to his perdition way.

[263] If will be harsh to him because, though he sinned unwillingly, that sin still happened because he didn't have any preoccupation with the virtue, because of wanting to live a neutral life.

And another is that out of the slidings and out of the falls happening to him on his way to virtue and on the path of the righteousness, according to the words of the Holy Fathers who tell that there are, on the way of the virtue and on the path of the righteousness, fallings and oppositions and forceful happenings and things similar to those.

Finally, another is the falling of the soul and the total perdition and the full forsaking.

And it is obvious that one of these, when he falls, he won't forget about the love of his Father, and even if it happen to him to fall in all sorts of mistake he won't stop on himself from good and from his road, but even if he has been defeated, he will rise again and fight his enemy and he will daily lay a new foundation to his collapsed house, by having in his mouth all the way to his exit from this world, the prophetic word: "Do not rejoice of me, my enemy, because I have fallen. For I will rise myself again. And if I sit into darkness, my Lord will enlighten me" (Mic. 7: 8). And he doesn't ever stop the war until his death and he doesn't give himself up in his would until there still s breath of life in him and, even when defeated, he will remain the same. And even if his ship will wreck daily and even fi his cargo will sink daily, he won't stop from taking care of himself, by borrowing from others, and boarding on other ships, and sailing with hope, until the Lord, by seeing his struggle and by having mercy on him, He will send him His mercy and He will bestow him vigorous movements in order him to be able to endure and to answer the fiery arrows shot at him by the enemy. And this is the wisdom given from God, and this is the wise patient who hasn't cut off his hope. It is better us to be judged for certain things that for deserting all the things. That's why, Abba Martinus urges us not to get lazy when facing the multitude of the fights and the diversity of the war and the continuous war face by us on the way of the virtue, and not to turn ourselves back to the previous deeds of ours, and so to give up the enemy his victory over us in a shameful way. As a loving-of-children father he says, ordering with good-reckoning and simply, these:

The Urge from Abba Martinus

"My sons, if you truly are ascetics and taking heed at virtue and if you take care of you soul within yourself, you will present your mind clean, to Christ, and you will commit the deed that is pleasant to Him. This is for you owe to take upon yourself, for Him, the whole war started by the nature's passions and by the spell of the world and by the living into the world and by the ceaseless evil things from the devils which they usually meet you with and by all their traps. And do not fear of the ceaseless and persistence harshness of the war and to not hesitate because of the ceaseless fight and do not weaken neither shake because of the enemies' camps, neither fall into the pit of the despair if it happens to you to maybe slip for a while and to commit sin. But if you suffer something in this big war, and even if you are hit in the face and you are wounded, do not let that at all to impede you from pursuing your good purpose, but you rather stay in the work chosen by you and try to gain the desired and worthy of being praised thing, namely show on yourself strong and steadfast in the war and crowned with the blood of your wounds and do not cease at all fighting your enemies".

These are the urges of the great old man. So, you ought not to get drowsy, or to get lazy, because of the reasons I told you. This is because, woe to that monk who lied when making his promise, and he stretched his hand to the devil, trampling on his own conscience, in order to rise his enemy against him by one of the small or of the big sorts of the sins, and he is not able to stand again against his enemies with that shredded part of his soul. What face will he meet his Judge with, when his clean brothers will gather together? What will he do when seeing how he separated his way from theirs and he walked the way to perdition and he fell off the daring the pious ones have towards God, and how he fell off the clean prayer ascending form the clean heart and it raises and it crosses above the angelic powers and it is not impeded until it achieved what it is asking for, and it turns back with joy to the mouth for being sent again? That's why, more frightening than all it is the fact that, as he separated his way from theirs, likewise Christ will separate him on that day, when the luminous cloud will carry their sparking of cleanness bodies, taking them beyond the heavenly gates. That's why "the lawless won't stand to judgment" because their deeds have been judged even from here, neither "the sinner will rise at judgment in the counsel of the righteous" (Ps. 1: 7[264]).

Word XLII

About the Power and the Work of the Evils of the Sin. Which are their Causes and what they Can Be Sopped Like Until somebody doesn't truly hate, form within his heart, the sin, he won't be set free of the pleasure of working that sin. This is the heaviest battle fought upon the man, to point of blood. In it is proven the man's self-control in his love that unites all the virtues. This is the power that stirs up and it rises to battle. Its smell weakens the soul that is wicked because of the battle which that soul must prepare on himself for. This is the power of the bigness of the sin, which the enemy uses to confuse through, the soul's powers, which the enemy forces through, the clean movements, to have the experience previously unknown to them. In this we show our patience, my beloved brothers, and our ascesis and our zeal. This is for, this is the time for the unseen battle, which is told that the group of the monks are victorious through. When coming across this war, the rightly-believing mind will get immediately disturbed, if it hasn't prepared itself strongly, in advance.

Prayer

> "You are powerful, Lord Who are the spring of all help, to support on these moments, which are confession moments, those souls who joyfully have made on themselves your brides, of the heavenly Bridegroom, and who have wisely made the promise of the holiness through the sincerity of their thoughts, without [264] In KJB we have: Ps. 1: 5: "Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous."; in ROB we have" Ps. 1: 5: "That's why the faithless won't stand up to judgment, neither the sinners in the counsel of the righteous."

cunningness. For that You bestow them the power to daringly tear down the fortified walls and all the high places rising against the truth, so that that won't deviated from their target under the unbearable and impossible to withstand against force, during that time that a war is waged against them up to the point of blood."

But the righteousness doesn't always fight in this awful war. This is because of sometimes taking place a forsaking towards testing. But woe to him who is tested in this war meant to show the difference between ones and others. This is because of this war has gained a great big power out of the habit it has received within them who have surrendered on themselves to the defeat, by agreeing their own thoughts.

Guard on yourselves, oh by beloved ones, against non-working. This is because of being hidden into it a known death. This is for, in the absence of the non-working, the monk won't fall in the hands of them who strive to his him. God won't condemn somebody for the non-uttered psalms of that day, neither for the non-working because of the prayer, but because of giving entrance to the devil by forsaking those works. And when the devils find entrance and they enter and they lock up the doors of our eyes[265], they will fulfill within us, forcedly and uncleanly, the thing bringing their workers under the godlike judgment, namely under the most awful punishment. And we are guilty of forsaking these small things which we should care of, for Christ, as it was written by the wisest ones. He who hasn't obeyed his will to God, he will obey his enemy. So, you reckon these things seeming small to you as some walls against them who want to enslave you. The fulfillment of those things it has been determined as necessary, inside the monastic cell, by the wisemen keeping the order of the Church, in order to guard our life into the Ghost of the unveiling. On the opposite, forsaking of them is reckoned as unimportant by them who are unwise, by not taking in account what it comes out of forsaking them, at the beginning and at the middle of the road, by causing us and unadvised freedom that is the mother of all passions. It is better us to strive for not forsaking the small things, than to give place to the sin by being loose with the small things. This is for the unexpected end of this untimely freedom will be the slavery.

[265] They lock the doors of our eyers so that we to be unable to see our laziness, and the fact of us not fulfilling the things we owe to accomplish, and the dwelling of the ugly thoughts within us.

As long as you meet with your senses the things happening to you, you will reckon on yourself as dead[266]; this is for the burning of the sin won't be absent in all your limbs and you won't be able to achieve your salvation. If some monk says into his heart that he guards all of these, that one won't know what will have hit him. He who deceives his brother he will make on himself worthy of the curse of the law. But he who has deceived on himself how much punishment will he get? This is because of not knowing the evilness of the evil deed, he still pretended that he didn't know it. But he is proven as knowing it by his conscience. And he feels his conscience burdened because of pretending that he doesn't know what he actually knows. And may the glory be of our God forever! Amen.

Word XLIII

About the Guarding Against and about Avoiding the Drowsy and the Lazy. And that out of Being Close to Them Will Become Masters upon Man the Laziness and the Drowsiness and the Man Will Bew Filled up with All the Passions. About the Need for Guarding on Oneself against the Closeness of the Your People in Order the Mind not to Be Defiled by Thoughts of Fornication

He who restrains his mouth from gossiping, and who guards his heart against passions. He who always cogitates at God on every moment and he sees (contemplates) the Lord and he banishes the devils away from him and he uproots the seed of their evilness. He who inquires his soul on all moments and he has his heart gladdened by unveilings. And he who gathers the sight of his mind withing himself and he sees in it the ray of the Ghost. He who gets disgusted of any scattering and he sees the Master within his heart. If you love the cleanness, which the Master of all realities can be seen in, you won't gossip against somebody, neither will you listen to somebody who gossips your brother. Ad if some people are quarreling in front of you, you will close your ears and you will run away from there, in order you not to hear angry words and your soul to lose his life. The angry heart is empty of the mysteries of God. And he who is gentle and humble in thought he is the spring of the mysteries of the new age.

Lo, the heavens will be within you, if you are clean; and you will see the angles together with you together with their light and you will see their Master together with them and within them[267]. He who is justly praised, he won't be harmed. But if he gets sweetened because of being praised, he will become an unrewarded worker. The treasure of him who is humble in thought it is within him: and that is the Lord. And him who guards his tongue will never be robbed of this treasure. The silent mouth interprets the mysteries of God, and he who speaks easily he will get far from Him Who has created him[268]. The soul of the kind human being shines more than the sun does, and that soul is gladdened on each moment by seeing the unveilings[269]. He who follows him who loves God, he will be enriched with the mysteries of God. And he who follows the unjust and the pride one, he will get far from God and he will be hated by his friends. He who has a silent tongue will have, through all countenances, the image of the humble cogitation and he will master tirelessly over passions. The passions are uprooted and banished away by the uninterrupted thinking at God. As the dolphin moves and swims in the quietude and in the peace of the felt sea, likewise it moves in the quietude and in the peace of the heart's sea that is undisturbed by wrath or fury, the godlike mysteries and unveilings, towards gladdening that heart[270].

[267] As God will be within us if we are clean, or if we are transparent, or if we are non-narrowed by thinking as the limited things, likewise is within the angels who are clean. And also, the angels will be within us, if we are clean. Sand God Who dwells within us He is always within His angels. And we will see God not only through our transparency but also though His angels' transparency. We will feel God as the Supreme Subject pressing upon us with His love, as a Supreme Spring of Light and of meaning; but we will also see His angels united with Him, as other subjects inviting us through their love and light. It is like, while we feel the love of our father, we will feel even better is we are surrounded, in the same time, by the love of our brothers.

[268] A silent mouth says more than a talkative one. In silence there are concentrated untold mysteries, there is concentrated everything that is a person, apophatically. He who keeps his silence can be seen as absorbed by the view of the mystery of his whole being and of the mystery of God. And these views irradiate out of him, without him needing to speak. The man speaks even when he keeps his silence, unlike the animal. While the talkative has got far from the mysteries from within him. One can feel the void from within the talkative one.

[270] It is being affirmed here the indefinite ocean of the heart. This ocean gains its transparence and it shows its broadness, when it is liberated from the thoughts which egotistically defile and narrow one's heart. And not only in the transparency of the heart's clean indefinite it is shown the infinity of God. But the heart's sea is unveiled though, also when it is not disturbed by anger, or by upset because of the worldly realities. These ones not only that disturb the heart's sea, but they also narrow it for they determine it to focus on one or another of them. But the indefinite of the heart's sea is shown also in the disturbance of the anger. This is because the anger doesn't want to have borders. And if the anger is controlled to some extent, it could be seen beyond it the endless deep and the borderless stretch of the heart on which masters the thought at God and at the mysteries of God's presence, to which deep the anger cannot reach.

He who wants to see the Lord within him he will strive to clean up his heart by the ceaseless remembrance of God[271]. And thus, by the shininess of the eyes of his understanding he will see God on all moments. That what happens to the fish outside the water, that will happen to the mind that has existed the remembrance of God and that has scattered itself into the memories of the world[272]. The more the man gets himself far from the discussions with his fellow humans, the more he will be found worthy of daring towards God within his mind. And the more the man cuts off from him the comforting form this world, the more he will be found worthy of the joy from God into the Holy Ghost. And as the fish are lost in the absence of the water, likewise will be lost from the monk's heat the understanding movements which sprout out of mind, when he continuously walks and spends his time in the world's realities.

It is better a layman who is deprived of the worldly thing and who suffers in the realities of the life, than a monk who suffers the bad things and who lives together with the people in the world. He who asks for God in his heart, with a fiery zeal, day and night, and he plucks off his heart the baits sown by the enemy, he is feared by devils and he is loved by God and by His angels. He who is clean in his soul he has within him that country known with the mind, and that sun that shines within him is the light of the Holy Trinity. The air breathed by the inhabitants of that country is the Comforter and All-Holy Ghost[273]. And the together-sitting with them are the holy and incorporeal natures. And their life and their joy it is Christ, light out of Father's light. One like this gladdens on himself on each moment by his soul's view, but he also wonders about his beauty[274], that is hundredfold more luminous (more transparent) than the sunlight. This country is the Jerusalem and the Kingdom of God, hidden within us, according to the Lord's word (Lk. 18: 24). This country is the cold of God's glory, which will be entered by them who are clean in their [271] Itself the remembrance of God, by being accompanied by the feeling of His infinity, it makes the heart transparent to God. And God's infinity makes the heart to vibrate by touching the heart.

[272] By leaving the remembrance of God, he has exited the feeling of God's infinity and from living that infinity and he has been narrowed, or he suffocates.

[273] The Holy Trinity shines like the Sun, for the Holy Trinity is the communion of the supreme love, and so of the supreme meaning of the existence. The Holy Ghost is like the all-clean air giving us live and that is full with the light of the godlike Sun. That air isn't mixed with any poisoning substance (thinking) which would chock us up to some extent. That air is only love breathing within us only love, as a life-giver-air.

[274] The soul cannot be fully unveiled except in the light of the Holy Trinity, for that light cleans the soul up of the dark cover of the egotism and that light highlights the soul's depths which are transparent to God. But the soul is seen thus in his beauty that is more luminous than the sun is, for the soul is full of the light of the endless love of the Holy Trinity and by its supreme meaning.

heart, in order they to see the face of their Master and their minds to be illuminated by the ray of His light[275].

But he who is dominated by anger, by furry, by vain-glory, by avarice, and by the covetousness of his belly, and he who spends his time with the people from the world and he wants his will to be done, he who is full of gall and passions, all of these ones live like in a night-fight and they fumble into darkness, while they are outside the country of the life and of the light. This is for that country has been prepared for them who are kind and humble in thought, for them who have cleaned up their hearts. A man cannot see the beauty that is within himself before despising and being disgusted of any beauty from outside him. And a man cannot truly focus on himself on God, until he will totally reject the world. He who despises on himself and who diminishes on himself, he will be made wise by God. And he who reckon on himself as wise, he has fallen off the wisdom of God. The more the tongue restrains on itself from much-speaking, the more the mind is lightened in order to discerns among thoughts. This is because the much-speaking confuses even the wise mind.

He who is poor in worldly things he will be enriched into God. And the friend of the rich ones will be poor of God. I think that he who is righteous and humble in thought, he who doesn't love the daring and who has banished the pride from his heart, when he stands for prayer, he sees within his soul the light of the Holy Ghost and he jumps up by the lightenings of the light and he rejoices seeing that light's glory and the change of his heart in the likeness of that light[276]. There is no other work that can scatter so much the unclean devils' camps as there is the view (contemplation) of God.

The Story of a Holy Man

Somebody of the fathers told me this: "One day, while I was sitting, my mind was enslaved by view. And when it came within me, I sighed strongly. And a devil that was opposing me, when he heard that, he got scared and he was struck like by a [275] The cloud is illuminated by the light of the godlike Sun. But, though, they who are in that cloud, or who are covered by that cloud, they realize that that cloud is something else than the godlike Sun, and by this they are guarded as non-confounded to God. Properly-said, itself our being becomes a cloud illuminated by the godlike Sun. And in the fact that we are many, but we become like a sole cloud ("a cloud of witnesses"), it is shown the unity of our nature that will be actualized as a full symphonic unity in the future life.

[276] We have here the hesychastic teaching about the seeing of the godlike light during prayer, much earlier than the Century XIV. But it is also affirmed the transformation of the seers of that light, into light, in that godlike light's likeness.

lightening, and the shouted out because of pain, and he ran away as chased by somebody".

Blessed is him who remember about his exit from this life and he restrains on himself from attachment to the delectations of this world. This is for he will receive multiplied the happiness at his exit and that happiness won't be absent from him. This one is the one born out of God, and the Holy Ghost is The One Who suckle him at His bosom with that of-life-giver food, and he is imparted with the fragrance of the Holy Ghost towards his gladness. And he who is tied to the people form the world and to the world and to the world's resting and who loves the occupation with the world, he has been deprived on life and I have nothing to say about him except that the cries a pitiful non-comfortable cry, which the heart of them who listen to it is broken by.

You who live in darkness, raise up your heads, so that your faces will shin into light. Get out of the world's passions, so that that Light from within the Father to welcome you, and that Light to command the servants of His mysteries to untie you of your ties, so that you will be able to walk on His traces, towards the Father.

Woe to the things which we are tied to and which we are locked up by, so that we cannot see His glory! May our ties be cut off so that, by asking, us to find our God! If you want to know the people's mysteries and you haven't learnt them form the Holy Ghost, you can learn those mysteries out of the words and out of the behavior and out of the way of organizing of each one, if you are wise. He who is clean in soul and who has a clean living, he always speaks the words of the Holy Ghost with righteousness, and he speaks – according to his measure – about the godlike realities and about the things from himself. But he who has his heart broken by passions, he has also his tongue moved towards passions; and even if he speaks about spiritual things, he speaks passionately in order to unjustly defeat his opponent. This one is known by the wiseman even out a sole answer, and the clean one feels his bad small.

He who tarries in vain-much-speaking, and in scattering with his mind and with his body, he is a fornicator. And he who consents with him and who accompanies him, he is a fornicator too. And he who is partaker (in communion) with him, he is an idolater. The friendship with the young man is a fornication which God is disgusted by. This illness has no cure. And he who loves all people equally, mercifully, and in an undifferentiated manner, he has reached the consummation. The young man searching for the company of another young man, he makes them who have the right-reckoning (the discernment) crying and weeping. But the old man searching for the company of a younger man he has achieved a more disgusting passion than that of the young men. Even if he spoke to the young people about virtues, his heart would be wounded. The humble in thought young man, who lives in quietude and who is has his heart clean of envy and of wrath and who keeps himself away from people and who takes heed at himself, he will understand the passion of the careless old man. Avoid having anything to do with that old man who doesn't look at other old man and at the young man equally, and rather get far from his with the whole your strength.

Woe to them who are careless, who nourish their passions, while hypocritically mimicking the image of the cleanness. And him who has reached to have grey hairs in the cleanness of his thought and of his living and in the restraining of his tongue, he is delighted even from here with the sweetness of the fruit of the conscience[277], and at the time of his exit form his body he will receive the glory of God. Nothing cools down the fire of the Holy Ghost - working within monk's heart to the sanctification of his soul[278] – than the living and the much-speaking and the encounters others than those with the sons of the mysteries of God and which are towards increasing his knowledge about God and the closeness to God. This is for the last kind of meetings wake up the soul towards life and they uproot the passion and put the dirty thoughts to sleep more than all virtues. Do not gain as friends and as trusties but this king of people, in order you not to cause offense to your soul and so you to deviate from the way to God. Let's you soul extoll that love that unites you and that attaches you to God, in order you not to be taken into slavery by the love for the world whose cause and end is the corruption. The living together with them who live in ascesis it will enrich both you and them with the mysteries of God. And the love for the frivolous and lazy ones it will fill you bely up to satiation and it will make you feel the insatiable lust for the scattering with others. One like this one doesn't like eating except in the company of his friends, and he says: "Woe to him who eats his bread in loneliness, because he won't be sweetened by it". This is because they who invite on one another to feasts they are rewarded like some hirelings. Run away, brother, from they who are accustomed to such a living, and do not ever eat together with them, even if you need food. This is because their food is unclean and they have gained as their servants the devils. Th friends of Christ do not taste that food.

[277] It is the fruit of the true knowledge, a knowledge opposed to the liar knowledge, which was lusted by Adam and Eva. One can reach the fruit of the true knowledge by restraining on himself form the bodily lusts, and not by being greedy of bodily pleasures.

[278] Without the fire of the clean zeal, one cannot reach to holiness. This fire is from the Holy Ghost Who is the spring of the holiness, as spring of the true love.

He who prepares often feats, he is the hireling of the devil of the fornication and he defiles the soul of him who is humble in though. The humble bread from the table of the clean one it cleans the soul of him who eats it of all passions. The smell of the table of the greedy one is scattered by the waste of meals and of cookies. And the mindless and unwise one is attracted by that as a dog to the slaughterhouse. And the table off him who always persevered into prayer it is sweeter than any smell of veal and spices. And he who loves God he will desire this as a priceless treasure.

Take medicine for your life, form the table of them who are fasting, and who take vigil and who toil into the Lord, and remove the death from your soul. This is for the belove One rests Himself amid the saints, and He transforms the bitterness of their tiredness in the impossible-to-tell sweetness of His[279]. And His spiritual and heavenly servants overshadow them and their holy foods. I know a certain brother who sees that with his own eyes.

Blessed is him who has restrained his mouth form all the passionate sweetness which separates him from hid Creator. Blessed is him who has as food that Bread that descended form heavens and that bestowed life to the world[280]. Blessed is him who has seen in his plain that water that springs out of the bosom of the Father, and he has focused his eye on it. This is for when he drinks it, he gladdens and his heart flourishes and it will be into gladness and joy. He who has seen his Lord in his food, he will go secretly and alone to be imparted with Him, and not together with the unworthy ones, in order him not to have communion with those and in order to avoid being emptied of His ray. And he who has mortal venom mixed in his food, he won't be able to be imparted with that without his companions[281]. He who is friends with his belly he is a wolf tasting the causing-of-death poison. How insatiable you are, you the crazy one, because of wanting to fill up your belly at the table of the careless ones, whom your soul is filled up from, with all the passions! These cautions are enough to them who can control their belly.

[279] So rested Christ at the table of the poor during His living on earth, comforting and cleaning them up with His love.

The fragrance spread by him who is fasting, it is very sweet, and the encounter with him gladdens the heart of them who have the gift of the discernment. But the covetous one if filled with fear when encountering the one who is fasting, and the covetous one avoid sitting at the same table with him.

The living of him who is restrained it is pleasant to God but his neighborhood is hard to be endured by him who love the material earning. He who is silent is very praised by Christ. And to them who are enslaved by devils through traps and scatterings, the closeness to the silent one is unpleasant. Who doesn't love him who is humble in thought? Only they who are proud and gossipers and who are stranger to his work.

The Story of a Saint

A certain man among those who tried these things, he told me this: "On those days which I am in the company of the people, I eat three of four pieces of dry bread a day. But if I force myself to prayer, my mind has no daring towards God, neither can I focus on Him. But when I get far from them, in order to appease on myself, on the first day I force myself to eat only one and a half pieces of dry bread, and on the second day only one piece of dry bread. And when my mind gets strengthened into quietude, I force myself to eat a whole piece of dry bread a day and I cannot do it. And my mind talks, ceaselessly and daringly, [281] Homiakov said that everyone who falls, he falls alone. But this one gets lonely in his deep. At the surface he is together with others who are frivolous as he is. Thus, there takes place a reciprocal urge to sin, as separation among them and of themselves from God, into deep. This is an aspect of that "Man" described by Heidegger.

to God, without I forcing on myself. And God's light lightens me uninterruptedly and it attracts me to see it and I get glad for the beauty of the godlike light. And if it happens somebody to enter during the time of the quietude, and he speaks to me even for an instant, it will be impossible to me not to increase the quantity of the food and not to diminish the quantity of my prayers and not to we my mind weakened in the seeing of that light".

Lo, my brothers, how good and how useful is the patience and the loneliness and what a power and facilitation they bestow to them who live in ascesis. Blessed is him who endures for God into quietude and who eats his bread in loneliness. This is for he always speaks to God. Of God be the glory and the mastery now and forever and ever! Amen.

Word XLIV

About Senses and About Temptations

The righteous and gathered together senses, they will give birth, without the soul, to the peace, and so they won't allow the soul to try out the things. When the senses do not deceive the feeling of the things, the victory will be gained without fight. But when the man is careless and so he allows the baits (the attacks) entering him, he will be forced to fight. And the first cleanness that is all-simple and peaceful will be disturbed. And most of the people, or even all the people, because of this carelessness they leave their natural and clean state. That's why they who are within world and mixed with the worldly realities they won't be able toc lean up their cogitation because of the much-knowledge of the evil. And only few of them can turn back to the first cleanness of their thought. That's why each man must always guard, with the whole his care, his senses and his cogitation, against baits. And for that one needs much watchfulness, peace, and taking of heed.

We owe to live with much simplicity. In order to do that, the human nature need to fear, in order to guard the orders of the obedience to God. and the love for God moves us towards desiring the virtues and by that it kidnaps us towards the good doing. The spiritual knowledge is by nature, the second after the working of the virtues[282]. But both of them are preceded by fear and by love; and the love is preceded, again, by fear. Everyone who shamelessly says that one can gain the second ones without firstly working the first ones, they have laid within their soul the first foundation of the perdition. This is for this is the path of the Lord. This is for the last ones are born out of the first ones.

Do not change our love for your brother for the love for a certain material thing[283]. This is for your brother has within himself, without being seen, something that is more precious than anything. You leave the unimportant realities in order you to find the precious realities. You be like a dead one during your life, so that you will live after your death[284]. You give on yourself to the death into ascesis instead of you living into idleness. Not only them who received the death for their faith into Christ are martyrs, but martyrs are also they who die for keeping His commandments[285]. Do not be mindless in your requests, in order you to avoid dishonoring God through the smallness of your knowledge. Be wise in your prayers so that you will be found worthy of the glorious realities[286]. You ask for the honored things form Him Who doesn't envy, in order you to receive the honor from Him, for your wise will. Solomon asked for wisdom and he received together with the wisdom his kingdom, for he asked form the Great Emperor like a wiseman. Elijah asked for the grace of the Ghost, in a twofold manner, that was within his teacher, and he wasn't left without his request being fulfilled. This is because of him who asks the Emperor for unimportant things, he despised the Emperor's [282] It is the knowledge of the godlike rationalities of the things, which comes to the man after he has cleaned on himself of passions.

[283] The object is limited; it has no interior conscious and free dimension, it doesn't communicate love, and it can be manipulated for the egotistic benefit. One must respect the person for the person herself/himself, as free and conscious spring of inexhaustible communication of the love, a love thirsty of endlessly giving and receiving of love. One cannot totally master the love.

[284] Namely, you don't cultivate the egotistical attachment to the material things, so that you will start having out of the communion with God and with your fellow humans that life that never ends, for what those ones can give you it won't get exhausted.

[285] Namely they lose the perishing live for the love for the Supreme Person out of Who we can have the immortal life.

[286] Do not ask for the perishing things, but you must ask for the love from God, that love that lasts and that will be eternally bestowed to you by its endlessness.

honor. Israel asked for unimportant things and they attracted the anger of God. This was because Israel didn't think at being illuminated by the fearsome realities of God in their things, but they only asked for what they needed to fill up their stomach. And that's why, "while the food was still in their mouth, the anger of God mounted upon them" (Ps. 77: 34[287]). Present your asks to God on the measure of His glory, so that your glory to grow bigger through Him, and He will rejoice of you"[288]. This is because, like him who asks form the emperor for a little garbage, he not only dishonors on himself for the thing he has asked, because of proving much nescience, btu he has also offended the emperor by his request, likewise is him who asks God for earthly things in his prayers. This is for the angels and the archangels, who are the great clerks of God, they look at you when you pray, in order they to see what things you are asking their Master for, and they are amazed and glad when seeing the earthly one forgetting about his body and asking for the heavenly realities, as they, again, get angry with him who has left the heavenly realities and who asks for his garbage.

Do not ask God for a thing He takes care of bestowing it without one asking Him for that thing, namely for a thing that He bestows it not only to the beloved ones of Hid, but also to them who do not know about God. This is for our Lord said that the pagans ask for the bodily things. "And you do not worry about what are you going to eat, or what are you going to drink, or what are you going to put on" (Mt. 6: 31). The son no longer asks his father for bread, but he asks for the important and much precious things form the house of his father. For the helplessness of our human cogitation our Lord commanded us to ask for the daily bread. You take heed at what He commanded them who are consummate into knowledge and healthy in their soul: "Do not worry about food, he says, or about clothing" (Mt. 6: 28). "This is for, if He takes care of the speechless beasts and of fowls and even of the inanimate things, won't He do that much more for you? But you rather ask for the Kingdom of Heavens and for His righteousness and all of these will be added to you" (Mt. 6: 33).

[287] In KJB we have: Ps. 78: 30-31: "They were not estranged from their lust. But while their meat was yet in their mouths, // The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel."; in ROB we have: Ps. 77: 34-35: "Nothing missed of the things they lusted for and they food was still in their mouth, // When the anger of God rose upon them and killed the satiated of theirs and it brought down the chosen ones of Israel." (E. l. t.'s n.)

And if you ask for God for something and you must wait for a long time for that thing, for He doesn't listen to you quickly, do not be sad. This is for you are not wiser than God is. That happens to you either because of you being unworthy of what you ask for, or because of not being your ways on the measure of what you are asking for, either because of you not having reached that measure you need for receiving that gift you are asking for[289]. This is because we must not ascend to great measures before time, so that the gift from God not to become useless to us because of us receiving it too early. This is because everything that is received easily, it will easily be lost. Each thing earned into the pain of the heart it will be guarded carefully.

Be thirsty for Christ, in order you to get drunk of His love[290]. Close your eyes from seeing the pleasant things of the world, in order you to be found worthy of God, so that His peace will reign within your heart. Restrain on yourself from the things which your eyes look at, in order you to be found worthy of the spiritual joy. If your deeds are unpleasant to God, do not ask God for glory, in order you not to be like a man tempting God. Let your payer be according to your living. This is for he who is tied to the earthly realities cannot ask for the heavenly realities; and it is impossible to him who occupied on himself with the earthly things to ask for the heavenly realities. This is for the desire of each man is shown by his deeds[291]. And one fight in his prayer for the things which he strives for. He who desire the big things he won't occupy on himself with the small things.

[289] In order you to receive the high knowledge that is given together with the love, you too must strive to reach the level of that knowledge through a bigger desire to Know God and to receive His love. Only our effort makes us to assimilate the gift from God.

[290] By this and by other words it is shown that Saint Isaac doesn't strictly pursue the title of any of this Words. He placed in each of his words small and big things, so that he almost described in all of his Words¸ the stages of the spiritual life.

[291] The desire expressed by word, without any effort to accomplish it, it isn't a serious desire.

Being tied with your body, you still be free and show your freedom of obeying Christ[292]. But you must also be wise in your gentleness, in order you not to be allowed to be stollen[293]. Love the humbleness in all your deeds in order you to be delivered from the difficult to be known traps, which always occur outside the path of them who are humble in thought. Do not avoid the troubles for though them you enter the knowledge of the truth[294]. And do not fear the souly temptations, but prepare yourself with the whole your power for the bodily trials. This is because without these ones you cannot advance towards God. This is for within them there is the godlike resting. He who runs away from temptations he runs away from virtues[295]. But, speaking about temptations, I do not speak about those of the lusts, but about those of the troubles (about trials)[296].

Question: How can be reconciled the word "Pray not to enter the temptation" (Mt. 27: 41) with the word: "Do not fear them who kill the body" (Lk. 13: 14) and with the word: "he who has lost his soul for Me, he will find his soul" (Mt. 10: 28, 39)? How the Lord urges us everywhere to trials, and here He has commanded us not to enter them? What virtues is born without trouble and trials? Or, what trials is bigger than one to lose on himself and still the Lord commands us to receive that for Him? For "he who doesn't take his cross, He says, to follow Me, he is not worthy of Me" (Mt. 10: 38). How then, after He commanded is throughout all His teaching to enter the trials, here he has [292] Our body doesn't impede us from being free. We can choose to do through our body diverse deeds and we can guide our body to a good or to a bad living. Our body doesn't represent a rigid, linear legality. Our body is the tool of our freedom. We are free from our body especially when we work for Christ, fulfilling His commandments. Otherwise, we shown on ourselves as mastered by our own body. Even our freedom increases or decreases in report with our body, depending on our will which we affirm or abdicate from it. Fulfilling the commandments of Christ it means a spiritualization of the body it means giving ever more power and place to the freedom within our body. Obeying Christ is an act of freedom, of will. The bigger the obedience to Christ is, the more the freedom will be affirmed.

[293] He who is gentle can be deceived, stollen, and enslaved by the cunning ones because of his gentleness. He could be insufficiently attentive to the temptations coming upon him.

[294] Out of troubles you will know your helplessness and your shortcomings, and your dependency on God; out of troubles you will learn the humbleness.

[295] This is because he who runs away from temptations, he runs away from fighting them, a fight which he achieves the virtue through. (In our opinion this directly contravenes to our Lord Christ Jesus' prayer: "Lead us not into temptation" (E. l. t.'s n.)) commanded us not to enter the trials? "For through many trials you must enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Jn. 16: 33); and: "In the world you will have troubles"; and: "In enduring them you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 14).

Oh, what subtle is the way of Yours teachings, Lord! Because of that, the wiseman and he who doesn't read with knowledge will always be outside the knowledge. When the sons of Zebediah and their mother wanted to have a chair with You in the Kingdom, You told them: "Can you drink the cup of the trials which I will be baptized with?" (Mt. 20: 22). And then, how do you command us, Master, not to enter the temptations? What temptations You command us about, us not to enter them?

Answer: Pray, he says, not to enter those temptations referring to faith, pray not to enter the temptations of the mind-s self-appreciation, accompanied by the evils of the blasphemy and of the pride. Pray not to enter, because of being forsaken by God, the obvious temptation of the devil by the evil memories coming into your thought, which we have been forsaken for. Pray not to get far from you the angel of the righteousness, because otherwise you will be warred by the fiery war of the sin and you will part with the angel. Pray not to enter the temptation of being enticed from somebody against somebody else, or the temptation of the doubt and of the hesitation, which the soul is forcedly pushed by into the great battle.

But prepare yourself to accept the trials of the body with the whole your soul and float in those with all your limbs and fill your eyes up with tears, in order your guardian angel not to get far from you. This is for outside the trials there is not shown the taking-of-care from God, and one cannot learn the wisdom of the Ghost, neither the longing for God will be shown as strengthened within the soul. This is because before trials the man prays to God as to a stranger. But when the man enters the trials for his love for Christ but he still doesn't receive change, that man has God as a debtor and he will be reckoned at God as a true son. This is for he warred his enemy and he defeated his enemy for the will of God[297].

[297] He has God as a debtor for God, by letting him into trials, God showed him that He takes care of him, that He has him to His heart, that He wants to spiritually raise him up. But by that God also obliges on Himself to help him when his troubles are too big. And he who has been

"Pray not to enter the temptations" means this: pray not to enter the fearsome house of the devil because of your pride, but because you love God, so that God's power will help you and it will defeat your enemies within you. Pray not to enter these temptations because of the evilness of your thoughts and deeds, but in order your love for God to be proven and His power to be glorified into your patience. His to be the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen!

Word XLV

About the Mercy of the Master, which He Descended through, from the Height of His Glory, to the Helplessness of the People; and about Trials

But our Lord, by showing you His taking-of-care, according to the way of His mercy and according to the measure of Hid grace, he commanded us, if you notice it well, also to pray for the bodily trials. This is for He saw our weak nature, because of our earthly body submitted to rotting, and that our body cannot resist the trials when reaching in their middle, and that's why it falls off the truth and it runs away and it is defeated by troubles, so that he commanded us to pray in order us not to unexpectedly fall into trials, if it is possible us to be pleasant to God without those. But if the man, due to a very great virtue, he suddenly falls into fearsome trials but he didn't suffer those, he won't be either able to fulfill that virtue at that time.

We must not pretend either to ourselves or to others. Neither must we leave our chosen state and our good thing, which our life is enriched through like a treasury, and to give us diverse excuses and ground for drowsiness, as for instance that commandment that we must pray not to enter the temptation[298]. This is because about these ones has been said fighting the trials he has been fulfilling the will of God out of his love for God, and as a son of God wanting to grow up as God wants him to. In this overcoming of the trials, he felt within him the power of God. So, it is not about a juridical duty of God.

[298] Some people invoke as an excuse the fact that they haven't resisted some temptation because we couldn't do it, and that's why our Lord commanded us to pray not to fall into that, because of the commandment they sin hiddenly. So, if it happens to the man that a temptation comes upon him and he transgresses a commandment because of that, namely he forsakes the righteousness, or the monastic living, of he denies the faith, or he doesn't live in ascesis for Christ, because he has got scarred and because he hasn't been manly fighting the temptations, he will have fallen off the truth.

Therefore, let's despise our body with the whole our power, and let's surrender our soul to God and let's enter the fight with the temptations in the name of the Lord. And He Who has delivered Joseph out of Egypt and He showed Joseph as image and example of the righteousness and He Who guarded Daniel unharmed in the lions' pit and He Who kept unharmed the three young men in the hot over and He Who took Jeremiah out of the mud pit and He Who granted him mercy and Who took Peter out form prison through the locked up doors and, to say it shortly, He who always and everywhere and in all countries He is together with His servants and He shows His power and victory and He guard them through many wonders and Who shows them His salvation in all their troubles, may Him strengthen us too and deliver us form the middle of the waves engulfing us up! Amen.

Let's therefore have zeal within our souls against the devil and against his servants, a zeal as that had by the Maccabees and by the Holy Prophets and by Apostles and by Martyrs and by the Pious and Righteous Fathers who kept the godlike laws and the commandments of the Ghost in fearsome places and in all-awful trials, and they cast the world and their bodies behind themselves, and they persevered in their righteousness while not allowing to be overcome either their bodies together with the souls, by the dangers surrounding them, but they overcome those manly; whose names have been written in the book of life until the second coming of Christ; and whose teaching has been preserved through the commandment of God towards our teaching and strengthening, as the blessed Apostle confesses (Rom. 15: 4), so that we to become wise and us to learn the temptation. Namely, he commanded us to do that because he knew that we cannot resist. So, if despite our prayer we have still reached into temptation, it won't be our guilt, but it will be our Lord to be blamed, because of not fulfilling our ask for not allowing us to reach into temptation. But we must fight the temptation and we must to be sure that in this fight of ours there is also His help.

ways of God and us to have under our eyes their stories and lives, so that we to walk their way and us to resemble to them.

How sweet are the godlike words to the all-wise soul! Like a good warming up the body. And how desired are the stories about the righteous ones to the ears of the gentle ones! As it is a ceaseless watering to the recently planted plant.

So, my beloved one, you think always at God's Providence, which He has been taking care of us through since the beginning and until now, as through a medicine for the weakened eyes, and you constantly keep within yourself the His remembrance. And think and take care and let yourself be advised by these ones, in order you to learn having within your soul remembrance of the honor of God you to find for your soul an eternal life into Christ Jesus our Lord; in Him Who has made on Himself the Mediator between God and people, as One Who has united on Himself with both of them, and Whose glory surrounding the throne of His glory the angels cannot get close to, but Who showed on Himself within world for us as having a poor and humble countenance, as Isaiah says: "I saw Him and He had neither face nor beauty" (Isa. 53: 2); in Him Who, by being unseen to the entire created nature, He has put on a body and He has consummated the oikonomia for the salvation and for the life of all nations who are cleaned up through Him. Whom is due the glory and the mastery forever and ever! Amen.

Word XLVI

About the Sort of the Diverse Trials and about how Much Sweetness Have within Them the Trials Coming upon Us and which We Endure for Truth. And about the Steps and the Kinds of Livings which the Wise Man Crosses through

The virtues follow one after another, in order the way of the virtues not to be unpleasant or difficult; and also, because the virtues are achieved on at a time. And thus, the difficult deeds committed for good become pleasant as ones which strengthen one on another in good. This is for nobody will be able to really achieve the non-earning, if he doesn't persuade on himself to endure joyfully endure the trials. And nobody will be able to endure the trials, except he who has believed that there is something superior to the bodily resting, the bodily resting being opposite to the troubles which he has prepared on himself to be partaker to, and which he is ready for receive.

So, within everyone who have prepared on themselves, there will move in the first place the love for troubles, and after it will occur within him the thought to become poor of this world. And everyone who want to come close to the trouble, he will firstly deprive on himself, by faith, of everything, and then he will come close to the troubles. But he who derives on himself of the material goods, but he doesn't deprive on himself of the work of his senses, namely of highs and of hearing, he will cause to himself a twofold trouble and he will be tormented and troubled in a twofold manner[299]. Better said, what doesn't he benefit of the fact that he deprives on himself of the things submitted to the senses, but he sweetens on himself with them through his senses"? This is for what he has been suffering before through the deeds related to them, he is still suffering that because of his passions for those things, because the memory of his habituation to those material things it is not removed from his cogitation. This is because if their hallucinations occurring into cogitation cause pain to the man, even in the absence of the things as such, what could we say about their close presence? Therefore, the withdrawal is good, for it helps very much. This is for the withdrawal tames manly the thoughts and it sows power of living and it teaches the man to endure, with much patience, the troubles necessarily coming out of this[300].

Do not try to receive any advice from somebody who is not living your way of living, even if he would be very wise. You better unveil your thought to an illiterate man but who experienced the things you are preoccupied with, than to an educated philosopher who speaks out of his readings without experiencing the things he speaks about. But what the experience is? The experience doesn't consist of somebody not receiving to look as certain things without knowing those things by himself, but it consists of limpidly feeling by experience those things' benefit of damage, by the fact that he has spent a long time experiencing them[301]. Often, a certain thing seems to be damaging, but within it, it has a fully beneficial work. You reckon the same regarding the opposite situations. Namely, often a certain thing seems to be useful, but it is full of damaging inside. That's why, many people are experiencing losses in the things seeming beneficial. But we don't receive either from these ones the true witness of the knowledge[302]. So, you use that adviser who knows to patiently probe the things which require a right-reckoning (a discernment). That's why, not everyone is worthy of being trusted when giving an advice, but only him who firstly has rightly organized his freedom and who does not fear to be blamed and gossiped.

[299] Not having some things but looking at them it is a twofold trouble: one consists of not having those things, and the other consists of desiring them. Desiring them makes not having them more tormenting than simply don't having them.

[300] We have here an illustration of the connection between trial and temptation: when you are deprived of some things you suffer because of a trial, of a trouble; when you have those things you suffer because of the temptation of using those things for pleasure. It is good when you make the temptation to pass into trial. The Romanian language has two words for these states: încercare (trial) and ispită (temptation). The Greek and the Slavonic languages have only one word for expressing this: πειρασμός, respectively ispita (Slavonic). But also in the Romanian language, given the fluid passing from a meaning to another, it is difficult to be always decide what of the two terms must be chosen in a certain context.

So, when you find unchanged peace in your way, you must fear that, because you are far from the path which the tired feet of the saints walk on. This is because the surer you step on the way leading to the Kingdom of Heavens and the closer you get to the city of God, the more you will have as sign of that the strength of the trials you will encounter. And the more you get closer and the more you advance, the more trials against you will multiply. So, when you feel within your soul more diverse and stronger trials, you will know that your soul has hiddenly received at those times a higher state and a new grace has been added to the state which your soul has been in. This is for on the measure of the grace God will bring upon the soul the troubles of other trials. You won't understand by those the worldly trials happening to some people bridled the evilness [301] The true experience, therefore, it requires time, and it doesn't suffice a passing tasting of a certain situation. This shows us what price we have to put on the opinions of some theologians who occupy on themselves with the mysticism by "studying" it, but they haven't experienced the life into God by living it for a long time.

in the seen things, neither you will understand bodily troubles, but I mean trials matching the monks who appease on themselves, trials which we are going to analyze later[303].

And if the soul suffers any weakness and therefore the soul cannot endure the big trials and the soul prays to God not to enter those, and if God listens to that soul, you must know that on that measure that God strengthen you for the big trials, on the same measure God will make you worthy of the great gifts. This is for God doesn't give a great gift without a big trial. This is for God has appointed the gifts according to the trials, according to His wisdom that cannot be understood by those who have been created by God. That's why, out of the grave troubles happening to you out of the taking-care from God, you will know how much honor your soul has received from God's glory. This is for according to measure of the sadness there will be also the comforting.

Question: Which is, therefore, in the first place: the trial and then the gift, or it is the gift and after it the trial?

Answer: The trial won't come, if the soul hasn't firstly received a glory over the soul's measure. It is the ghost of the grace that has been firstly received by the soul. About this bears witness the trial of the Lord and the trials of the apostles. This is because they weren't allowed to enter the trials until they received, in the first place, the comforting. This is for they who are imparted with the goods are due to suffer the trials for those goods. This is because after the good there will come the trouble for that good. So pleased God Him to do in all the things[304].

But if it happens so, namely if the grace comes before the trial, though the feeling of the trials comes before the feeling of [303] It is not about trials happening to those monks who still are on the level of the doing because they restrain on themselves from evil deeds. Here it is about the bigger trials coming upon them who are in the higher stage of the appeasement. Neither these ones have an unchanged peace on their way. And it wouldn't be good if they had it. This is because if they had such an unchanged peace on their way, they wouldn't have any longer the occasion to strengthen their straining in their fight for guarding their quietude.

[304] This is applying the synergy to enduring the troubles. And an understanding of this synergy (of the together-working of the freedom with the grace), as a means of spiritual progress. The man, by giving his patience, he won't give it without having received the grace for that patience. And this inscribes a live of spiritual growth in his life. After enduring a trial with the help of a grace, there will come another even bigger trial based on a greater grace.

the grace, in order to prove the freedom. This is because never will the grace be shown within somebody before that somebody to taste the trials. So, the grace if the first to come within mind, but it is the second to be felt[305]. Therefore, we owe that during these trials to have two opposite feelings which totally differ from one another: these two are: the joy and the fear. The joy that you are walking the way trodden by the saints, or better said on that way walked by Him Who has given life to everyone. And this thing is proven by the knowledge (diagnosis) given you by trials. And we must have the fear too, lest because of our pride to be tempted by these ones[306]. But they who are humble in heart they will be made wise by the grace, in order they to be able to discern which is the temptation occurring as a fruit of the pride and which is that one occurring as a hit consequently to love[307]. This is for the trials out of deviation and out of increasing the living into good differ from the temptations coming out of that forsaking towards advising, for the haughtiness of the heart.

[305] It is so in the case of the grace of the Holy Mysteries too. Firstly, the seen is hidden in the ground, and its fruit will be shown latter. The grace is given on a certain moment, but the grace's work is long and its effects are shown gradually. Although, even hidden like that, the grace is helping the man since the beginning of the trials to endure those trials, in the fight against the urges towards sin. We are noticing here the expression "the feeling of the grace" which followed to be reproached by Hausherr to Simeon the New Theologian. Simeon said that no one must expect to be saved if he doesn't reach the feeling of the grace. Saint Isaac conditions the feeling of the grace to the patience and to the overcoming of the troubles.

[306] Here is being made a clear difference between trials and temptations, but it is also shown the easy crossing from ones to others. The trials (πειρασμός) can become temptations to us (πειραζόμεθα εν τούτοις). As for most part of this writing, we have here too a majestic presentation of the contradictory complexity of the souly states. We must enjoy the trials (that what hurts us); and, in the same time, we must fear lest by being us sweetened only with the joy of the trial to fall into the temptation of the pride for the fact that we can endure those trials.

[307] That what occurs as a fruit of the pride is a temptation, but it can also be a trial (trouble); and that what occurs as a hit consequently to the love it is a trial, but it can also be a temptation. Only the discernment can distinguish when each of those consequences is either trial or temptation.

The Trials Coming upon the Friends of God Who Are Humble in Thought

Those trials brought by the stick towards the soul's progress and growth, which is detached and probed through that soul that lives in ascesis, are these ones: the hesitation, the burdening of the body, the drowsiness of the limbs, the idleness, the confusion of the cogitation, the imagining of the body's weakness, the ceasing of the hope for a while, the darkening of the thoughts, the lack of a human help, the lack of the things needed for the body, and others like these ones. Out of these temptations the man will achieve a lonely soul and a killed and humble heart. And through these the soul will be tried if it starts desiring the Creator. That's why the Care-Taker appoints these ones towards the power and towards the need of those who receive them. In those trials are mixed the comforting and the sufferings, the light and the darkness, the wars and the aids and, shortly speaking, the narrowness and the broadness. They (if used well) are the sign of the man's progress by the help of God[308].

The Temptation of the Enemies of God Who Are the Proud Ones

And the temptations coming out of the forsaking by God, against them who are shameless and rise their thoughts in front of God's kindness and because they do injustice to this kindness by their pride[309], are these ones: the shown temptations from the devils, which are at their turn above the [308] All of these have both the aspect of trials and of temptations. It depends on what they are used like: for exiting out of them towards God, or towards the total falling. The man's will gives them their last qualification. They are a scale placed in front of the man who must lean it on a side or another. Without them, namely without overcoming them, the man cannot advance towards God. That's why they are given on the measure of the level reached by the man, on the measure of the man's capacity of gaining through them.

[309] The do injustice to God's kindness because they use the gifts given them by this kindness to make them unpleasant to the people, so that the people will complain because God gave the proud ones, gifts used by them against their fellow humans.

limit of the soul's power[310], the depravation of the wisdom's powers from withing them, the lightning feeling of the fornication's hallucination allowed against them in order to humble their haughtiness, the quick-getting-angry, the will of imposing their will, the will for quarreling by words, the will to rebuke, the despising of the heart, the total delusion of the mind, blasphemies against God, insane thoughts causing of laughter, or better said of crying, the fact of becoming laughing stock to the people and of losing their honor, and of becoming embarrassing and disgraceful to the people, through the work of the devils in many ways, hiddenly and plainly, the lust for getting mingled and living with the world, the lust for speaking and for speaking insanely and for always contriving some novelty through a liar prophecy, and for promising many things which are above their own power. And these ones are the souly trials and temptations.

And in the bodily trials and temptations occur to someone like this, painful happenings always persevering in intertwining with him and which are difficult to be undo, encounters with evil people and ungodly people; and it even happens to them to fell in the hands of people who torment him, and his heart always and suddenly shakes, without reason, because of the fear of God. These ones often suffer big falls off rocks and off high places; and other things like theses ones happening them and crushing their body. And, finally, the lack of them who could support his heart out of the power of God and the lack of the hop of their faith; and, shortly, as much helplessness is brought upon them together with the helplessness's things. All of these mentioned and listed by us belong to the sorts of the pride's temptations.

And the beginning of these ones occurs within man when he starts reckoning on himself as wise in his eyes. And such a man moves in evil things on the measure he accepts such thoughts of the pride.

Therefore, you will know out of the sorts of the temptations the ways of the frivolity of your cogitation. And if you see some of these trials mixed in the trials hinted before by them, you will know that to the extent you have such trials you will also have the pride nesting into you.

About Patience

Listen to another sort too. All the not endured hardships and the troubles have within them a twofold torment[311]. This is for the man's patience limits his troubles' burden. The lack of courage is the mother of the torment. And the patience is the mother of the comforting and it is a power that usually is born out of the heart's broadness. But this power is difficult to be found by the man while in troubles, without the godlike grace coming out of the pursuing of the prayer and out of the shedding of the tears.

About the Lack of Courage

When God wants to trouble the man even more, God allows the man enter the hands of the lack of courage. And this gives birth within man to the strong power of the idleness, which the man tastes through a chocking of his soul that is one with the tasting of the Gehenna. And out of this comes the ghost of the going out of minds[312], out of which spring up tens [311] The patience is a spiritual strength that diminishes the strength of the troubles. By the fact that you don't endure them, you won't diminish them and you won't remove them. You will still endure them because you cannot do otherwise. But enduring them without patience it will be harder in a twofold manner. The more you endure the troubles willingly, the more you make an effort that diminishes their power; the more you are impatient in your troubles the more you will increase them and they will seem unbearable to you, limitless, and impossible to master them by your power. The troubles occurring to you, it will seem to you as limitless when you do not endure it, but if you endure it patiently you will limit it and you will master it, for within your patience there is the power of God that limits your trouble. You actually feel God's power what it limits you trouble like. This too is a form of synergy: the more you strain on yourself into your patience the more the power of God will help you to overcome your trouble. This is what Saint Isaac is going to say in continuation.

[312] The lack of courage is one with the increase of the idleness, as renunciation to the efforts of enduring the troubles. But that increases the troubles up to the proportions of a torment in hell. This is the limitlessness of the hell having in it also a subjective element. This leads to despair and to a true getting out of minds. This is because there is a kinship between the getting out of minds, the desperation, and the sentiment that the burden and the pain have no limits. In all of these there is a lack of understanding of the limited reality of the trouble; it is a subjective stretch of the darkness to infinite. Thus, the despair and the hell are connected by of thousands of temptations: the confusion, the wrath, the blasphemy, the defamation, the twisted thoughts, the moving from a place to another, and other things like these ones. And if you ask which their cause is, I will answer you: the carelessness. The medicine for all of these is one. And taking this medicine one will immediately find the comforting for his soul. And which that medicine is? It is the humble cogitation of the heart. Without these ones, no one can tear down the wall of these evil things, but he rather will make them overwhelming him[313].

Do not be mad with me because I am telling you the truth. I am telling you the truth for you have been searching for it within your soul. But if you want to, you enter the truth's country and you will see how the truth will untie you from your evilness. This is for on the measure of your humble cogitation you will be given the patience too in your troubles[314]. And according to your patience will also be lightened the heaviness of your troubles and you will achieve comforting. And according to your comforting, it will increase your love for God. And according to your love for God, there will be born your joy into the Holy Ghost. Still, on them who are truly sons, the All-Merciful doesn't want to get them out of their trials, neither He delivers them from their trials, but He dresses them up in patience for enduring those troubles. And they receive all these goods in the hand of their patience, towards the consummation the weakening of the will to endure and by the wakening up of the will, by the absence of the godlike grace.

[313] The humble cogitation, by being an admission of the self-limitation by knowing the endlessness of the godlike power, it allows the human being to see by that also the limitation of the troubles and it makes the human being able to accept the troubles. That's why, where the humble cogitation is there cannot be the hell of the seemed limitlessness of the troubles and of the passions which are the troubles' causes. Where it is seen the God's limitlessness, there no longer could be lived another limitlessness, namely that of the hell. Through this humble cogitation that has the evidence of the limitlessness of God, we limit also the pains which can be caused to us by the closeness of our death and it might be that we also could limits the unlimited death's consequences. And as through the subjective increasing of the pains we give them also some sort of real increasing to us, likewise, by subjectively limiting the consequences of our death we limit them in an objective mode too.

[314] It is to be noticed the paradox that the humbleness, that is self-limitation and that seems to be effortless, it implied the greatest effort, and therefore also the power to endure the troubles, to limit the troubles, by the evidence of the limitlessness of the godlike power which one experiences.

of their souls[315]. May Christ, our God, by His grace, to make us worthy of enduring the evils for His love, into the thanksgiving of our heart! Amen.

Word XLVII

That Body that Fears the Trials Will Become Friends with the Sin

Someone among the saints said that that body that fears the trials it will make friend with the sin, in order not to suffer and to avoid dying. But just because of that the Holy Ghost forced him to die. For He knows that if he doesn't die, he won't be able to defeat the sin. Thus, if somebody wants the Lord to dwell within him, he will force his body and he will serve (liturgize) the Lord and he will make on himself the Lord's servant by fulfilling the commandments of the Ghost as written by the apostle, and he will guard his soul against the deeds of the flesh which the apostle wrote about. This is for only when he weakens his body by fasting and humbleness, the soul will be strengthened by prayers. This is because when the body is narrowed in many sorts of troubles and needs in its quietude, the more the body gest closer to the death (it is mortified) in its life, the body uses to beg you, by telling you: "Be a little more lenient to me, so that I can live more temperately[316]. For I am now walking uprightly for I have been tested in such sort of evil things". But when you rest your body from troubles and when you give your body a little mercy, for you have suffered together with your body, and when your body gets rested even only for a little while, it will whisper you, while flattering you a little[317], until your body will make you get out of wilderness (because of its flattering is very powerful). And your body tells you: "We can live appropriately also near to the world. This is because we have been tested much. So, we can remain within the things which we have reached into. Just test me and if I am not as you wish, we could turn back here. This is because the wilderness doesn't go anywhere". But you must bot trust your body, regardless how much it will beg you and no matter how many promises it will make to you. This is because the body doesn't accomplish what it says. After you have accomplished your body's request, your body will throw you in big falls, out of which you won't be able to get up and go out.

[315] God doesn't spare of troubled the beloved ones of His, because without troubles they won't progress in the virtue of patience and of humbleness. But by giving them troubles, God gives them also the power to endure those troubles and to become humble.
[316] I not to live so restrained, so deprived, and so harshly.
[317] It flatters you by saying you that you have progressed much, so that you can give your body a little resting.

When you get lazy while facing temptations, and when you have got tired of them, you tell your body: "Do you want again your uncleanness and defiled life". And if your body tell you: "It is a sin to commit suicide", you answer you body: "I am killing myself for me[318], for I do not want to live in uncleanness. I am dying here, in order I not to see the true death of my soul, that death coming from God[319]. It is beneficial to me if I die here for cleanness and not to live the life from within world. I have chosen this willing death for my sins. I am killing on myself because I have committed sin to the Lord, and for I no longer want to anger Him. Why would I want to live a life far from God? I endure these troubles in order I not to get fat from the heavenly hope. What good will be to God my life from here, if I live it in a bad manner and if I anger Him?".

Word XLVIII

What is the Reason why God Allowed the Trials to Them Who Love Him

Out of the love shown to God by the saints, they suffer the trials coming upon them, for the name of God, for God doesn't get far from them who love Him and their heart gains daring to see Him in an unveiled manner and to ask Him for the things they need, with trust. This is for great is the power of that prayer uttered with daring. That's why God allowed His saints to be trialed in all sorts of trials, in order they to receive again the experience and the proof od His help and in order they to see how much taking-or-care God has of them. But also, in order they to gain wisdom out of trials and they not to remain untaught and so to be deprived of the gain of both parts of the habituation. This is for they gain thus, by trial, the knowledge of all things and thus they won't reach to be the mockery of the devils. This is because if they were accustomed only to the good things, and if they were unaccustomed to the other habituation[320], they would lack the experience in wars.

[319] The true death that is the separation from God. That death that doesn't separate us from God is not a true death but it bears us towards life. And the separation from God is the deed of the man. That's why not God made the death. But God accepts the death of the lusts, the death of the egotism, the death of the death. This is for such a death is the way towards the true life, that live into God.

And if we said through this that God accustomed them without giving them any knowledge, we would say that God wants them to be like oxen and like donkeys and like those having not freedom in certain things[321]. But the man wont' taste the good if not probed, firstly, by trying the evil things. This is for, when the man encounters the good within them, him to use them through knowledge and freedom, as his own[322]. What sweet is like that knowledge gained out of the experience by tasting the things, and how much power it gives him who has found it out by his rich experience, it is a known thing them who have been entrusted about that and who have felt its help, as it is also known to them the weakness of the nature and the fact that the human nature is supported by the godlike power. This is for then they know that God, by stopping firstly His help from reaching them, He will make them feeling the weakness of their nature and the cunningness of their enemy; and He makes them know whom they must fight with and which nature they have put on and what they are guarded like by the godlike power; and how far they have traveled and how high they have ascended on it; and how they get weakened while facing any passion when the godlike power is removed from them. And this is for they to gain humbleness out of all of those and they to travel towards God and they to wait for His help and they to persevere in prayer.

[321] So, the people, by having understanding and by not being like the animals are, they can be a meaning also in the troubled coming upon them. The people do not get accustomed to endure the troubles in a simple manner, without gaining out of them a certain experience, a knowledge, or without drawing any conclusion out of those troubles. This is one more reason why the people accept the troubles freely, and not like the animals which endure the troubles in lack of freedom in order to gain a skill because of being driven and forced by the will of their master.

[322] Even into troubles, the man could encounter the good if he uses the troubles through freedom and knowledge, towards doing the good. The troubles are given to him, for he can use them through knowledge and freedom. The troubled broaden his knowledge and they also make the man spiritually progressing, and to freely avoid the evil.

And where will they have learnt all of these if they haven't gained the experience by enduring the many evil things, which they have reached in by the lenience of God? This is for the Apostle says: "In order I not to get haughty because of the overwhelming greatness of the unveilings, it has been given to me as a bold in my body, the angel of satan" (2 Cor. 12: 7). But somebody also gains steadfast faith out of trials by experiencing the help from God with he has been receiving it for many times. By that he will become fearless and he will gain courage our of trials and out of the achieved experience.

The trial is useful to any man. This is for, if the trial is useful to Paul, then all the people must shut up their mouth and they must feel indebted to God to accept the trials. This is for they who live in ascesis they are tried in order their richness to increase; the lazy, in order they to guard on themselves against the things harming them; the sleepy, in order they to be urged to wake up; they who are far, in order to come close to God; the household, in order they not to enter the house daringly. No inexperienced son will receive the richness of his father's house before he is able to use that richness. That's why God tries them firstly and He submits them to hardships, and only then He will show them the gift. Glory to our Master Who by bitter medicines brings us to delectation into health!

There is nobody not to get sad during the trials' times (getting experience). And there I no one whom the gall not to seem bitter to, at the time he drinks the gall during his trials. This is because without this, nobody can reach to drink the strong beverage. But enduring is not in our power. This is for, how could the clay vessel hold the flowing water without being strengthened in the first place by the godlike fire? We are going to take all the things into Christ Jesus, our Lord, if we obey Him and if we ask for those things into humbleness, with a ceaseless desire. Amen.

Word XLIX

About the Dispassionate Knowledge and about Many Trials. About the Sure Knowledge that not Only the Small and the Weak and the Inexperienced, but also Them Who are Found Worthy for a Long Tien of Dispassion and Who Have Reached the Consummation of Their Thought and, Partially Near to the Cleanness United with the Mortification, They Are Mercifully Forsaken, because of Thei Falling into Pride[323]

Some people mistake yet and again, but they heal their soul and the grace welcomes them again. This is for withing each speaking nature there takes place a change that doesn't' reach the end. And the changes cross each man through all the moments of his life and out of the multitude of the changes the endowed one will know the grace, with the gift of the discernment. Buy the tests which he is submitted to on every day, they will make him wiser, especially if he is awake and if he takes heed at himself with his mind and if he find out how much change of his gentleness and of his kindness he receives in his soul on every day and how he is suddenly moved from peace to disturbance despite the circumstance he is in it doesn't give him any reason for that and how he ends being in a great and untold danger.

And this is what Saint Makarios wrote plainly, with much care and zeal, toward the remembrance and the learning of the brothers that, at the time of changing from a good state to the opposite state they not to fall into despair. This is for them who are on the level of the cleanness always experience falls, like the air happens to get colder, even sometimes they to be in idleness of in drowsiness; and even when they behave according to their rule, they could experience falls resisting the purpose of their will.

But also, the Blessed Mark bears witness about this, as one who experienced it as such, and he says in in his writing about an abundant strengthening, in order somebody not to reckon that Saint Makarios said this in his epistle[324] haphazardly and by truly experiencing it, as also through two so important witnesses the mind to receive, in a doubtless manner, comforting in time of need. So, what does he say? "There take place changes in each one, as in air too". Do you understand what does he mean by the word "in each one"? This is because the nature is one, so that you won't reckon that he spoke only about them who are on lower levels and unimportant, while the consummate ones would be free of change and they would stay undisturbed on their level, without having passionate thoughts, as the Evhivites[325] say. That's why he wrote: "in each one".

But how can that happen, oh, Makarios? You speak about fresh air, and then, after a while, you speak about heat and hails, or about war and clear sky. Actually, in our struggle it happens like so: the war, and then the help from the grace. This is for, at a time, our soul is in a storm and furious waves rise against our soul. And then it comes again a change. This is for the grace visits us and it fill up our heart with joy, with peace, and with God, and with righteous and peaceful thoughts. He is showing here these thoughts of the righteousness, letting us to understand that the previous thoughts were beastly and unclean; and he is urging us by telling us that, after these righteous and good thoughts it will follow the rushing in of other thoughts, but we mustn't despair, and in the time of our resting brought us by the grace let's not get haughty, but in the time of joy let's wait for trouble.

[324] I think that this is about "The Great Epistle" written by Makarios, and published by Werner Jaeger, in: Two Rediscovered Works of Ancient Literature of Gregory of Nyssa and Makarios, Leiden. E. I. Brill, 1954.

[325] Evhivites (the ones who pray) it is a Greek name given to Messalians, a heresy manifested in the Century IV and thereafter. "They said that the baptism is useless to them who receive it. The baptism cuts off like a razor the wheatears of their sins but not the root of their sins. But the consummate prayer plucks off the root of the sin too, and it banishes the devils from within soul. This is for each man is born since the beginning tied to a demon that moves the man to the inappropriate deeds. This devil cannot be cast out of the soul neither by baptism nor by something else, but only by the work of the prayer". Once they have cast the devil out by prayer, they will no longer be able to commit sin, and they will even see, in a sensitive manner, the Persons of the Holy Trinity. Here Saint Isaac is showing Makarios affirming that each soul, including the more spiritually advanced souls, it is submitted to temptations, so that Makarios was an adversary to the Messalians, contrary to some affirmations belonging to some newer western theologians that Makarios, according to his writings, would have been a member of the Messalians' heresy.

He urges us not to get sad, if there follow falls; he doesn't tell us not to stand against those falls, but he tells us to be with joy, by showing that our mind must receive these falls too as being ours. Let's not fall into despair, as one who has been waiting for something above the fight and for a consummate and unchanged resting and who doesn't want to receive fight and sadness, neither he wants to occur within him, in this world, the movement of something opposed to these ones, or something among the things unpleasant to God.

And he advised us this, in order us not to become totally unworking and with this thought us to get drowsy because of the despair and us not to remain steadfast on our way. And he says: "You know that all the saints were in this work. As long as we are in this world, together with these ones we are hiddenly given also an abundant comforting. This is for we are being requested on each day and on each hour a testing of our love for God, while fighting and waging war to the temptations. This means that we must not get sad and that we mustn't get lazy in battle. And so, we must walk our way. And he who wants to get our and to deviate from this path he will make himself prey to the wolves".

Of, what a wonder we can see at this saint! What he has made like, out of a small word, such a utilization, and he showed this one as full of wisdom and he totally removed the doubt of the reader. And that one, he says, who deviated from these and who makes on himself as prey to the wolves, he doesn't want to walk the due way. That one has made his mind to do so and who wants to walk a path untrodden by the fathers".

And when he asks us that at the time of the grace we should wait for troubles, he teaches us as in the following: out of the work of the grace it happens to occur within us great thoughts and kidnappings during the time of some sight (contemplation) of the mind that is above-nature, as Saint Mark said. This is for when the angels come close to us, they will fill us up with a spiritual view (contemplation). And all the opposite things will get far from us and, during the time that one experiences these things, and untold peace and serenity will occur within him. This is for then you are overshadowed by the grace and the holy angels come closer to you surrounding you as a wall, and by that all the ones who were tempting you they get far from you.

But you must not get haughty and you must not reckon in your soul that you have reached the peaceful shore and the unchanged sky and that you have been brought out of this bosom (of sea), and out of the opposite winds from it, and you no longer have to fear your enemies or to fear any evil encounter. This is because of many who thought that hell into danger, as the blesses Nilus said. Or, you mustn't reckon on yourself that you are greater that the many and that it is due to you to be in these things, and other do not deserve it because of their legging behind in their living, or because of their unsatisfactory knowledge. You mustn't say: "That's why they are deprived of these things, and I am in what is due to me, for I have reached the consummation of the holiness and the spiritual level and the unchanged joy". You must rather remember your unclean thoughts and your inappropriate imaginings, brought within your cogitation in time of storm and at the hour of the disturbance and of the disorder of the thoughts, which, a little earlier, their rose against you in the fumbling of the darkness. You must remember how you have quickly deviated towards passions and how you have been taking to them in the darkness of the cogitation and how you haven't been sweetened, neither have you been wondering about the godlike view and about the abundance of the gifts received by you. And you must know that all of these have been brought upon us by the taking-of-care of God, in order to humble us. This is for God's taking-of-care it takes care and is appoints to each of us what is useful to him. That's why, when you get pride out of the received gifts, the God's taking-of-care will forsake you and you will totally fall into temptations, which, by thoughts; you are only tempted to.

Therefore, you must know that being into these things it doesn't depend on you, neither on your virtue, but it depends on the grace carrying you on the palm of its hands so that you won't be scared. You must think at these things when, during your joy, your thoughts get haughty, as our holy father said, and you cry and shed tears and lean yourself towards the memories of your sins, of those sins from the time of your forsaking, in order you to be delivered from this thought and you to gain through that your humbleness. Still, you must not despair, for through the thoughts of the humbleness you achieve, as through an expiation, the forgiveness of your sins.

This is for the humbleness brings us, even without deeds, the forgiveness of many of our sins. And the deeds without humbleness are, a contrary, useless. And they even prepare us for many evil things[326]. Therefore, you must, as I said, to achieve by humbleness the forgiveness of your lawlessness. Like the salt must be in any meal, likewise must be your humbleness in any of your virtue. And the humbleness can crush the power of many sins.

Therefore, we need to ceaselessly be sad in out thought, into humbleness and with the sadness of the right-reckoning (of a true discernment)[327]. This is for, if we have achieved this one, it will make us sons of God and it will present us in front of God, even without having us done good deeds. And without it (without humbleness), all our deed would be vain, as also all our virtues and works.

So, God wants the change of our cogitation. This is for through cogitation we can better us up, while also through cogitation we become evil. It suffices our cogitation to stay alone and non-helped (by deeds) before God and it to speak for us. You give thanks and confess on yourself to God, not being silent even for a moment, by thinking that by having such a helpless and easy to deviate towards evil nature, you still are from time to time elevated and which gifts are you found worthy of and who is elevating you above-nature; and when you are forsaken, where you descend to, so that you reach having a beastly mind. And you must think at the wickedness of your nature and at the quickness of the change that follows, as some among the old saints said: "When it comes to you, he says, the thought of the pride, telling you: think at your virtues, you will answer: old man, look at your fornication". He spoke about that fornication which you have been tempted by, during your forsaking, into your thoughts.

Lo what the grace appoints like, to each one according to his benefit, either during wartime or during the receiving of

[326] The humbleness comprises in itself more than the deeds do. This is for, if the true deeds suppose the love and the honoring of your neighbor, he who has humbleness he has the roots of the good deeds, while the deeds of him who lack his humbleness are actually done for himself and only apparently for another. But through humbleness you have already surpassed even the evil deeds you did. This is for in itself the root of your being you have got accustomed to the good deeds.

help. Have you seen this wonderful old man how easily he told this thing? “When it comes to you, he says, the thought of the pride for the height of your living, you will answer: old man, look at your fornication”. It is obvious that the old man told that to a great man. This is because cannot be troubles by such a thought except those who are on a higher level and who live a worthy to be praised living. You can find out the fact that such a passion raises into the soul after achieving some virtue, in order the man to be disrobed of that virtue’s work, if you will, form an epistle of the same Makarios. Out of this epistle you can find out what stage are the saints and which are the temptations allowed to come upon them. This is for in the epistle are written the followings:

Abba Makarios writes to all his beloved sons, in order to teach them limpidly how they are guided by God through wars and through the support from the grace. This is for though them the wisdom of God liked to accustom the saints, from ever, against the sin, through virtue, as long as the saints still are in this life. This is for on each moment their sight to be raised towards looking at Him, and by ceaselessly looking at Him to grow up within them the holy love for Him, by that that they, by forcing on themselves to get out from under the oppression of the passions and out of the fear of them, they to run towards Him and they to get strengthened in their faith and in their hope and in their love for Him.

These things have been said not to them who live together with the people, and who move on themselves from place to place, and who always remain in the defiled and unclean thoughts and things; neither have been told these to them who fulfill the righteousness through deeds outside the quietude, and who are constantly hunted through their senses; neither to them who are constantly endangered by their needs, and whom are deprived - by the diverse circumstance which they willingly reach in – not only of their power for fully guarding their thoughts, but also by the power for guarding their senses. But these things have been told to them who are able to guard their bodies and their thoughts and who consummately shun on themselves against disturbance and against meeting people, and who, by the blessed circumstance that they have rejected all the things and even their own souls, they can guard their mind in prayer and they receive changes in their guiding by the grace, inside their peaceful life; to them who live their lives under the arm of the knowledge of the Lord, being they hiddenly made wiser by the Ghost hidden into their appeasement and in their restraining from things and from seeing some of the things, as ones who have killed their thought regarding the world[328]. This is for these ones do not let the passions die. And the cogitation dies towards them through the restraint from things and through the together-working of the grace. May this grace guard us within the borders of this living! Amen.

On the Same Theme and about Prayer

The meaning of this chapter in brief, it is that we must that we need - on every moment, and on all the twenty-four hours of the day and of the night – the repentance. And the meaning of the name of the repentance, as I have known out of the true kind of the things, it is this: it is the ask prolonged for the entire time or the full-of-pricking prayer directed towards God for the forgiveness of the past sins and for guarding against sins in the future. That's why the Lord strengthened our weakness in prayer, saying: "Stay awake and take vigil and pray, not to enter the temptation" (Mt. 26: 41). You pray and you do not hesitate and take vigil all the time and pray. "Ask, and you will take. Search for and you will find. Knock and it will be opened to you. This is for everyone who asks for he will take, and he who searches for he will find and him who knocks it will be opened him" (Mt. 7: 7). But our Lord strengthened His word even more and he urged us to strive, in the parable of the friend who went to his friend in the middle of the night and asked him for bread, saying: "Amen, I say you, that if he didn't give him for their friendship, at least for his daring, he would get up and he would give him all the things he asked for" (Lk. 11: 8).

[328] The killing of the cogitation regarding the world means no longer being interested in the world, for the world no longer tempts you with its pleasures which you know as inferior in comparison to the joy given to you by the communion with God.

So, yourself ask and do not get lazy. Of, untold daring! The Give entices us to ask from Him, in order Him to give us His godlike gifts. And as He bestows us all the things which are towards good to us, as He alone knows, likewise His words are full with the urge addressed us to dare and to trust Him. And for the Lord knows that our impulse towards deviation doesn't cease until our death and that this change is near to us – I mean that change from virtue to sin -, and that the man and his nature are always in state of deviation towards the opposite things, He urged us to strive and to ask and to ceaselessly toil[329]. This is for if this world had been the place of the strut and the man had reached it, his nature would have raised from under the pressure of the need, and his work would have existed from the pressure of the fear, and we wouldn't have been asked to pray, by fulfilling what we need through itself the God's taking-of-care[330]. This is for neither into the future age will be brought to God prayer asking for some things. This is for in that country of the freedom, our nature will no longer be submitted to change, neither will our nature deviate because of fearing the things opposite to itself. This is for our nature will be consummate in all aspects. That's why we must strive not only for prayer and for guarding, but also in order us to understand the subtle and non-understood movements happening to us, which are above the knowledge of our mind, and which often we are unwillingly in. This is because even if our cogitation is very sure and full of good will towards the good things, our cogitation often forsakes us at the border of the trials and God's taking-of-care throws us, as the Blessed Paul said: "In order I not to get haughty, for the overwhelming greatness of the unveilings, it has been given to me as a bold of my body the angel of the satan, to hit me. And I begged the Lord, for three [329] Our changing nature urges us ceaselessly towards deviations from the good way. By knowing this weakness of our nature, God forgives us ceaselessly, but He also urges us to as Him for forgiveness and for His help. The fixism of our nature into good, as argued by some old heresies and by some Christian denominations from today, it doesn't correspond to the reality.

[330] Even if our thought is full of benevolence towards the good things, sometimes we no longer understand the purpose of some of the trials, or our benevolence forsakes us at the border of those trials (when these trials start) and, in a way, the God's taking-of-care let us in their hands (throws us), though, in the end, God will help us exit the trials. Or, the work of God with us brings is fruits through our helplessness shows in the difficulty which we endure the trials with, because they are very big. Then we shout out increasingly louder toward God and we open the gate of our soul towards receiving His help.

times, to take him away from me. And the Lord told me: My grace is enough to you. This if for My power makes perfect into helplessness" (2 Cor. 12: 7)[331].

Therefore, Lord, this is Your will and my childhood needs all of these, in order to be guided and wakened up by You, especially while the man is not drunk with your longing, for I am neither, and so the man is unattracted by Your goods insomuch that the man no longer to see the world because of his drunkenness he has of You[332]. For You have made me to ascend to this state and even higher, towards unveilings and views which cannot be expressed by the bodily tongue and which are seen and the voice of the liturgy of the ghosts is heard and I to be found worthy of the full of holiness Your sight[333]. But, for now, the consummate one into Christ, I am not able to guard on myself, right because I am something and because I have a subtlety; this if for I am not able to understand on myself, through my power, I who I have received the mind of Christ[334].

Therefore, Lord, for that I rejoice of weaknesses, of troubles, of prisons, of ties, of needs, either from the part of my nature, or from the sons of the nature, either of those coming from my enemies. I endure while rejoicing of my helplessness, namely of my trials, in order the power of God to dwell within me (2 Coir. 12: 9). Id, after all of these I need the stick of the temptations, in order Your dwelling to increase even more within me by that, I will know out of these that You do not love anyone more than me, for You have glorified me by this more than on many; and You have given me to know Your wonderful [331] If we live into the certitude of seeing God, in openly experiencing Him, we wouldn't need to strengthen on ourselves, in this certitude, by asks. We would be convinced about the generous kindness of God only by "seeing' Him. That's why, in the age to come, we will praise only on God and we will thank Him, but we won't ask Him for anything anymore.

[332] One must notice this feature of the drunkenness of God: it is too a non-seeing of the surrounding world.

[333] The liturgy of the ghosts is the angelic liturgy, the angels' ceaseless praising addressed to God, and the sight of God is full of holiness. Or of cleanness, as God is all-clean or saint. Only the clean one sees God, or God irradiates His cleanness in him who sees Him.

[334] The higher I am elevated through Christ, the less I will understand on myself. I have objectively achieved the mind of Christ and I am a consummate man into Christ, but what it is objectively given to me I am not able to understand yet, right because that is such a high state. So, I am not yet able to understand either the purpose of these trials coming upon me right for consolidating me in this high state. This can be the meaning of this text, though it seems a little obscure to us.

and glorified powers, as to one of the apostles[335], as You haven't given to others among my companions, and You have called me as "vessel of the understanding", in order I to faithfully guard the level of Your love. For all of these, I know that for advancing and progressing in the work of the preaching, I would have untied me of the chain of the trials and so You would have bestowed me my freedom, it that had been useful to me. But You haven't deigned I to be without trouble, neither I to be worriless in this world. This is for You haven't wanted even the work of preaching that Gospel to be multiplied within the world mor that You wanted I to benefit of my trials and my soul to be guarded healthy near to You[336].

So, you can see, you who have achieved right-reckoning (discernment) that great is the gift of the trials. This is because the higher the man gets and enters the spiritual stage, in the likeness of Paul, the more he needs fear and guarding and he gathers up benefits out of the encounters with the trials. Who has reached the country of the entrustment that is full of robbers and he received the power not to deviate? (This is a thing not given either to the angels in order they not to become consummate without us)[337]. Who, by reaching there, he has received this gift against all spiritual and bodily gifts, in order him to remain totally unchanged and no temptations of the thought to come closer to him anymore? The order of this world has a meaning shown in all the Scriptures: even if we experienced thousands of falls and of wounds daily, let's not get [335] As to Paul. This phrase too is a little obscure. In the Greek text sound like: "And as You have given me to know Your wonderful and glorified powers, You didn't give to one among the apostles, my friends" etc.

[336] This phrase seems quite obscure. I think that the meaning would be this: God doesn't reckon more useful Him to be preached within the world, by unproven and unclean through trials men, than a previous consummation through trials. Only then the preaching of the believers would have a true effect. That's why he says: "For through these trials I to be guarded healthy next to You and thus to be made more fruitful Your preaching within the world".

[337] The more one get strengthened in his entrustment that he had progressed in the closeness of God, the more the assaults of the evil ghosts are more persisting. But, also in rejecting these ones we enjoy more the help from the angels. Thus, the angels themselves progress together with us into consummation, by fighting, at their turn, together with us, against the evil attacks. If the angels themselves had been submitted to such attacks and the must fight to reject those attacks by themselves, they would have ascended towards God without us. But it hasn't been given to them to ascend without us, without helping us. Besides, one could say that this is a general rule. No man can ascend towards God (towards good) without helping others to ascend too, and if, at his turn, he is not helped by others.

discouraged and let's not leave the race in the stadium. This is for it is possible that, through a small fight, us to gain the victory and to receive the crown.

This world is a battle place and it is a stadium for racing. And this time is a battle time. And in the battle place there is no law[338]. Namly, the emperor won't establish a limit to his soldiers until the battle is finished and until each man reaches at the door of the Emperor of the emperors and until is proved there who endured in the battle and has let himself not to be defeated and hasn't run. This is for, on how many times there is a man who seemingly is not useful to anyone, and he is always pushed aside because of being inexperienced, but still, while being helpless, he steals the flag from the hands of the army of the giant sons and he raises his name and he is praised more than all of them who fight and who are famous for their victories and he receives the crown and the precious gift more than his companions? That's why no man must remain into despair. Let's not get lazy at prayer and let's not hesitate in asking Him for help.

And let's place this in our thought that, as long as we are in the world and allowed into body, even if we will be elevated up to the top (apse) of the heavens, we must not be without deeds and toil and care. Through this comes the consummation. Forgive me! And what is more than this is reckless occupation. And to our God is due the glory and the mastery forever! Amen.

About the Diverse Sorts of the War from the Devil Against Them Who Walks the Narrow Path, that One that Is Above-World

It is an old custom of the devil, of our enemy, to skillfully divide his attacks against them who enter this battle, according to the sorts of his weapons, and to change the war according to the purpose aimed by the diverse persons. On them seen by him as idle and helpless in their thoughts, the devil wages war to them, strongly, since the beginning, and the devil rises against them hard and strong temptations, in order him to make them since the beginning to taste the sorts of his evilness ad to engulf them, since their first battle, in fear, and the path to seem them harsh and hard to cross and they to say: "If the beginning is like so hard and harsh, who will be able to face, until the end, the many wars placed along the way?". And by saying that, they will no longer be able to stand strong, or to advance. And they won't be even able to look at something else, because of being so much burdened by this care. And, gradually, the devil intensifies his war against them, in order they to run away from him.

Better said, God Himself is the One Who allows the devil to get stronger against them and God doesn't help them in anything. This is for they entered the fight for the Lord with doubt and with a cold heart. This is for it is said: "Cursed is everyone who does the things of the Lord with idleness and who impeded his hand from blood" (Jer. 48: 10)[339]. And again: "Close is the Lord to them who fear Him" (Ps. 84: 10[340]). This is for the Lord commands us to meet the devil without fear or indifference, saying: "You start, therefore, to destroy him and start the war against him and clinch with him and fight manly. And start place you fear over all you enemies from under the sky, says the Lord" (Deut. 11; 25). This is because, is you do not die of a willing death with your body, you will die an unwilling death with your soul, because of you parting with God.

So, as far as you are able to, do not resist against willingly receiving the temporary sufferings for God, so that you to enter His glory. This is for, if you die bodily in the fight for it, the Lord Himself will crown you and He will bestow your honored bones with the honor of the martyrs. That's why, as I said before, the idle and the drowsy at the beginning of their ascesis, they who do not strive to surrender on themselves to the death, they will be in all the wars as weak and lacking their manhood. Better said, God Himself allows them to be persecuted and warred. This is because they haven't truly [339] Namely he fears to fight for the Lord to the blood, to the receiving of the death.

[340] In KJB we have: Ps. 85: 9: "Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land."; in ROB we have: Ps. 84: 10: "But His salvation is nigh to them who fear Him, in order the glory to dwell in our land." (E. l. t.'s n.)

searched for him, and because of attempting they to fulfill the thing of the Lord by spying on Him and by mocking of Him. That's why also the devil knew them in the beginning, and he tried their thoughts, as they were, if they were fearful and full of love for himself and for the care for their body. Because of that he persecutes them like a blizzard. This is for the devil doesn't see in them any power of the mind (intelligible, spiritual), which the devil usually sees it within the saints. This is for the power works together with the man and it helps the man and it shows the taking-of-care to the man, according to the man's decision according to God, and according to the man's heading towards that target wanted by God for the man. Because the devil won't be able to come closer to the man, or to bring temptations to the man, if the man doesn't get lazy, and if God doesn't allow it (or God doesn't forsake the man), or if God doesn't loose the man towards defiled thoughts, through the self-appreciation and pride, or through some thought of doubt, and by the division of the man's soul. These ones are asked for by the devil in order the devil to tempt them.

But the beginners and the simple and the inexperienced are not asked for, from God, by the devil, in the same manner that the devil asks for the saints and for them who are great (with their soul), in order the devil to tempt them. This is because the devil knows that God doesn't let (the man) to fall in his hands. This is for God knows that the man is unable to face the devil's temptations. God will let the people only if they have one of the reasons which I spoke about before. This is because then the power of the Providence of God will get far from them. This is one sort of the devils' wars.

Word LII

About the second Sort of the Devil's Wars

But on them whom the devil sees as full of manhood and strong and who reckon the death as nothing and who reach a great zeal and who surrender on themselves to all the trials and death and who despise the life within world and within body and all the trials, the devil doesn't meet them immediately and he doesn't show on himself for a long time, but he limits on himself and he gives them room and he doesn't get in their way from their first start, neither he enters the war with them. This is because the devil knows that any beginning of the war if hot and he knows that the ascetic has much zeal and that they who are the most ascetic among ascetics cannot be easily defeated. That's why, the devil doesn't do that because of his cowardice, but because he fears the godlike power that envelops these ones and that scares him.

So, when the devil sees them being thus, he won't dare to touch them, until he sees them with their zeal strayed and dropping their weapons which they have prepared into their thoughts, by forsaking the godlike words and the memories which are together-working and upholding[341]. So, he takes heed at the time of their getting lazy. And when those ones turn back, for a little while, to their previous thoughts, the devils too start contriving craftsmanships in order to defeat them through the flattering of their thoughts springing out of them, and the devils dig up a perdition pit for their souls, by the scattering of their thoughts coming them out of their laziness, thoughts which make the indifference master within them, or in their mind and hearts.

And the devil doesn't to do these until he is impeded to wage war to them, but not because he wants to spare them or because he is ashamed by them. Because the devil reckons them as nothing. But I reckon that that is for a certain power surrenders them who feel the warmth of their zeal for God and on them who get out like some little children and they reject the world without much hesitation, hoping in God and not knowing whom they must fight against. That's why God banishes away from the devil's awful cunningness, in order the devil not to get near to them. And the enemy is kept on the leash, when he sees the Guardian Who always guards on those. This is for, if those do not throw away from them the reasons for the help, which are the prayer for asks, the toils, and the humble cogitation, the Upholder and the Helper won't ever get far from them.

Look ad write within your heart that the love for pleasure and the love for resting are causes of the forsaking. But him who strongly restrains on himself from those he won't ever be forsaken by the help from God. And the enemy won't be allowed to attack him. And if the enemy is at times allowed to attack him for guidance, the holy power will come after the enemy and it will stop the enemy. And that one won't fear the temptations form the devils, for his thought gives him courage and that power make him despise the devil[342]. This is for this godlike power teaches the people, like somebody would teach a boy how to swim, by letting that boy alone for a little while, and when that boy starts drowning, he will raise that boy above. This is for the boy swims on the hands of his teacher. And when the boy starts weakening in his courage and sinking, he who bears the boy on his hand shouts out at him, encouraging him: "Do not fear, for I am carrying you". And like the mother who teaches her little child how to walk, she get a little far from her child and she calls him to come to her, and when the little child coming to her starts wabbling and falling, because of the weak and feet and limbs, the mother runs to her child and grams her child, likewise the grace of God carries and teaches the people who surrender on themselves with cleanness and with simplicity on the hands of their Maker and who have rejected the world with the whole their heart and who walk on the tracks of God[343].

And you, man, who walk on the tracks of God, you must remember for the whole time of your ascesis, always, about the beginning and about the first zeal of the beginning of this way, and about the hot thoughts which you came out of your house in the beginning and which you have took your place with in the front line. Test on yourself daily, in order the warmth of your soul not to become cold in wielding some of the weapons which you have been dressed up with, and in your zeal ignited within you in the beginning, namely at the beginning of your fight, lest you will lose some of the weapons which you have been dressed up with at the beginning of your battle. And you must always raise your voice inside the battle camp and you must encourage your sons from your right hand, namely your thoughts, and you must show to the others, namely to the enemy, that you are awake. And if you see, at the beginning, some fearsome attack from the enemy, you must not get weak. Maybe that it will be useful to you. This is for Him Who saves you as a gift, He won't allow anyone to come nigh to you, except for some oikonomia beneficial to you.

[342] The thought at God, the prayer addressed to God, they always meet the power of God. Where is the first one there is the last one too. The thought and the prayer do not refer to God from distance, but they enter the touch with the power of God and they are penetrated by that power.

But you must not show idleness since the beginning, lets by that idleness from the beginning, by stepping forwards, you will fall and you won't be able to resist the troubles coming upon you: I mean the troubles because of hunger, because of helplessness, because of the fearsome hallucinations, or because of similar others. You must not leave the Leader of the battle, for He will help you against your enemy, lest your enemy will find you as he expected you to be. And you must ceaselessly call upon God and cry before Him and He will send you help. This is for once you have seen nigh to you Him Who saves you, you will no longer be defeated again by the enemy opposing you. These two sorts of fight have been shown until here.

About the Third Way of Enemy's Fighting against Them Who are Strong and Full of Manhood

When, after all of these, the devil rises against somebody and the devil cannot defeat him in battle, better said the devil cannot defeat Him Who strengthen the man and Who helps the man and for Whom the man has been resisting the devil since the beginning and Whom the man takes power and patience from, so that the thick and material body defeats the incorporeal and cogitated with the mind one, so, when the enemy sees all the power received by man from God, and when the enemy sees the external senses defeated by the unseen things and by the sounds of the heard things, and the man's thought unweakened by flattering and delusions, the cunning one will want to search and find a craftsmanship which him to separate the man through, from the angel who helps the man. Better said, the cunning one wants to make bling the mind of the helped man, so that him not longer to be helped. The enemy desire that within the man to be victorious the thought of the pride, so that the man staunchly believed that his victory comes from himself, and that he was the one gaining this richness to himself, and by his own power he has guarded on himself against the killed enemy. And sometimes he reckons that he has defeated the enemy haphazardly, and on some other times because of the enemy's helplessness (not to mention other ways and thoughts of the blasphemy, which his would will fall because of, into fear, even only by mentioning those). On some other occasions, the enemy present his delusions as unveilings from God, by showing to the man many things in his dreams. And when the man is awake, the enemy takes the image of an angel of light and he will do everything to persuade the man, gradually, to accept him and to surrender on himself in the devil's hands. And if the sapient man keeps his thoughts, better said the man keeps the remembrance of Him Who helps the man and if the man focuses his heart's eyes on the sky, in order him not to take heed at them who whisper these within him, the enemy will attempt to plot against the man in other ways.

Word LIV

About the Fourth Way Which the Enemy Opposes through War

Given the kinship that our nature has with this fourth sort of war which left to the enemy in order to cause the perdition of the man through, which this sort of plot is? This is that of attacking the man through his natural needs. This is for, often, the mind of him who lives in ascesis is made bling by seeing and by the closeness of the thing submitted to the senses, and his mind is easily defeated in battle when reaching nigh to the material things, but much more than that when the material things are in front of his eyes. This is because the awful devil uses this craftsmanship with knowledge and with skillfulness; with the skillfulness the devil gained by battling so many strong and powerful warriors, who have been falling into these ones. And the devil does that in a deceiving manner. Even if the devil cannot make the people to work through deeds, due to their steadfastness of their quietude and due to their restraining from the cohabitation with the occasions and with the causes (of their sins), the devil still fights to make their mind to cause to itself diverse hallucinations, by tickling them, by stirring up movements within them, in order they to sink in indecent thoughts and they to agree those thoughts and they to be guilty of those thoughts, so that their Helper to get far from them.

This is because the devil knows that the victory of the man and the man's defeat and the man's treasure and the man's upholding and all the things of him who lives in ascesis, they have their ground in the man's thought and they are committed through a small agreement, only in order the thought to be moved away from its place and in order the thought to descend from that height down to earth and the thought to show, through decision, in an instance of agreement, its consent. It happened thus to many among saints through the hallucinations of the women's beauty. And even on several occasions, to them who came to a mile or two nigh to the world, or even at a day's walk distance, the cunning one plotted and brought to the saints the women as such. And to them who live far from the world, because the enemies cannot catch them in such a snare, the enemies show them the beauty of the women in hallucinations, sometimes in the adornment of the vestments, and on some other times in debauched views by showing them indecently the image of the naked woman. Through these things and through similar things, the devil defeated some of them with the deed itself, while others were mocked through hallucinations, because the frivolity of their thoughts. And thus, they reached at the bottom of their despair, and their souls deviated towards the world and they fell from the heavenly hope.

But other, by being stronger than those, and by being illuminated by the grace, they defeated the devil and his hallucinations and they trampled over all the body's pleasures and they have been found proven into the love for God. And for many times, the devil sowed them the hallucination of the gold and of some expensive things, and of some gold treasures. And sometimes the devil showed those as such, intending that, through such diverse hallucinations, to impede, maybe, on some of them, and to make them stumble through some of their snares and traps.

But, Lord, Lord, do not lead us in such temptations, You Who knows our helplessness, out of which only the strong and experienced ones can get out, by defeating such a hallucination.

And through all these trials the tempter devil is allowed to wage war to the saints, in order their love for God to be tested in such trials, namely if they prove to love God and if they persevere in loving God and of the truly love God, by restraining on themselves from such things, by getting far from such things, and by depriving on themselves of such things. And even if they come closer to such things, they force on themselves to despise them and to disregard those things for their love for God. These ones won't be flattered by devils, they won't be defeated by devils. They are tried not only in order they to be known as proven to God, but they to be known as such by the devil himself. This is because the devil desires much to tempt and to test, if he could, on all of them, and him to ask them from God to test them, as the devil asked for the righteous Job. And when the devil receives a small permission from God, the devil comes closer tempting strongly, but according to eth measure of the tempted. This is because the lawless devil doesn't attack as he wishes[344]. And through this are proven the true and steadfast ones into the love for God, for they despise all of these and they reckon all of these as nothing in their eyes, in comparison to their love for God. But by getting themselves humble, and they by always giving glory to Him Who helps them in all things and Who is the Cuse of their victory, and by surrendering on themselves into His hands in time of fight, they say to Him: "You, Lord, are strong, and Yours is the fight. Fight [344] Namely, the trials brought by the devil upon somebody won't exceed that somebody's power to endure them. This is because, if the temptations exceeded this power, the man would have no guilt if he didn't endure and overcame those. So, they who fall, they cannot excuse on themselves that the trials of the temptations exceeded their power of enduring. Of course, the things are getting more complicated, given that the man doesn't overcome the temptations with his own power, but also with the power from God. But the power given by God to man it is given to the man so that not to make the man's maximum effort unnecessary, and neither requires an impossible effort to the man. Exception from these are the wonders done in some cases by some people. But maybe on those cases as well, the above-nature power given to some people, it is according to their above-nature faith. By and large, thought, the border between the nature's order and that order from above-nature it is difficult to establish, and it is very mobile. Withing the believers the above-nature powers, by penetrating the nature, those powers will elevate the nature's powers themselves on diverse levels.

and be victorious in it, Lord, for us!". Then these ones are probed as the gold in the oven.

But they who are not strong into truth, by being tested through such temptations, they will be known as such and they will fall from God as some garbage, because of giving room within themselves to their enemy, and they will be found guilty because of the frivolity of their cogitation, or because of their pride. This is because they haven't been found worthy of receiving withing them that power had by the saints as working within them. This is for this power that works together with us it cannot be defeated. This is for our Lord is Almighty and Stronger that everyone and He is always victorious within the mortal body when He descends to help us in the war. The defeated ones are those who willingly empty on themselves of His through their ingratitude. They haven't been found worthy of that power that uphold the victor, and they feel on themselves empty even of the usual and own power which they had during the heavy wars.

But how do they feel on themselves emptied? By the fact that they see their falling as sweet and pleasant and it is unpleasant to them to endure the burden of the war waged them by their enemy, a war which they once were victorious in, with zeal, by the impulse of the nature felt by them, at that time, as hot and nimble. And now they are not finding those within their soul anymore.

And they who are in their beginnings as idle and drowsy and who do not fear only these battles all the similar battles, but they are even disturbed and they fear even the rustling of the leaves in the tree, and who are defeated even by the small need of the hunger and by the small weakness, by rejecting (the promise they made) and by turning back.

And they who are true and experienced, they do not satiate on themselves even with greenery and vegetables, and don't even accept to taste roots of dry vegetables, because the established time of eating. And they even sleep on the floor, despite they have their body and their eyes weakened by the great exhaustion of their body. And when the moment of their exit from their body draws near, they won't allow to themselves to be defeated and to fall off their strengthened will. This is for they desire and they want to force on themselves for their love for God and they chose better to toil for virtue than to have the temporary life and all the resting within it. And when the temptations come to them, they will rather rejoice and they will become through those temptations even more consummate. And neither have they been hesitating into the tiring toils they have been enduring for their love for Christ, but until they end their life, they are ready to receive manly the troubled and they do not run away from troubles, for through troubled they become consummate. And may the glory forever and ever to belong to our God! Amen.

About Passions

How sweet are the occasions of the passions! Somebody can cut off his passions and he can appease on himself, by keeping on himself far from them, and by getting glad for the passions' ceasing; but he cannot forsake the causes of his passions. That's why we are tempted even unwillingly. And we get sad because of our passions, but we still want to have the occasions of our passions. We do not love our sins, but we welcome with pleasure the causes bringing the sins within us. That's why the last ones become the causes for the first ones. He who loves the occasions of the passions he will unwillingly obey the passions and he will become slave to the passions. he who hates his sins he will stop committing them, and he who confesses his sins he will achieve the forgiveness of his sins. But it is impossible to somebody to leave the habit of his sins before gaining enmity towards his habituation to sins, in addition to the confession of his mistakes. The first one is cause for true humbleness; the second one is followed by shame and by the pricking of the heart.

If we do not hate the reproachable things, we won't be able to feel the stench of their work, neither will us be able to feel the rottenness they are spreading around, as long as we carry them within our souls. Until you will cast out of yourself what is inappropriate, you won't know what shame you are intertwined with, and you won't blush because of it. When you see your burden mirrored by others, you will find out the shame sitting on it. Part yourself with the evil things of the world and you will know the world's bad smell. This is because, if you do not part with the world, you won't know the world, but you rather will be engulfed in its stanch as in a goof fragrance and you will reckon the nakedness of your shame as a curtain of glory[345].

Blessed is him who has got far from the world and form the world's darkness and who doesn't take heed except at himself. This is for he who lives amid the vain things he won't be able to serve the power of the understanding, neither of the discernment[346]. This is because how would be able to discern what it is due, while having a discernment power to disturbed? Blessed is him who has left the dizziness of his drunkenness and who has seen through others how insatiable his drunkenness is. This is for then he will know his shame. As long somebody carries within himself the dizziness of the drunkenness of his sins, all the thing he commits seem decent to him[347]. This is for, when the nature goes out of its order, it will be equally drunk: either with wine, or with lusts[348]. This is because both of these sorts of drunkenness get the nature out of what is due and both of them move within the body - which they are carried by – the same fever. The sorts of the passions are diverse; but the cause dizziness is one; but the causes are different and not the same and they differ according to the way which they are received in.

Any delectation is followed by a trouble; and any trouble experienced for God it will be followed by a delectation. If all the realities from this world are submitted to corruption, the corruption is produced though the opposite realities, either here or in the future age, either at the time of the exit. This happens especially to the pleasure provided by debauchery, or to the unpleasant suffering opposed to this pleasure, a suffering that [345] You cannot feel your own bad smell. As long as you are united with the stinking world, you won't feel the world's bad smell. Only if you are clean, you will be able to feel the smell of the unclean ones.

[346] The sense of the discernment is blunt in the stained one, in him who is deprived of cleanness. The cleanness and the sensitiveness are tied together.

[347] As there is a drunkenness with God, one that doesn't see the world or it sees the world's ugliness, there is also a drunkenness with the world that doesn't see the world in its ugliness and that doesn't see the holiness of God.

[348] The drunkenness with lusts is a disorder of our nature and it is a becoming ugly of the true nature of the reality.

is caused by the striving towards getting sanctified[349]. And this is appointed by God that, either on the way itself, or at the end of their way, they to taste the punishment, in order this one to pass, for His rich mercy, either to reward or to a receiving of the rest of what was down-paid. This is for God gives the possibility of achieving the good until the last moment. But God impedes the evil by submitting him who is worthy of punishment, to the torments, as it was written. "He who is rebuked here for his shame he eats out of his Gehenna".

Guard yourself against that freedom that leads you to the evil slavery[350]. Guard yourself against that comforting that brings the war. Guard yourself against that knowledge that leads you to encounters with the temptations and, especially, against that desire from before the consummate repentance[351]. This is because, if all of us are sinners and nobody is above temptations, then not virtue will be superior to repentance. This is for one will never be able to consummate the work of the repentance[352]. That's why, the repentance is due always to them who want to be saved, either sinners or righteous. And there is no border to consummation, because even the consummation of the consummate it is non-consummate. That's why the repentance is not given a limit either by times, nor by deeds, before death[353]. Remember that each pleasure is followed by disgust, and then by bitterness.

[349] "In the future age there is no corruption. This is for in the state of resurrection, he says, neither will they marry nor will be they married, but they will be like the angels of God in heavens" (cf. Mt. 22: 30). He is calling here as corruption, maybe, the changing of the state that is received by everybody either in this life, or at the time of their exit, either in the future age. They who have been cohabiting with the pleasure for debauchery they will receive the changing from pleasure to punishment. And they who have been cohabiting with the unpleasant suffering caused by their striving for sanctification and contrary to the ugly pleasure, they will receive the change from trouble to resting.

[350] That freedom that you say about it that you manifest it by committing sins, it will make you slave to the sin.

[351] Guard yourself against the desire for the consummate resting, before the consummate repentance. And the repentance doesn't ever come to an end before our death.

[352] Any virtue can reach an even higher stage, though it is submitted to repentance because of the non-complete stage which it has reached at. In this sense, no degree of virtue is superior to repentance, namely no degree of virtue gets the man out from under his duty for repentance.

[353] Only when we reached our consummation, we would get rid of our duty for repentance. But as the consummation has no limit in this life, the repentance has not limit as well.

Guard yourself against that joy that is not accompanied by a cause of the change[354]. This is for, everything that has hidden in itself an oikonomia from above, it cannot reach and it cannot know the border, and this is the cause of its change[355]. Fear him who you see that he doesn't change on himself[356]. This is because he walks, he says, besides the way[357]. He who knows that he wisely stirs his ship through the world, he has mixed the change within all his things. And the exterior realities of the world are like a shadow to him[358].

To the resting of the limbs, it follows an exit and a disturbance of the thoughts; and to an over-measure work it follows the idleness; and to the idleness it follows the exit[359]. But each going out differs from another. This is because to the first going out, namely to that going out due to the resting, it will follow the war of the fornication; and the second going out, namely that out of idleness, it will be followed by the leaving form the place of appeasement and by the moving from place to place. And that work that perseveres, painfully, within the borders of the measure it won't search for honor. Its diminution will increase the pleasure, while the lack of measure will increase the going out. Endure, brother, the insanity of your nature that is victorious within you, for it prepares you to reach that wisdom that has the beginning of the eternal crown[360]. Do not get scared by the disturbance of that body you have out of Adam, that is prepared to reach that delectation that cannot be [354] A joy that hasn't within itself the discontent with the reached stage and that hasn't in itself the urge for ascending above the reached stage – namely by a change, it is a joy of the pride and it is a reconcilement with the limitation.

[355] We cannot reach the border of the consummation during this life. And this is the cause of a ceaseless striving for elevating on ourselves on a higher level, to constantly change on ourselves.

[356] These ones are callous either in evil or in pride.

[357] Outside the way leading to God, namely outside the way by and large, they remaining locked up in this world.

[358] He who walks the way towards God, he will reckon this world as a shadow.

[359] This getting out of the thoughts it is their exit from under our control, it is their departure towards other things which are damaging to us, and towards the deeds related to such thoughts.

[360] When you are tempted, do not despair, but endure the temptation. This is for enduring the trouble coming upon you by temptation it means the beginning of your crowning. But he who chooses to him such a life without pleasures, and who aims to the future happiness, he seems to be insane. But through that he reaches the wisdom that is itself the beginning of the crowning with the eternal happiness.

understood with the bodily thing in this life[361]. When it is present the heavenly image that is the Emperor of the peace, do not be disturbed by the changing opposite to the disturbance of the nature. This is for the unpleasant suffering is temporary within him who received it with pleasure[362]. This is because the pleasures are like the dogs which usually stay around the slaughterhouses and which will run away if they hear a word, but if they are encouraged, they will rush upon like those very big lions. Despise your lust while it still is small, in order you not to remember the strength of its heat. This is for the mastery upon the small things it will banish the danger away. This is because of being impossible you to master over the big things if you cannot defeat the unimportant things.

Remember the future life, brother, for it is not like this one that crawls and moves through juices; remember that live that is crushed death; remember that life that isn't the heat of the mating, that causes the childish nature tiredness through the tickling of the pleasure. Endure the tiredness of the battle, which you have placed in, in order you to be tested, in order you to take crown from God and you to be resting on yourself after passing away from this world. Remember that resting that has no end and remember the life submitted to attacks, remember the consummate stage, remember the steadfast state, and remember that slavery that forces one towards loving God, a slavery that sets its mastery over the nature[363]. May us be found worthy of this too, by the grace of Christ Who it is due the glory together with the without-beginning Father and with the All-Holy Ghost, now and always and forever! Amen.

[361] Adam's body will reach a state superior to that know by us now. But the body is disturbed at the beginning of a harsh road which the body is guided on. But this body's disturbance must not scare a monk.

[362] The whole this paragraph and the previous paragraph encourage him who is tempted, namely him who has to endure the change from the state of peace to that of the temptations and of the trials. When a trouble (a big suffering, or an unpleasant suffering) comes upon you, you must thing that if you receive that trouble with pleasure, and with patience, it will be only a temporary trouble.

[363] It is a slavery of the love, which the man still doesn't feel himself in like a slave, for the love is in the same time everything that is most conform to the man's free will. It is a slavery only in the senses that he who has been sweetened by it, he will no longer be able to get out of it, and he doesn't even want to. It sets its mastery upon nature, but in the same time it elevates the nature. It sets its mastery upon freedom, but in the same time the freedom feels at large.

Word LVI

God Allowed towards Our Benefit that Our Soul to Receive the Passions. And about the Works of the Ascesis

Sliding into some fall of the sin it is a sing of the nature's weakness. And God allowed the soul to receive passions towards the soul's benefit. This is for God hasn't thought to place the soul above passion before the second birth[364]. And receiving passion it is beneficial for the pricking of the conscience. But remaining within passions it is an indecent and shameless thing.

There are three ways which a soul can come closer to God on: either through the warmth of the faith, or by fear, or by being rebuked by God. Nobody can come close to God's love except on these three ways.

As the belly's covetousness gives birth to the disturbance of the thoughts, likewise out of much-speaking and out of the disorder of the meetings will be born the nescience and the getting out (the scattering) of the mind. The worry for the life's things it will disturb the soul and getting entangled with them it will confuse the mind and it will take the mind out of quietude.

That monk who has surrendered on himself to the heavenly ploughing, he owes to always be outside any worry of the life, in order him not to find within himself anything belonging to this time when he comes into himself. This is for, by stopping on himself from these ones, he will be able to cogitate in an unscattered manner, at the law of God, day and night. The bodily toils without the cleanness of the mind are like a barren womb and like some dry tits. This is because they cannot come closer to the knowledge of God[365]. Such toil tire off the body but they won't take care of uprooting the passions from within mind. That's why they reap nothing. Like him who sows among thorns he won't be able to reap anything, likewise him who sinks on himself into the keeping the evil in mind and in the love for earning, he won't be able to achieve anything, but he will only moan on his bed, because fob not being able to sleep and because of the gathering of good. This is for the Scripture confesses saying: "As a people who worked the righteousness and who didn't disregard any of Lord's commands, they ask Me for the righteousness and for the truth, and they want to come close to Me, to God, saying: why we have we been fasting and You haven't seen that, and we have humbled on ourselves and You didn't know that? Because on the days of your fasting you do your wills, namely you fulfill your cunning thoughts" (Isa. 58: 2-3). And you bring those together with your cogitations, as complete fruits to the idols, which you reckon among yourselves as gods, by sacrificing to them your body that is more precious than any incense that you must consecrate to Me through your good deeds and through your clean conscience[366].

[365] Only a mind that is clean of other thoughts can continuously think at God and it can know God in the endlessness of His power and love.

A good land is that that gladdens its worker by bringing forth a hundredfold harvest. Over the strength of that soul that sparks through the remembrance of God, and through the non-sleeping taking of vigil day and night, the Lord builds up to Himself a cloud that covers Him during day and it lightens Him up with fire during night[367]. This is for within darkness there will shine the light.

Like the could covers the light of the moon, likewise the steams of the stomach banish away from within soul the wisdom of God. And like the flame of the fire is at large in dry woods, likewise the body is at large when the belly is full. And like the matter added to matter increases the fire's flame, likewise the diversity of the foods increases the body's movement. Within the body that loves the pleasure it doesn't dwell the knowledge of God. And he who loves his body he won't achieve the grace from God. Like out of the birth labors, it is born the fetus that gladdens her who has given him birth, likewise out of the ascetic toil of the hunger it will be born within soul, as fruit, the knowledge of God's mysteries. And to them who are lazy and who love the pleasure it will be born the fruit of the shame. Like the father takes care of his children, likewise Christ takes care of that body that suffers heavily for [366] An affirmation of the value of the body, that is more precious than any incense, when the body is brought to God as a tool for good deeds which the body is sanctified by.

[367] One must remark the beauty of this image. The remembrances of God are like some sparks of the soul. The light from within mind is met by God's cloud of light.

Him and He is always close to his mouth. And the fruit of the wise work is priceless.

Stranger is him who has gone with his mind out of all the things of the life. Mourner is him who spends all the days of his life in hunger and in thirst, while hoping for the future goods. Monk is him who lives outside the world and who always asks God for achieving the future goods. The monks' richness is the comforting coming to him out of crying and that joy that comes out of his faith shining within the chambers of his mind. Merciful is him who doesn't discern with his cogitation one from another, but he has mercy on all of them.

Virginal is not him who has guarded his body undefiled by mating, but him who is ashamed of himself when alone. If you love the righteousness, you will banish away the defiled thoughts occurring into your cogitation during reading and in the ask prayer, and then you will be armed against the causes of the nature (which urge you to sin). This is because without this one you won't be able to see the righteousness into your soul. If you want to gain the mercifulness, you must firstly accustom on yourself to despise everything, in order your mind not to be attracted downwards and so your mind to get out of its borders[368]. The light of the mercy is shown him who accepts to be done injustice to him[369]. The consummation of the humbleness consists of joyfully accepting the liar blames. If you really are merciful, you won't be disturbed within you when your things are unjustly robbed from you, neither you will say about your loss to people from outside. You will rather do such that the loss will be swallowed by your mercy as the sourness of the sine is diluted by the multitude of the water. And you must show the abundance of your mercy in the goods which you reward with on those who did injustice to you. So did the blessed Elijah to his enemies who wanted to enslave him. This was for, when the prayer and he blinded them up with mist, he showed the power dwelling within him, and when they gave them food and drink and he let them go, he showed his mercifulness (4[370] Kings 6: 18, 23).

[368] An unmerciful mind is no longer within its borders; such a mind has got strayed from its nature. In the nature of the mind there is the compassion for others; the mind is connected through invisible wires to others. The sinking of the man within himself doesn't mean getting indifferent to others, but is means finding the sensitiveness for other in the won deep. In itself the mind finds the clean connections with others. Only the superficiality is egotistic and indifferent towards others. Only the non-knowing of the self means also non-knowing the others and being insensitive towards them.

[369] You must have mercy on him who does injustice to you, because he is the one losing by that, as one who has forgotten about himself and he cuts off his connections with others, connections which life was coming go himself before.

He who truly is humble in his thought, when injustice is done to him, he won't get upset, neither he will defend on himself against the deed which he was accused of. And he will receive the defamations as true and he won't take care of convincing the people that he has been unjustly defamed, but he asks for forgiveness. Some people willingly impropriated to themselves the name as fornicators, while not being so; others endured the name as fornicators while being far from such a thing, and they accepted with tears to be burdened with the consequences of a sin which they didn't do, and they cryingly asked for forgiveness for the lawlessness they committed to them who unjustly accused them of something they didn't do, and thus they were crowned with the whole cleanness and righteousness[371]. Others, in order they not to be glorified for their virtuous state hidden within them, they showed on themselves in the countenance of the wounded (by sins) ones, despite they had the godlike state and they were steadfast in their quietude, so that they had the holy angels as heralds of their valiant deeds, for their fullest consummation.

You reckon on yourself as having a humble cogitation, but others were blaming on themselves, while you do not accept being blamed even by others, and you reckon on yourself as humble in thought. If you are humble in thought, you will prove on yourself through those, in order you to see if you get troubled when injustice is done to you.

Our Savior calls "many dwelling places of the Fathers" (Jn. 14: 2) the measures of the cogitations of those who dwell in that country, namely the different powers of discerning the diversity of the spiritual gifts (charismas), which the mind rejoiced of. He didn't mean by many dwelling places spatial differences, but levels of the gifts. This is for, as each one enjoys the seen sun according to the cleanness of his seeing and receiving power, and like a candlestick lighting up a house it spreads out diverse rays, without its light being shared among [370] In KJB we usually have this book called as 2 Kings.

[371] They imitated Christ Who took our sins upon Himself and Who accepted to be crucified for our sins, by suffering, in a real manner, for our sins. Actually, Christ and those who imitated Him, they realized the deep communion existing between them and the others. And they suffered for others' sins as for their own, for they suffered for those people themselves.

many candlesticks, likewise in the future age and the righteous will dwell into a sole fatherland without being divided, but each of them will be illuminated by the unique understand Sun and understood by each one according to their measure, as a sole sky and place and chair and sight and image. And no one will see the measures of his companion, either that one will be superior or inferior to him, lets by seeing the richer gift of his companion and the smaller gift he has that to become him a cause for sadness and unhappiness. That cannot be there where it is no sadness, neither sigh, but each one is glad within himself according to the gift given to him, according to his measure, but one is what everybody will see within themselves and one will be their joy[372]. And except these two groups, there is no other in the middle. I mean there is a group at height and there is a group lower; an in their middle there is the multitude of the rewards[373].

And if this is the truth, as it actually is, what could be more insane and more stupid that saying as some people say: "it suffices to me to escape the Gehenna; I won't be worries of not entering the Kingdom. This is for escaping the Gehenna is the same with entering the Kingdom. As falling off the Kingdom means entering the Gehenna". Doubtlessly, the Scripture didn't tell us about three places. But what? "When the Son of Man will come into His glory, He will place the sheep on His right hand and the goat on His left hand" (Mt. 25: 31). The Scripture doesn't tell three groups, but two: one on the right hand and one on the felt hand. And it separated the border of their dwelling places by saying that some of them, namely the [372] There won't be envy either contempt, but only humbleness. He who sees more he won't reckon that another sees less. And he who sees less, he won't be told by another that that one sees more. Neither him who sees Christ less, nor him who receives deeper communications of Christ's love will realize that, for each of them will have in front of him the same face of Christ. As one can see even clearer in the followings, Saint Isaac rejected the idea of a middle state between "Kingdom" and "hell", but he admitted though a variety of levels in the "kingdom". Saint Isaac didn't agree them who told: "It suffices to me not to end into Gehenna, for by that I will enter the Kingdom". Saint Isaac wanted the man aspiring to enter a higher as possible a dwelling place into the Kingdom. But between the highest place and the lowest place there are a multitude of rewards. But, in the lowest place, in hell, there won't be any rewards.

[373] In the last two sentences, Saint Isaac crossed to another idea, one related to the first idea. If all of them from the heavenly dwelling places has a sole view, one can no longer reckon that except the heavens and the hell, or beside seeing of unseeing on Christ, there would be a middle state (neither seeing nor unseeing).

sinners, they will go to eternal damnation, while the righteous will shine as the sun in the eternal life (Mt. 25: 46). And again: "There will come from east and from west and they will rest into the Abraham's bosoms, into the Kingdom of Heavens. And the suns of the Kingdom will be cast in the outer darkness where there will be the crying and the gnashing of teeth" (Mt. 8: 11), and that is more fearsome that any fire.

So, have you understood out of these that the state opposed to the state from above is right the tormenting Gehenna? So, it is good to teach the people to receive the kindness from God and to urge the people to remain under God's taking-of-care and to remove the people from straying to the knowledge of the truth. This is the king of working of Christ and of the apostles; and it is a very high one.

And when the man feels that he has existed this leaving and the ceaseless partaking with God and that his conscience is getting weakened in seeing (in contemplation) and his quietude is getting disturbed and darkened, because his cogitation need guarding and it need the control of the senses, and when he feels that while wanting to heal others he is going to lose his own health and he gets out of his will's freedom, and he passes to the disturbance of his mind, he must remember the apostolic word that says that the hard food is appropriate to the more consummate ones (Hebr. 5: 14), and he must turn back to his previous things, so that not to hear being told to him:" Doctor, heal on yourself" (Lk. 4: 23).

Let him judge on himself, therefore, and let him guard his good habit, and instead of helping others by uttering words, let him serve through his good living; and instead of teaching by the sound of his mouth, let his teach by his deeds. And only when he sees his soul healthy, let him try to help and to be useful to others through his health. This is for, when he is far from people, he will better be able to help them through his good work, in order they to progress in the zeal of the good deeds., more than he could help them by words, as long as himself is ill and he need the medicine more than they do. "Because if bling guides blind, both of them will fall into pit" (Mt. 15: 14). The hard food belongs to the healthy ones, who have they senses accustomed to it so that they can receive any food, namely the temptations of all their senses, without hurting their heart through meetings, due to their accustoming into consummation[374].

When the devil wants to defile the mind of ones like these ones by fornication thought, the devil first tests their patience with thoughts of vain-glory. This is because the attack of this thought doesn't seem to them as being a passion. The enemy uses to do so to them who guard their mind and who he cannot quickly sow shameless thoughts. And after the enemy gets him out of his fortification and that one starts talking to the first thought, ad to get far from his fortification, the enemy bring in his way the matter of the fornication and the enemy directs his mind towards the deeds of the debauchery. And the enemy first disturbs his mind with the sudden bait of such a thing, due to the righteousness from before in the thoughts, which the enemy makes it encounter such things, which sight the guiding mind was previously detached from. By that, even if the enemy doesn't totally defile the mind, he still gets the mind out of the previous worthiness. And if the mind turns back to the previous thoughts and it rejects the first bait of the thoughts, which is the cause of the bringing of the second thoughts, the passion could be easily stopped by the help from God.

But it is better one to get rid of passions by remembering the virtues, than to resist the baits. This is because of the passions when they get out of their den and they move towards waging war, they imprint within mind images and hallucinations. This is because this war gains much power upon the mind, by stirring up and by disturbing the thoughts. And according to the tule we mentioned before, after these ones have been banished away, there won't show up within mind no traces of passions.

The bodily toil and the cogitation at the things written in the Holy Scriptures they guard the cleanness. And the toil strengthened the hope and the fear. But the hope and the fear are planted into the cogitation by the getting far from people and by the ceaseless prayer. On the other hand, until the man doesn't receive the Comforter, the man still needs to follow the Holy Scriptures in order to be imprinted in his cogitation the memory of the goods, and through the ceaseless reading to be renewed within him the movement towards good and his soul to be guarded against the subtlety of the sin. Because of not achieving yet the power of the Ghost which gets him far from the deceit that steals his useful memories and it bring him closer, by scattering, to the indifference of his mind. But when the power of the Ghost dwells within the power of the soul that works within mind, then, instead of the Scriptures' law will start rooting within his heart the commandments of the Ghost. And then the heart learns hiddenly from the Ghost and it doesn't need the help from the things submitted to the senses. This is for, as long as the heart learns from the things submitted to the senses, the teaching will be followed by deceit and forgetfulness. But when the teaching comes from the Ghost its memory will remain unharmed[375].

[374] Saint Isaac the Syrian admitted to the monks a work of teaching the others, but after they have strengthened on themselves into a good and steadfast living. Only then they can receive the hard food of the meetings with others, or the temptations through senses, without endangering on themselves, for they have strengthened on themselves in souly health, or they have reached to be consummate.

There are good thoughts and good wills; and there are evil thoughts and a cunning heart. The thoughts are a movement crossing through the mind, as a wind starting on the sea and rising the waves. The heart and the mind are the basis and the foundation. And the reward for the good and for the evil it will be done according to the foundation and not according to the movement of the thoughts[376]. The soul won't get appeased form the movement of the changing thoughts. But if you reward each one of theses that has not its foundation low, within heart, you will be ready to change, for tens of thousands of times a day, the good ones and the opposite ones.

He who has come out recently, through repentance, from the mixing with the passions, and who strives during the [375] Saint Isaac sees three levels in the ascension of the soul towards God. The bodily toil, which strengthens the hope and the fear; the reading of the Godlike Scriptures with the deepening of their meanings, in order the man to know his subtle movements urging him to sin; and the work of the Holy Ghost within the mind, a work that roots there the impulses towards good. When reached here, the man no longer looks at the exterior realities in order him to learn from them and through them. On the second level, the temptations still rob from within the soul the useful memories, as for instance the thought of death, the thought of God's judgment, and the thought of the future life. Saint Isaac discerns between the teaching received from outside, even that form the words of the Scripture, and the teaching received form the Ghost directly within the heart. This last case takes place when the heart has become totally soft and sensitive to the work of the Ghost. But one must firstly cross through the knowledge from the Scripture.

[376] Maybe the meaning is this: vainly will have someone good thoughts and movements within his soul if his foundation state is evil. The reward will be according to the steadfast foundation and not according to the passing movements.

prayer to elevate on himself over the earthly things, he is like a wingless bird that still crawls on the ground because of not being able to fly. So, he owed to gather his thoughts by reading, by working and with fear and by taking care of all the diversity of the virtues. This is because without these ones he won't be able to know anything. But these too, they will keep the mind undefiled only for a short while. Later on, there will come the memories disturbing and defiling the heart. This is for he hasn't felt yet the freedom of the quietude which somebody gathers his mind in, after a short while, by forgetting the things. He hasn't felt that yet because of still having him the wings of his body, namely the virtues, which are committed in a seen manner. But he hasn't seen yet the wings of the sight (contemplation), neither has him be found worthy of feeling those[377]. And these are the mind's wings which one gets closer to the heavenly realities with, and he detached on himself from the earthly realities[378].

As long as somebody serves the Lord through the things submitted to the senses, the images of these things imprint his thoughts and he cogitates at the godlike realities with the images of the bodily realities. But when he receives the feeling of the things from within, then, on the measure of his feeling, [377] It is to be remarked the connection between these two feelings: that of the quietude and that of the freedom. Only the quietude which somebody has reached at, it shows that he reached to see that he has gained the freedom of his cogitation from things. Saint Isaac is repeating here, in another form, the idea of the three steps of the ascension in the climbing of him who has liberated on himself of scattering. On the first level the man is like a bird that haven't yet wings; then he gains his wings. This is the first step, when the man recently exited his sins and he still hasn't except the repentance. On the second level he accustoms on himself to virtues and now he has bodily wings, for his body no longer crawls into sins. Finally, he has achieved the wings of his mind, or of the contemplation, for his mind too has been liberated from the earthly thoughts, by flying up towards God. On this level the man has gained the freedom of the quietude. This is the third step. This presentation of the climbing corresponds to the previous presentation. The third step from here corresponds to the mind which the Holy Ghost dwell sin, as shown in the previous description.

[378] While one still takes care of the virtues with the body, he won't have the freedom of the complete quietude which helps one to fly upwards from the earthly realities. That one still preoccupies on himself with committing some deeds, namely he still looks at some duties towards persons and things. These too are values for he who preoccupies on himself with them he has exited the prison of his egotism. But only the virtues of the contemplation are the wings helping somebody to totally fly upwards from the earthly realities towards the heavenly realities.

When you soul gets closer to exiting the darkness, you will have this sign: your heart burns and it if hot like the fire, day and night. Then you will reckon the world as garbage and ashes and you will no longer desire either food, because of the sweetness of the new and fiery thoughts always moving within your heart. And you will be suddenly given a spring of tears that flows as a creek, effortlessly, and mixed with your deeds, namely into your reading and prayer, into your cogitation and eating and drinking; and within all your things there are mixed your tears. And when you see these within your soul, make on yourself full of daring, for you have crosses the sea[380]. But you must even after that add and keep strong yours guarding to your things, in order the grace to get multiplied within you day by day[381].

But until you haven't encounter this, you still haven't walked your way, in order you to reach the mountain of God[382]. And if, after you have found and you have received the world of the tears, they stop and your warmth has become cold, without any change in other regards, namely without the bodily weakening, woe to you for what you have lost! This is because you have reached to the self-appreciation, or to carelessness, or to drowsiness. And what follows to the tears after you have received them and what will meet you after the tears, we are going to write in another place, in the heads about Providence, [379] Thinking at God by using images is inferior to the unmediated feeling of God above these images. This is no longer a theoretical thinking, but it is emotional feeling of touching of God. Thinking at God by using images is characteristic to the second level, namely to the level of the virtues, of the reading of the Scriptures, and of the contemplation of the godlike rationalities through things.

[380] Here are being given some descriptions of the third level. One of its characteristics are the tears. He who has reached here he has crossed the sea of the temptations, of the troubles, of the efforts for virtues, but he still hasn't exited the darkness.

[381] So, you must not stop on yourself either in this resting, but you must keep deepening on yourself evermore in it, or in the living of the effluvia of the grace, or of the full of meaning powers coming to you from God. This is because neither now is God felt except through deeds of reading, of meditation, of committing the good, though these deeds lose their importance in themselves, they must be increased in order the grace to increase too. Reached here, the man no longer reckons the food as important, but when eating he feels the presence of God and he sheds tears. All the things are full with God.

[382] Now, God Whom you have reached at, He is like a mountain elevated above the whole tiring road of the ascetic toils.

as we have been lightened by the fathers and by Scriptures, who entrusted us such a secret.

If you do not have deeds, you won't talk about virtues. This is for more honored are before the Lord the troubles for Him, than any prayer of sacrifice[383]. And the smell of the sweat of the troubles is above any aromatic. Therefore, you will reckon any virtue gained without the toil of the body as an inanimate garbage. The gifts of the righteous are the tears of their eyes. And their accepted sacrifice are their sighs during their vigils. The righteous will shout out towards the Lord under the burden of their suffering body and when in pain their asks addressed to God will cease, in the shouting out of their voice the holy groups will come to their help, in order to encourage them and to comfort them with the hope. This is for the holy angels become partakers to the suffering and to the troubles of the saints, by getting closer to them[384].

The good work and the humble cogitation make the man a god on earth[385]. And his faith and his mercifulness make the man quickly advance towards cleanness. It is impossible one to find within a soul, concomitantly, the warmth and the crushing of the heart[386], similarly to them who are drunk and unable to control their thoughts. This is for, when the soul is given this warmth, the crushing of the crying goes away from him. The wine has been bestowed towards gladness, and the warmth towards the joy of the soul. The wine warms up the body, and the word of God warms up the cogitation. They who burn in fever are kidnapped by the thought of the hope and they prepare their cogitation for the future age. This is for, like they who are dunk with wine hallucinate changing images, likewise [383] Enduring the troubles for God it is in itself the best prayer and sacrifice. And without enduring troubles the virtues won't be achieved, and the spiritual strength won't be achieved either.

[384] This is remarkable thought. The Holy angles become partakers to our sufferings for Christ, like Christ make on Himself partaker to our sufferings. This is for the angels too are imparted with the crucified Christ. There is a universal seen and unseen solidarity.

[385] In the consummate humbleness it is shown the fact that the man has been deified. Previously, Saint Isaac said that the humbleness is the coat of God (Word XX). He who shows how important he is, he surely has somewhere a weakness which he wants to cover it up with his pride. One could say that the pride is the coat of such a man's weakness. On the contrary, the humbleness is the coat of the power of God. The true greatness is covered up in humbleness.

[386] The warmth is the momentum towards the love for God. The crushing of the heart is the burdening conscience of the sin.

they who are drunk and warmed up by hope they know no trouble neither something worldly. These things and other similar things happen them who are simple in heart and warmed up by hope, after they have been working patiently and after they have been cleaned; these things have been prepared to them who walk the path of the virtues. But they occur also at the beginning of the road by the faith of the soul. This is for the lord does everything He wills[387].

Blessed are they who have girded their waists with simplicity and without much spying for the sea of troubles, due to their love for God, and they haven't run away. These ones will be quickly delivered at the shore of the Kingdom and they will rest on themselves in the tent of them who live in ascesis, and they are souly guided through their difficulties and they will rejoice into the gladness of their hope. They who run with hope on the meandrous way, they do not turn themselves back and they do not tarry into inquiring that path. And after they will have crossed the sea, by seeing the meanders they have been crossing through, they give than to God for He has delivered them from dangers and precipices and from the perils of the road, which they haven't been aware of. And among them who contrives many thoughts and who wanted to be very wise and who surrendered on themselves to some crafted livings and who allowed to be themselves dominated by fearful thoughts and who wanted to meet and to see in advance the damaging causes, most of them remain always at the doors of their houses[388].

When sent on the road, the idle says: "There is a lion on my way and at the crossroads there is a thief" (Prov. 22: 13). He is like those who were saying: "We have seen some sons of giants and we were in front of them like some locusts" (Num. 13: 33). These ones are those who, at the time of the harvesting, they still on the way to the field; they are those who always [387] There are some people who, because of taking exaggerated caution, they never start walking the decided road of the salvation, because of constantly wanting to take other and other measures against any risk. These ones want to act too much as wisemen, and the death will come to them before they have even started walking the difficult road of the living according to God.

[388] When the work about the future realities is received with faith, it will strengthen the hope in this and it will make the cogitation drunk, by the joy that he will receive those. But it happens sometimes that this encouragement is provided by the godlike word at the beginning of the spiritual road, by being received with a steadfast faith. This is for our Lord can do this too, if He wills.

want to be wise[389]. That's why they never want to set a beginning. And he who is simple, he starts swimming and he crosses the sea in the first warmth of his soul, while not worrying at all about his body, neither questioning on himself if he will benefit something out of his work or not. Take heed not to be to you your much wisdom a sliding of your soul and a trap before you. But, by trusting God, you must mainly set a beginning to the road spread with blood[390], in order you not to be always deprived and empty of God. "This is because he who fears or who waits for favorable winds, he won't sow" (Eccl. 11: 4). Better is the death for God than the life with shame and into idleness. When you want to set a beginning to the work of God, you must write your will in the first place, as one who will no longer live in this life, and like one who is preparing on himself to die and who no longer has any hope in the present life, but who has reached the end of the time granted to him. And you must truly cogitate that you must no longer be impeded by the hope for the life from here, from fighting and being victorious. This is because the hope for life it weakens the cogitation. That's why, do not try to be too wise, but you must give room to your faith into your thought and you must remember the many things from behind you and the untold centuries from after your death and judgment and so you won't ever be engulfed by drowsiness, according to the wiseman who says: "A thousand of years of the present age are like one day in the age of the righteous" (Ps. 89: 4[391]).

You must manly start every good thing and do not get closer to it hesitatingly, and do not doubt in you hear about your hope in God, in order not to be you toil useless and the work of your ploughing not to be difficult to you. But you must believe in you heart that our Lord is merciful, and like a good payer He bestows the grace them who are searching for Him, and He does that not according to our work but according to [389] It is not too good for the man to think too much at all the eventual hardships he will meet on the way of his living according to God (of the monasticism), before starting to walk on it. This is because many of those who do that, they won't even start walking on it but they will only remain looking at it from the door of their house.

[390] The struggle requires us ascetic toil to the sweat accompanied by blood. There is in this too a following of Christ.

[391] In KJB we have: Ps. 90: 4: "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."; in ROB we have: Ps. 89: 4: "For a thousand years before your eyes are like yesterday that passed and like the watch of the night". (E. l. t.'s n.)

the zeal and to the faith of our souls. This is for He says: “Be it to you according to your faith” (Mt. 8: 13).

And the works of them who live according to God are these ones: One hits on himself in the head during the entire day and instead of the hours of the religious service he spends his time doing that. Another, by persevering and remaining into kneelings, he does an equal number of prayers. Another replaced the religious services for the multitude of his tears and he is content with that. Another strives to understand the meanings and by that he fulfills the canon appointed to him. Another torments his soul with the hunger, to such an extent that he is unable to attend the religious services. Another, by persevering into fiery thinking at the content of the psalms, he thus fulfills his ceaseless service. Another spends his time in readings and his heart get hot by that. Another is enslaved by understanding the godlike meanings of the godlike Scriptures. Another, by being kidnapped by the wonders of the verses, he is stopped from his usual cogitation and he is taken in mastery by silence. But another, by tasting all of these and by getting satiated, he turned back to his previous things and he has remained doing nothing. Another tasted only a little from these, and, because of getting haughty, he was deceived. Another was impeded by his grave illness and by his helplessness from keeping his rule. Another is dominated by some habit or by his love for mastery, or by his vain-glory, or by his greediness for pilling up material things. Another stumbled and fell, but he got up again and he didn’t run until he took the pearl of great price.

Therefore, you must always set a new beginning to the work of God, with joy and with zeal. And if you are clean of passions and of the hesitation of your heart, God Himself will take you to the top and He will help you and He will make you wise according to His will and you will be granted you consummation in a wonderful way. His be the glory and the mastery, now and forever and ever! Amen.

About the Change Taking Place within Soul at Any Moment, Occurring there either Light or Darkness, or Exiting into the Realities from the Right Hand, or into those from the Left Hand

Let's take a look, my beloved ones, within our soul at the time of our prayer, in order to see if we have sight in the verses which we are cogitating at, and of the prayer. This is for that sight comes out of the consummate quietude[392]. And during the time when we are in darkness, let's not get disturbed, especially if the cause of that doesn't belong to us. Then you will attribute that darkness to God's taking-of-care, due to reasons know n only by God. This is because, during some periods of time, our soul is like chocked and like sinking into waves. Wither somebody read the Scripture, or he liturgizes (serves), either he gets closer to any other thing, darkness upon darkness comes upon him. In such cases the man leaves his work and often he will no longer want to come back to it. And he won't think, by any means, that there could happen to him certain change, neither that he will be eve able to achieve the peace. At that time, he is filled up with despair and with fear; and his hope in God and the comfort from his faith are totally removed from within his soul. And he is wholly filled up with doubt and fear.

But they who have been tempted by the wave of that time they know by experience the change that will take place at the end of that temptation. This is for God doesn't allow the soul to be in those for a whole day, because if had been otherwise the Christians' hope would have been lost. But God brings a quick end to that. And if the disturbance of this darkness persists for a longer time, you still must wait for the change of your life, a change quickly coming right from the middle of your life. I am urging you, brother, and I am advising you that, if you do not have enough power to control on yourself and to fall on your face in prayer, then you will wrap your head with your cloak and get to sleep until the time of that darkness will pass away from you; but only do not leave your dwelling place.

[392] The 'sight" is conditioned by quietude, and vice versa. When the soul remains into quietude, the soul will be kidnapped by sight and, vice versa, he who is kidnapped by sight he will enter the quietude and he will remain in there.

To this temptation are submitted especially they who want to spend their life in a living according to the mind and who search for the comforting of their faith on this way[393]. That's why, this period of trial causes them pain and tiredness especially to these ones by the doubt it brought within their soul. And that is followed by an awful blasphemy. On this way, there occurs within someone the doubt in resurrection and in others, which we must not even mention. I experienced all these things for many times, and I have described this fight for comforting the many.

They who spend their life in bodily deeds are totally outside such trials, though. But to them comes the idleness which is obvious to everybody and it is divided in its sorts by the things mentioned before and by things similar to those. Its healing and the medicine for healing it spring out of quietude. This is the comforting of the one who is tempted by idleness. But one never receive the light of the comforting from the meetings and he won't be cured by the discussion with the people, but such things only rest him for a short while but then the idleness will rise up against him even more strongly[394]. He absolutely needs an illuminated man, who is experienced in such things, in order him to be lightened too and him to be always strengthened by faith; but he doesn't need that always.

Blessed is him who endures these while he is outside the gate. This is for, after that, he will reach the dwelling places and a big power[395], as the fathers say. But this fight will pass in an hour or two. Neither the grace will consummately come at once to dwell within the soul, but only little by little. And the grace [393] They who live doing deeds they won't reach so easily to moments of despair. This is for these ones feel, up to a point, also a comforting and even a forgetfulness about temptations and trials. More exposed to this temptation are them who focus themselves on the work of the mind.

[394] The discussions with the people bring a little refreshing, being like some sort of distraction, but they do not heal the soul in depth by strongly attaching the thought to God; after a little while, there will come again the boredom of the idleness.

[395] Blessed is him who endures the troubles and who rejects the temptations and who fight for virtue outside the gate of the place where the resting of God is. This is because, without this patience and these toils, he won't be allowed to enter that gate, where he will be rested of them, while sunk into the light and love from Christ. This resting is on occasions entered by somebody even during the present life, the one who lives in ascesis. But one will definitively enter that only in the future life.

comes to us out of our fight. At one time there is the temptation, at another time there is the comforting. And the man spends his life into these until his death. Let's not except here to totally get rid of struggle, neither to be us consummately comforted. This is for God deigned thus to organize our life from here and they who walk the way are into this. His to be the glory forever and ever! Amen.

About the Harm Caused by the Zeal of His Who Reckons that He Works for God. And about that help Coming out of Gentleness and of Other Kinds

The zealous man never reaches the peace of his mind. And he who is deprived of peace he is deprived also of joy. This is for, if the peace is called as the consummate health of the mind, he who has ill zeal suffers of a grave illness[396]. Oh, you man, who reckon to uses your zeal against the foreign illnesses, by that you banish away the health of your soul. You better love the pain for the health of your soul. And if you want to heal the sick ones, you know that the patients need rather comforting than rebuking. And again, if you do not help others, you will sink on yourself painfully in a grave illness. The zeal is not born within people out of the ways of the wisdom, but out of the illnesses of the soul which are the narrowness of the cogitation and the much nescience[397].

The beginning of the wisdom from God is the kindness and the gentleness. These ones are born in a great soul and they bear the people's helplessness. "You the strong, bear the helplessness of the weak" (Rom. 15: 1); and: "Correct him who mistook with the ghost of the gentleness" (Gal. 6: 1).

[396] It is about some restless, agitated zeal, a fanaticism easily judging on others according to their external deviations from the right living. Until these days the Greeks call the zealous as fanatics.

[397] The fanaticism, the ill zeal, it is not born out of wisdom, but it is born out of the narrowness of the cogitation and out of much ignorance. The ill zeal is reckoned, as its causes too, an illness of the sou and a soul's lack of peace.

The Apostle mentions the peace and the patience among the fruits of the Holy Ghost. That heart that is full of sadness because of the weakness and because of the incapacity of fulfilling the seen bodily deeds, it takes the place for all the bodily deeds. The deeds of the body without the sadness of the mind are, though, a soulless body. He who is sad in his heart, but he has his senses uncontrolled, he is like a sick man who suffers bodily but he eats any damaging food nevertheless. He who is sad in his heart, but he is loosen at his senses, he is like a man having only one sun and stabbing him little by little with his own hands[398]. The mind's sadness is a precious gift in front of God. And he who wears the sadness as it is due, he is like a man wearing the holiness in his bones. That man who has a loosen mouth against people, for good and for bad things, he is not worthy of the gift of sadness. The repentance accompanied by meetings is like a vessel with holes. The generosity intertwined with offenses it is like a knife dipped in honey.

The righteousness and the discussion with some woman, it is like a lioness in a house together with a sheep. The deeds accompanied by mercilessness are before God as a man who tabs a son in front of his father. He who is sick in his soul but he corrects his companions, it is like a blind man guiding others.

The mercy and the right-judgment being together in a soul are like a blind man worshipping God and the idols in the same house. The mercy is opposite to the right-judgment. The right-judgment means applying the right-measure. This is for the right-judgment gives to each one according to his worthiness and it doesn't lean the scales, or it doesn't look at the face while rewarding. And the mercy is the pain moved by grace, that leans with together-suffering and that doesn't punish him who is worthy of punishment, and that overwhelms him who is worthy of good with abundant generosity. If the mercy is characteristic to justice, and the right-reckoning is characteristic to evilness, as the grass and the fire cannot inhabit the same place, likewise either the right-reckoning and the mercy cannot inhabit a soul together[399]. As a sand grain is [398] The sadness is his only quality but he kills that too, by the looseness of his senses.

[399] The right-reckoning appears as characteristic to the evilness when being merciless. Only the mercy is characteristic to the true justice. Of course, though, that if taken in itself the right-reckoning is better than the inequity. There is a gradation among virtues. The lowest virtue appears to be evil relatedly to the highest virtue. In this phrase the "justice" which the

The mistakes of all people are like a handful of sand fallen into the sea[400], in comparison to the Providence and to the mercy of God; and like a spring that flows abundantly won't be clogged by a handful of sand, likewise the mercy of our Make cannot be overwhelmed by the evilness of His creatures. He who keeps the evil in his mind and prays, he is like one who sows into the sea and then he expects to harvest[401]. As the flame of the fire cannot be stopped from going upwards, likewise the prayer of the merciful ones cannot be stopped from ascending to heavens. As the water flows when being on a slope, likewise the power of the anger spreads when finds room in our cogitation.

He who has achieved the humbleness within his heart, he has become death to the world. And he who has made on himself as dead to the world, he has become dead to his passions. And he who has made on himself as dead with his heart towards his things, he has made the devil himself as dead regarding him. He who has found the envy, he has found together with it the devil.

There is a humbleness due to the fear of God and there is a humbleness from God. One humbles on himself out of the fear of God and another humbles on himself out of joy. The humbleness out of the fear of God is followed by the kindness accompanied by well-ordered feelings, and by a heart that is always crushed. And the humbleness out of joy is followed by mercy belongs to it is take in the sense of the totality of the virtues or of the consummation, according to its meaning from the Holy Scripture. To be seen also the word of our Savior: "If your righteousness won't exceed that one of the scribes and of the Pharisees, you won't enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Mt. 5: 20). So, the "righteousness" in this sense, which the mercy belongs to, and the righteousness as exactly measuring of the reward according to the merit, they cannot coinhabit the same house. This is because the legal justice doesn't' reconcile with the "righteousness" as consummation of the man into God. the "righteous" Josephus is not righteous in the Pharisee's meaning, because those were judging with mercilessness any transgression of the law.

[400] Our mistakes are drowned into the ocean of the mercy of God and they do not mean anything in that ocean.

[401] The evilness is, at its turn, like a sea, or like a barren land, which the seed of the prayer cannot take roots in.

much simplicity and by a growing heart that no longer can be restrained[402].

The love doesn't know the shame and therefore the love doesn't know to give a well-ordered countenance to its limbs[403]. It is natural to the love not to feel ashamed and not to hide up its measure. Blessed is him who has found you as shore to all joy. God loves the assembly of the humble ones as the gathering of the Seraphs, and more honored is at God a righteous body than a clean sacrifice. This is for both of them, namely both the humbleness and the righteousness, thy prepare to the soul a pledge of the Trinity.

Visit your friends decently. If you do it so, both you and your friends will benefit of your visits. This is because often by invoking the love the soul rejects the care for himself[404]. Guard yourself against meetings, because they are not beneficial all the time. In gathering, you must cherish your silence. This is for the inside war is easier than the external war[405]. Do not believer, brother, that the thoughts can be stopped inside, if the body is not kept in a good rule. You must fear your habit more that you fear your enemies[406]. He who nourished within himself the habit he is like that man who fuels up the fire. This is for the measure of the power of both of them consists of the matter which they are fed with. If the habit asks once to get into deed but its ask is not accomplished, on the second time you will see your habit weakened. And if you do the will of your habit once, on the second time you will see it more strengthened against you[407].

[402] A heart that grows into the love for God and for all the people and that can no longer be restrained or controlled in this urge for love.

[403] He who avoids manifesting his good sentiments towards the others he doesn't have yet enough love.

[404] This doesn't contradict what it has been say previously, that the love doesn't feel shame of manifesting itself. It is here about that care of himself of him who wants to encounter the people.

[405] It is easier to fight internally your impulse to speak, that to fight the war that you could initiate externally, between you and others, by saying something that they do not like.

[406] It is about the evil habits.

[407] The evil habit gets strengthened "against" the man, against man's freedom. The man gets callous because of it and he becomes rigid. The more the power of his habit increases, the more the man's power will be diminished – the man's power is manifested in the fluidity of his freedom. The man gradually is transformed from being a person to becoming something automatic; from a free being the man becomes a slave wearing chains. So the man's ghost will lock up within himself and so the man's spirit will exit the communication with the Holy Ghost.

Relatedly to any of your deeds, you must persevere to keep in your mind this memory. This is for it is better the help from the guarding than the help out of deeds. Do not make friends with him who like laughing and to make fun of people, because he will lead you to the habituation of the idleness. Do not get glad with him who is unrestraint in his way of living. But you must guard yourself against hating him. And if he wants to get up, you will give him a hand and you will take care of his rising until his death. But if yourself are sick, you won't try to heal another[408]. This is for he says: "Give him the end of your stick" and the others[409]. Before him who is proud and sick with envy, you take care of what you speak. This is for, while you are speaking, that one interprets in his language your words, as he wishes, and out of your good sayings he will take matter for offending others. And your words will be changed into his cogitation according to the sort of his illness. When somebody starts gossiping you brother in your presence, you will allow your sadness to be seen on your face. And by doing so, you will guard on yourself and you will be guarded inf front of God and in front of that one.

If you give something him who need that, you will put on, before committing that deed, the gladness of your face. And you will comfort him with good words in his trouble. This is for by doing you so, your gladness will become in his thought more than your gift for the need of his body. On that day which you open your mind and you speak against somebody, you will reckon on yourself as dead in front of God[410] and you will reckon all your deeds as in vain, even though it could seem to you that your thought has rightly urged you to speak and you have spoken for teaching. This is because what need somebody to tear down his house for, in order to repair somebody else's house?[411]

[408] If you are weak and you want to help another, you will risk to fall yourself into his passions. That's why, if that is the case, you won't try to help him in order you to avoid getting sick with the same passions as that one suffers of too; or, by suffering of the same illness, you will get even more ill.

[410] When you speak against your brother, you will be death in front of God. This is because, by breaking up the communion of love with another, you have made on yourself incapable of the communion with God and you have locked up on yourself, for the rest of your life against that spring coming to you through that communion, a spring that is in the communion itself.

[411] Actually, he won't repair somebody else's house either. This is for the houses (the persons) are in communication. When one house collapses, another one is weakened or it collapses too.

On that you which you are sad for somebody, who is in a certain way helpless in the good things or against the evil things, either bodily, or in his thought, you reckon on yourself as martyr and you must feel yourself as suffering for Christ and as found worthy of confession. This is for you owe to remember that Christ died for the sinners, and not for the righteous. Thins at how great that thing is. It is a great thing to get sad for the evil people and heling the sinners is greater than helping the righteous. The Apostle speaks about this like about a wonderful thing (Rom. 10: 7). If you can correct on yourself, within yourself, within your soul, you won't take acer of pursuing another righteousness[412]. Let the righteousness of your body and the cleanness of your conscience to precede all your deeds. This is because without these two anything is vain in front of God. Know that any deed which you do recklessly and without carefully assessing it, it will be in vain, regardless what decent it would seem like. This is for God reckons as righteousness the right-reckoning, and not the work without the right-reckoning[413].

It is unwise to place a luminous candlestick in plain sunshine[414]. The prayer of him who keeps the evil in mind it is like a seed thrown on stone. The merciless ascetic is like a barren tree. The rebuking because of envy it is a poisonous arrow. The praise from the cunning one is a hidden trap. The insane adviser is like a blind guard. Spending your time with the unwise is a breaking of the heart. The discussion with the wisemen is like a sweet spring. The wise adviser is a wall of the hope. The insane and unskillful friend it is like a treasury full of loses. It is better seeing someone living with the crying ones that to see a wiseman following to an insane one. Better is the living together with the wild beasts that to live together with them who have bad behaviors. Better is the living together with a vulture than that with a covetous and insatiable man. You better make friends with a killer than with a quarreling one. You better talk to a pig than to a covetous man. This is for better is the pigs' tray than the mouth of the greedy for food. You better sit together with the despised ones that with the haughty ones. Allow to be you persecuted and do not persecute. Allow to be you crucified and do not crucify. Allow injustice to be dome to you and do not do injustices. Allow to be you gossiped and do not gossip. Be gentle and not zealous in evil.

[413] Namely any deed must be done with a care of our accountability in front of God. This continuously ties the man to God.

[414] A meaning to this could be: not only thing that is good in itself it is also appropriate in any circumstances. Or, another meaning: the justice is surpassed by mercy and by love. Or, another meaning: do not teach them who are more taught than you are. And, especially, do not reckon that the explanations given by you to the godlike word from Scriptures or to the Church's dogmas or to the teachings of some holy men, those will bring a superior light to that already contained by the things you are trying to interpret. But you must present your explanations with humbleness and you must reckon them as unsure. This is what him who presents these explanations strives to feel himself too.

The self-justification (self-defense) doesn't belong to the Christians' way of living and it is not mentioned by the teaching of Christ. Gladden yourself with them who gladden themselves and cry with them who cry. This is for this is the sign of the cleanness[415]. Be ill together with the ill ones. Cry together with the sinners. Rejoice together with them who repent themselves. Be friends with all people but be alone in your thought[416]. Be partaker to the sufferings of everybody but with your body be far from all of those[417]. Do not rebuke anyone and do not condemn even the very evil ones because of their way of living. Stretch your coat over him who has mistaken and cover him up.

[415] The cleanness isn't a state of one isolated into his indifference, but it is a positive relation with others; it is a participation through kindness to their joys and pains, it is a self-framing within their lives. Being clean means existing for others, while being unclean means existing only for yourself, against others, or it means being indifferent to others.

[416] Be alone into your thought, in order you to see if you truly are friends with everybody, in order you to see if you have your roots deepened into God together with all the people. Take heed, in this way, to your responsibility, and check out your state whether it is good or bad. Be alone into your thought in order your thought not to deviate you in your judgment about yourself, the opinions expressed by others, who are superficial in their judgment. This is for, there, into that deep loneliness, you truly meet everybody. This is because, if you remain at the surface of the common noise, you won't be together with the others in a real manner and you won't live your responsibility towards them, but you will only be together with them in a superficial and passing manner and in a living torn apart by quarrels, by misunderstandings, and by egos; you keep yourself together with them like the wound remain together with a decomposing body.

[417] Suffer for their passions as those passions would be yours. But do not let those passions be within you. Suffer for the envy of the envious but do not be yourself envious. You mut live in some kind of holy imagination; or, because it is not a mere imagination, you can suffer within yourself that state that causes within you such an imagination. We have Christ as our supreme example for this for He suffered more than anyone for their sins and He took their sins upon Himself but without becoming Himself a sinner. And example could be a mother suffering for the passions of her son even more than he does it, for the cleanness of her thought and her sharp responsibility for him give her a greater sensitiveness than his. The participative love surpasses the pains of him who lives in passions – the sufferings of the passionate are interrupted by the sweetness of his passions united with a certain confusion and bluntness.

And if you cannot claim his mistakes as being yours, and if you cannot receive the rebuking and the shame in his place, at least you suffer him and do not shame him up. Know, brother, that we must stay within our monastic cell in order not to know the evil deeds of the people, and so we will be able to see all the people as saints and kind into the cleanness of our cogitation. And if we rebuke and quarrel and judge and reproach and we try to avenge ourselves and to defame, what it is different through our dwelling place (our monastic cell or our monastery) than the dwelling places from the cities? And if we do not renounce to do these things, what will be worse than living into wilderness?

If you do not appease your heart, you must at least appease your tongue. And if you are incapable of setting your thoughts in order, you must at least put your sense in order. And if you are not alone in your thought, you must at least be alone with your body. And if you are incapable of working with your body you must at least be sad in your thought. And if you cannot stand while taking vigil you must take vigil at least while sitting on or even while laying on your bed. And if you cannot fast for two days, you must at least to fast until evening. And if you cannot fast until evening, you must at least guard yourself against getting satiated. If you are not clean in your heart, you must be at least clean to your body. If you do not cry within your heart, you must at least dress you face up with sadness[418]. If you cannot give alms, you must at least speak like a sinner[419]. If you are not peacemaker, you must at least not love the disturbance. If you are not zealous, you must at least not to become idle in your thought[420]. If you are not victorious (upon your sins), you must at least not to get haughty in front of the guilty. If you cannot shut up the mouth of him who gossips your companion, you must at least guard yourself against being partaker to that gossip.

You know that fire comes out of you and that fire burns others, and the souls burnt into your fire will be asked for by [418] This is not hypocrisy for you sincerely want to cry, but you cannot cry yet. Hypocrite is him who does this in order to deceive others. We often must force our body in order us to produce within our souls the corresponding states.

[419] Speak by recognizing your sin that you haven't given alms, or that you cannot gives alms to another.

[420] You must at least condemn your idleness in your thought.

God from your hand[421]. And even if it is not yourself who throws that fire, but you consent to that and you feel pleasure in that, you will be partaker to the judgment. If you love the gentleness, you will remain in peace. And if you are found worthy of peace, you will rejoice all the time. You must search for wisdom and not for gold. You must dress yourself up in humbleness and not in silk. You must try to gain the peace and not the reigning.

There is no wiseman not having the humbleness. And he who has not humbleness he won't get wise. There is no one humble in thought who to be deprived of peace. And he who lacks the peace he won't be humble in thought either. And somebody won't have peace if he doesn't rejoice on himself. On all the ways the people walk in the world, the people won't have no peace within them, until they get close, by hope, to God. The heart won't gain peace out of tiredness and offenses, until the hope start dwelling within it and until the hope doesn't bring peace of the heart and it doesn't pour joy within heart. This is what the Lord called as mouth in state of worshipping and full of holiness. "Come to Me all of you who are tired and burdened and I will rest you" (Mt. 11: 28). "Come closer, he says, in order you to hope in Me and you will be rested of anything and of any fear".

The hope in God elevates the heart, and the fear of Gehenna crushes the heart. The light of the mind gives birth to faith and the faith give birth to the comforting from the hope. And the aspiration strengthens the heart. The faith is the unveiling of the understanding[422]. And when the cogitation gets darkened, the faith will hide itself up and the fear will come upon as and it will cut our hope off[423]. Not that faith coming from learning it liberates the man of pride and doubt, but that faith that sees and that sprouts out of understanding and it is call the recognition and the showing of the truth. Until the mind understand God as God unveiled to understanding, the fear won't come close to the heart. When we are forsaken into [421] This is an interpretation of the fire that deserves to be memorized. It is precious for the understanding of the hell's fire. The sin is itself a fire that desolates and torments the soul of him who commits that sin.

[422] The faith is produced by the grace of the revelation, but only by the fact that it wakes up the understanding within the soul. So that the faith is like a meeting point between grace and understanding.

[423] Here is being done a tight connection between faith and the true understanding the meaning of the life.

darkness and when we lose this understanding, there will occur within us the fear until we will get humble again, until we will come closer to humbleness and to repentance.

The Son of God endures the cross. That's why we the sinners have daring into repentance. This is for if the simple way of the repentance removed the anger from King Ahab, our true sin won't either be useless to us. And if the simple countenance of the humbleness removed the anger from that one who didn't truly repent, how much more will it remove from us who get truly sad for our mistakes? This is for the sadness of our thought keeps the place for all the bodily word.

Saint Gregory says: "He who has sunk on himself into God and who perseveres in the care for His judgment, he is church of the grace". But what is him who has sunk on himself into God and who perseveres into the care for His judgment? What does it mean the care for God's judgment if not always searching for His resting and ceaselessly getting sad because of not being able to reach the consummation because of the weakness of our nature? And the ceaseless sadness of somebody for this it means bearing into his soul the ceaseless remembrance of God, as the blessed Basil said. The unscattered prayer is that bringing within soul the luminous benevolence of God. This is the dwelling of God: to have God sown within yourself through His remembrance[424]. And so, we can make on [424] The Fathers do not reckon the thought at God or God's remembrance, and therefore the prayer too, as separated from God. But they see in the thought at God and in remembering God and in the faith of God His presence and His work as such. Saint Basil said too: "The dwelling of God is to have God implanted within the self by remembrance". (Epistle II, G.P. 32, col. 229). God Himself produces within us His remembrance, and He upholds our thinking at Him; of course, not without our effort. This teaching is solidary to that about the feeling of the contact with God through a sense of the mind, or of the soul. And it connected to that about the uncreated energies of God. But it is also connected with the understanding of God as Person Who, by listening to our word, He will necessarily answer it in a way or another. As are tied and communicate among themselves the human persons by word, likewise the human persons communicate with God, by word, by an answer-word to the word of God, and even through the thought that is an unvoiced word. This gave the cult a signification of communication between they who pray and God. It is thus explained the sanctifier function of the cult as composed of prayers as answers to the words of God, or which are answered by God. For an even more clarifying explanation of this communication between them who pray and God, by remembering God, and by prayer, by word, we could think at the capability of the human subject to perceive through his brain, intensified by a reception apparatus, communications from all quarters, where such communications are emitted from. It is true that the human subject perceives these communications through the reception apparatus one at a time. But when we perceive a choir of know persons, we perceive, in the same time, their voices in what those voices has as distinct. It is thus how a ourselves church of God. And this is the care and the crushed heart as preparation for our resting into God. Him it is due the glory forever and ever! Amen.

About the Many Changes Following within Mind and which Are Tested by Prayer

Choosing the good will is characteristic to him who wants that. But to consummate the good will it belongs to God[425]. And he who makes this choice he needs the help from God. That's why to the desire that has been born within us we must make to follow the ceaseless prayer. Not only because we need help, but also in order to make us discerning if this desire of ours is according to the pleasure of God or not. This is because not all the good desire occurs within heart from God. But only the useful one. This is because it happens sometimes that the man desires a good and God doesn't help him. This is because it comes also from the devil such desires. And it is reckoned helpful but it often is not on the measure of the man. But the devil plots to harm the man and the devil forces the man to try and fulfill that desire without the man having reached that living appropriate to his desire. Or that desire can be stranger to that man's way of living; or it hasn't arrived yet the time for fulfilling it, or to put it in work; or he isn't able to accomplish it with the work, or with the knowledge, or with his body; or the time doesn't help us; or in any way, under the countenance of that good the devil disturbs or harms that man in his ghost, or the devil hides him a trap in his cogitation.

parent perceives, in the laughter, in the crying, in the playing, in the common ask of his children, all of them together but still distinctively. Only for the human spirit has in himself this reception power, the human spirit has also within the brain, or within the reception technical apparatus, a means for actualizing this power of his. But the human subject is in the image of the Godlike Subject. God can perceive concomitantly all the thoughts and all the prayers, distinctively, and God can answer them.

[425] Choosing the good sometimes belongs to God. But to persevere in that state it belongs to God. Abd we can achieve the ceaseless help from God through ceaseless prayer. Thus, Saint Isaac sees a purpose of the ceaseless prayer in ceaselessly persevering in good.

But, as I said, let's make ceaseless prayers for the good desire occurred within us and let's each of us to say: "You will be done, until I will finish the good thing that I desire to do, if it is pleasant to Your will. This is because willing it is easy to me, but doing it, without the gift coming from you, I cannot. But only if both of them are from You: to will and to work. This is because without Your grace I wouldn't have convinced myself to accept this desire that has moved within me, but I would have rather been scared of it".

This is the custom of him who desires the good: to work with right-reckoning (with discernment) of mind through prayer, in order him to be helped in this work, and him that receive wisdom which he to be able through to discern between truth and lie. This is because the good is proven through many prayers, in work, in guarding, in the restless desire, in ceaseless tears, in humbleness, and in the help from above that comes especially when not impeded by our thoughts of pride. This is because our thoughts of pride impede the help from God towards us. But we can remove such pride thoughts by praying.

Word LX

Abou the Unwilling Evil Thoughts Occurring out of the Looseness Given Them by Idleness that Precedes Them

There are some people who lean their body and who want to rest their body a little for the work of God, until they get strengthened again and they turn again back to their work. But on the few days of our resting let's not totally forsake our guarding and let's not give whole looseness to our soul as we would be some people who no longer want to turn back to their work. Because if we did so, we would be beaten at the time of the peace by the enemy's arrows and we would gather within our souls the daring of our will and a defiled coat in the holy land, namely into prayer, by reckoning that we are dressed up. And this would be what moves our soul when cogitating at God and in prayer. These are the things we would achieve during our laziness and these ones shame us during prayer.

The watchfulness helps the man more than his deed does, and the looseness harms the man more that the resting harms him. This is because out of resting there occur wars within the man and they disturb him, but only him has the power to untie them (to let them go). This is because when the man leaves the resting and he turns back in the world of the deeds, the wars get far from him and they run away. But it doesn't happen like so to what is born out of that looseness caused by idleness and resting. As long as the man still is in the world of his resting, he can turn back again and he can guide on himself to the state of his order. This is for he still is within the borders of his freedom. But if the man didn't totally throw his guarding from himself, he wouldn't be pushed unwillingly under the power of the force to surrender on himself to the things which do not rest him. If the man didn't exit by himself totally from the land of the freedom, there wouldn't occur so many happenings which tied him forcedly and which he couldn't resist[426].

Do let give freedom, oh, man, to any of your senses, lest you won't be able to take your senses under control again[427]. The resting harms only the young men. But the looseness harms even the consummate and old men. They who have come from resting to evil thought, they can again turn themselves back to guarding and to stay in their high way of living; but they who, by getting lazy in their guarding, due to the trust in their deeds, they have passed from their high way of living to the looseness of their way of living, they have been enslaved.

[426] In the whole this chapter has been made and it will continue to be made a difference between the resting which the monk can grant to himself from time to time, from his self-supervision and from his tight ascesis, in order to strengthen his body for a little, and the looseness one grants to his passions which will start uprising and which the monk won't be able to keep under control. By the last thing the monk ceded his freedom, and as consequence to that the monk will be forcedly driven to sins. It is worthy to be memorized the connection seen by the author between the man's self-supervision and his freedom, or between self-control and freedom. He who doesn't control on himself, he will be controlled by inferior impulses or by the forces of the evil. He who doesn't control on himself he will become the slave of a foreign mastery. The freedom means self-control. That's why, in the Greek language, these two terms have the same meaning: αυτεξούσιον – ελευθερία.

[427] You have given freedom to one of your senses, that sense will overwhelm your freedom by his freedom, and nobody know whether you will be able to regain your freedom. By the freedom given to a sense, you have made on yourself as a slave to the things which the respective sense enters the contact with, in union. You have ceded to your sense your self-control.

One, after he fought in the country of the enemies, he died in time of peace[428]. Another, getting out of the monastic way of life on motif of trade, he receives a spike in his soul[429]. Let's not get sad when we slip into some mistake, but when we persevere in that mistake. This is for the sliding can happen even to the consummate ones; but persevering in mistake is complete death. And that sadness which we get sad with, for our slidings, it will be counted to us instead of clean work by grace. But he who, in the hope of his repentance, the slides for the second time, he behaves cunningly to God. To this one his death will come unnoticedly and he won't last until that time which he hoped to fulfill the deeds of the virtue at[430]. Everyone who has untied his senses he has untied his heart too.

Here He Is Speaking about the Insanity of Them Who Are Hypocrite in Front of God. And He Shows which the Sings of that Insanity Are

The work of the heart is accompanied by the tying of the external limbs and if somebody does that with right-reckoning (with discernment) it is proven, according to the sayings of the fathers from before us, out of the strange showings occurring within him, that he is not tied to the material earning, neither he loves the covetousness of his belly, and the anger is totally foreign to him. This is because where these three are: the [428] He fought the wars of the passions and he was victorious. But then, by granting to himself a little resting, he has been defeated.

[429] Here maybe is not about him who leaves the live of ascesis for a little rest, but it could be about him who gets out in order to buy a little strengthening by meeting others, for some bodily earning. He receives a spike from the passions.

[430] Kierkegaard insisted upon the necessity not to postpone a good thought, because that leads to the continual postponing (Einübung im Christentum). Here is something different: you must not commit sin hoping to a new repentance and forgiveness, for the second time, after you have achieved, by repentance, the forgiveness for the first time you sinned. If you continue sinning, that will make you not to take the sin too seriously; or you will take your sings in an increasingly less serious manner. And you will do the same relatedly to your repentance. You will fall into a relativizing of the sin and of the life's seriousness, and you will fall on the plan of the platitude and of the sophisticated and cheap justifications. In addition to that, you will behave cunningly towards God, by promising Him when you ask for forgiveness that you will no longer sin, but underneath that promise you are thinking, even in the moment of your promise, at a new sinning, so that you are lying to God, or you are attempting to deceive God.

material earning (either big or small), the anger, and the defeat from the part of the belly's covetousness, even if one seems like the saints from old, you will know that because of the impatience of the internal things there happen the looseness of the external things, instead of the diverse contempt of the own soul[431]. And if not, how did he despise the bodily things, and how couldn't he achieve the gentleness? The despising with right-reckoning it is followed by the fact of not allowing to be himself tied by anything, as also the contempt for the resting and for the longing for people. And if somebody is prepared to joyfully take losses for God, that one is clean inside. And if he doesn't despise somebody for his blindness, he will be truly free. And he who doesn't come close to him who honors him, and neither he gets disgusted by him who dishonors him, he has died to the world in the present life. The guarding of the right-reckoning (of the discernment) is better than any living worked in any way and according to any measure of the people.

About the Need for Not Hating the Sinner, but for Crying and for Praying for Him

Do not hate the sinner. This is because all of us are guilty. And if you move yourself towards the sinner for God, you will cry for the sinner. And why do you hate the sinner for? You must hate his sins and you must pray for him, in order you to liken yourself to Christ Who didn't get angry against the sinners and Who prayed for them. Can't you sere how Christ prayed for Jerusalem? This is because of being us too mocked by the devil in many things. And why do we hate him who is mocked as we are, by the devil who mocks both of us? Why do you hate the sinner, oh, man? And where is your righteousness since you no longer have love[432]? This is because out of their nescience some [431] It seems that, by taking in consideration the next phrase as well, that here is not about the soul in a proper sense, but it is about the soul's works referring to the body. He whom the passions of the covetousness, and of the material earning, and of the anger are stirred up in, he proves not to despise the exaggerate care for his body. This is because, if he despised that, how could he not achieve the gentleness?

[432] The true justice is love. That justice that is separated from love it is an inferior virtue, one characteristic to us after we have sinned.

Be you herald of the kindness of God, for God guides you who are unworthy and fore you are much indebted to God, and God doesn't get your soul away from you. And for the small things you do God bestows you the great things. Do not call God as "just", because of not being sin His righteousness in you deeds[434]. And if David calls God as "just", His Son showed us that God is rather kind and gentle. "He is good, he says, to the evil and non-honoring" (Lk. 6: 35). How do you call God as "just" when you read in the chapter about the payment given to the workers: "My friend, I am not going injustice to you, but I want to give to this last one as I have given to you. If you eye is evil, I am kind" (Mt. 20: 23)? And, again, how could you call the man of God as "just", when you hear in the chapter about the profligate son who spent his richness in parties, that only for the repentance showed by that profligate son his father ran and fall in his arms and he gave his son mastery over the whole his wealth? No one else told these things about Him, so that we would have reasons to doubt Him, but Himself His Son confessed these things about Him. Where is the justice of God, while Christ died for us despite us being sinners? And if He shows here on Himself to us as merciful, let's believe that He won't change on Himself in that regard.

God forbid us from ever cogitating this lawlessness of saying that God is merciless. This is for God doesn't change on Himself in what is characteristic to Him, as the dead do[435], and neither achieves God something that He doesn't have, nor He loses what He has, neither He receives some adding as the creatures do. But that what God has been having since the beginning, He always has that and He will have that until the endless end, as the Blessed Cyrul said in his interpretation to the Genesis. "Fear yourself, he says, of Him out of your love and not because of the harsh name given to Him. Love Him as one who owes to love Him; and not only for the things which He is going to give you, but also for the things which you have received from Him and for this world which He made it for us.

[433] It is a nescience that one that reckons that discerns sinful deeds in someone's life. It might be that people are not like that within themselves. The souly life of the man is so complicated!

[434] God gives you more than you deserve according to your deeds. In your deeds unpunished by God, you must rather see His love.

[435] Like the mortal, like them who bear the dead within themselves.

This is for who could reward God? Where it is His rewards in our deeds? Who persuaded Him in the beginning to create us? And who begs Him for us when we are ingrate? And when we didn't' exits, who woke our body up to life? And again, where the understanding of the knowledge comes into the dust from?".

O, wonderful mercy of God! O, non-understood grace of God Who is our Builder! O, power that can do everything! O, immeasurable kindness, which You creates anew the nature of us the sinners! Who can extoll God as it is due? God raises him who transgressed to Him and who blasphemed Him, God renews the without-rationality dust and He makes it again understanding and speaking; and God makes the insensitive mind and the scattered senses to be again rational nature and skillful in understanding. The sinner is unable to understand the grace of his resurrection. Where is the Gehenna that can make us sad? Where is that punishment that scares us in many ways and that can overwhelm the joy of His love? What is the Gehenna in comparison to the grace of His resurrection, when He raises us out of hell and He makes this corruptible to be dressed up in incorruptibility and He raises the fallen one into glory[436]?

O, you who have right-reckoning! Come and wonder! Who has a wise and wonderful cogitation in order him to worthily wonder about the grace of our Maker? He is the rewards of the sinners[437], for instead of the just reward he rewards them with the resurrection; and He dresses up with the glory of the incorruptibility on their bodies which transgressed His law. This grace that has resurrected us after we have sinned, it is greater than that grace which He has brought us to existence when we haven't existed. Glory to You, Lord, for Your immeasurable grace! The waves of Your grace make me shut up, My Lord. This is because of not being in mind any more thought on the measure of thanks owed to You. What thought will we confess to You with, You all-kind Emperor Who loves our life? Glory to you for the two world which You made towards our growth and [436] Here it is about the Gehenna and the hell where all people went before the resurrection of the Lord.

[437] On the sinners according to the ancestral sin, who come to Him, instead of punishing them he rewards them with His grace.

joy, by elevating us through all the things You have done towards the knowledge of Your glory, from now and forever[438].

How One Can Guard the Hidden Watchfulness Born within Soul; and what the Sleep and the Indifference Enter Like, into Cogitation, and what They Quench Like that Holy Warmth from within Soul and What they Kill Like the Desire for God and the Warmth for the Spiritual and Heavenly Things

It is impossible that they who have good desires to be impeded by some resistance to accomplish those good desires of theirs, it the enemy doesn't find place for sowing some cause seemingly good, within them who desire the good. And the this is this: To any thought of some good desire, at the beginning if its movement, there will follow a certain zeal, alike to the lit coals. And this zeal uses to surround this thought and to banish away from its closeness any resistance and impediment and obstacle existing in its way. This is for this zeal has a great and untold strength and power, in order to always defend the soul against drowsiness, or against getting scared of the impulses of all the things from around.

This first thought is the power of the holy desire that is naturally sown in the soul's nature. And this zeal is the thought moved by the power of the wrath which is within it, and that is placed by God within us, in order to guard the borders of the nature, in order the wrath to set in motion the thought of the freedom in order to fulfill the natural desire manifested within soul[439]. And this is the virtue[440], which the good is not worked without. This is called as zeal for it is that one that moves and that makes zealous and that lights up and that strengthens the man, from time to time, to despise the body in time of trouble and in time of fearsome temptations coming in its way, and to always give his soul to death and to face the opposite power in pursuing to accomplish that thing strongly desired by the soul.

[438] In the Romanian newer translation there are added, inappropriately, three more paragraphs which coincide to others form the next Word.

[439] The wrath is sown within nature on a positive purpose" that of defending the rational nature against falling off its border, and in order the rath to urge us to fulfill our good aspirations. The wrath moves, in the first place, the freedom on this purpose; without the wrath, the freedom remains a simple potentiality.

[440] The desire towards good, sown within our nature, by having the zeal within, and by being associated with the wrath, it is the virtue in potentiality, it is the undeveloped virtue, but one having in the beginning in it the movement towards becoming actualized as virtue.

A certain saint, who put on Christ, he called this zeal with his words as "watchdog" of the law of God. And this is the virtue. This is for itself the virtue is called as law of God[441]. And this power of the zeal is strengthened and it is wakened up and it is lightened up towards guarding the house, on two ways. And it weakens again and it fall asleep and it gets lazy also in two modes.

On the first way, the wakening up and the lighting up are produced when there appropriately occurs a fear into the man's thought, one that makes him fear for the good he has earned or which he is going to earn, lest he will be stollen or robbed by something among the things accompanying or following that good thing. And this takes place through God's taking-of-care – I mean, the fear – within all of them who truly work the virtue, towards a wakening up and towards a zeal persisting without soul without falling asleep.

And when this fear is moved within nature, the zeal – called by us as "watchdog" will burn day and night as a lit-up oven and it will keep our nature awake. It stays awake in the likeness of the Cherubs and it takes heed at the surrounding things on each moment. And like the (mentioned) saint says, if a bird passes by, it will go around that bird and it will shout out at that bird with a harsh and untold impulse. And itself this fear occurs because the man has doubted in his faith about the taking-of-care of God and because the man has forgotten that God occupies on Himself with them and that God takes care of them who lives in ascesis for virtue, in order God to visit them on each moment, as the Holy Ghost says too through the mouth of the Prophet: "The eye of the Lord upon the righteous ones" and the others. And again: "The Lord is the strength of them who fear Him" (Ps. 24: 15[442]). Himself the Lord said, as from [441] Starting with this phrase, what follows in the newer translation of the manuscript is placed at the end of the previous Word. The virtue if the embodied law of God.

[442] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 14: "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 15: "The Lord is the strengthening of them who fear Him, and He will show His settlement to them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Himself, to them who fear Him: "There won't come near to you evil things and the whip won't come near to your dwelling place" (Ps. 8: 10[443]).

And when the fear occurs for the soul, for the things which can happen for and follow to the virtue, in order the virtue not to be stollen or harmed because of some reason, that fear will be a godlike thought and a good worry and its sadness and torment are out of the taking-of-care from God.

And, again, there is the second kind (of waking up the zeal), namely of strengthening and making the dog take vigil. It is that when the desire for virtue grows up with soul. This is for the more the desire grows up within soul, the more this watchdog will become fierier and more attentive, and that's is the natural zeal for virtue[444].

And the first cause of somebody getting indifferent consists of the fact that this desire ceases or it diminishes within soul. And the second one consists of the fact that some confident and daring thoughts enters the soul and it remains within the soul, and it also consists of the fact that the man hopes and thoughts and reckons that he has no reason to fear of some power which could ham him. This is because, by that he throws from himself the weapons of the zeal and his house becomes unguarded. And the watchdog falls asleep and it leaves the guarding for a long time.

Because of this thought are stollen most of the houses which are thoughts with the mind (intelligible). And this happens when it gets darkened the cleanness of the light of the holy knowledge from within our soul. And where this darkening is coming from? This is because a very subtle thought entered our soul and it denned there, or because the man has been occupying on himself for a long time with the worries for the passing things, or because of the continuous meeting with the world, that deceives the man, or because of his belly that is the master of all evil things. This is because always when he who lives in ascesis he meets the world, his soul will immediately weaken. Likewise, when he meets many people, and he is driven only by the need of his vain-glory, his soul will be shattered. And if we are to say this briefly, the mind of his who has exited the world, when he meets the world, his mind will be like that helmsman sailing on a peaceful sea and suddenly he falls among rocks and he drowns. And may belong to our God the glory, and the mastery, and the honor, and forever and ever! Amen.

[443] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 6: "For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him."; in ROB we have: "For that every pious will pray to You at the right time, and the flood with much water won't come near to him."; another possibility would be: KJB: Ps. 91: 7: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee."; in ROB: Ps. 90: 7: "There will fall a thousand at your side and ten thousands on your right side, but they won't come neigh to you". (E. l. t.'s n.)

About the Three Kinds of Knowledge[445] and about the Differences Regarding Their Works and about Their Meaning;' and about the Faith of the Soul and about that Mysterious Richness Hidden within the Soul; and about What Different Is Like the Knowledge of this World, in Its Kinds, from the Simplicity of the Faith

That soul that walks of the paths of the good living and of the faith and who has advanced much in them, if that soul turns back again to the knowledge modes, that soul will immediately start limping in his faith, and his understanding power will be deprived his of faith. And this power cannot show itself to the soul in the understandings listed in that clean soul who walks in it without inquiring the happening things, by the simplicity of his faith. But that soul that is forever surrendered to God through faith and through much trial (experience) and that received the tasting of God's help, that soul will no longer [445] These three kinds of knowledge can refer to three knowledge domains: the body, the soul, and the spiritual life, as the Saint Isaac is going to say a little further. But they mean, therefore, three knowledge plans and three knowledge modes of kinds. It seems that in no case they represent the scientific knowledge of the nature in the sense that the knowledge it was developed only in the following centuries. The three knowledge kinds as mentioned by Saint Isaac still represent a knowledge of the nature in a broader meaning of the word, as differing from the godlike supra-natural, as reserved to the faith. As such, the sciences use methods which the faith doesn't need, the faith being a simple noticing of the godlike reality. Still, the knowledge of the spiritual life meets the faith.

take care of himself. This is for the awe and the quietude shut his mouth up and that soul will no longer have the power to turn back again to the craftsmanships (modes, methods) of his knowledge and to move himself among those, lets by those ones' resistance the soul to be deprived of the taking-care from God Who ceaselessly and hiddenly visits that soul and He takes care of that soul and He accompanies that soul on all ways. And if the soul still does that, it means that that soul has gone crazy, by reckoning that himself could take of himself by the power of his knowledge. On the opposite, they whom the light of the faith has dawned within, they shy to pray for themselves any longer, or to ask from God" Give us this, or remove from us that". They no longer take care of themselves in any way. This is because they see with the understanding eyes of the faith, on each moment, the parental taking-of-care overshadowing them out of that true Father Who overwhelms in His great immeasurable love all the parental love and He can more that all others to give us the help abundantly, more than we ask for, and more than we thing and understand.

Thus, the knowledge is opposite to the faith. This is for the faith is, in all its aspects, an untying (a liberation) from the laws of the knowledge, of course not of the laws of the spiritual knowledge. This is because the border fencing the knowledge (the definition of the knowledge) is that there cannot be done anything outside inquiring and research, but the knowledge studies if it is possible, it to do what it thinks at and what it wants. And what the faith is? When somebody doesn't come closer to the faith in a right manner, the faith won't convince him to remain in it[446].

[446] 'Rightly so, when somebody doesn't come closer to the faith in a right manner, but without respect and in ghost of spying, the faith won't lighten him up with its light, but it will lock himself up again in the darkness of the faithlessness". The faith refers to the domain of the inward realities of the person. When somebody doesn't come closer to the person with respect and with love the person won't open to him. The person cannot be conquered by the aggression of the analyzes, as in case of the objects, but only through the reality of the bilateral communion, through the willing relation from person to person. While the domain of the knowledge is fenced up by the laws of the created nature submitted to experiments and analyzes, but by that is a limited domain, the domain of the faith is fenced up by the person's freedom; but when the person wants to communicate it, it proved to be unlimited. This domain explains also the rationality of the created nature. That's why the faith softens up, or it overwhelms the laws of the knowledge of the nature. The faith knows the realities submitted to the laws from a position that is superior to the laws. Of course, that this is a certain

One cannot accumulate knowledge without research and without using the methods. And that's why we doubt the knowledge's truth[447]. And the faith requires a clean and simple thought and stranger to any craftsmanship and research by using methods. Do you see hos they oppose to one another? The house of the faith is a little-child's understanding and a simple heart. "This is for in the simplicity of their heart, he says, they worshipped the Lord" (Col. 3: 22). "And if you do not turn yourself back and become like children, you won't enter the Kingdom of Heavens (Mt. 18: 3). And the knowledge is the enemy and the opposite of these two[448].

The knowledge is the fence (definition) of the nature[449], guarding the nature in all its ways[450]. And the faith travels above-nature. The knowledge doesn't try to come closer to any work that disregards (transgresses) the nature, but the knowledge stay away from such work. But the faith accepts that easily and says: "Upon asp and basilisk you will trample and on lion and on dragon you will mount on" (Ps. 91: 13[451]). The knowledge is followed, because of that, by fear[452]; and the faith meaning of the knowledge, because in another meaning the knowledge of the content of the person and the knowledge of the Divine Person by revelation, they still are knowledge.

[447] The meaning of this sentence is multiple" a) the truth is an more essential domain and on it depends what is comprised in the frame of the laws of the created nature, And because through knowledge and therefore through the knowledge's methods, we notice only the last part, we doubt the other domain, namely the domain of the truth; b) Right in the fact that we start finding the truth out of nature, through methods, we star from doubt; c) we always doubts about the fact that the methods which we have used have been the best for finding out the truth; d) we doubt about the fact whether the unfound truth doesn't make problematic the found fragmentary truth.

[448] The knowledge is enemy and to the full understanding and to entering the Kingdom of Heavens. Until here, Saint Isaac specified this difference between knowledge and faith: the knowledge is earned through research methods while the faith is achieved by the simple trust of the clean heart into God. It is a difference of souly states and of modes of achieving. The knowledge asks on itself if what does not it can be fulfilled, while the faith doesn't ask if that can be fulfilled on the basis of the nature's laws; but the faith trusts the power of God.

[449] The knowledge is applied to the nature that is fenced up by the involuntary laws of the repetition. That's why, there where is knowledge there will be fencing up, there will be "de-finition". The exactness of the knowledge is paid with it narrowness and repetition.

[450] The knowledge provided us with the prescience of the mode which the things are done and undone, in order us to be able to orient on ourselves among the things.

[451] In KJB we have: Ps. 91: 13: "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet."; in ROB we have: Ps. 90: 13: "Upon asp and basilisk you will tread and you will step upon lion and dragon". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[452] The knowledge of the nature, by referring to the laws leading the person during the person's earthly existence, to the unavoidable death, it is followed by fear. The faith that knows about the future life it is followed by hope. In another senses, the knowledge fears it followed by hope. This is for the more somebody remain to the knowledge's methods, the more will he tied by fear and the more he won't be found worthy of being free from knowledge. But he who follows to the faith is free and master and he uses – as a son of God – the freedom in all his deeds, by being master upon himself[453]. That man who loves the faits he uses as God does, all the realities of the nature. This is for the faith gives the man power to make the new creation, in the likeness of God[454]. "You wanted, he says, and all the thing stood before you" (Job 13: 23). And the man often can make all things from inexistent things. But the knowledge cannot do something without matter. The knowledge doesn't dare to do something that is not given to the matter. And why is that? This is because the flowing nature of the water doesn't hold on its back the weight of the body and he who comes closer to fire he will be burnt, and if somebody dared to do these things we would endanger on himself[455].

Through these the knowledge is guarded within the nature's borders and it doesn't dare to cross over its borders by any means. And the faith powerfully crosses these border[456]. This is for he says: "If you cross through fire, it won't burn you, and the rivers won't cross over you" (Isa. 43: 2). And these everything that doesn't match the nature's laws, it fears any work within man that apparently is non-conform to the law.

[453] That man who doesn't believe he will feel on himself as narrowed by the nature's laws and by his passions, as one who is master upon himself, he will use freely the nature's laws and he will master his passions, by being himself master upon himself. He proves by that that he is endowed with Ghost. This is for the Ghost is freedom. And through freedom the man communicates with the godlike Ghost Who is the source of all freedom. The man communicated with God in full freedom, as a son to his father.

[454] By faith the man becomes the new man and he makes new also on others, by being himself filled up and by filling others as well with the godlike grace and by being him transformed and by transforming on others in the likeness of God. Thus, the man exceeds the nature's laws.

[455] The meaning could be this: the man can do something out of nothing as God does, but by the fact that the man uses the power of God. The man sows within himself and within nature new qualities, which haven't existed before, but he does that by the God's power coming within him. Thus, the body is given the power not to be burnt by fire, or the fire is takes away its power of causing burns. The science knows surely certain things regarding the future, but the science refers itself only to the repeating things, so that science's content is narrow. In his hope through faith the man doesn't know what will happen, but he hopes, and by hoping the man succeeds in achieving much bigger things which exceed the natural laws of the repetition.

things have been worked by the faith, for many times, before the whole creation. Even if the knowledge had been given the possibility to test them, the knowledge wouldn't have been convinced by them. This is for many entered the fire by faith and they defeated the burning power of the fire and they crossed through the fire unharmed; and they stepped on the shoulders of the sea and they reached the shore. And all of these are above-nature and opposite to the knowledge's modes and they have proven the knowledge as vain in all its modes and laws.

Have you seen what the knowledge guards like the nature's borders? And have you seen what the faith gets above-nature like and the knowledge travels there its road? The knowledge's methods ruled the world for five thousand of years, or for a little less than that, or even more than that, but the man hasn't been able t at all to raise his head from the ground and to feel the power of his Creator, until our faith sprouted out and it liberated us form the darkness of the earthly work and from that slavery from after the vain scattering[457]. And now, again, when we have found the calm sea and the without-shortcomings-treasure, we still want to lean ourselves towards the poor springs. There is no knowledge without shortcomings, regardless how much would be enriched. But the treasuries of the faith cannot be comprised by the sky and by the earth. He who leans his heart on the hope of the faith he won't ever be lacking anything; and when he has nothing, he will have everything by faith, as it was written: "Anything you ask into prayer by faith, you will take" (Mt. 21: 22). And again: "The Lorde is night, worry of nothing" (Phil. 4: 5).

The knowledge always searches for craftsmanships (methods) for guarding them who have acquired the knowledge. And the faith says: "If the Lord doesn't build up the house and if the Lord doesn't guard the city, vainly will take vigil he who guards the city and vainly will toil he builder" (Ps. 126: 1[458]). He [457] The falling into sin from the beginning is reckoned as a scattering from the primordial unity of the people in the love for God and among themselves. This seems to aim to be a replica to the wrong Origenistic doctrine of the scattering from the "pleroma" from before creation.

[458] In the KJB we have: Ps. 127: 1: "EXCEPT the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."; in ROB we have: Ps. 126: 1: "If the Lord doesn't' build the house, vainly will toil they who built it; if the Lord doesn't' guard the city, vainly will take vigil he who guards it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

who prays with faith he won't eve use methods and he won't act according to methods. This is for the knowledge praises everywhere the fear, as the wise man said: "Blessed is him who fears" (Wisdom of Sirach[459] 33: 15). But what the faith does? "He feared, he says, and he started sinking (Mt. 14: 30). And again: "You haven't taken ghost of slavery towards fear, but ghost of adoption" (Rom. 8: 15), and towards the freedom of the faith and of the hope into God[460]. And again: "Do not guard on yourself against them, neither you to run away from their face". The fear is always followed by doubt, and the doubts if followed by research. And the research uses methods and the methods lead to knowledge. And in research and in inquiry are always present the fear and the doubt. This is for never one knows everything, as I showed before[461]. This is because of being the soul met with difficult to bear happenings and hardship and by many delusions full of dangers, which the knowledge and the methods of the wisdom cannot help to, at all. But into the hardships exceeding the whole power and border of the human knowledge, the faith won't ever be defeated by any of them[462]. To what extent the human knowledge can help in the seen wars, or against the unsee natures, or against the embodied [460] Unlike the knowledge that is dominated by the fear of not losing something of what it knows, or of what it has acquired by knowledge, the faith won't fear anything if it stays steadfast. The faith doesn't fear that it will lose the thing it knows, even by death. The faith liberates us from the nature's laws which surely lead us to death, and the hope upholds within us the surety that we won't end into this death. Peter started fearing because he remembered the law of the water's nature, that cannot uphold the body at the surface, and so Peter started sinking. But while he believed in Christ, Peter had out of Christ the power to walk on the sea. The faith no longer keeps us into the ghost of the fear and of the slavery to natural elements, but it raises us up to the freedom from them and, so, it reraises up into the ghost of the daring as sons of God Who protects us against everything, for the eternal life.

[461] Are describe here all the psychological and real stages leading to knowledge and following to knowledge. The author distinguished in this process more stages than Descartes did. Descartes knew the stathe: "dubito, ergo cogito, cogito, ergo sum" (I doubt, and therefore I think, I think, and therefore I am). There is always present throughout the whole process, including in the knowledge, the doubt and the fear, by the fact that one doesn't know everything and by the fact that one doesn't escape, by knowledge, form death. Saint Isaac introduced an affective, existential element, in the starting point of the knowledge and in the knowledge itself.

[462] For instance, the physician knows that a certain patient can be cured by being administrated a certain treatment, but the physician is not sure about that. While, he who has a strong faith he won't fear anything.

powers and against many others? Have you seen the weakness of the knowledge and the power of the faith? The knowledge impeded all its disciples form getting closer to the realities which are foreign to nature. But you look, in this regard, at the power of the faith and what this power allows its disciples to do.

"Into My name, He says, you will cast out devils, and you will pick up snakes, and you will drink venom, and you won't be harmed" (Mk. 16: 17). The knowledge commands to all of them who walk on its path according to its rules, to study in everything the end before the beginning and then they to start researching, lets the end of a thing being difficult to be found within the borders of the human power, the whole toil to be vain and the things to be hard to accomplish[463]. But what does the faith say? "Him who believes all the things are possible" (Mt. 9: 23). This is for at God nothing is impossible. Oh, untold richness and hidden torrent hidden into His wonderful veils and treasuries, that is overpoured through the power of the faith! How much courage and how much it is loaded with, and how much joy and hope it is full with the travel with it! And how light are its burdens! And how much sweetness its work has!

Question: he who has been found worthy of tasting the sweetness of the faith and he has turned again to the knowledge of the soul, what special state has he entered?

Answer: he who has forsaken the mastering self-freedom and he has turned back to the ways of the poverty which are full of fear and slavery, he is like one who have found a precious pearl and he has changed that peal for a copper penny.

The knowledge is not to be defamed, but the faith is superior to knowledge. When we defame, we don't defame the knowledge, let that not be, but we only want to identify its crooked ways which it goes against nature through so that is kindred to the gangs of the devils. And how many steps has the knowledge in these modes[464]? And which is the characteristic of each of them? And to how many understandings the man wakes [463] The knowledge won't start doing something before finding out if it is within the borders of the human power and of the natural laws to take that thing to an end, in order not to toil vainly. The faith approaches also things which ar above-nature.

up in each of these modes, when he perseveres in them? And which modes of these the man resists by (when the travels in them), to the faith, and he goes out of nature? And which is its characteristic? And on which stage (when turning at its prime goal) the knowledge comes to its nature and it places this stage of its before the faith, in a good living[465]? And where the difference between a stage and another reached at? And who it passes from these ones to those which are higher than its? And which are the modes of that level, namely of the first one? And where the knowledge united with the faith and it becomes one with the faith and it receives out of faith fire-meanings and it get lit up in the ghost and it ascends from serving the earthly realities to the motherland of its Maker, together with the other modes?

But for now, we owe to know that the faith and its works are superior to knowledge. And that itself the knowledge is consummate in faith and it achieves power to ascend upwards and to feel Him Who is higher than all feeling[466] and to see that light that is non-comprised by mind[467] and by the knowledge of the creatures. So, the knowledge is a stage which one ascends by to the height of the faith. But when one reached close to that one, he no longer needs the knowledge[468]. "This is for now, he [465] Here Saint Isaac, after he has shown the limited power of the knowledge, he is specifying that he thought doesn't defame the knowledge, as long as the knowledge remains in its own domain: researching and formulating the nature's laws. He only defames the knowledge when it goes out of the natural knowledge and when it launches in conclusions unconfirmed by what the knowledge objectively knows out of nature. A knowledge of the nature is even necessary to the faith, as preparing stage for faith.

[466] The knowledge with its methods, when it becomes precursory to faith, but it ascends, on its higher levels, together with the faith. Its borders are softened, they are becoming transparent, elastic. Then the knowledge becomes feeling, or direct contact with the realities which are higher than the methodical knowledge, but above any feeling, namely above any contact of our senses with the things, but also higher than the souly feeling, which we live through the pressure of some unseen realities. The transcendence of God is reconciled with the certitude of the existence of a connection of ours with Him. We are having here the most fundamental paradox. On these superior levels the faith is also knowledge, or the knowledge is also faith.

[468] When somebody reached the faith by knowledge, he no longer needs the knowledge. He has reached an above-knowledge knowledge. But there the faith has ceased too. Or both of them are surpassed in "sight". Even from here one can see that there are three main stages of the true knowledge: that of the nature that precedes the faith and it leads to faith; that one that which the knowledge increases in together with the faith and which their domains no longer differ in; and that one that is above both to knowledge and to faith. These stages are going to be described in more details, by Saint Isaac, a little further.

says, we know partially. But when what is consummate comes, what it is partially will cease" (1 Cor. 13: 9). So, the faith shows us, like through an eye, the truth of the consummation and through faith we find out non-comprised things, but not by the research and by the power of the knowledge.

But the knowledge is needed by the deeds of the righteousness: the fasting, the giving of alms, the taking of vigil, the holiness, and the other deed which are worked through the body; the love for the neighbor, the humble cogitation of the heart, the forgiveness of the mistakes, the remembrance of the goods, the research of mysteries which are covered up in the Holy Scriptures[469], occupying the cogitation with the higher things, guarding the borders of the soul's passions and the other virtues, which are committed within the soul. All of these ones need knowledge. This is for the knowledge keeps them and it teaches us their order[470]. But all of these still are only stages, which the soul ascends through to that higher height of the faith, and these stages are called as virtues[471]. But that living out of faith is superior to virtue and working that living doesn't' consists of deeds, but it is a consummate resting and [469] The mysteries of the creatures are involved into Scripture, so that the supra-natural Revelation doesn't give us a knowledge about God as separated from the knowledge of the creatures, of the world. Only the supra-natural Revelation unveils us the deep meanings of the things. But finding out the deep mysteries of the things involved into Scripture enter the domain of the spiritual knowledge.

[470] Here we can see that the author understands by knowledge not too much the science of the nature, but the science of the monastic life and of the ways of elevating or of falling of the monastic life.

[471] This knowledge precedes the faith. It is a science of the rules of the virtue. Saint Isaac reckons the faith as superior to this knowledge. He thinks that the Hellenes too (especially the ancient Stoic philosophers) has virtues. But the faith comes out of grace. We will encounter this idea at Saint Simeon the New Theologian too. There are virtues of the man, by and large. But the faith is more than these general virtues. Of course, though, that there are also virtues developed and crossed through by faith, or by faith's grace. But the knowledge continues to help the faith in developing them. On this higher plan the virtues are full of the faith of the love, and they are no longer simple manifestation of the justice, or of the correctness. And the full love for the man is but that one out of faith, that one seeing in man an existence destined to eternity, giving this comforting to the man. Saint Isaac himself says in the next sentence that these virtues are superior, by adding within them also a resting into God, and not a simple strained effort of the man. Or that the soul is now on a superior level of the virtues, without leaving the virtues, for the soul rests himself of effort when committing them, for the virtues irradiate out of man, without him making any effort. The fact that this level is superior to virtues not by forsaking the virtues, or by deviating from virtues, but by irradiating the virtues effortlessly, it is told by Saint Isaac when he says that in it will be "all the ways of the spiritual living".

comforting and it is committed within heart and in those of the souls. And in it there are all the wonderful ways of the spiritual living, whose work produces a feeling of the spiritual life and a delectation and a joy into God and all the other which are gives to us in that living of the soul who is found worthy of the grace of the happiness from there and all of those committed into faith still from here, according to the teaching from the godlike Scriptures, by God Who is rich in all His gifts.

Bewilderment

And if somebody says: If all these goods and the above mentioned deeds of the virtue and the getting far from evil and the discerning of the subtle thoughts occurring within soul and the fight against thoughts and the war against the enticing passions and the others, which even the faith itself cannot shows its power without, in the soul's work, if all of these are committed by the faith, how do you reckon that the knowledge is opposite to faith?

Solution to Bewilderment

We say that there are three modes thought with the mind (intelligible) which the knowledge ascends and descends in; and, in the same time with changing the modes which it crosses through, the knowledge gest changed becoming harmful or helpful. These three modes are: of the body, of the soul, and of the ghost[472]. The knowledge is one by its nature, but according to these levels of the thoughts (intelligible) and sensitive realities, the knowledge gets thinned and it changes its modes and the work of its understanding. Listen, therefore, also to which are its order (levels) and its principles which the knowledge harms or helps for: the knowledge is a gift given by God to the nature of the rational beings, and the knowledge was given them in the beginning of their creation, and it is simple [472] From here one can see that the three modes of knowledge are also three plans of the knowledge, which three levels and methods correspond to. In all of them, the knowledge can be done according to a good or to a bad rule. This is for the knowledge of these plans has a normative character as well, either leading towards ever better, or towards ever eviler.

and it is not divisible in its nature like the sunlight isn't too; only, according to its work, it receives changes and divisions.

Word LXIII

About the First Step of the Knowledge

When the knowledge follows the bodily lusts, it will gather these modes: richness, vain-glory, adornment, resting of the body, diligent searching for the rational wisdom that is appropriate to ruling the present world and out of which gush up the novelty of the contrivances, of the craftsmanships, and of the teachings and those things which adorn the body in this seen world. Out of these ways it is born that knowledge that is opposite to faith, which I said about that is called as vain-knowledge, because fit is empty of any care for God, and because it brings a rational helplessness into cogitation, and it places the cogitation under the mastery of the body. This knowledge is totally concerned with this world.

The characteristic of the true knowledge is, on the opposite, that of being a totally understanding power and a hidden guide to the man and it is a godlike care visiting the man and taking care of the man[473]. But that knowledge that is tied to the bodily lusts doesn't attribute the guidance to God, but it reckons that any good is within man and within man it is the salvation from the harmful things and that guarding against hardships and against the many obstacles accompanying our nature secretly and manifestly, it belongs to our natural zeal and in our craftsmanships. This bragging knowledge reckons that all the things depend on its taking-of-care, according to them who say that there isn't a (godlike) oikonomia of the seen things.

But this knowledge cannot get rid of the ceaseless worry and of the fear for the body. That's why such a man is dominated by his lack of courage, by sadness and by despair, by the fear of devils, by the cowardice towards people, by the fear maintained by the rumors about thieves, by the news about the death of some people or of others, by the worry about sickness, by the fear of poverty, by the fear of lacking the necessary things, by the fear of death, by the fear of sufferance and by the fear of wild beasts and of similar things, by the things happening on the stormy sea, day and night, which can rush in upon him. This is because one like this doesn't know how to throw his worry upon God, with the strength of the faith in God. That's why this knowledge swirls into plots and cunningness in all its things. And when the ways of its contrivances are proved to be vain, because of some reason and it doesn't search for the taking-of-care from God, it fights the people who impede it and who resist it.

In this knowledge is planted the tree of the knowledge of the good and of the bad, that uproots the love. This knowledge spies for the small mistakes of other people and for the causes and for their weaknesses and it makes the man to decide and to resist by words and to plot through evil cunningness and to rebuke his fellow humans also in other ways. Out of this knowledge comes the haughtiness and the pride; this of because this knowledge attribute to itself all goof things, and not to God[474].

On the contrary, the faith attributes its deeds to the grace. That's why the faith doesn't know the haughtiness, as it is written: "I can do all things into Christ Who strengthens me" (Phil. 4: 13). And again: "but not I, but the grace of God that is with me" (1 Cor. 4: 15). And what the blessed Apostle said: "The knowledge makes haughty", he said that about that knowledge that is not united with the faith and with the hope into God and not about the true knowledge[475].

The knowledge of the truth for humbleness it makes consummate the souls of them who have that knowledge. So it did to Moses, to David, to Isaiah, to Peter, to Paul, and to the other saints who have been found worthy, in a consummate manner, of this knowledge, according to the measure of the human nature. This is for their always changing contemplations (the understandings) and the godlike unveilings and the high seeing of the spiritual realities and of the untold mysteries, they [474] The tasting and the nourishing in continuation out of the tree of the knowledge of the good and of the bad, it will uproot the love, because of the haughtiness that is born by it, within them who taste out of it, and because of using that knowledge, by and large, by them who taste it, for their egotistic benefit.

[475] It again appears the true knowledge united with the faith.

totally overwhelm their knowledge and their body is, in their eyes, as ashes and dust.

And the other knowledge gest haughty, because of walking into darkness, and it wants to prove its things by comparing them to those from on earth, because of not knowing that there is something superior to itself. And all of them are kidnapped by pride, because of being from on earth, and they match their living to what their body desires and they lean on their own deeds and they do not cogitate in their mind at the non-comprised realities. And they suffer these things all the time while they are carried away by these waves.

And the saints work that glorious virtue of God and their work is up high and their thought doesn't occupy on itself with the care for contrivance and for the vain things. This is for they who walk into light they couldn't get lost. That's why, all of them who have got strayed from the light of the knowledge of the Son of God and who have deviated from truth, they walk these paths. This is the first level of the knowledge. On it, the man obeys his lust. We defame this one and we reckon it not only opposite to faith but also to any good work.

Word LXIV

About the Second Level of the Knowledge

But when one leaves the first level and he turns towards the cogitation and the desires of his soul, he works the goods described before both with the cogitation of his soul and with the senses of his body, through the light of his nature. And these goods are: the fasting, the prayer, the giving of alms, the reading of the godlike Scriptures, the diverse good deeds, the fight against passions, and other similar goods. All the good works and especially the diverse goods which can be seen within soul and the wonderful deeds serving in the courtyard of Christ, on this second level of the knowledge, are accomplished by the Holy Ghost through the work of His power[476]. The Holy Ghost straightens the path of the heart which lead us to faith, which we gather through victuals for the future age. But on this level the knowledge still is bodily and composed. But this knowledge is the wat guiding us and leading us to faith. This is for there is a higher level than this one. And if somebody advances, he will see on himself as ascending through it, with the help from Christ. This happens when the man lays down the foundation of its work into the appeasement resulting out of getting less involved with the people, in reading the Scriptures, in prayer, and in the other goods, which the things of the second knowledge are committed in. And in this knowledge worked all the good things. This is because this knowledge commits its work in the things submitted to the senses, through the bodily senses, in the exterior plan[477].

Word LXV

About the Third Stage of the Knowledge, that is the Stage of the Consummation

Listen to how one thins on himself and how he achieves the spiritual state and who he becomes in his living like the unseen powers who liturgize not by the felt work of the deeds, but through that work committed with the taking heed of the cogitation. When the knowledge gets elevated from the earthly realities and out of the worry for those and it starts experiencing the understanding of the internal realities, which are hidden from the eyes, and it starts despising the things in a certain way - out of which are born the passions which crook the soul - and it stretches upwards; when it follows the faith in the worry for the future age and in the desire for the things promised to us, and in researching the hidden mysteries, then [476] Saint Isaac the Syrian reckons that the Holy Ghost is working within man exclusively on the level of the man's union with God. But the Ghost helps the man also on the level of the doing by strengthening the man and without stopping the man's efforts.

[477] Out of the last two Words and out of the following ones, one can see even clearer that the stages of the knowledge have, at Saint Isaac, rather a moral and normative meaning. But also, that these ones represent the true knowledge of the reality.

the faith swallows the knowledge and it turns back and it gives birth to knowledge since the beginning, in order that knowledge to become as that one from the beginning and to become totally a ghost[478].

Then, that man can fly, borne on wings, in the plans of the unsees realities, and he can reach the deep of the untouched sea[479], penetrating the godlike and wonderful rulings, those ones from within the nature of the realities thought with the mind (intelligible) and those out of the natures of the realities submitted to the senses (sensitive), and he researches the spiritual mysteries which can be caught by a simple and subtle understanding[480]. Then the inward senses are wakened up by a work of the Ghost, according to an order characteristic to the immortality and incorruptibility state[481].This is for they have received even from here the thought resurrection (not yet the sensitive resurrection), as a mystery, towards the true confession of the greatness of all realities[482].

These ones are the three modes of the knowledge, which the whole road of the man crosses through: into body, into soul, and into ghost. Through them the man starts discerning between good and bad: the knowledge of the man's soul crosses [478] When the knowledge has been elevated to the unseen realities, it has become faith, for those unseen realities are no longer know through senses. Properly-said, that faith gives birth to the true knowledge, that knowledge form the beginning of our being, when it was living into the horizon of the spiritual realities. Then the man has become totally a ghost, being filled up by the Holy Ghost. This is for it entered the plan of the Ghost where there is a freedom form laws, where the breeze of the endless love blows, where are chosen freely and one at the time the endless manifestations of the love and of the communion.

[479] Then he reached the deps of that sea that is untouched by senses and by mind, namely the deeps of the godlike life, of the Ghost. We can see here the same joining of transcendence of God and of experiencing on God, through His grace.

[480] Here are perceived, in the same time, in an above-understanding-mode, the godlike rulings working within the seen and unseen beings, but also the godlike mysteries which are above these rulings, through a simple and subtle intuition, of spiritual order.

[481] The inwards senses are penetrated in their work by the work of the Ghost, or they become also organs of the work of the Ghost, taking place a theandric work, one divine-human. That is a state that anticipatedly tastes the immortality and the incorruptibility. It is lived the eternity on each moment, without knowing about moment anymore, by forgetting about the moment.

[482] He who has reached there he lives inwardly, in the mystery, this resurrection, and that is a proof about the renewal of all realities that will take place through that power overpoured out of that state of inwards resurrection. The inside is not meant to always remain without influence upon the external realities, but when Christ wants the inside will be overpoured over all the external realities, for the Resurrected Christ Himself is within the resurrected soul.

through these three measures, until he gets out of this world. A sole knowledge works in all these three measures the fullness of all injustice and lawlessness, as also into that of the righteousness, and the reaching of all the mysteries of the Ghost into the three measures[483]. And in it there is the whole movement of the mind, either ascending to the goods or descending to the evil, or in the middle. These measures are called by the Holy Fathers as "according to nature", "contrary to nature" and "above nature". And these are the three plans which ascends and descend in, as I said, the memory of the rational soul[484]. This is for when somebody works the righteousness into nature, or above nature, he is kidnapped by the memory of it, to seeing God withing nature, or he gets out to herd the pigs as one who has lost the richness of his power and who worked with the multitude of the devils.

The Recapitulation of the Three Knowledges

The first stage of the knowledge makes the soul indifferent to the running on the traces of God. The second one warms the soul up through the hurried running on the way of [483] The knowledge, in this sense, it unveils and it also transforms the soul. The knowledge unveils the good possibilities of the man and it fulfills them. It unveils the godlike mysteries and the powers from above-nature and it imprints those within man, in order the man to be able to commit deeds which are above his natural power, but which he aspired to on the line of the good. The three states of the knowledge are, therefore, also three plans of the given and possible reality, three modes of unveiling those, of committing those, and of assimilating them to our being. The knowledge is not a theoretical occupation, but through it the man is accomplished, in a way or another, not only up to the limit of his nature, but also beyond it, endlessly.

[484] "Plans" or "sides" or "regions". Once they are known and impropriated, they can be again left. But, by memory, the soul remains tied to them. Often, we remember the know and left realities, so that we can turn back to them, or that we can think at them for an instant. Through knowledge we understand not only the realities of the nature, strengthening us among them, but also the realities contrary to nature and the realities from above-nature, us impropriating those to ourselves. Our nature has the possibility to connect itself to the plan of the contrary-to-nature realities, and also to the plan of the above-nature realities, and it can fall into the first ones and it can be elevated into the last ones. Out nature it not locked up, strictly, like that one of the animals. But the contrary-to-nature realities get imprinted within nature, and they alter it, while the above-nature-realities when imprinted within our nature they enlarge our nature's powers. The nature moves on all three plans of the reality, which are not only given but they are also possible, so that the man could become satanic while still keeping the countenance of a man, or the man can become godlike, again while preserving a countenance of a man.

the realities belonging to faith. And the third one is that of the resting; and it is the image of the future rejoicing only by the wisdom of the thinking at the future mysteries. But because the nature hasn't got yet totally elevated from the mortal stage and out of the burden of the body, and it hasn't been consummated into the spiritual one that is higher than that that still can deviate, it doesn't have either the power of the consummation, that one that no longer needs to serve and to be in the world of the death; because of not having the power to fully leave the body's nature. And as long as still is in this life, it remains in course of transformation, both in this one and in that one[485]. And by being poor and hungry, the soul serves on the second level – that one in the middle -, through that virtue placed in the nature in order to be worked though the body's nature[486].

And on occasions (for a while), like them who have taken ghost of resurrection into the mystery of the freedom, he rejoices of the grace of the Ghost, by ascending on the level of his Giver, and then he turns again back to the humbleness of his deeds. And these ones are those through the body. Nd the soul keeps these ones, let the enemy will kidnap the soul through the delusions existing in this evil age and through the troubled and deviated from the right-path cogitations. This is because, as long as the man is down, locked up under the cover of the body, the man cannot have surety. This is for there is no consummate freedom in this non-consummate age[487]. That's [485] Until the spiritual man still is in this world, he still is on course of transformation, both in his bodily nature, mortal, and in his spiritual level he is living on.

[486] BY and large, the man by remaining as long as he lives on earth into body and mortal, he cannot persevere into the third stage, i.e. that one of the seeing of the godlike mysteries, and he cannot reach it without the tiredness of those deeds aiming to consummation. He is submitted to change. It is a change that elevated the man for an instance from his bodily condition, but it also lower the man form the state that is outside the human condition, into the condition of the life into body, namely that of the nature. That's why, for the most part of the time the man must actualize the virtues whose potentiality is placed in his nature. By that "the poor and hungry soul is enriched with consummation". The man must serve (liturgize) God in order to achieve his consummation. This is in order the man not to fall below nature and in order the man to ascend, from time to time, at that state that is above-nature. For the most part of the time the man is in the middle state, if he makes the effort to maintain himself in it. But neither this state is totally deprived of grace. The man falls out of grace only when he falls into that state that is beneath-nature. For the most part of the time the man is in the middle stage of working the virtues into body, namely neither in that lower state of the life into sin, nor in that or the full resting into God.

[487] A special accent on our full freedom in the future life was placed by Saint Gregory of Nyssa (see: J. Gaïth, La conception de la liberté chez Saint Grégoire the Nysse, Paris, Vrien, why, the whole work of the knowledge is a work of getting accustomed (of tiring exercising, of growing up). And the work of the faith isn't committed through deeds, but it is accomplished in spiritual understandings and it is above-senses. This is for the faith is subtler that the knowledge is[488], because the knowledge is of the things submitted to the senses. This is for all the saints who are found worthy of this living (that is the kidnapping to God), they live through the power of their faith the joy of that above-nature living.

And we call as faith not that one which one believed through in the difference among the godlike and all-worshipper hypostases and above-everything and characteristic to the godhead, and into the wonderful embodiment of the Word into the humanity taken out of our nature, despite this faith is a very high one, but we refer to that faith that sprouts out within soul out of the light of the grace and it supports the heart through the witness of the understanding, in order the heart to be doubtless in the surety of the hope, stranger to any imagination[489]; that faith that is not shown in accepting the things heard by ears, but it is shown in looking with the spiritual eyes at the mysteries hidden within soul and at the godlike richness hidd4en to the eyes of the sons of the body and unveiled into the Ghost to them who feast at the table of Christ by cogitating at His laws. This is for Himself said: "If you keep My commandments, I will send you the Comforter, the Ghost of the truth, Whom the world cannot receive, and That One will teach you the whole truth" (Jn. 14: 15-16). This shows to the man the holy power dwelling all the time within him, the cover, that strength thought with the mind (intelligible), which always 1953). That freedom will be a liberation from all limitations. It will be a liberation from all impediments pose by body against the soul's enthusiasm. This is for the body will become thinned, spiritualized, transparent, and unsubmitted to passions. Secondly, it will be a liberation from past, or from the past's passionate addictions; but there will be also a cessation of the between present and the hoped future. We will possess then everything we hope for. So, it will be a liberation from body, from space, and from time. It will finally be a possibility of loving consummately on the measure of the consummate knowledge.

[488] This is for its world is subtler too. It is the spiritual world, that is thin not only by its essence, but also through its delicateness.

[489] Saint Isaac speaks not about the faith and teaching, or as content of some phrases, but he speaks about the faith as act, as conviction, on the ground of an understanding, of an intuition, of a mysterious and direct contact with God in Trinity and with Christ, through the work of the Holy Ghost – or of the grace – within soul. Of course, the act of faith, when it is right, it can perceive but the right content of the faith, or God as love, as Trinity, as embodied Word.

cover the man and that banish away from him any harm, so that no harm gets near to the man's soul and body[490]. This strength is felt in an unseen manner by the luminous and understanding mind, with the eyes of its faith[491]. This (the power of the Ghost) it is known by the saints more than by others by trying (experiencing) it.

And this power is the Ghost Himself Who make hot, by the strength of the faith, the soul's parts, as by a fire. And it spreads rapidly and it despises any danger and by the hops in God it is elevated on the wings of the faith, out of the seen creation, and it is shown aa drunk in its kidnapping by the care for the things of God and by the simple sight and by the unseen understanding of the godlike nature, and it accustoms the cogitation to occupy on itself with the taking heed at its hidden things. This is because until that state doesn't come, namely the consummation of the mysteries, and until we aren't found worthy of being those mysteries unveiled to us in a shown manner. The faith liturgizes between God and saints, untold mysteries[492].

May it be that by the help of the grace, through these ones us too to be found worthy of Christ Himself, here by downpayment, and there, in the Kingdom of Heavens, into hypostasis and into truth, together with them who love Him! Amen.

[490] This is an explanation of the faith worthy of being memorized. The Ghost only shows the power of faith existing all the time within man's mind, naturally, namely to set that power in work. The Ghost makes the mind feel that power as out of itself. And this understanding feeling waken up through the Ghost it is the faith. The faith comes out of the collaboration of the Holy Ghost with the man. That's why, he who doesn't believe he cannot invoke the excuse that the Ghost hasn't given him the gift of the faith. He doesn't believe because of not freely collaborating with the Ghost to actualize the faith from within him. On the other hand, the Ghost is over the man like a dome, like a strength, or like a firm sky, which the evil ghosts cannot cross through with their temptations. The Holy Ghost is our defender.

[491] The faith "feels", namely it makes a contact with the reality of the Ghost that is present within man. The faith is the crossing through of the man by the Ghost and the feeling of this crossing through.

[492] The faith is a working bridge between saints - or among them who strive for holiness - and God; the faith fulfills also a serving on this plan, a serving of the mysteries, or through faith are unveiled the mysteries of the life between saints and God.

Word LXVI

About other Ways and Meanings of the Knowledge of Diverse Kinds

That knowledge that moves within the seen realities, or within senses, and it follows their sequencing, it is called as natural. And that knowledge moving on the plan of the thought (intelligible) realities and by their mediation into the bodiless natures, it is called as spiritual, because of receiving its feeling into ghost and not into senses[493]. And these two occur within soul from outside, in order to be known[494]. And that one that is produced on the godlike plan, it is called as above-nature and it is rather known also as above-knowledge[495]. The sight (the contemplation) of this knowledge-above-knowledge is not received by the soul out of a content that is external to the soul, as in the case of the first two kinds of knowledge, but it is shown and it is unveiled out of the realities form within the soul in an immaterial manner, suddenly, and unexpectedly[496]. This is for "The Kingdom of Heavens is within you: (Lk. 17: 21). The Kingdom of Heavens is not hoped for on the ground of some imaginings, neither it comes through judgments formulated on the ground of the work of Christ and by keeping His word, but it [493] It seems to be about the receiving of a feeling of the mind from the Ghost. It seems that Saint Isaac knows a power of the feeling that can be set in work either by senses of by mind. In the last case, this mutation of the feeling is done by the Ghost. This can mean also a transfiguration of that feeling through senses. About a perceptive energy of the senses that cannot be reduced to the senses' materialness, it is mentioned and analyzed also by a certain direction of the psychology from our country.

[494] This phrase is quite meandrous. It seems to be about the birth of these two knowledges within soul from outside the soul, by the touch of the soul to the seen and to the unseen realities, through two kinds of feelings for their knowledge. Properly-said also the knowledge of the intelligible realities is received by the soul also through the mediation of the seen realities, and therefore - in this sense - from outside.

[496] This king od knowledge has the character of a lightening intuition, one that doesn't' use the senses and the rational judgments. The spiritual knowledge is that one that sees the spiritual powers and it sees God too, through the rationalities placed by God within things. God can be seen through the thing's transparency to Him.

is unveiled from within the way of the hidden cogitation, without a certain cause, and without a researching of it[497].

Interpretation to the Things Said Above

The first knowledge is born out of continuous researching and out of zealous learning; the second one, out of the good living and out of the pious cogitation; and the third one has been appointed only to faith. This is because in it the knowledge ceases and the deeds come to an end and the use of the senses becomes superfluous. So, the more the knowledge descends within these borders, the more it will be honored[498]. And the more it descends the more it will be honored. And when it reaches the ground and the earthly realities, the knowledge masters over all realities and outside the knowledge anything is overlooked and useless. And when the soul raises its sight upwards and when the soul unfolds his meanings in the heavenly realities and when the soul desires the realities which cannot be seen with the eyes and which are not in the power of the body, then all of those are upheld by faith[499].

[497] The expression εσωθεν της ειχόνος την διανοίας can be translated both as: "from within the hidden way of the cogitation" and as: from within the image hidden into cogitation". The cogitation is an image that hides on God, or God is an image hidden into cogitation. This image (role model) sometimes penetrates the cogitation by becoming visible. This kind of knowledge doesn't base on itself on using the images (the things) as the natural kind of knowledge does, neither it bases on itself on the judgments founded on the words of Christ, words which are passed into the deeds of the virtues, but it is based on the direct seeing of the mysteries.

[498] The godlike reality becomes seen unexpectedly, without rational deductions from cause to effect.

[499] Nicephorus Theotokis interprets this word like this: "There are three kinds of knowledge: that one coming from study and learning; that one coming from hearing with faith; and that one coming from revelation and from being imparted with the grace of the All-Holy Ghost. The last one is the superior one and it is more consummate than the other two and it is bestowed only them who have reached the peak of the virtue". By calling this one too as faith, and therefore by saying that this is not shown through deeds, but by spiritual meanings and into the simple work of the soul, above senses, he adds here also the word "the more it descends the more it will be honored". And him who has been found worthy of such a knowledge, if he descends from the high and above-senses seeing (from the high and above-senses contemplation), down to the earthly realities, it will enjoy the greatest honor. This is for this one by having within themselves the hot faith as a grain of mustard and by being full of entrustment, he doesn't only know in details the realities form the creation but, because he can master over all realties, he commands what he wants. "For if you have faith like a grain of mustard, you will tell this mountain: move yourself from here there, and it will move, and

Word LXVII

About that Soul than Tends towards the Deep Sight, in Order to Sink Himself in that Deep Sight out of the Bodily Thoughts and out of the Memory of the Things

Any one thing that is higher than another it is hidden to that thing which it is higher in comparison to. And this doesn't mean that that thing has by nature another body as a curtain, in order to be able to unveil its hidden. This doesn't mean that one can reach the Prime Light in the most limpid mode, in an unmediated manner, or on another level, one that though isn't separated form that according to the place[500], but according to the cleanness which he can received it with, and according to the height of that cleanness, namely according to the measure of the minds, or according to the power for receiving the views and the higher powers.

All the understanding beings are hidden to them who are lower, but not through a nature that would differentiate them, but by the movements of the virtues. But I am not saying this about the Holy Powers, about the beings endowed with soul, and about demons. The first ones are hidden from them who are in the middle, and the ones form the middle are hidden from those from the third plan, both by nature and by place, as also through movements. And we believe that each one of these is hidden to another in its inside through knowledge, either they can see on one another or not, but from those which are lower by nature[501]. For the bodiless reality cannot be seen through a sight focused on them from outside them, unlike the bodily realities which can be seen by a sight external to them, but by nothing will be impossible to you" (Mt. 11: 20). But it could be that Nicephorus Theotokis not to agree what it is said in this text further on, where it is analyzed more, seemingly, the honor this kind of knowledge it receives form people. He could agree also the explanation that the more the knowledge occupies on itself with the lowest things, the more honored will be, by being able to knows those things more exactly.

[500] Here it is being alluded the teaching of Dionysus the Areopagite, according to which the first angelic level contemplates in an unmediated manner the Prime Light, or God, while the other angelic groups do that through the mediation of the intermediary levels. But Saint Isaac adds that that doesn't mean a separation of the other levels from God.

[501] The cherubs are hidden from Seraphs through knowledge; a man who is on a higher spiritual level, likewise, he is hidden - in many concerns – to them who are on a lower spiritual level. But the Holy Powers are hidden from people also through nature.

the fact that the bodiless realities can see on one another we say that one of them are inside the movements while others are through the virtues and of the measure of the movements[502]. That's why, either they are equally honored or they are differently honored, they see on one another not through imagination, but through a non-liar and true-by-nature sight, except on the cause of all of them that is above their diversity and that is the only one all-worshipped.

The demons, though they are very filthy, they are not hidden from one another on their levels. But they cannot see the two orders which are above them[503]. This is for the spiritual sight is the light of the movement. And this one itself is them mirror and eye[504]. But when their movements get darkened, they no longer see the levels from above themselves[505]. But the devils see on one another within their order because of being thicker than the angelic groups[506]. These are the things I have wanted to tell you about the devils.

But the soul, to the extent they are defiled and darkened, they cannot see either on one another or on themselves. But when the soul gets cleaned and they come again back to their state from the beginning, they will see clearly the three orders: that one from beneath themselves, that one from above themselves, and on one another. So, not because of changing their bodily quality, they can see the angels, the devils, an on one another, but they will see through itself their spiritual [502] The seraphs see the Cherubs or they are seen by Cherubs within them, for the movements of their virtues are the more intense movements of the movement of those ones.

[503] The devils cannot see the inside of the angelic groups, neither they can see the people's inside.

[504] It is interesting this definition given to sight, to conscience, and to knowledge: it is the light of the movement. There are blind movements which cannot see anything. The knowledge is a movement, but it is a luminous movement. There takes place a union between movement and light. Or, the highest movement is the luminous movement. The light is movement too. And the (spiritual) light in movement it is knowledge. And knowledge of the self, or the knowledge, it is a movement of the light, or it is the light of the movement turned towards itself. It is an eye seeing on itself and it is a transparent mirror of him who sees on himself in that mirror.

[506] Being thicker, they can see on one another. The thickness is more easily seen by an inferior sight. The thickness of the demons is, of course, of spiritual order. A being that is full of hatred, of agitation, it will be felt, it will be seen more easily, because of disturbing the other more. They who are thick in this sense they will see the thick ones but they cannot see the thin ones. But the thin ones see the thick (rude) ones.

nature and order. And if you told me that it is impossible one to see the demon, or the angel, if they to not change on themselves and take a visible to man countenance, namely that not the soul sees but only the body does it, I answer you that, if it was so, why would the soul need cleaning?

Actually, the devils show themselves to the unclean people too, and even the angels do that, but when the people see them with the bodily eyes, they see them without needing any cleanness. But that soul that has been cleaned doesn't see like that, but spiritually, with the eye of the nature, namely with the intuiting and understanding eye. And if the souls see on one another, even while the souls still are within body, you won't wonder yourself about that. This is for I am bringing you the testimony of somebody who confesses the truth, namely of Blessed Athanasius the Great, who said in his writing about Anthony the Great that, while the Great Anthony was sitting at prayer, he saw somebody's soul ascending with much honor and he blessed him who had been worthy of being shared with such a glory. That one was the Blessed Amon from Nitria. And the mountain which Saint Anthony was living at it was thirteen days far from Nitria.

It was shown through that example, relatedly to the three mentioned orders, the fact that the spiritual natures, even though they are far from one another, they still can see on each other. Likewise, the souls, when they are clean, they do not see bodily but spiritually. This is because the bodily sight is visible and it sees the present realities. But the realities from far need a different kind of sight in order to be seen.

The groups from above are many and countless according to their existence and they are called according to the kinds and levels. For, why would otherwise be called as Principalities, Dominions, and Powers? And the Masteries might have been called like that for they are honored, and they are fewer that those form beneath them, as said Saint Dionysus the Bishop of Athens[507]. Everything is through mastery, through knowledge, very great and totally differing from one another according to the level of their states. And for they are chaining from level to [507] Theotokis says that the Masteries are known less than the ranks which are beneath to them (Principalities, Dominions, and Powers), for they master these ones. He also says that Saint Isaac is among the first to mention the writings of Dionysus the Areopagite, which he firstly mentioned at a Synod from the year 532, when Saint Isaac was still living.

level until reaching the unity of the Greatest and Strongest than all of them, and Who is the Head and the Ground of the entire creation. And I am calling head not the Builder, but on the first and most wonderful creatures of God[508]. This is for many are below the Providence and below the Wisdom of God Who is theirs and our Maker. And the more their subjects are the lower are themselves. And they are inferior in height and in smallness, and not in space, but in power and in knowledge, according to the measure they have received, the smaller knowledge following after the bigger knowledge.

The godlike Scripture has mentions us all these understanding beings by two spiritual names and as divided on three levels. The first one is divided in the great and high and all-holy Chairs, in the Cherubs with many eyes, and in the Seraph with six wings. The second level in Dominions, Powers, and Masteries. The third level in Principalities, Archangels and Angels. These levels men in Hebrew the followings: the Seraphs are the hot, burning ones; the Cherubs are them having much knowledge and wisdom; the Chairs are them who receive and who rest God within themselves. These groups were called like that also according to their works. The Chairs mean the honored ones; the Dominions are them who master upon any kingdom; the Principalities are them who rule the sky; the Masteries are them who master upon nations and upon each man; the Powers are them who are strong in power and fearsome at countenance; the Seraphs are them who sanctify; the Cherubs are them who carry; the Archangels are the full of vigil guardians; the Angels are the envoy ones.

On the first day were created the seven natures understanding in silence and with voice[509], that what is the [508] "The Head and the Foundation and the first among the wonders of the deeds of God" he calls on Jesus Christ. For He is the Head of all Principality and Dominion (Col. 2: 10) and He is the cornerstone, that chosen one, that honored (1 Pt. 2: 7) and the foundation laid, outside which nobody can lay down another foundation (1 Cor. 3: 11). "Though Him the skies were strengthened" (Ps. 32: 6 (in KJB we have: Ps. 33: 6 (E. l. t.'s n.))), "the ages were made" (Hebr. 1: 2), and were committed "the great and wonderful realities". Christ is called as "deed" of God according to his humanity. Even in this quality Christ is above all angelic groups.

[509] "Maybe the nine ones". They are understanding by silently understanding the greatness of God. Olivier Clément says that even in the silence of the face, therefore also of the soul, there is a profound understanding. About the silence of the face, he says: "It is the silence, it is the full silence, epiphanic, that transforms the entire face in a transcendental presence… The mouth can speak out of the supra-abundance of the silence" (Le visage interior, Stöck, Paris, light[510]. On the second day, the strength. On the third day God gathered the waters and He made the plants to sprout out. On the fourth Day God shared the light. On the fifth day God created the birds, the reptiles, and the fish. On the sixth day God gave to the entire world a settlement, or its length and width. God gave the world, as beginning, the sunrise; as end the sunset; the things from the right as north; the things form the left, as south. God made all the earth like a bedding and the ones from above as a skin, as a dome, as a circle; and the second circle as a wheel attached to the first one; and the ones of the earth attached to the ones of the sky. And the ocean like a girdle surrounding the sky and the earth. And inside it, high mountains reaching the sky. And the sun behind the mountains in order the sun to cross behind the mountains for the whole night. And the great sea inside these mountains, occupying a half and a quarter of the dry land[511]. And the glory be of our God!

About the Guarding of the Heart and about a Subtler Sight (Contemplation)

If you are alone in your cell and you haven't achieved yet power for a true sight (contemplation), you will always occupy on yourself with the cogitation at the troparia and at the kathisma, and with the thought at death and with the hope for the future realities. This is for these ones gather the mind and they don't let the mind to get scattered, until there will come the true sight (contemplation). This is for the power of the ghost is stronger than the passions are. You will also cogitate at the hope for the future realities, united with the remembrance of God, and you will understand well the meaning of the troparia 1978, pp. 14-15). But the angelic powers also communicate somehow the godlike greatness through their speaking and amazed silence, or through their "silent" voice.

[510] By the fact that their being is understanding, they are light by excellence. Saint Isaac says that it refers to them that "light" which the Genesis says about that God created, on the first day, the "light".

[511] This was the vision upon world at that time.

and you will guard on yourself against the external things which move you towards lusts. And take heed at your small deeds, as also at things. And you will always examine your thoughts and you will pray for earning eyes in all your behavior[512]. From here it starts springing out the joy. And then you will find the troubles sweeter than the honey.

Nobody can defeat his passions except by the felt and seen virtues. And the scattering of the mind cannot be defeated by anybody except by using the spiritual reading. Our mind is light and it not tied to a certain thought it won't stop from scattering. And without the consummation of the virtues mentioned before, one cannot achieve this guarding. This is because if somebody doesn't defeat these enemies he won't be let alone. And if the peace doesn't reign within him, how will be him able to find out the realities placed within the peace? This is for the passions are a wall in front of the hidden virtues of the soul. And if the passions do not fall by the showing of the virtues, the ones from within won't be seen. Neither can somebody, while being outside the wall, to live into the ones from within the wall. And nobody will see the Sun into darkness, neither the virtue of the soul's nature, as long as the disturbance of the passions still persists within him[513].

You pray God Him to give you to feel the longing for Him and the desire for Him. This is for, when this feeling and the desire for the Ghost have come to you, you will be able to part with the world; and the world will part with you. But one cannot feel This One without appeasement and ascesis and without the speaking regarding the reading about these things. And without these ones one cannot find those ones. This is because, if you search for them, they will leave after a little while and there will occur the bodily ones. Let him who understand, to understand. The Lord deigned the wise man to eat this bread in sweats. The [512] All your behavior to be a sight to you, or guided by a sight, by an understanding. You be like a Cherub who is entirely eyes.

[513] The guarding isn't a simple technique, but it is gained at the end of the virtues committed through the body. Each virtue represents a victory of our will in a side or another of our being, and it will bring peace form a certain passion. On the superior plan stays the non-scattering of the mind's thoughts. This is the work of the mind's guarding. But only inside this peace one can see the godlike realities hidden within mind, or unveiled to the mind. Until then, the passions stay as a wall in the way of our sight that is directed towards inside. This wall must be torn down through virtues. By that one gains both the peace and the transparency to the godlike realities. The treasures from inside, as seen through the soul, are also called as soul's virtues, unlike the virtues which are accomplished through the body.

Lord didn't do that out of evilness, but in order they not to remain unconsumed within us and we to die. This is for each virtue is the mother of the next virtue. So, if you leave the mother that gave birth to the virtues, and you start going to search for its daughters before you have achieved the mother of the virtues, those virtues will become vipers within your soul. And if you do not cast them away from you, you will surely die[514].

Word LXIX

About the Diverse Teachings and about the Benefit out of Each One

The spiritual feeling is that one having the feature of receiving the seeing (contemplative) power[515], like the apples of the eye does, which have within them the power of receiving the light submitted to the senses. The mental sight (contemplation) is a natural knowledge united with the state of the nature, that it is called as natural light. It is the holy power of the gift of the discernment placed between light and sight (contemplation)[516]. The knower natures are some existences endowed with the discernment coming to them out of light, on the purpose of the seeing (contemplation). The passions are some sort of callous being[517].

[514] Through pride the virtues become vipers biting on others, but they also poison him who have them. The image of the viper is used also in The Ladder (Word IX).

[515] "Η ποιωθεισα", namely that one that has been prepared through learning. This is for he says that the sight of the mind (νοητη θεωρία) is natural, it is obvious that through spiritual feeling he means the feeling of the mind. he who has prepared on himself through learning, he then will receive the seeing (contemplative) power. It is a sense entering the direct contact with the godlike realities, as one enters through his bodily sight the contact with the seen realities.

[516] "The gift (charisma) of the discernment (this is the sun that discerns), that distinguishes both the natural light from within us and the views coming to us through our mind, he called it as holy light. This is for this one, by gathering and by making perfect all the virtues, it brings the gift of the holiness. That's why too it is greater than all the others and it is their emperor". The discernment is placed in that light that requires to be seen and the mind that sees that light. The discernment passes the power of the sight from potentiality into act.

[517] Saint Isaac, as all the Eastern Fathers, he had a great confidence in the human nature. This was for they reckoned that the human nature is created in order to see God and to be filled up

The cleanness is the making limpid of the mind's sky, whose bosom is being erected in our winged-up nature[518]. If the mind isn't healthy in nature, the knowledge won't work in it[519], like the bodily sense lack its sight when harmed because of certain causes. And if the mind is healthy but the knowledge doesn't take place, it will mean that the mind doesn't work outside itself in order to discern among the spiritual realities, like also the eye can be healthy but it doesn't set in working the sight of the sense. Even though the mind remains into its own things, if the grace is not near to them, all of those will remain unworking in fulfilling the service of the discernment, like in the absence of the sun the people spend their nigh without seeing, even though all their organs are healthy and perfect, namely both the eye and the sight, as also the undiscerned things or which are not discerned[520]. This is what was said: "Into Your light we will see light: (Ps. 35: 9[521]). But if the grace of the Sun thought with the mind it come near to us, and He moves our desire and He entices us to watchfulness, but our mind is not clean, that light will be seen as an empty sky, one non-transparent, because of the thickness of the clouds and of the matters which easily stretch on themselves as a darkness towards the light of the sun which we are gladden by into the joy of the seeing[522].

with God's work. Thew work of God doesn't do else but to set in act a potentiality of the nature. Like the eye is created for the sensitive light that sets in act the eye's power of seeing (because the eye sees this light only when this light is present), likewise is with the natural mind of the man. When these potentialities are set in working the nature manifests in its normal movement. Through the passions which impede the human nature to place on itself in communication with the light, the human nature is becoming callous and it also is being crooked.

[518] "Through the sky of the mind he means the godlike aura of the Ghost".

[519] It is about the spiritual knowledge that is born out of the encounter between mind and the godlike light.

[520] Our nature is necessary in order to see the higher realities, but it cannot activate this power of it without the godlike grace.

[521] In KJB we have: Ps. 36: 9: "For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light."; in ROB we have: Ps. 35: 9: "For at You is the spring of the life, into Your light we will see light." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[522] "Regardless how much one would be taught and wise and endowed with discernment, if the grace of God doesn't lighten him, because of the uncleanness of his passions, he will walk without discernment and in darkness. This is for the discernment from within us and the natural light are without result in their works if they are not lightened by the godlike light". The "empty sky" means maybe a soul empty of deeds, of light, and of grace.

When the sight lips in its power of seeing (of discerning), the nature is empty of work. The soul is impeded from feeling the joy from the Second Sun[523] that dawns over all realities, because of the bodily worries set upon it, worries which cover the truth's light, so that it won't come to us. So, we necessarily need all the said things, especially because one hardly can find all of these in a man, without any diminution, and without any stain, and therefore most of people cannot reach the consummation of a spiritual knowledge. Thus, the lack comes out of the mind's helplessness, out of inappropriately choosing the purpose, out of the confusion of the will, out of the lack of cleanness, and out of not finding a teacher and an adviser; out of these comes the ceasing of the grace. "It is not good to him who is short in speaking, neither the richness, nor the mastery of the great ones" (Wisdom of Sirach 14: 3[524]), out of the impediment of the times, of the places, and of the behaviors.

Some Short Heads

The truth is a sense according to the will of God, being into the feeling of the senses of the spiritual mind. It is a sense tasted by somebody within himself[525].

The love is the fruit of the prayer leading through its sight the mind that is insatiable in its longing, when the mind perseveres in prayer and when the man prays in his mind only through silent and full of fire thoughts, and warmly.

The prayer is the killing of the thoughts of that will that is according to body's life. He who prays is totally identical to him who has dies to the world. And denying somebody on himself is [523] "The first sun is the natural discernment. The second sun is the grace from God. If that one has been existing within us, it has been guided from the second one". But the second one is more properly called as sun, and on can understand Christ by it, in Whose light we see all the realities, by having healthy our power of discernment, like we discern in the light of the seen sun, when our bodily eye is healthy and it has the power of the sensitive discernment. The worldly worries though, they weaken the power of discernment of the mind's eye, that one that we use to see Christ.

[524] This book is not present in KJB. One can find it on www.academia.edu, translated in English from Romanian, as it is given in ROB, together with the other books missing from KJB (14 in total). (E. l. t.'s n.)

[525] Here are analyzed several senses of the spiritual mind, similar to the diversity of the bodily senses. The mind has also a general feeling, but this feeling too is allotted in several senses, as it is in the case of the body's senses.

one with persevering into prayer. And the love for God is in the self-denial of the soul[526].

As out of the seed of the sweat sprouts out the wheat-ear of the righteousness, likewise out of satiation sprout out the debauchery, and out of gorging with food sprouts out the uncleanness. Out of the hungry and humiliated belly never will come out defiled thoughts. Any digested food becomes an adding to the juices from within us and a natural vigor within us. When the body's limbs are filled with the impulse of the whole body, impulse that reaches into the limbs, it happens to see a bodily image; or, if the heart moves unwillingly, by being pushed by a thought, it will suddenly occur out of that thought an image of pleasure and that will conquer the whole body. Even if the cogitation of him who is righteous and clean in his thoughts, his right-reckoning will be immediately disturbed by that feeling from his limbs and his cogitation will descend from the place it has been before like on some high place. And the decency of the thoughts will roll downwards and his illustrious righteousness will be defiled because of the disturbance brought by passions that enters the heart through the excitement of the limbs. And then half of his power will become helpless, so that one could say that he has forgotten the first purpose of his hope and, even before entering the battle, he is defeated without fighting. And without any effort of his enemies, he has obeyed the will of his helpless body. To all of these is forcedly submitted the will of the virtuous man, by his urge to ceaselessly be satiated. And if he lives peacefully in the reals of the righteousness, he tends to surrender on himself to those things which have never wanted to ascend in his heart.

And when the sleeps alone, he is surrounded by the pilling up of those full of vain hallucinations and defiled thoughts, and those thoughts make his bedding unclean, and host of the fornication, and theater of the hallucinations. And when he communicates with his thought by speaking, into a drunkenness of his thoughts, his mind will become agitated and a stormy sea, and his mind will fall under the power of the waves rushing in upon the mind out of the body's sea, because of the gorging of his belly.

Of, you the righteousness, what strongly your beauty shines like, in the sleeping on the floor and in the way of the hunger, which take the sleep away from you, through the heavy suffering of the body, when some sort of deep pit opens between the ribs and the stomach, due to the absence of the food! All the food and all the gorging of the bally receive inside us the contrivance of the defiled hallucination and shameless images, which are born out of those ones, and which come out and appear into the hidden place of our cogitation and they tickle us, and they cause us a hidden mating with the defiled things. And the empty stomach makes out thinking a desert place having peace from thoughts and peaceful of any disturbance from thoughts. But the full and satiated stomach is a place of the hallucinations, and a balcony of the inappropriate hallucinations, even if we are alone into wilderness. This is for the satiation, he says, lusts for many things.

When you are found worthy of the godlike gift and of the dispassion of your soul, you must know that that hasn't happened to you because the unclean thoughts stopped crossing through you, or because of not having occurred everywhere within you any movement of bodily thoughts (because no one can be without those), neither because those ones have been easily defeated by you (because the cogitation cannot remain totally undefiled and undisturbed, regardless how highly spiritual the cogitation would be)[527], but because your mind doesn't renounce to fight them through the thoughts of the higher work and to destroy them; and this is because , when some thought occurs, the mind will be kidnapped from near to that thought, forcedly, by some above-the-will power, that preserves by habituation and by grace the good dough within heart, that is the house of the cogitation[528].

It is different the mind of the ascetic from the nature's order. That cogitation that by heavenly mercy it has died to the world, that cogitation has only simple thoughts about things, [527] In the Greek text is said the opposite: for the mind doesn't get darkened and it doesn't get disturbed regardless how highly spiritual it would be. But we think that such wording is nonsensical.

[528] In the later "Method" of the prayer of the heart, under the name of Nicephorus from Loneliness (The Romanian Philokalia, volume VII, p. 31), it will be said that the mind that is gathered during prayer within the heart, it is like a husband returning home from a journey. There, into the warmth of the heart, the mind and its cogitation feel well; there they have found the truest reality. The habituation to appeasement, helped by grace, it makes the mind to banish away the defiled thought that occurs. We are noticing here again the together-working of the man with the grace.

without fight and without war[529]. The consummation yoked together with the body and with the blood reigns over the thoughts springing out of body and out of blood, and it doesn't abolish the nature's ones until the living cogitation of the man still moves into the live upheld by natural elements, namely until the foundation of his mind takes its change in any movement and impulse out of the four juices. And the glory to be of our God forever and ever! Amen.

About the Words of the Godlike Scripture, which Urge us to Repentance; and about the Fact that Those Words Have Been Said for the Weakness of the People, in order They not to Perish from the Living God; and about the Fact that They Must not Be Understood as Occasion for Committing Sins

The manhood asked by the fathers in their godlike writings and the urge to repentance form the Scriptures of the apostles and of the prophets, they must not be understood as a help and as an urge towards sinning, or for transgressing the impassable borders of the Lord which have been ordered from old through the mouth of the saints in all the Scriptures and laws for the destruction of the sin. But they have been given to us for, by liberating our feeling from the fear of the despair, us to have our hope through repentance and by that every man to run and reach the repentance and so no one to continue sinning carelessly. This is for God put the fear in all Scriptures and He showed that He hates the sin.

Why, therefore, the whole mankind was drowned during Noah's days? Wasn't that because of the debauchery, when they got mad after the beauty of the daughters of Cain? This is for, at that time wasn't either love for money or wars. And why were burnt the cities of Sodom? It wasn't because they surrendered their limbs to the lust and to uncleanness, so that those ones take all of them under their mastery, by people's will and the people indulged themselves to defiled and shameless deeds? It wasn't because of the fornication of a sole man they fell prey to death, through a sole approval, twenty-five thousand of the sons of that first born Israel? Why was throw away from God the giant Samson who was consecrated and sanctified to God since he was in his mother's womb, and who was heralded before his birth by angels, as to John and to Zachariah, he who was found worthy of a great power and of great deeds? It wasn't that because of being defiled his holy limbs by the mating with the whore? And David, the one who was according to God's heart, he who was found - due to his virtues – worthy of being brought to completion through his seed the promise given to his ancestors and out of him to shine Christ for the salvation of the whole world, wasn't him punished for adultery with a sole woman, when he looked with his eyes to her beauty and because of that he received in his soul the arrow? This is for because of that was started him war from his household and he who existed his thigh chased him and for that David repented with many tears, so that he wetted his bedding with his tears and God told him through the prophet: "The Lord removed you sin from you" (2 Kings 12: 13[530]).

[529] The expression "simple thought", or "simple meaning" of the things can be found also at Saint Maximos the Confessor. Could it be that Saint Maximos took this expression from Saint Isaac the Syrian? Or it could be that this writing of Saint Isaac dates from after Saint Maximos?

But I want you to remember also some things from before those. Whys came the anger and the death upon the house of priest Eli, the righteous old man, who shone into priesthood for forty years? Not because of the lawlessness of his sons, Ophni and Phineas? Because neither him committed sin willingly. But because he didn't have the zeal to ask his sons to honor the Lord, and because he loved his sons more than Lord's commandments. This is in order one not to reckon that the Lord shows His anger upon them who lived on all the days of their life in lawlessness, because of this inappropriate sin, behold that the Lord shows His anger also upon them who truly are His, priests, judges, rulers, and sanctified people of His, whom he entrusted with the doing of wonders. It was shown thus, that when occur some people who transgress His laws, He won't overlook them by any means but, as it is written as Hezekiel: "I told the man, whom I commanded to destroy Jerusalem with the unseen sword, to start in front of My alter and to have no mercy on old or young" (Heze. 9: 6). This is in order to be shown that are truly love by Him they who walk with fear and awe before Him and who do His will; and saints are to Him they who commit virtuous deeds and who have a clean conscience.

But on them who mock the ways of the Lord, He mocked them too and He throws them away from His face and He withdraws His grace form them. This is because why came out unexpectedly the decision against Balthasar and He condemned him on the way of the hand? Not because he dared to touch the things consecrated to the Lord, which are untouchable, by stealing them form Jerusalem and by drinking out of them with his concubines? So are destroyed, by an unseen blow, also they who consecrated their limbs to God and then they dare again to use them in worldly deeds.

Therefore, let's not despise while waiting for repentance - by our evil daring - the God words and menaces given us by Him through the godlike Scriptures; let's not anger Him by our indecent deeds and let's not defile our limbs after we have consecrated them to serving God. Because, behold, we too have been consecrated to Him as Eli and Elijah and as the sons of the prophets and as the other saints and virgins who committed wonderful deeds and who spoke to God face to face; and like all the ones form after that, as the virginal John, as saint Peter and as the other list of evangelists and of the preachers of the New Settlement, who consecrated on themselves to the Lord and who received His mysteries, some of them out of Lord's mouth, others through unveilings, and they became mediators between God and people and heralders of the Kingdom all over the world.

Word LXXI

About the Things which One Could Achieve the Changing of the Hidden Meanings together with the Changing of His External Living

As long as one is in lack of wealth, he always thinks at his exit from this life. He always cogitates at that living from after resurrection and he prepared for that all the time. He is patient in any temptation coming from being dishonored or from bodily resting which occur in his thinking. And all the time it is moving within his cogitation the thought of despising the world. And he dares in his cogitation and he achieves a strong heart all the time and towards any danger and fear which work the death. And he even doesn't fear the death. This is for he thinks at death all the time as it is drawing closer and he is waiting for it. And his worry is thrown upon God with doubtless hope. And if he meets troubles, he is convinced and he surely knows that they bring him crows. That's why he endures the troubles with the whole joy and he gladly receives them. This is for he knows that God Himself if Him Who appoint those troubles to him, for some unknown gains and through an unshown oikonomia.

And if it happened to him, because of some reason, some destructive things through the work and through the plot of the one who is craftsman in all evil things, on the same instance the lust of his body starts moving within his soul. And he starts thinking at a long life and there starts ascend within his soul thoughts of resting and the things of his body get strengthened in him and he starts searching all the time for gathering the things which can rest him and he exits the freedom that is not submitted to some of the thoughts of the fear. And consequently, he is always cogitating and contriving, in everything, thought which cause fear and he thinks at reasons for fear. This is because of being taken from him that courage of his heart, which he gained it while he was higher than the world, in his state lacking of wealth that was enriching his soul, because of being him now inheritor of the world, on the measure of the things he has achieved. And he received within himself the fear of the things according to the law and according to the rule established by God. This is because on the measure that our limbs work the things of the fear, we become slaves and submitted to serving the fear, according to the words of the Apostle (Hebr. 2: 15).

Before all the passions stay the love for the self. And before all virtues there stays the despising of the resting. He who surrenders his body to resting he causes to his body troubles instead of peace. He who delighted on himself in his youth he becomes slave at old age and he sighs during his last days. As him who keeps his head under water, he cannot breathe the thin air poured into his emptied lung, likewise it cannot receive the breathing of the feeling of that new world he who sinks his cogitation into the worry for the things from here. As the stench of the death disturbs the sap of the life, likewise the indecent view disturbs the peace of the thought. As it is impossible to live the health and the illness together in the same body and one not to destroy another, likewise it is impossible to inhabit the same house the richness in money and the love and not to be one destroyed by another. As the glass hit by a stone cannot remain intact, neither that saints that parties and remains and talks to a woman can remain into his cleaned without getting defiled. Like the trees are uprooted by the fury of the waters and by the waters' continuous flooding, likewise the love of the world is plucked off the heart by the overpouring of the trials coming upon the body.

Like the medicines clean up the uncleanness of the bad juices from within body, likewise the harshness of the trouble cleans up the evil things from within heart. As the dead cannot feel the living things, likewise the monk's soul buried sunk in quietude is protected against the storm that uses to blow out of feeling the things which move amid people. As he who spares his enemy at war cannot remain unharmed, likewise he who lives in ascesis cannot deliver his soul from perdition by sparing his body. As the child gets scared by the fearsome views and he runs and grabs his parents' clothes, likewise the soul, when pressured upon and troubled by the fear of the temptations, that soul runs closer towards God and ask God in ceaseless prayer. And as long the temptations last rushing in one after another, the monk multiplied his prayer. And when he reaches again at large, he surrenders on himself again to scattering.

As they who are surrendered in the hand of the judges to be punished for their evil deeds, when they get closer to torments they get humble and they immediately confess their evil deed they will get their punishment diminished and they will get away with smaller torments, but if they remain callous regarding their confession, they will add to their torments other torments, and at the end, after many torments, when their rids will have been covered in wounds, they will unwillingly confess, but their confession will be useless, likewise is to us too: when we are surrendered, out of mercy, because our sins recklessly committed by us, in the hands of the Right Judge of everybody, and we are about to face the stick of the trials, as long as our punishment for our sins is easy, if when the stick of the Judge comes closer to us we humble on ourselves and we recall the injustice done by us and we confess those in from of Him, we will quickly be delivered through short trials; but if we get callous in our troubles and we do not confess on ourselves as guilty as charged and worthy even to suffer more than we suffer, but we blame the people or, sometimes, the devils, or the righteousness of God, and if we present on ourselves as innocent of such deeds and we do not reckon that God knows us better and that all over the world there are the judgments of God and that without God's commandment no one is punished, then all the things coming upon us will cause us a ceaseless grief and our troubles will become awful and we are tied to one another as by a rope, until we know on ourselves and we humble on ourselves and we feel our injustice. This is because without feeling us these it will be impossible us to come to straightening. And by suffering many troubles all the way to the end of our life, we will make our confession useless, because, by making it then, it won't be able to bring us comforting. But feeling on his own sins it is a gift coming from God and it occurs in his thinking when God sees that that man suffered all sorts of trials, so that that man not to leave from here burdened with all the narrowing and troubles because in such a case that man wouldn't benefit anything of this world. But the understanding come to us not due to the heaviness of our troubles, but because of our nescience. Often, some of us, while being in such troubles, they exit this world guilty and unconfessed, denying their guilt and blaming others. But the merciful God waits that they somehow will get humble, so that Him to forgive them and to deliver them. And God delivers them not only from their trials, but God even forgives their mistakes, by having mercy on the little confession of our heart.

As a certain many, bringing a big gift to the emperor, he will achieve from emperor a smiling look, likewise he who makes his prayer with tears, God, the Great Emperor of the ages will forgive him his mistakes and God will make him gain from His a full of grace look.

Like that sheep that leaves the flock and walks separately form its shepherd will come night to the wolves' den, likewise that monk who parts with the assembly of his companions under the motif of a living in quietude, he will be met by views and he will walk towards those and he will get close to those, and thus he will cross through all the things one can see in the cities.

Like a man who carries on his shoulder a very precious stone, and he leaves for a trip on a road haunted by thieves and famous for evil things, he will be all the time dominated by the fear of being attacked, likewise him who carries the precious stone of the righteousness and he walks among the world on the road of his enemies, he won't have hope for escaping his enemies and the plunderers of the earth, until he will have reached the place (the monastery of the monastic cell) of his tomb (that is the place of his hope). Could him who carries the very precious stone not to fear? Likewise, the monk too doesn't know in what place and out of what hidings and at what time the thieves can occur within him and they can disrobe him of his hope. And he will reach robbed his house, that is the time of his old age.

Like that man who drinks wine and he gets drunk on the day of the weeping, he will forget about all the grief for his pains, likewise him who is drunk with the love for God he will forgive, in this world of the crying, all his pains and sorrows and he will become insensitive towards all the passions of the sin, due to his drunkenness. His heart leans on his hope in God and his soul is a light and winged bird; and all the time his cogitation is elevated from earth and it flies above people, in his occupation with his own thoughts, and it is delighted in the immortal realities of The Highest Whom to be the glory and the mastery forever and ever! Amen.

Word LXXII

It Comprises Useful Teachings, Full of the Wisdom of the Ghost

The faith is the door of the mysteries. This is for what the bodily eyes are to the things submitted to the senses, likewise it is the faith, with its understanding eyes, to the hidden treasuries[531]. We have, as the fathers say, two souly eyes, as we have the two eyes of our body. And we do not use both of them identically in seeing. With one spiritual eye we look at the hidden realities of God's glory, hidden within things, namely God's power and wisdom and His Providence together eternal towards us, that one that we can know out of the greatness of His organization. Likewise, with this spiritual eye we look at the angelic groups together-serving with us. And with the other spiritual eye we look at the glory of His holy nature, when He deigns to lead us inside the spiritual mysteries, and when He opens the sea of the faith within our cogitation[532].

The repentance has been given to the people after Baptism, as grace upon grace. This is for the repentance is the second birth out of God, and the gift whose downpayment we have received it through faith, and we are going to receive that gift by repentance. The repentance is the door of the mercy open them who search for it. Through this door we enter to mercy; and if we do not cross through this door, we won't find the mercy. Because all of us committed sin, according to the godlike Scripture, "being us straightened as a gift through His gift" (Rom. 3: 24). The repentance is the second grace that is born within heart out of faith and fear. And the fear is the parental stick guiding us until we will have reached the spiritual Paradise of the goods. And when we reach there, it leaves us and it turns back.

The Paradise is the love of God which the delectation with all happinesses is comprised in[533]. It is the place where the Blessed Paul was fed nourished with an above-nature food. And after he tasted there out of the tree of life he shouted out, saying: "The things which the eye hasn't seen and the ear hasn't heard and at the man's heart haven't ascended, those [531] The faith is a spiritual sense that enters the touch with the godlike and mysterious world, like the bodily sight enters the touch with the seen things. Through faith enters the godlike and full of mystery meanings of godlike powers, as the rays of the seen things enter our being through our sensitive eyes.

[532] Saint Isaac doesn't separate the faith from cogitation. Through faith the cogitation enters the endlessness of meanings, above meaning, of the godlike life. That's why the cogitation is faith too, or the faith is cogitation as well. This second eye allows us to see God within us, in this ocean that enters us.

[533] The faith is the door towards mysteries, or towards the Paradise of the living together with God; and the love is the interior of the Paradise, or the place where these mysteries are lived at. Especially, the love of God is the tree of life from Paradise. That's why Christ is the Savior, as the tree of this new and eternal life.

things have bene prepared by God to them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9). From this tree was forbidden Adam, by the advice of the devil. The tree of life is the love of God which Adam fell off and therefore Adam never met the joy again[534].

And into the soil of the brambles there worked the darkness. They who have been deprived of the love of God they eat the bread of their sweat in their deeds, even if they walk the right way. This was the first created man ordered to eat after his falling. Until we do not find the love, our work is in the land of the brambles and we sow and we reap amidst brambles, even if our seed is the seed of the righteousness; and we are pricked by thorns all the time, and until we have straightened on ourselves, we will live into the sweat of our face. But when we have found the love, we will be nourished with heavenly bread, and we will be strengthened without work or tiredness. The heavenly bread is Christ Who descended from heavens and Who gave life to the world[535]. And this is the bread of the angels.

He who has found the love he east Christ; he east Christ on all days and all the time and by that he will become immortal[536]. "The he who eats, he says, that bread that I will give it to him, he won't see the death ever" (Jn. 6: 58). Blessed is him who eats the bread of the love that is Christ. This is for him who nourishes on himself out of love he nourishes on himself with Christ Who is the God over all realities, as John confesses it by saying: "God is love" (1 Jn. 4: 8). So, he who lives in love he brings fort the fruit of the life out of God and he breathes in the present world the air of the resurrection out of the realities from here. In this sky will be delighted the saints after resurrection. The love is the Kingdom secretly promised by our Savior to His disciples, that they will eat it in His Kingdom. For what is it: "Eat and drink at the table of the Kingdom" (Lk. 22: 30) except the love? This is for the love can feed the man [534] The joy, the love, and the true life are one. They are God, the Person or the communion of Persons infinite in love and in life. There is no joy outside the love. And the love is only among persons. And the love come in a full manner to us only out of the godlike Person. The godlike Person entered by embodiment on the plan accessible to us, He is the tree whom we receive through the fruit of the imperishable life.

[535] The fruit from the tree of life can also be called as heavenly bread, the bread of the immortality. Both of them show Christ out of Whose life and imperishable love we receive the immortal life, for His love is inexhaustible, and of His love we won't ever get satiated.

[536] We ought to notice that: he who is nourished with the godlike love he is immortal, for he will never get satiated of that love and he is being nourished out of the infinite and personal love of God. At this love we must think also when we are imparted with Christ in Eucharist.

instead of food and of drink. "This is the wine that gladdens the heart of the man" (Ps. 103: 16[537]). Blessed is him who drinks this wine. Out of this wine drank the debauched and they got ashamed; and the sinners, and the left the ways of their passions; and the drunkards, and they started fasting[538]; and the rich, and they wanted the poverty; and they who hunger they have been enriched with the hope; and they who are sick, they have become powerful; and the untaught have become wise[539].

But as it is impossible to cross the sea without a ship, likewise no one can cross towards love without fear. That stinking sea placed between us and the understanding Paradise we cannot cross it except through the ship of the repentance driven by the oarsmen of the fear. If these oarsmen of the fear do not stir the ship of our repentance, which we cross with the sea of this world towards God, we will get drowned into that stinking sea. Our repentance is the ship; the fear is its helmsman; the love is the godlike shore. So, the fear places us into the ship of the repentance and it crosses us over that sea of the stinking life and it brings us to the godlike shore, that is the love, which will be reached by all of them who live in ascesis, all of them who are burdened with repentance. And when we have reached the love, we will have reached at God. And our trip will have come to an end and we will have crossed to the shore that is beyond the world, where there is the Fater and the Son and the Holy Ghost. And may Him make us worthy of His glory and love and fear! Amen.

[537] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 14-15: "He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth; // And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 16-17: "Him to get bread out of earth and the wine gladdens the heart of the man; // to gladden the face with oil and the bread strengthen the heart of the man." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[538] He who drinks the wine and who eats the bread of the clean love he will no longer love the wine and the bodily foods. That wine is sweeter and more strengthening than the wine of the body and that heavenly bread is more nourishing than any bodily food.

[539] The love gives not only joy but also understanding, knowledge both to the loved one and who loves. He who drinks the wine of this love, or who eats its of-life-maker bread, he will no longer feel the need for food, for pleasure, for the richness from this world. All of those get fade in comparison to the godlike love.

Word LXXIII

Which Contains Useful Advices which I Have Uttered with Love to Them Who Listened to This Word with Humbleness

There is no good thought occurring within heart which not to come out of the grace of God. And there is not cunning thought drawing near to our soul, except those destine to try us and to tempt us. That man who has reached to know the measure of his helplessness, he will have reached the consummation of the humbleness. That one that guides the gifts towards the man is the heart moving towards ceaseless giving of thanks[540].

That one guiding the temptation towards the soul it is the speaking-against thought, that is always moving within our heart. God bears all people's helplessness, but God doesn't suffer that man that always speaks against, without God rebuking that man towards advising that man[541]. In such thoughts it is that soul that is stranger to any light of the knowledge. That mouth that always gives thanks it receives the blessing from God; and within that heart that lives in giving-of-thanks there will occur the grace. Before the grace there walks the humbleness[542], and before the advising rebuke there walks the self-appreciation. The pride one will be allowed to fall into blasphemy; and he who boasts on himself for his virtue with the deed he will be allowed to fall into fornication. And he who boasts within his wisdom he will be allowed to fall into the darkness traps of the nescience.

That man that is estranged to any remembrance of God he bears within his heart his envy against his neighbor, and he think at his neighbor with naughtiness. He who, in his remembrance of God, he honors all the people, he will find help from all the people by the hidden will of God. He who defends

[540] Only the giving-of0thanks opens the way to the coming gifts; and only in the giving-of-thanks it is shown that the man realizes the greatness of the gifts, namely that he knows how to truly use the gifts.

[541] To the speaking-against man, to the ingrate, the gift will be taken away from him, in order that man to realize how much he misses that gift, namely to realize that he no longer has what he needs by himself.

[542] If the grace comes there where are given thanks for the grace, before the grace there appears the humbleness, or the conscience of needing the grace.

the man whom it has been done injustice to, he has God fighting for him, He who bestows his arm to the help of his neighbor he will receive the arm of God to his help. He who condemns his brother into his evilness, he will find God as his accuser[543]. He who does justice to his brother into his hidden, he will he healed of his evilness; and he who condemns his brother in an assembly he will increase his won wounds. He who secretly defends his brother he makes shown the strength of his love; and he who shames off his brother in other people's eyes, he shows the bigness of his envy. That friends that rebukes hiddenly, he is a wise doctor; and he who wants to heal somebody in the eyes of the man he actually condemns him. Forgetfulness of all mistakes it is the sign of the mercy and of the love; and the condemnation of the mistakes it is the sign of the cunning thoughts. He who rebukes towards healing he rebukes out of love. And he who seeks for revenge, he is empty of love. God rebukes us out of love, not to avenge Himself on us, let that not be, but He want His image to be healed, and He doesn't stay angry for a long time. This kind of love it pursues the straightening ad it doesn't passionately deviate towards hatred. The wise righteous is like God, for he doesn't punish the man at all by avenging himself due to his evilness, but he punishes the man in order to correct him or in order to frighten others. And that rebuking that is not like this one, it won't be towards advising. He who does the good for rewards he will quickly change on himself. And he who in the power of his knowledge he gets illuminated through contemplation (sight), by the knowledge that is in God, though he then gets out of his body, he won't get haughty in his thought neither he will deviate ever from his virtue.

He who enlightens his cogitation in order to make it worthy of the reward from God, he has reached the deep of the humble cogitation with his soul and with his body. Before somebody get close to knowledge, he ascends and he descend in his living; but when he gets close to knowledge, he will be elevated whole. But regardless how much he is elevated, the ascension of his knowledge won't end until it will come that age of the glory when he will take his richness. This if for, the more the man get consummate in God, the more than man will walk in God's ways. In the present age God shows His face, but not as it is, because regardless how high the righteous ascend to seeing God, they still look at God's face as in a mirror. But there, they see the showing of the truth[544].

That fire lit in dry woods will be quenched with difficulty. Likewise, the fire of the heat of God, that comes and it is ignited within the heart of him who has rejected the world, it won't quench and it will be more powerful than the fire[545].

That cogitation that has found the wisdom of the Ghost it is like a man sailing in a big ship, which he gets on board and he crossed with the sea of this world and he reaches the shore of the future age. Such is the feeling of the future age in this world, as a small island surrounded by the sea; and he who gest closer to it he will no longer get tired by the waves of the hallucinations of this age.

The merchant when he has finished his trade, he hurries up to turn back to his home. The monk, as long as he still needs the deeds, he gets saddened at the thought of the separation from his body. But when his soul feels that he has redeemed the whole time and that he has taken his downpayment, he will desire the future age. As long as he is one the sea, the merchant bears the fear within his bones, lets the waves will stir up and so the hope for his work to get sunk. The monk, as long as he is in this world, he is mastered by fear in his living, lest the storm to rise up against him and his thing that he has been gathering up since his youth and all the way up to his old age, to be lost. The merchant keeps his eyes on the shore and the monk keeps his eyes at the time of his death.

The sailor looks at the stars when he crosses through the middle of the sea and he directs his ship according to the stars, until he reaches the shore. The monk looks at the prayer, for the prayer guides him and it directs his trip towards that shore which his living moves towards, in his ceaseless prayer. The sailor looks at the shore where he will anchor his ship and [544] "Here we see like in a mirror" (1 Cor. 13: 12), because we cannot detach on ourselves from the images of the world, or even from our internal image (from our senses), that is influenced by the body, so that we are unable to see God in Himself. That's why we are endlessly advancing towards an ever-truer sight of God through the created images, evermore spiritualized, ever more transparent to God. But in the future age all the images will be consummately overwhelmed by the spirituality of God as Person, as also our soul will be in an ever more spiritualized body, a body increasingly crossed through by God. So that through us God Himself will see on Himself.

where he will take what he needs from, and then he will direct his ship towards another shore[546]. Similar it is the travel of the monk as long as he still is in this life. He crosses from shore to shore, or from knowledge to knowledge, and he advances by changing the shores, or the knowledge, until he will get out of sea and of his trip and he will reach the truest city of all where those who inhabit is will never leave from to undertake another trade, but each of them will rest into his richness[547]. Blessed is him whose trade hasn't been mixed with this vain world, inside this great state; blessed is him whose ship hasn't been wrecked, but he will joyfully reach the shore.

The diver sinks into the sea naked until he finds the pearl. The wide monk crosses through his life naked until he finds within himself that precious pearls that is Christ Jesus. And when he finds Him, he won't want to gain anything of the existing things. The pearl is guarded into treasury; the monk's food is kept inside the quietude. The virgin is harmed in assemblies and in multitude of people and the monk's cogitation is harmed in the encounters with many. The bird runs, from place to place, towards its nest in order to breed offsprings; that monk that has right-reckoning (discernment) he hurries up towards his dwelling place in order to produce within himself the fruit of the life. The snake, when the whole his body has been crushed, he still guards his head; the monk ceaselessly keeps his faith that is the beginning of his life. The cloud covers the sun up; the much words will cover up that soul that started to be lightened in the sight (contemplation) of the prayer.

That bird called as "erodium" gets gladdened and it rejoices, according to the word of the wisemen, when it parts with the world and it leaves for a desert place and it lives there. So, the soul of the monk receives the heavenly joy when he gets far from people and he leaves for living in the middle of the appeasement and he waits there for the time of his death. They [546] These ones are the "epektasis" of Saint Gregory of Nyssa. Any level of height that is reached, it will open the perspective towards another height. The shores are states of resting into God, which interrupt the fight against the storm of the passions and of the troubles, and which are short tastings of the definitive resting into God, anticipating the future life.

[547] He is rejected the Origenistic theory, or the theosophy and the anthroposophy, about new incarnations, or about new fallings of the souls into other bodies, because of the boredom of the resting into God. God is an ocean of meanings and of love never to be fully comprised, which nobody gets bored in and which have no limit which one could cross over.

said about that bird called Sirin that anyone who hears the voice of its song they get so enslaved that they will follow that bird's travel through the desert, because, due to the sweetness of that song they forget even about their own lives, and in the end, they will fall and die. What happens to the soul is similar to that. This is for, when the sweetness of the song of the words of God will resound within the soul, that is imprinted into the feeling of the mind, that soul will start whole to pursuit that, and that soul forgets about the bodily life and his body is deprived of his lusts and that soul will be elevated towards God since this life.

The tree, if it doesn't reject its leaves before, it won't sprout out new leaves. The monk, until he casts out of his heart the previous memories of his, he won't bring fort new fruits into Jesus Christ.

The rain makes abundant the fruits of the earth, and the care from God makes abundant the fruit of our soul. The shell, out of which the pearl is made, it builds up within itself, as they say, some sort of spark of lightening, and the shell receive the matter form the air, and until then the shell is an empty bark; the heart of the monk, until it hasn't received the heavenly content into understanding, it has an empty work and it doesn't give birth inside its shell the fruit of the comforting.

That dog that licks its wound it drinks his own blood and it won't know the harm coming out of its blood's sweetness; that monk that bows down to drink the vain-glory he drinks, in the same time, his life, and he won't feel the harm brought by that sweetness which he enjoyed of, for an instant. The worldly glory is a rock covered by the sea's waves, which the sailor doesn't know about until his ship gets wrecked and it gets full of water. It does so the vain-glory to the man until it totally sink the man destroying him. The fathers said about it, that within that soul that is mastered by the vain-glory, the once defeated and cast out passions will come back within. A small cloud covers up the sun's disk but the sun will remain very hot after that cold has passed from there. A little idleness covers up the soul, but the joy from after that it will be great.

Do not get closer to the words of the mysteries from the Holy Scriptures without the help from God, that can be received through prayer and asking, but rather say: "Lord, give me to perceive the feeling of that power from within those words" (The Prayer of the Reading). You must reckon that the key of the true meanings from the godlike Scriptures it is the prayer. When you want to get closer to God with your heart, you must firstly show your desire through your bodily toils. Out of these is the beginning of the living. This is for the heart gets much closer to God when the man lacks the necessary things and when he gets satisfied with a sole kind of food; and that follows to the deeds. This is for the Lord has made out of this the foundation of the consummation.

You reckon the non-working as the beginning of the soul's darkening[548]. And you must reckon the confabulations as darkness over darkness. And you must reckon the second thing as cause of the first thing. And this is because, even the useful words when overused they cause darkness, how much more will do so the vain-words? The soul will be made poor by the much-speaking, even if the much speaking is done in the fear of God. Sop, the darkness of the soul comes from the disorder of the living.

The measure and the border in living enlighten the cogitation and banish away the confusion[549]. The confusion of the cogitation because of disorder it caused darkness to the soul. And the darkness brings disturbance. The peace comes out of the good order and the light is born within soul out of peace. This is for out of peace springs the clean sky[550]. And as the heart gets closer to the wisdom of the Ghost by estrangement from the world, the heart will receive the joy from God and the heart will feel within soul the power of discerning the wisdom of the Ghost from the wisdom of the world. This is for in the wisdom of the Ghost the silence masters within soul; and in the worldly wisdom there is the spring of the scattering. And after finding the first wisdom you soul will be filled up with much humble-cogitation and kindness and with that peace that [548] It is remarkable the observation made by Saint Isaac that the idleness is a beginning of darkness and that the deeds are beginning of light. He who does the good he gets enlightened with kindness, and he lives in the luminous horizon of the communion and he lightens up the rationalities of the things.

[549] The measure and the border still have in their depth the way of the eternal novelty. But the lack of measure accentuated a sole power of the soul and it weakens the others.

[550] The clean sky allows the sun and the sunlight to be seen. And the clean sky is that soul lacking the disturbance, the storm, namely a soul mastered by peace. The peace of the mind is that clean sky between the mind and the Sun Christ. Nothing interposes between mind and Christ. The mind can wholly focus itself on Christ. The mind is not impeded by anything in this permanent focusing towards Christ, in cogitating at Christ, in entering Him through cogitating and feeling.

reigns over all your thoughts. Consequently, also all the limbs stop and get appeased from the disturbance and from their restlessness. And after finding the second wisdom you will gain the pride into your thought and untold changes of thoughts and the disturbance of your mind and the shamelessness of your senses and haughtiness[551]. Do not reckon that that man who is tied to the bodily things he will have daring in his prayer done by him before God. The cheap soul is lacking the wisdom, while the merciful soul will be made wise by God.

Like the oil fuels the candle's light, likewise the mercifulness nourished the knowledge within soul[552]. The key of the heart towards the godlike gifts it has been given to the love for the neighbor; and on the measure of the untying the heart from the ties of the body, the door of the knowledge will be opened in front of the heart. Receiving the understanding means the crossing of the soul from a world to another world[553]. What beautiful like and what worthy to be praised like it is the love for the neighbor, when our care for the love for our neighbor doesn't detach us from our love for God! What sweet is like the encounter with our spiritual brothers, when we can keep together with that also the encounter with God! So, it is good to take care of our brothers too, to the extent we are allowed to do that by the appropriateness. And this means not to fall, because of that, off the hidden work and living and off the ceaseless speaking to God[554]. This is for the disturbance caused by the second work comes out of the way of being of the [551] The peace of the mind is like a clean sky which Sun Christ is seen through; the peace of the mind is united with the wisdom brought by the Ghost that doesn't allow the mind to go after all sorts of unimportant thoughts, among which some thoughts are really ugly, so that one is embarrassed even of speaking about them. Such a man no longer has either the peace or the daring of the prayer towards God.

[552] This is for the mercifulness nourishes the love and into love there is the knowledge of the neighbor, for he opens himself to you. But when you succeed in making the another to open himself to you, you succeed that relatedly to God as well. Or, through the another who is open to you, you see God.

[553] The key of the understanding is the crossing from the world of the objects to the world of the subjects and therefore to the world of the godlike Subject as well. The knowledge of the material realities it is not actually "understanding". The "understanding is that that takes place among people, as subjects, and therefore between man and God too.

[554] The love for people is kept clean through the love for God. My fellow human receives, in my eyes, when I see him into God, a mysterious holiness. When we fall off cleanness and steadfastness, in what concerns our love for our fellow human, we no longer are able either to cleanly and steadfastly love God. And vice versa. In this case the mind isn't capable of any of these loves in cleanness and lastness.

first work. The mind is not capable of both dialogues concomitantly.

The seeing of the people from the world it causes disturbance to that soul that has rejected the people form the world for the thing of God. Continuously speaking with our spiritual brothers will harm us. And concerning the laymen, it will harm even only seeing them from outside. The realities encountered by senses won't stop the bodily doing[555]. But he who wants to pick up, from his thought the joy, by working the hidden things, he will suffer of disturbance in the resting of his heart even by only hearing the voices, without looking at their origin. The internal death (toward the world) is not committed without the non-working of the senses, and the bodily living desires the wakening up of the senses, while the souly living desires the wakening up of the heart.

As on the plan of the nature the soul is bigger than the body, likewise, the work of the soul is bigger than the body's work. And like in the beginning the conceiving of the soul preceded the soul's instilling, likewise the bodily deeds precede the souly work. And there is a great power in the small but persevering deed. This is for the soft and small drop of water that perseveres, it will drill through the hard stone.

When the resurrection of the spiritual man comes closer within you, it will wake up within you the death towards everything and within your soul that becomes unlike the creation it will warm up the joy; and your thoughts will be closed within yourself, into that sweetness existing within your heart[556]. But when the world resurrects within you, the scattering of your cogitation will multiply, together with the small and fickle thought. And I call world the passions which are born by scattering. And when the passions will be born and they will grow up, they will become sins and they will kill the man. Like children cannot be born without having a mother, likewise the passions are not born without the scattering of the cogitation, neither the done sin is born without the dialogue with the passions.

[555] The good deeds through body.

[556] The death towards all the realities of the world and event eh death of the former man, it is not a Nirvanic insensibility, but it is an internal joy and sweetness, and those exceed any worldly joy and sweetness, and they are nourished out of the deep meanings and above understanding and clean meanings of the thoughts of everybody who have unveiled their luminous roots, through their clean heart, into God.

When the patience multiplies within our souls, that is a sign that we have received for above, hiddenly, the grace of the comforting. The strength of the patience is greater than the joy thoughts occurring within heart. The life in God is the death of the senses. When the heart lives the senses die. And the resurrection of the senses is the death of the heart. And when the senses resurrect that is the sign that the heart died for God. The conscience doesn't receive the straightening out of the virtues which are committed among people[557].

That virtue done by somebody for another it cannot clean up the soul. This is because of being reckoned in front of God as a deed done for receiving a payment[558]. But that one done by the man within himself it is reckoned as consummate virtue and it consummated both of these: it is reckoned both as rewardable and as bringing the cleanness. That's why, you smut part with the first one and pursuit the second one. This is because parting with the first one without taking care of the second one it is an obvious falling from God. And the second one fills up the place of the first one too[559].

Resting and non-working mean together the soul's perdition and they can harm us more than the devils do. When you force your helpless body to deeds over its measure, you gather within your soul darkness upon darkness and you rather cause disturbance to your body. And if you surrender your healthy body to resting and non-working, your body will consummate the whole evilness into your soul that inhabits your body, and even if somebody desires the good a lot, after a little while even that thought of good that he still had had it will be case out of him. When the soul is drunk with the joy of his hope and with the gladness for God, the body will no longer feel the troubles even if it is weak. This is for, despite the soul bears a twofold burden it won't weaken, but the body rejoices together with the soul of soul's delectation, for the soul will collaborate with the body even if the body is weak. This happens to the man when his soul enters the joy of the Ghost.

[557] Here is about those virtues which the people cause pleasure to one another, or which they reciprocally serve their interests thought, without thinking at God. Those are good but passing and superficial deeds, without steadfastly building the man up through steadfast virtues.

[558] Here is being rejected the theory of the merits for deeds. The truly good deeds are those done out of love, and not for payment.

[559] By bringing the cleanness it will bring also the reward. Or the cleanness itself is the true payment. And the cleanness is the exclusive preoccupation with God for Himself. The last kind of virtue keeps the place for the first one too. But not the vice versa. But it will be even worse when one doesn't pursuit even the first kind of virtue.

Brother, if you guard your tongue, you have been given from God the gift of the pricking of the heart in order you to be able to see your soul through that. And through the pricking of your heart, you will enter the joy of the Ghost. And if your tongue defeats you, you believe me that you will never get rid of darkness. This is for if you have your heart clean you will have your mouth clean as well, as the blessed John said.

When you want to urge somebody to good, you firstly resting him bodily and then after you will honor him with words of love. This is for nothing persuades the man to come to decency and nothing makes the man to cross from the evil things to the good things as the bodily goods do, or as the honor he sees that he received from you. The more somebody enters the fight for God, the more he dares within his heart when praying. And the more the man is attracted to more things, the more he will lack the help from God. Do not be sad because of the impulses of your body. This is for God will take those away from you consummately. Do not fear your death. This is for God has prepared the things in order you to be elevate above your death. God's to be the glory and the mastery forever and ever! Amen.

About the Example and the Resemblance Comprised in the Meaning of the Sunday and of the Saturday

The Sunday if the mystery of the knowledge of that truth that is not received together with the body and with the blood, for it is above any cogitation[560]. In this age we do not have the eighth day either the true Sunday[561]. This is for he who said that God rested on the seventh day, he showed the stop of this [560] The Sunday was fully known into the resurrected Christ as our supreme truth and our final target. This truth isn't received with our body and blood from now and that's why this truth is above the cogitation starting out of our body and blood.

[561] The millennium cannot be installed in the present way of the world; the eternal resting and happiness will take place only in the future age.

life (Gen. 2: 2)[562]. This is for the tomb is for the body and the tomb is from within world. There have been given six days for the ploughing of the life and they are consummated by keeping the commandments. The seven days make whole the first six days into tomb. And the eighth day does alike, through exiting the tombs.

Like those who have been found worthy of it they receive here the mysteries of the Sunday in the image of the example, but they do not receive that day itself in a bodily manner, likewise those who live in ascesis they receive here the mysteries of the Saturday but they do not receive the Saturday itself into truth, that is the ceasing of everything that saddens and the resting of everything that disturbs[563]. This is for God have given us the mystery but not the true work in the living from here.

The true and the matchless Sunday if the tomb, that shows what it means the consummate ceasing of the troubles and of the passions and of the ploughing that resists those. In the tomb rests (Sabbathizes) the whole human nature, namely the soul and the body. God organized in six days the being of this world and he created the natural elements and He gave existence to their ceaseless movement towards serving. And the natural element won't stop in their road until the detachment. And out of their power, namely out of the first created natural elements have been created our bodies. But God hasn't given even stopping form their movement, neither to our bodies which have been created out of them Hod has given them to stop from working the earth (form their ploughing)[564]. And as border for [562] God's resting on the seventh day shows us that this world isn't endless.

[563] In the present life we have only from time to time a ceasing of the work for combating the passions and the troubles, but not a total ceasing. So, we have here only an anticipation in image of that liberation. Likewise, we do not receive here but from time to time a short living into God, or the Sunday in image, but not yet the true and eternal Sunday or the undiminished communion with the resurrected Christ.

[564] It is the same teaching about the purpose of the movement as taking us towards God and as being given by God, a teaching contrary to Origenism, as we can find also at Saint Maximos the Confessor (Ambigua). So, the movement of the natural elements won't stop here before their detachment in individual elements. We won't have here the resting from the movement, or the Sunday (the millennium of the resting), as long as the present way of world's existence lasts. This way of world's existence if destined to move us also towards consummation, as the natural elements composing the body move too, and within which their movement causes us the temptations towards sin. The man must work the earth that brings forth brambles, in order the man to bring the world towards consummation, as long as the earth still is in the present ceasing God placed within us the moment which it will be accomplished the kinship of their last state with their first state, and that means detachment of the life[565]. Adam was told so: "Into the sweat of your face you will eat your bread". And until when? "Until you will turn back into the earth which you have been take out of, that it will sprout out to you thorns and brambles", which are the mysteries of the ploughing of this life, until it lasts. But since that night which the man sweated, the Lord changed the sweat that was producing thorns and brambles, into the sweat of the prayer and into the ploughing of the righteousness[566].

God left Adam to toil into that sweat for more than five thousand and five hundreds of years. This is because until then the way of the saints it wasn't unveiled, as the godlike apostle said (Eph. 3: 1). But on the final days God came and commanded the freedom to change sweat for sweat. So, God didn't order the full ceasing, but only the changing. This is for God showed His love for us for enduring our heavy suffering tied to earth. So, if we stop sweating into prayer, we will truly reap thorns. This is because the absence of the prayer will bring the earth's ploughing through the body, that one that sprouts out thorns by its nature. This is because our passions truly are thorns sprouting out within us out of the seed existing within our body. As long as we bear Adam's image, we will necessarily bear Adam's passions too. This is because of being impossible that the earth to stop bringing forth an offspring according to its nature. And this offspring is the nephew of the nature, as the earth coming out of our bodies, according to the testimony of form. This work won't cease as long as the body exists in this form, with its natural element non-transfigured, and in movement.

[565] The work of body's cultivation (the fight against passions, the enduring patiently of the troubles) will cease when this body will come back to its first state, namely to that state which the body would have reached if it hadn't fallen. But the body won't reach that state except after the detachment of the life; namely at the true Sunday the body won't reach except after the true Saturday will have come.

[566] The working of the virtues. Until the coming of our Lord Christ our sweat didn't quite succeed in stopping the sprouting out of the passions. We sweated more in the passions' service. Into the Lord it succeeded. In Him we succeed too. But the troubles remain. We need the passions as we need our sweat, in order us to achieve the virtues, as it is told further on. Our Lord hasn't stopped the sweat, but he has changed the sweat's mode and effect. Now we are sweating in patience and in prayer. The thorns will be stopped by these ones from sprouting out, but only if the prayer is done continuously as another movement, as another toil. The movement, by and large, it doesn't stop either after Christ.

God: "The earth which you have been taken out of" (Gen. 3: 9). The earth gives birth to thorns. And the speaking (rational) earth gives birth to passions.

If the Lord has been mysteriously present in all times, in all the diverse works of His oikonomia[567], and until the nineth hour of the Friday He didn't stop Himself from His work and toil (that is the mystery of the ploughing from our life), and on Saturday He rested into tomb, so where are they who say that the Saturday, or the resting from passions, it takes place during this life[568]? (And about Sunday there are big things to be said).

Our Sunday is the day of our burial. Then it is truly rested (Sabbathized) our nature. So, it is imposed to us as a necessary thing to pluck the thorns out of our nature as long as the earth still stays in out nature. By our perseverance in ploughing the thorns form our nature will be made fewer. But our nature cannot be fully cleaned up of them[569]. And if this is so, if through the laziness for a while, if through a small carelessness, the thorns get multiplied and so they will cover the face of the earth and they will chock your crop and your toil will be destroyed, we must clean up our body's earth daily. This is because ceasing to do this work it will multiply the thorns.

May us clean on ourselves of those thorns by the grace of Him Who is of-one-being and the Only Begotten Son of God Who it is due the glory together with His without-beginning Father and with the of-live-giver His Ghost, forever and ever! Amen.

[567] The presence of Christ in all the times of the old law was affirmed by many previous fathers. And it was affirmed even Christ's presence in the diverse types of His savior work. For instance, Saint Cyril of Alexandria speaks about the presence of Christ in the sacrifices of the Old Testament (Worshipping into Ghost and Truth). But at Saint Isaac we have the general affirmation of this fact.

[568] One can see that in the time of Saint Isaac were still lasting the millenarists from the first Christian centuries. But maybe Saint Isaac refers by and large to all of them who say that the man can reach - while still living the present earthly life - a full liberation of passions. They who uphold today the millennium from the end they are consistent to themselves when arguing that they can reach, individually, even from now, a total absence of the sin.

[569] But, out of the fact that we cannot reach on earth to a total sinlessness one must not draw the contrary (Protestant) conclusion that we cannot do anything for diminishing the number of our sins. The passions remain as possibilities and therefore the temptations remain too, as long as we are on earth. That's why, we must always take vigil and we must toil increasingly much in order to weaken those. This is the way of the saints.

Story about Some Saints and Som of Their All-Pious Words. And about their Wonderful Living

On day I went to the monastic cell of a holy brother and because of my helplessness I laid myself down in a corner, in order I to be cared by God. This was because where I was, I had no acquaintance. And I saw this brother waking up at night before time and having the habit to start the program of his prayers before his brothers did. After he sang many verses from the Psalms, suddenly, while he was still doing that, he left the prayer and fell on his face and he hit his head on the ground for a hundred times or maybe more, with that warmth ignited within his heart by grace. And after that he stood as kissed the cross of the Master and he bowed down again and he kissed the cross and then he threw on himself on his face again. And he kept this program so that I couldn't count the multitude of his kneelings. This is for who was able to count the prostrations of that brother, which he was doing on each night? This is for he kissed the cross for twenty times with fear and with warmth, with a love mixed with awe and he again started singing psalms. And on occasions, due to the much heat of the thoughts which were burning him, so that was no longer able to endure their heat, he shouted out overwhelmed by joy. This was because he was no longer able to contain himself. I saw him and I wondered much of the grace of that brother and of his ascetic toils and of his watchfulness that he had to the work of God.

And in the morning, after the first hour, when he sat at reading, he became as an enslaved man and at each head he read he fell for many times on his face and at many verses he raised his hands towards the sky and he extolled God.

He was forty years old. He ate very little food and very dry food. And because he forced his body over-measure and over-power, he looked like shadow, so that I had mercy on the thinness of his face; because of the much non-eating he exhausted on himself and hi face was not even two fingers in measure. I told him often: "Have mercy on yourself, brother, in your ascesis and in this good living which you have gained, in order you not to disturb and not to interrupt this living, which have become to you as a spiritual chain. Do not lose on yourself for the desire of a small adding and so to be stopped in your way from walking the whole road. Eat with temperance, in order you not to reach to always eat, and do not stretch your leg over-measure, in order you not to totally stop".

And that brother was merciful and very shy, and he was giving alms with a happy face; he was clean in his nature, always ready to comfort another, wise according to God, and beloved by everybody for his cleanness and gladness. He was working together with the brothers when they needed him, often even for three or for four days, and he returned to his monastic cell on each evening. This was because he was skillful to any serving. And when he didn't have something, though he needed that, due to his much shame for the small and for the big ones, he was unable to say that he didn't have that thing. And most often, when he was working together with the brothers, he did that because he felt shame not to do it, because otherwise he hated leaving his monastic cell. It was so the living of this brother. And od our God to be the glory forever! Amen.

About an Old Man

On other occasion I went again to an old man who was good and virtuous, and who loved me much. He was simple at word, but he was enlightened with his knowledge and deep with his heart and he was speaking the things bestowed him by grace. He didn't leave his monastic cell often, but only to attend the holy religious services (synaxes). He was taking heed at himself and he was occupying on himself with the appeasement.

I told him once: "Father, a thought has come to me to sit on Sundays on the churches porch and to eat there in the morning, so that anyone who enters and who gets out, by seeing me, to defame me", and the old man answered me this: "It was written that anyone who causes offense to those from the world he won't see the light. You are not known by anybody in this place, neither they know your life, but they will conclude that the monks eat in the morning, especially that here are some beginner brothers and many of them, trusting your and using you, they will be harmed by seeing you doing that. The old fathers did things similar to this because of the many wonders they worked and for the honor they had and for their great fame. They did those things in order to dishonor on themselves and to hide the glory of their living and to remove from themselves the causes of their pride. But what forces you to do that? Don't you know that each way of living has its rule and it time? But such a living it hasn't been appointed to you, neither such a fame. Because you are living like one of the brothers and you don't even benefit of that, but you can harm another. Then, such a work is not useful to anybody, but only to them who are consummate and great. This is because such a living means a loosening of the senses[570]. But to them who are in the middle and to the beginner that is harmful. This is because they need much guarding and they need to keep their senses into submission. But the old men crossed through the time of the guarding so that they gain out of anything they want. The merchants who are inexperienced in the great deals, they cause to themselves many losses; but they advance quickly in the small businesses. And again, as I said, in everything there is a rule and every kind of living has its own time possible to be known. But everyone who starts before time things which are above his measure, he will double down his harm and he won't gain anything. If you desire the gain, you must endure joyfully the dishonor coming to you without your will, on a good purpose, and do not allow on yourself to get disturbed, neither to hate him who dishonor you".

I once had a discussion with that saint who tasted out of the tree of life, through his souly ardor, since the dawn of his youth and to the evening of his old age. And after he taught me many things about virtue, he told me this: "All the prayer which the body is not toiling in, and which the heart is not troubles in, it is reckoned ad an aborted child. This is because such a prayer is without soul"[571]. And he told me again: "Do not engage [570] That means to loosen up the senses. But this can be afforded only by them who, through habituation, they have reached that state which their senses no longer tempt them.

[571] This idea will appear at Saint Gregory Palamas too, against Barlaam, who argued, in the mechanistic spirit of the Occident, that the prayer is some sort of philosophical meditation that must not be hindered by any tiredness. One must pray while sitting comfortably on a chair, on yourself, neither take part to, by any means, in any discussion with the quarrelling man or with him who wants to impose his word, or with him who is cunning in thought and shameless in his senses, in order not to be removed from you your cleanness achieved by you with so much tiredness and thus your heart to be filled up with darkness and disturbance".

About another Old Man

I went once to the monastic cell of one of the old men. He was a saint who didn't open the door often to somebody. When he saw me through that small window of his monastic cell and he recognized me, he told me: "Do you want to come in?". I answered him: "I do, honored father". After I got in and after we prayed and after we spoke for a long time, I finally asked him: "What have I done, father, because some people come to me and I neither gain anything nor I use anything by meeting them? But I feel shame to tell them not to come. They often impede me from doing my usual program of prayer. And this troubles me". The old man answered me to that:

"When some people like these come to you because they love the idleness, after they sit for a little while, you will pretend that you want to stand at prayer, so that you will tell him who visits you, by bowing down before him: Brother, let's pray, for the time for my prayer program has come and I cannot overlook it. This is because I find it difficult to fulfill it at another time, and that becomes to me a cause for disturbance. And without being forced by a stringent need I cannot let it go. And not there is nothing to force me not to pray! And do not allow that brother not to pray together with you. And if that one says: You pray for a little while and then I will pray either, bow down before him and tell him: Make, for love, at least this sole prayer with me, in order I to benefit of your prayer. And when you stand up, you will prolong your prayer even over what you usually do. If you and not by feeling the pain of his knees or crying for his sins. But only this gives soul, or warmth, or existential vibration to the prayer.

do so when they come to visit you, they will know that you do not think as they do, neither you love the idleness, ad wherever they will find out that you are, they won't come close to you.

Take heed, therefore, lest by receiving a man in your monastic cell, you to leave the thing of God. And if there comes some of the old men, or some stranger, sitting together with them will be counted to you instead of the greatest prayer. But if the stranger is among those who love the vain-speaking, you resting him (give him to eat), according to your possibilities, and then release him to go in peace".

One of the fathers said: "I wonder about the fact that I hear that some brothers, by doing manual labor in their monastic cells, and they still are able to accomplish their prayer program without missing anything and without getting disturbed". Ands he told this wonderful word: "Verily I say myself, that if I go to fetch water, I get disturbed into my habit and into my order and I am impeded form the consummate work of my mind".

About the Questions Asked by a Certain Brother

The same old man was once asked by a certain brother: "What should I do because often I have a necessary thing, either for my weakness or for my work, either for some other reason, and I cannot live peacefully without that thing, but by seeing somebody needing the same thing and by being I defeated by mercy, I give him that thing. But I often do this because somebody asks me for that thing, because I am forced by love and by commandment and I bestow away what I need. And after that, the need for that thing pushed me into worry and into the disturbance of my thoughts, and because of that my mind gets scattered and leaves its care for appeasement; and maybe I am forced to leave my quietude to go and search for that thing. And if I endure and I do not go out, I will reach in a great trouble and into the disturbance of my thoughts. So, I do not know which to choose out of these two: that what ends and it scatters my mind for satisfying my brother, or to overlook his ask and I to persevere into quietude?".

The old man answered: "Any giving of alms, or love, or mercy, or anything that is reckoned as for God, but it impeded you from quietude and it steals your eye towards the world and it pushes you into some worry and it disturbs you from remembering God and it interrupts your prayers and it stopes you from cogitating at the godlike readings (that is the weapon defending you against scatterings) and it scatters your guarding and it makes walking around after you committed yourself and it makes you to get out and spend time with others after you got lonely, and it uprises against you your buried passions and it unties your restrained senses and it abolished you death towards the world and it lower you down from the angelic work (that has a sole care)[572] and it places you in the group of the laymen - that is a righteousness that must perish. This is because fulfilling the duty of love by satisfying the bodily needs it is a thing of the laymen, or also of the less-advanced monks as well, and not to those who live in quietude or even to those who have their quietude mixed with the union into a thought with others and to them who ceaselessly enter and go out. It is good to and worthy to be praised at some people like these.

But to them who have truly chosen the exit from the world with the body and with their soul, in order they to nail their cogitation into the lonely prayer, into the death towards the perishing things and towards the seeing and the memory of the things, they due not to serve the body work and the righteousness tied to the visible things (in order they to justify Christ through them) but, according to eth word of the Apostle, by "killing their limbs from on earth" (Col. 3: 5) they to bring to God a clean and unblemished sacrifice of their thoughts, as first-fruits of their ploughing, and the killing of their bodies into enduring the dangers for the hope of the future realities. This is for the monastic living competes that of the angels. It is inappropriate to us to leave the heavenly ploughing and to attach ourselves to material things". And to out God be the glory forever! Amen.

About the Rebuking of a Certain Brother

A certain brother, by being once rebuked because of not giving alms, he answered daringly and naughtily him who rebuked him, that the monks do not have the duty of giving alms. And he who rebuked him answered him: "It is known and it is obvious that the monk is not submitted to the duty of giving alms. The monk is that one who can tell with his unveiled face to Christ as it was written: "Behold we left everything and followed You" (Mt. 19: 27); namely the monk has nothing on earth and he doesn't' entangle on himself into the bodily things and he has nothing in his mind out of the seen things, by receiving only the things necessary to his basis needs, and by not occupying on himself with what exceed that, but he is like a bird in its nest. The monk is not submitted to the duty of giving alms. Because how could he give to another what he doesn't have? Rather him who occupied on himself with the worldly things and who works with his hands and who received from others, he owes to give alms to the monk. But disregarding that it is a merciless opposition to the Lord's commandment. This is because if somebody doesn't get close to God into the hidden things, neither he knows who to serve Him into body, neither he takes care of the seen things which he can do, what other hoe will have someone like this which him to achieve the life for himself through? One like this is unwise".

Another old man said: "I wonder why they trouble on themselves in working the appeasement, in order to fulfill others' needs". And he said again: "We mustn't mix into working the appeasement the care for something. Let each thing be honored in its place, in order our living not to be mixed. This is for him who worries about many things, he will be the slave of many of those things. And he who has left everything and who takes care about the state of his soul, he is the friend of God. Take in account that there are many in the world who give alms and who accomplish the duty of the love for them who are close in the bodily things. But workers of the full and good quietude, who live into God, barely can be found and only very few. But who among those who give alms and who do justice in the bodily things, could reach any of the gifts of them who have been found worthy from God to live in quietude?".

And he said again: “If you are layman, you occupy on yourself with the good things which you can do within world; and if you are a monk, you occupy on yourself with the things which adorn the good monks. And if you want to occupy on yourself with both of those, you will fall of both of them. The things of the monk are these ones: the freedom from the bodily things, the bodily tiredness into prayers, the ceaseless remembrance of God within heart. So, if it is possible to you to be you satiated, without these ones, with the worldly virtues, you judge it”.

Question: “So, the monk who toils with the appeasement cannot achieve both these things: to occupy on himself with the care for God and to bear the other care within his heart?”.

Answer: “I do not reckon that he who wants to live in quietude, not even when he will leave everything and he will take care only of his soul, not even then he will be able to live in fully working the appeasement, even if he is outside any worry. All the less will he take care of something else. The Lord has left within world them who serve Him and who take care of His children and He has chosen them who liturgize in front of Him. This is for not only in the things of the earthly emperors one can see diverse levels, namely those which always stay in front of the emperor and are shared with the emperor’s mysteries and which are more extolled than the things which are farer to the emperor, but one can see that also in the realities of the heavenly Emperor. This is for how much daring have achieved they who always live together with Him in a mysterious dialogue through prayer, and of how much heavenly and earthly joy are they found worthy of, and how great power have they towards the whole creation, in comparison to them who serve God through their wealth and things of the life and who give Him thanks through their good deeds, despite this thing too is a very great and goof thing! So, it is appropriate to us to take example not from these ones, but from those who have left the things of the life and who have rejected the bodily things and who have stretched their hearts towards the gates of the heavens.

What were well-pleasant to God the old saints in, who travelled the way of this living previously to us? Was Saint John of Thebe - the treasury of the virtues, the spring of the prophecy – pleasant to God by resting the brothers inside his lock up monastic cell, or by prayer and quietude? I do not deny that, by resting their brothers too, many were well-pleasant to God; but they were less to than they who did that by prayer and by forsaking everything. It is obvious that we receive help from them who live in quietude and who are honored by the brothers, either they help us with the word in time of need, or they pray for us. But besides these, the memory or the care for a certain thing among the things of the life, it doesn't belong to the spiritual wisdom. This is for "Give Ceasar what belong to Caesar, and give God what belongs to God" (Mt. 22: 21) and give to the neighbor and to God the things which belong to each of them, it hasn't been told to them who live in quietude, but to them who live outside. This is because of not being commanded to them who live ibn the angelic rule, namely in taking care of their soul, to become pleasant to God through the things of the life, namely they to take care of the work of the hands, or to take from somebody in order to give to somebody else. So, it is not appropriate to the mink to take care of something that move his mind or that lowers his mind away from staying in front of God.

And if somebody, by denying these things, he mentions Paul the Apostle, that that one worked with his hands and he gave alms, we will tell him that only Paul was able to do both things. And we do not know another Paul like Apostle Paul. Show me another Paul like that and I will believe you[573].

[573] "The fact that his thing was greater and higher and more difficult to fulfill, it is obvious to everyone. For he had the care of all the Churches and he was continuously and ceaselessly advising. ("For three years I haven't ceases, day and night, to advice, with tears, on everybody" – Acts 20: 31). He endured travels, shipwrecks, persecutions, beatings with the stick, chains, prisons, and other heavy sufferings. Then, he didn't' eat bread received as gift (2 Thes. 3: 8) but he worked for himself and for his people with his hands (Acts 20: 32). That's why also the godlike Chrysostom praises Paul in many of his speeches, especially in his Encomium, saying: "What the man is and how big is the nobility of our nature and how much virtue this creature is capable of, it was shown, more than all people, by Paul. But he is not impossible to imitate because of that. This is for himself sys about himself: "|I beg you, follow me" (Col. 4: 17; Eph. 5: 1). So, not only Paul could do everything. This is for Who was Paul able to do everything into? Into Him Who defended Paul, into Christ. "This is for, he says, I can do all the things into Him Who strengthens me up, into Christ" (Phil. 4: 13). And Christ Himself said: "All the things are possible to him who believes" (Mk. 9: 23). But Abba Isaac said in another place (p. 306 Greek text): "The more the man is elevated, the more the man will enter the spiritual level, in the likeness of Paul". So, either Isaac himself, or the old man mentioned above and who said that "only Paul could do all the things", they used a hyperbole, wanting to show the height of the virtue of the Apostle and the bigness of the difficulty of the appeasement, when it is added to it the care for giving alms and from providing the neighbor with the needed things".

So, you cannot bring the things committed out of oikonomia as proof for the usual things. This is for something else I the work of the Gospel and something else is the work of the quietude. And if you want to keep the quietude, you must become like the Cherubs who do not take care of anything of the earthly life. And you must not reckon that there is somebody else on earth except you and God Who you care if at, as you have been taught by the fathers who lived before you. This is for if somebody doesn't make his heart harsh and if he doesn't strongly master his mercy, in order to keep himself far from the care for the things from below, even if it would seem him that he has that care for God[574] and for something of life, and if he doesn't persevere only into prayer at the times appointed for prayer, we won't be liberated from disturbance and from worry and he won't be able to remain into quietude.

This is because when the though comes to you to take care of something for the sake of the virtue, in order that peace had by you within your heart to be scattered away from you, you will tell to that thought: "Good is the way of the love for the will of God, but for God as well I do not want that".

"Stand by me, Father, said a monk, I am running after you for God". And that one answered him: "I am running away from you for God too". Abba Arsenius didn't meet anybody, for God, neither for teaching nor for something else. Another spoke for God all day and he welcomed all the strangers coming to see him. That one chose, instead of this, the silence and the quietude. And that's why he was speaking to the godlike Ghost amid the sea of the passing live and he sailed peacefully in the ship of the quietude, as it was plainly shown to the ascetics who knew that from God.

And if you are full of disturbance while trying to live in quietude, and if you disturb your body with the work of your hands and if you disturb your soul by worrying of many things, what quietude will you have, by taking care of many things, so that you to be pleasant to God? Judge that by yourself! This is because without forsaking all the things and without getting far from all worries, it is a reproachable thing us to say that one can achieve the living of the quietude. And to our God be the glory!

[574] It is about a care for the things of the life of others, had by somebody because of thinking that thus he fulfills the will of God.

About the Most Necessary and Very Greatly Beneficial Thing Due to be Remembered Daily by Him Who Sist into His Monastic Cell and Who Has Decided to Take Heed at Himself

A certain brother wrote these things and he placed them ceaselessly in front of himself, in order him to constantly remember those: "You have spent your live into insanity, you covered in shame and worthy of all evil man! But you guard on yourself at least on this day that remained to you out of your days spent in vain and without working the good things and enriched into evilness! Do not ask about world, neither about the world's life, nor about monks or about their things, neither as there are, nor about the bigness of their work, neither you take care of any of these! You have mysteriously exited the world and you have been reckoned as dead into Christ. You won't ever live within world, either to them who are in the world, in order the resting to come in your way and you to become alive into Christ! Be prepared for any condemnation and for any reproach and mocking and defamation from everybody! And you must receive all of these with joy, as being truly worthy of all of them, and you must endure with thanks the whole pain and all the troubles and the dangers coming from the devils, as one who have accomplished the devils' will. Endure manly all troubles and the things happening naturally to you and all the bitterness! Endure those with hope in God and the lack of the things necessary to the body, which will be, after a little while, all of them garbage! And welcome all of these with trust in God, and do not expect to be saved from somewhere else, nor you must expect comforting from somebody else! Ands you must throw your worry upon the Lord and in all your trials you must condemn on yourself as guilty for all of them! Do not get offended by somebody, neither blame them who upset you! This is for you have eaten from the forbidden tree and you have gained all sort of passions. Receive joyfully the bitterness, in order that to shake you up a little, and then you will get sweetened! Woe to you and to your stinking vain-glory, because you have left your soul non-condemned, despite your soul being full of all sorts of sins, and you have condemned other with your word and with your thought! Enough with all this pig food which you have eating until now! What do you have in common with the people, you who are so dirty? Aren't you ashamed of living among people, after you have lived recklessly?

If you take heed at all of these and if you master on yourself in everything, maybe you will be saved by the help of God, and if not, you will leave for that dark place and for the dwelling places of the devils whose will you have been working with a shameless face. Lo, I have testified to you about all of these. If God starts coming justly against you, in order God to reward you for the defamations and for the curses you have been cogitating and uttering against Him, the whole world will forsake you. Therefore, you must stop right now and you must start enduring the rewards coming upon you".

The brother was remembering of all of these in all his days, for, if a temptation or a trouble came, he would have been able to endure them with gratitude and he would have benefited of those. May us too to endure with gratitude the things coming upon us and may us benefit by the grace of the loving-of-people God Who it is due the glory and the mastery forever! Amen.

About the Discerning among Virtues and about the Traveling of the Whole Road

Travelling the whole road consists of these three: of repentance, or cleanness, and of consummation.

What the repentance is? It stands for forsaking the previous things and of being sad for having done them.

And what the cleanness is, briefly speaking? It stands for the heart full of mercy for the whole created nature[575].

[575] It is a positive definition of the cleanness. The cleanness is not something in itself, but it is a love for all the creatures. It is the contrary of any egotism. So, the dirt is one with the egotism, with the preoccupation with the self. Only the heart sees God in all realities for it sees all the realities in their deep and transparent truth.

And what the consummation is? It stands for the deep of the humbleness that means forsaking all realities both seen and unseen[576]. By the seen realities I mean all the felt realities, and by unseen realities I mean the thought (intelligible) realities. Then you will be outside the worry for them.

The old man was asked again, at another time: "What the repentance is?". And he said: "The crushed and humble heart; the twofold willing death towards all realities". "And what the full of mercy heart is?". And he said: "The burning of the heart for the whole creation, for people, for birds, for animals, for devils[577], and for all the creatures. In this case, the thought at these ones, and seeing them, they make flowing out of eyes torrents of tears. Out of the much and burdening mercy that masters the heart, and out of perseverance, the heart will get diminished and it will no longer be able to endure or to hear or to see any harm, or any regardless how small sadness, occurred in some creature[578]. And for this it brings prayer with tears on [576] The consummation doesn't mean gathering all of them but it means emptying oneself of all realities. It means feeling your own void, it is that feeling that you have nothing, neither something seen, nor any understanding, neither some souly capacity. In this endless void, or under its image, it makes Himself "felt" – above feeling and thinking – the endless God.

[577] The mercy is the "burning of the heart" and not a lukewarm sentiment; it is something the mother's feeling for her ill or suffering child. This is, in the same time, the cleanness. So, it is not a state of passiveness. But it is an intense living of the love full of suffering for the suffering one. It is a burning even for devils. It is the conscience that they too suffer because of their evilness. How can be this reconciled with the happiness of those who will be into the eternal happiness? That is a great mystery. Even into the suffering for others there is a consummation, a lack of egotism and of sin and of narrowing. And something else means suffering for others, but being yourself clean (for only than you can suffer for others), and something else is being tormented by your hatred against others, by the passions dominating you. The spring of this suffering for others is in the cross of Christ.

[578] "The heart gets diminished and it will no longer be able to endure any harm in any creature": the heart no longer has the power for enduring the sight of others' suffering. But right this means the heart's supreme suffering. On the other hand, the heart feels that it is unable to suffer as it should suffer. The heart's suffering should be infinite. But one experiences the infinity in the helplessness of living the infinity. This means experiencing the infinity dome by creature: on one hand the suffering is infinite, on the other hand the creature lives it infinity but in the helplessness of comprising, expressing, and communicating the infinite suffering. This is also the infinity of the creature's love: the creature always tries to communicate it, and, because of not being able to do that, the creature always repeats this communication, better said it communicated it in diverse modes, in other sides of it. In this it is implied the necessity of the love's eternity and of the ones who loves, namely of the person. My endless thirst to live and for being loves, it shows that together with the beloved one we are both destined to eternity. And for this love which we inherit successively, it could not have a beginning, there must be a communication among Persons Who love on one another from ever.

every moment also for the speechless creatures and for the enemies of the truth and for those who harm him, in order those to be guarded and forgiven[579]; likewise, for the nature of the creatures which crawl on the ground. He does that out of the much mercifulness that moves his heart without measure, in the likeness of God".

And he was asked also: "What the prayer is?". Ands he said: "An appeasement and an emptying of the cogitation of all the realities from here and a heart that consummately turns its sight towards the full of longing hope for the future realities. And he who is separated from these he sows mixed seed in his field, like him who yokes up together the ox and the donkey"[580].

And he was asked again: "How can somebody achieve the humbleness?". And he said: "Through the ceaseless remembrance of his mistakes and through the conscience of getting closer to his death, by wearing poor clothes, by choosing his final resting place on each moment, and by running to the most defaming and reproachable deeds in anything; by always being obedient, by ceaseless silence, by not loving the meetings in gatherings and by the will of being unknown and overlooked; by not keeping a own rule, by hating the much-speaking with many persons, and by not loving the earnings. And after these, by despising in his mind of any reproach of blame form any person, and of any envy' by not having his hand upon anyone and by not having anyone's hand upon himself, but by being alone in his own things[581], and of not taking in the world, upon himself, the care for somebody[582], except for himself. And, on short, one reaches the humbleness by estrangement, by poverty, and by living alone. These ones give birth to the humbleness that cleans the heart up".

And the sign of those who have reached the consummation is this: even if they are surrendered for ten times a day, to being they burnt for the people, due to their love for people they won't get enough of people. Like Moses said to God:

[579] They would be granted if they repented. But the devils do not repent; and likewise do many of the people who allow themselves to be tempted by devils.

[580] I think that here is about him who appeases on himself of the worldly worries but he doesn't have his heart full of hope for the future realities.

[581] Not mastering upon somebody and not using the fact of being the trustee of somebody, but by trusting only to God, by staying alone in front of God, with his sins.

[582] Do not reckon on himself as able to save somebody, but reckoning that he cannot even save on himself.

"If you forgive their sin, forgive it. And if not, erase me too from the book that You have written me in" (Exod. 32: 31). And as the blessed Paul said: "I would pray for I to be anathema from Christ for my brothers" and the other things (Rom. 9: 3). And again: "Now I am rejoicing of troubles for you who are from the Gentiles" (Col. 1: 24). But also, the other apostles received their death in all ways, in exchange for people's life.

And as end of all of these, God and the Lord gave for His love His Son Himself to death on the cross[583]. "For God loved the world so much that He gave even His Only Begotten Son to death for the world" (Jn. 3: 16). That was not because God couldn't deliver us in another way, but He wanted to teach us by that that useful love[584]. And God brought us closer to Him in the death of His Only Begotten Son[585]. And if God had had something more precious than His Son, he would have given that too to us, in order our mankind to be within Him. And for His great love He didn't want to force our freedom, though He could do that, but He wanted to bring us closer to Him through the love of our thought[586]. And Christ Himself obeyed His Father for His love for us, in order Him to receive upon Himself the reproach and the grief, with joy, as the Scripture says: "Instead of the joy that he had, he endured the cross, despising the shame" (Hebr. 12: 2). That's why the Lord said on that nigh which He was betrayed: "This is My body, which is being given for the world, towards life; and this is My blood that is shed for many for the forgiveness of the sins" (Mt. 26: 26-28). And for us He says again: "I am sanctifying Me" (Jn. 17: 19).

[583] We have here again an anti-Nestorian text. Himself the Son of God died on the cross as man and not as a man differing from God.

[584] So, not for a juridical satisfaction, in the Western sense.

[585] Even in the death of His Son God has brought us closer to Himself. This is for He came within His death with His supreme love to us too, and He penetrated us with it, by resurrecting Him and by resurrecting us, so that ourselves too to love Him, by forgetting us about ourselves and by being us elevated into Him. The consummation consists of love, and the love is tied to sacrifice. In that love brought all the way to sacrifice, or in each of those, there is a self-forgetfulness and the union with the beloved one and, by that, the filling up with love. In the death of His Son there was our mankind itself, in the state of surrender towards God and the Father. Saint Isaac says this in the next sentence. It is thus affirmed the ontological-transformative and recapitulative sense of the cross, namely the cross's renewing sense and its power of embracing all the people in order this renewal to be achieved.

[586] He didn't' want to make us good by force, but He wanted to gain us into Christ His Son by our free love for Him, as for our Father.

All the saints reach so this consummation when the reach to be consummate and the liken themselves to God in the abundant springing of their love for all the people. And to this sign of the likeness to God tend all the saints: towards the consummation in love for their neighbor. Sop did our fathers from loneliness; when they reached that consummation and likeness, they always received within them the full life of Lord Jesus Christ.

About the blessed Anthony they say that he never though in himself to do something more beneficial to him that to his neighbor. He had this conviction that the gain of his neighbor is the best work for himself.

About Abba Agathon it was again said that he said: "I wanted to find a lepper to give my body him and I to take his body". Can you see the consummate love? Even when he was outside of himself, he didn't allow not to rest (feed) his neighbor. And he has a hoe and a brother entered his monastic cell and that brother wanted that hoe and the saint didn't let that brother go without taking that hoe with him. And many other things have been written by some people like these.

And why am I telling only these things? Many of them gave their bodies to the wild beasts, and to the sword, and to the fire, for their neighbor. Nobody will be able to ascend on the level of this love without hiddenly feeling his trust[587]. And they who love this world they won't be able to achieve the love for people. When somebody achieves the love for God Himself, he immediately dresses himself up with that love. But it is necessary that him who have achieved God not to desire to achieve something else too together with God, but he must reject even his body[588]. This is for, if he puts on this world and if he wants this life, he won't be dressed up in God until he forsakes these. This is for God Himself confessed that by saying: "If somebody doesn't leave everything and if he doesn't hate his soul, he won't be able to become My disciple" (Lk. 14: 26). So, one must not only forsake those, but he must even hate them.

[587] The trust in or the entrustment of the future life.

[588] Here is being done a strict difference between the love for man into God and the attachment to the things of this world, or even to our body. The love for man is spiritual, it embraces the man's deep and inexhaustible subject, destined to eternity. The love for things or for bodies sticks with something that is limited and passing and it give the body a pleasure that satisfies only momentarily - or for a number of successive moments but still perishable - the senses.

And if he cannot become His disciple, how will him dwell within Him?

Question: Why is the hope so sweet to the saints and also the living accompanied by it and its deeds are easy to the soul? And why are they gained so quickly?

Answer: This is for within their soul has been wakened up the natural desire and it waters them up out of this cup[589] and it makes them drunk starting from that moment. And due to that they no longer feel the tiredness, neither the troubles, and all along the road of their trip they reckon on themselves as they would travel through the air and not walking on the earth, for they no longer see the harshness of the road and they no longer encounter mountains and rivers and "those harsh way become smooth to them" (Isa. 40: 4). And for on each moment, they look at the bosom of their Father and this hope shows them like a finger, on each moment, the things from far and unseen. This is for they see those things like in an icon[590], with the sharp eye of the faith, and for the parts of the soul are lit up like by a fire, by the longing for the realities which are far, and the realities which are not present are reckoned as being present. This is for the length of their thoughts reaches there[591]. And they always force on themselves to reach there.

And only when he gets closer to any virtue in order him to work that virtue, he won't work that virtue only, partially, but he will work comprisingly all the virtues, entirely, and concomitantly. This is for they do not make their trip on the imperial way, as all the people do, but these giants chose for the shortest ways[592]. And they are proved to travel in a short time

[589] They get drunk out of the cup of the future hope, as of some kind of foretasting of its goods. And the hope for the future life is natural to the soul.

[590] For the soul is an image of God, better said the soul is a holy icon of Him Who is holy and unseen and endless, right through this indefinite of their soul, through their soul's endless novelty and thirst for love, they see God Who alone can answer the soul's endless thirst for love and for knowledge.

[591] The soul's thirst for love and for endless knowledge is full of fire. It is not cold. And the thoughts at Him Who can satisfy it reach to Him, are tied to Him, though, on the other hand, through His infiniteness accomplished from ever, He is so different from the soul.

[592] The "imperial way" is a moderate, long, and slow way. But these ones take giant steps and they swallow short distances in a short time. They put in the working of each virtue the whole their soul, the whole their thirst for consummation. That's why they embrace all the virtues in a sole virtue.

the road to the dwelling places[593]. This is for this hope burns them like a fire and their joy cannot be quenched by the harshness of their road[594]. And it happens to them, as the blesses Jeremiah said too: "For I said: I will no longer call the name of the Lord, neither will I speak in His name. For my heart has become like a fire that burns me and it penetrates my bones" (Jer. 20: 9). It so occurs and works the remembrance of God within the hearts of them who get drunk with the hope in His promises[595].

The short paths of the virtues are the comprising virtues, for there is not a long distance among the many paths between a way of living or another[596]; there isn't even place and time and scattering between one and another, but they stay together and all of them are accomplished quickly.

Question: What the human dispassion is?

Answer: The dispassion doesn't consist of not feeling the passions, but in not accepting them, due to the many and diverse virtues, shown and hidden, achieved by some of them who have weakened the passions within themselves, so that the passions cannot easily uprise against the soul. And the cogitation doesn't need to constantly take heed at the passions because all the time the cogitation is full of the meanings coming into mind out of thinking and of occupying with the ways of the good living that is moving within mind. That's why, when the passions start moving, the cogitation is suddenly kidnapped from the closeness to passions by some meaning [593] The "dwelling places", those which our Savior Christ told about that are in the house of His Father (Jn. 14: 2), are the virtues achieved by them who strive to, as the fathers say. This is for any virtue, for instance the humbleness, the patience, the love, it is like a true vestment, or a dwelling place, that dresses up him who has it. Thus, the virtues are both paths towards the dwelling places of the consummation and the dwelling places of the images of the consummation.

[594] The "harshness" and the "joy" of the trip express another paradox really lived by them who live in ascesis. The use of the paradox is another trait relating Isaac the Syrian to John Climacus.

[595] Even only the remembrance of the name God ignites the fire within heart, by bringing into thought the whole love for Him. That's why Prophet Jeremiah no longer wanted to call God's name because of not being him able to endure that burning.

[596] The comprising or general virtues (the wisdom, the temperance, the righteousness, and the manhood), by comprising within them nay virtues, and each of them by increasing, it makes to increase all the partial virtues comprised within them. That's why, he who practices the general virtues, he practices many virtues in the same time, and therefore his road to consummation will be shorter. He quickly ascends from a level of living to a higher one.

that occurs within mind[597]. And the passions remain unworking, as the Blessed Mark said.

The mind of them who fulfill, by the grace of God, the deeds of the virtues, and who has come closer to knowledge[598], it no longer feels, except for a little, that evil and non-understanding part of the soul. This is for their knowledge is kidnapped into height and that fact estranges their knowledge from all the realities of the world. And for their innocence, and for the subtlety, nimbleness, and sharpness of their mind, but also for the continuation of their ascesis, their mind will be cleaned and it will become transparent, due to the fact that their body has become dry[599]. And through the occupation with the quietude and by long persevering in it, the mind easily and quickly takes under control each passion[600]. And that contemplation from within them it guides them towards the state of kidnapping (awe) tied to it. And by this they are much enriched into views (contemplations) and their cogitation never is lacking the content of the understanding, neither they even live outside the realities sown within them by the fruit of the Holy Ghost. And by getting accustomed in years, there will be removed from their heart the memories which move the passions within their soul, and it will be removed the mastery of the devil too. When the soul doesn't make friends with the passions by thinking at them, for the fact that the soul is ceaselessly dominated by another care, the strength of the [597] It is to be noticed the power had by a higher and clean meaning against the passions' force. There truly is a godlike power into the superiority of the sweetness of that higher meaning in comparison to the passing and gross sweetness of the passion. That's why there is godlike power also into the word of him who brings into somebody's mind such a higher meaning. It is a word brought out of the urge, out of the "word" of God.

[598] Through virtues the man gets close to his own true knowledge, of the people and of God. This is for in virtues, there is an attentive look at each of these ones, accompanied by experiencing them. It is a knowledge through practicing the healthy living. It is a knowledge gained through the fact that the man has been seriously testing on himself in big things, in order to surpass on himself, and the man has accomplished on himself on that plan of touching with God and of communion with his fellow humans.

[599] The knowledge of the higher realities is conditioned by the deeds of the virtues. The mind gets more subtle through virtues, for the body itself has been thinned, by being retrained – by practicing the virtues, and the body no longer impede, with its thickness, the sight of the mind. The knowledge into the souly and spiritual realities it is not the result of some purely theoretical undertaking, which the whole person wouldn't be engaged into, but only the rationality.

[600] "Επιτίθεται εκάστω" could also mean that: it penetrates each thing, namely it sees that thing's meaning into God.

claws of the passions cannot take under mastery his spiritual feelings[601].

Question: Which are the most exquisite traits of the humbleness?

Answer: As the self-appreciation (the pride) is a scattering of the soul in the hallucinations which steal the soul form himself and which do not restrain the soul from flying in the clouds of his thoughts, which he goes around the whole creation with[602], so the humbleness gathers the soul into appeasement and the soul is gathered by humbleness within himself. And as the soul isn't known neither seen by bodily eyes, likewise he who is humble in thought he is not known among people. And as his soul is hidden within his body from the sight and from the mixing with all the people, likewise, he who is humble he doesn't want to be seen and known by people, for his separation and for his depravation of all things, but his will is also this: if possible, he wants to sink even on himself within himself and him to dwell and him to enter the quietude and him to totally forsake his previous thoughts, together with all his senses, and him to be like one who is not within creation and who hasn't come to existence and who is not known at all even to his own soul[603]. And as hidden and closed is this one, as a treasure, and separated from the world, the closer is whole to his Master[604].

[601] Rarely on can find in other spiritual writings such a detailed description of the mode which the dispassion - or the weakening of the passions - can be gained in. This state is achieved not by directly fighting against the passions, but by giving a positive content to the soul, a content that is opposite to passions.

[602] "Μετεωρτσμός", which I have almost always translated as scattering, it is a movement of the soul into the sky, like the meteors do. The soul wanders with its thought through the sky, without a settlement, by roving with his preoccupation for all the things, through all the imaginings, without having the steadfastness to deepen something form the whole objective reality, and especially without deepening into himself and into setting his own life in order. So, the humbleness is defined here as gathering of the soul into himself, without claiming that he knows everything, and actually not knowing anything as he should. The humbleness is the opposite to the arrogant superficiality.

[603] He forgets even about himself. He has exceeded the self-knowledge. The conscience about himself has sunk into his own being that is deeper than it, better said it has sunk into God Who is its endless foundation. So, it is not a forgetfulness about oneself in the superficial aspects, which brings all sorts of irresponsible deeds, but it is a forgetfulness about oneself into deep, a deep that keeps the mind therein.

[604] He no longer knows except on God, like one who loves somebody no longer knows except that somebody. It is the most complete definition of the humbleness: to exist as you would not exist, not to be known even to yourself, but still not to be like an animal or as an unconscious plant. Be conscious about God, but not about yourself. Do not make a big deal of you. If in

He who is humble in thought he never finds the resting in order to pill up and to mix multitudes, moves, and voices, looseness and worries and banquets - out of which it is born the unrestraint -, neither in words and in meetings and in discussions and in the scattering of his senses; but he cherishes more than all of these to live lonely into quietude, separated from all creation, and taking care of himself in a peaceful place[605].

And he chooses in everything the smallness, the non-earning – that is absolutely necessary -, and the poverty, instead of being among many things and deeds which follow one after another. He wants all the time to find peace and lack-of-worry, without the mixing among the present realities, so that the thoughts not to spring out of himself. This is for he is convinced that if he falls into many things, it will be impossible him to be protected against the disturbance of the thoughts. This is because, where there are many things there will be many worries and disorder and pilling up of diverse and mixed thoughts. And then he goes out of the state and he ascends above his earthly worries, and he enters the peace of his thoughts, which he is in when he doesn't think except to the small absolutely necessary needs, and when the cogitation doesn't' receive except the sole care for its best thoughts. This is because, if his needs impeded him from the all-good thoughts, he will reach that state which he will be hurt in, and which he will hurt on himself in. And by that he opens the door to the passions and he removes from himself the peace of the discernment (of the right-reckoning), and so the humbleness will run away from him and the door of the peace will be locked up[606]. So, because of all of these, the soul must guard on the external realities the man forgets about himself by getting scattered, by getting decomposed and no longer being a unitary subject, by gathering on himself within himself the man finds on himself and he strengthens on himself as such a unitary subject, as a very precious treasure, as a pearl enlightened from beyond himself, by God. This pearl reflects the godlike light and it attracts the attention more upon that godlike light. And the man is amazed in that state not by the pearl represented by himself, but the godlike light beautifying him.

[605] He doesn't forget about himself because of the noise (the "distraction") from outside, but because of diving into himself through appeasement.

[606] The discernment is tied to peace. You cannot distinguish well the evil thoughts into the disorder and the pilling up of many worries and passions. When the man takes care of many things, the many thoughts related to those will open the door to the passions and they will shut the door of the peace. Consequently, there are two doors within the soul: a door thought which the inferior passions enter the soul, and a door through which the peace coming from himself form the many things and the soul must be all the time in quietude and in resting and in peace and in gentleness and in piousness.

He who is humble he never feels on himself strained, hurried, or troubled. Within him there are no hot or frivolous thoughts. He is all the time in a non-strained resting. Even if the sky collided with the earth, he wouldn't be scared. But not everyone who is peaceful is also humble in cogitation. But everyone who is humble in thought he is peaceful too. He who is not humble in thought he is not gathered within himself[607]; but you will find many people gathered within themselves without being humble in their thought[608]. This is what our gentle and humble Lord said: "Learn from Me for I am gentle and humble in heart and you will find resting to your souls" (Mt. 11: 21).

He who is humble in thought he is all the time at rest, for there is nothing to disturb or to scare his cogitation. And one can say – and I reckon it isn't inappropriate to say that – that him who is humble in thought he is not from this world, for he doesn't get scared or changed by sadness and he doesn't get lost or indulge himself in joys either. But the whole his true joy and gladness are into the things of his Lord.

And the humble cogitation is followed by gentleness and by the gathering into oneself. The humble cogitation is shown into the righteousness of the senses, in the measured word, in disregarding on himself, in the poor clothes, in the peaceful walking, in lowing downwards, in the abundance of the mercifulness, in the quickness of his tears, in the lonely soul, in the crushed heart, in the motionlessness of the wrath (anger), in the non-scattered senses, in the fewness of his belongings, in needing little in everything, in enduring, in patience, in not-getting-scared, in the strength of his heart born out of non-loving the temporary life, in enduring the trials, in peaceful and non-frivolous cogitations, in the gathering of the thoughts, in above it enters the soul. Or maybe the soul himself enters through one door the passion's world and through another door the soul enters the motherland of the peace.

[607] Only by deepening on himself within himself the man cogitates seriously and he knows the motives which he is being humbled for, and thus he can change his life into good and he can lead his life further onto the way of the good.

[608] Somebody can be focused within himself also by nourishing a thought of avenge, or by planning a tactic to impose himself upon others. That one is far from humble cogitation. But this gathering into himself it is not a gathering into the deepest intimacy of his, but into a passionate thought that is not the same with the deep self of the man, but it is something superficial.

guarding the mysteries of the righteousness[609], in shame, and in piousness - and over all of these, into the ceaseless quietude, in ceaselessly remembering the own nescience[610].

The humble one doesn't ever come across to something that forces him and disturbs him. He who is humble in thought he is ashamed of himself each time he is alone[611]. I wonder how him who is truly humble in thought, when he gets closer to prayer, he won't even dare to beg God for something, or to reckon on himself as worthy of that something that he asks for, and he won't even dare to know what he will be praying for; but he only keeps his silence, with all his thoughts, while only waiting for mercy. He waits to see what decision will be made regarding him by the Worshipped Greatness, and he keeps his face bowed down to earth and his sight stays within his heart focuses on that high and holy gate of the Holies, where is That One Whose dwelling place is the darkness that blinds the eyes of the Seraphs[612], and whose strength quickens the dance of the Seraphs' groups and it overflows silence over all levels of theirs[613]. And him who is humble in thought he dares to pray for and to say only this: "Your will be done to me, Lord!". Let's say this too within ourselves! Amen.

[609] The righteousness, or the virginity, it is full of mysteries, it is upheld by a deep thinking, and by feeling the clean and above-nature mystery that penetrates the own nature. The contrary state is joined with the superficiality, or with the superficiality of the own being.

[610] The spiritual life is full of paradoxes. Among those is this one too: on one hand, the humble one truly knows his inner self, while on the other hand he is aware of the indefinite character of his self, namely he is aware of the impossibility to exhaustively know his self. I truly know on myself when I realize that I won't ever be able to fully know on myself, when I realize that I most of myself it remains a mystery to me: "I know that I don't know on myself". The humbleness presses upon the last part of the paradox, for it is much more within you what you do not know than what you do know. What you know is something limited, but it remains unknown to you your own indefinite. The proud one doesn't know except about the first part of this alternative, and that's why he knows much less about himself.

[611] Of course, when he remembers of himself. This is for he must forget even about himself. If he remembers of himself, he will get ashamed because of his sins, because of his smallness, and because of his unworthiness. This is for he cannot remember of himself except in front of God.

[612] If the godlike darkness blinds the eyes of the Seraphs, all the more will be darkness to us because of our helplessness to know him, a helplessness much bigger than that of the Seraphs. It is a supra-luminous darkness. This is the idea belonging to Dionysus the Areopagite.

[613] Out of God there is overpoured silence over the angels, because of not being they able to know God's thoughts, for He is so wonderful that thy no longer can express what they feel when they are near Him. Only those who are far from a wonderful thing are able to speak about that thing. The angels express their joy only through dance. This is for in dance they unwillingly express their joy of God.

The soul will enter effortlessly to understand the wisdom of God and of His creatures, if the soul appeases on himself of the world and of life's worries. This is for then he can know his nature and the treasures he has hidden within himself[614]. When the worries of the life do not enter the soul from outside, but the soul remains into his nature, the soul won't need to tire on himself for a long time in order to enter and to understand the wisdom of God. This is for the soul's separation from the world and the soul's appeasement, they will move the soul, naturally, towards understanding the creatures of God[615]. And from this one the soul ascends towards God and the soul gets amazed and the soul remains near God. This is for, when the water doesn't enter the soul's spring from outside, out of the natural water that springs out of the soul there will always sprout out the wonderful meanings of God[616]. But when the soul is outside [614] The soul knows the wisdom of God and the soul truly understands God's creatures, when the soul penetrates into himself by appeasing on himself. This is for the soul will see God and the meanings of the creatures hidden into God, through the soul's transparence.

[615] The soul will not more easily and more deeply and more effortlessly the infinite mystery of God, if the soul looks withing himself, than by gathering a big quantity of knowledge about the creatures. This is for such knowledge is infinite. But, out of his own indefinite, the soul can easily realize what the infinity of God is; or he sees his own indefinite as filled up with God's infinity.

[616] Saint Isaac discerns between passions and their causes. The passions are not within soul by nature, but the causes of the passions touch the soul. And only in this sense one can talk about souly passions. Therefore, we are giving here what Theotokis says: "In their own meaning, dispassionate (impassible, without passions) it is him who is unmoved towards evil and who is incapable of any passions. But in a second meaning, it can be called as dispassionate also him who is difficult to be moved towards a certain passion, and who can be cleaned of passions even if he is capable of passions. So, in the proper meaning dispassionate (impassible) by nature is only everybody's God. In the second meaning, the dispassion has been given to the people and to any rational nature. This is for if the peoples;' and angels' nature had been created by God as incapable of passions, neither Lucifer would have received the haughtiness, neither the parents of the mankind would have received the pride. That's why also Gregory the Theologian says about angels (in Word at the Birth of the Savior): "I would want to say that they are unmoved towards evil and that they have only the movement towards good, as ones who are around God, and they are the first one enlightened by God. But by that they enjoy a second light. But that makes me say and understand than they are not unmoved, but that he who has the name of Morningstar is difficult to be moved, and because of his haughtiness he has become and he is called as darkness. And the powers which have separated on themselves from Him have made on themselves to us too as causing the evilness by running aways from good". And about man he says (at the same place): "By sowing him him life from Himself, a fact which the Scriptures calls the man for as understanding soul and those, or when the soul took occasion for that from some foreign memory, the senses will move against that soul some disturbance coming out of the encounter with the things.

But when the senses are closed by appeasement and when the sense are not allowed to jump here and there, and when the memories are getting old with the help of the appeasement, then the man sees the natural rationalities of his soul, what those rationalities are, and which the soul's nature is, and what hidden treasure the soul have within. And treasure is the understanding of the incorporeal realities moving within the soul by itself, without any worry or effort for it. But the man doesn't know that such thoughts are moving within the human nature. This is because who was his teacher? Or, how has the man understood, that what after he has understood, he cannot explain to others? Or, who was his guide towards what he hasn't learnt by any means form somebody else?

Of this kind it is the nature of the soul. So, the passions are ad adding due to a souly cause. For the subject is dispassionate (without passions) by nature. So, when you hear the Scripture talking about souly and bodily passions, you must knot that it speaks about the passions' causes. This is because by nature the soul is without passions[617].

But the philosophers from outside do not admit this; likewise, neither their disciples. But we believe that God made him who is in God's image as dispassionate (non-passionate). And "in His image" I mean not according to the body, but according to the soul that is unseen. This is for any image is produced according to a preexistent image (a model). This is image of God, as a second big world into the small world, God placed the man on earth like another angel, mixed worshipper of the things from on earth, seer of the seen creation, mysteriously understanding the thought realities, emperor of the realities form on earth, mastered form above, earthly and heavenly, temporary and immortal, seen and thought, in the middle between greatness and humbleness etc.". So, in this second meaning spoke the Pious about the dispassion of the man, by saying: "For the soul is dispassionate by nature". This is for God created the man's nature as clean, undefiled, and stranger to any passion; but not also incapable of passion. "This is because by honoring him with the self-control, God allowed the dispassionate realities to remain within man".

If the dispassion of God means only not being Him moved towards evil, we can understand how, out of His love for people, the dispassionate Son of God took a suffering body, not in the sense that that body would have tended towards evil, but in the sense of His capacity to suffer out of His love for people. This is for the willing suffering out of love, it no longer is a passion in the sense attributed by the text in this Word and by the commentary of Theotokis.

[617] If the passions had belonged to the soul, they would have belonged also to the prototype which the soul was created according to, and the soul could have not become dispassionate.

because it will be impossible to somebody to represent an image if he doesn't see, in advance, something similar. So, you must believe that the passions, as I said before, they do not belong to the soul[618]. And if somebody opposes the said things, we will ask him, and let him answer.

Question: What the soul's nature is like? Is it dispassionate and full of light, or is it passionate and dark?

Answer: If the nature of the soul as yore transparent and clean by receiving the blessed light, the soul will be the same when ascending on the ancient level. So, when the soul moves passionately, the soul will obviously be outside the nature, as we are assured by them who are taught by Church. So, the passions entered the soul later, and it is not right to say that the passions belong to the soul, even if the soul moves within passions. Consequently, it is obvious that the soul moves into the external realities (when the soul is passionate), and not into his own. And if the soul doesn't move into these bodiless passions, they will be called as natural, and that's why the hunger, the thirst, and the sleep are souly too. This is for into these ones too, the soul suffers and sighs together with the body, as it happens in case of getting some limbs cut off or having fever or being sick or in similar situations. This is for the soul suffers the pains together with the body, as also the body suffers together with the soul. And the soul is moved by the body's living and the soul also receives the body's troubles. And of our God to be the glory and the mastery forever! Amen.

About Soul and about Passions; and about the Cleanness of the Mind. By Questions and Answers

Question: Which is the natural state of the soul? And which is the opposite-to-nature state? And which is the above-to-nature state?

[618] The verbatims translation of the Greek text would be: "And if the soul moved within these incorporeal passions, they would be called natural, even if the hunger, the thirst, and the sleep are souly". But this form of the text is meaningless.

Answer: The natural state of the soul is the knowing of the creatures of God, of those submitted to the senses and of the thought (intelligible) ones. That above-nature-state is the movement of the sight (of the contemplation) of the above-being-godhead. And the opposite state is the passionate movement.

This is for the godlike and great Basil said: "The soul, when is according-to-nature, is lives into the upper realities; and when the soul is outside nature, he lives into the realities form outside the nature, low, on the ground. And when the soul is into the upper realities, he is dispassionate. And when the nature descends from its level, the passions take that nature into their mastery"[619]. It is obvious then that the souly passions aren't souly by nature. Though the move into the body's blameless passions as in hunger and as in thirst[620], but because of not being set a law[621] to the soul in these things he is not blamed[622] for them, as much as he is reproached because of the others. Sometimes it also happens that god commands to somebody to do something seemingly inappropriate and that one is rewarded with good rewards instead of being rebukes and reproached. Prophet Hosea did such, when he married a whore, likewise did Prophet Elijah when he killed due to his zeal for God; they who obeyed Moses's commandment did likewise and they killed their parents by the sword. In addition to that, they say that the lust and the anger (the wrath) belong to the soul, without the soul's nature. And that these ones are the soul's passions.

Question: Is it the lust according to nature when ignites for the godlike realities, or when the lust is in the earthly and [619] Unlike the scholastic teaching, according to which the fallen state is the state of "pure nature" of the man, the teaching of the fathers has a very high conception about the man's nature. This is for, according to them, the man is in connection with God by his nature. And analogy: the connection with the air belongs to the man's nature because the lung cannot function without air.

[620] "The hunger, the thirst, and the sleep, and the similar ones to these, they are not reproachable, neither blemished. This is for our Lord too, He received them into His all-unblemished body and he hungered for forty days and He thirsted at Jacob's well and He slept on the board of the ship. But the pious called them as blemished because they are consequences of the corruption (of the nature)".

[621] A law to stop them and to condemn them.

[622] "Those are not blamable, by any means", says Theotokis. Still, because of representing state which the man easily falls into sin through, when satisfying them more than needed, the Pious was right not to count them in line with the states of ceaseless vigil, or of non-needing-food of the angels.

bodily things? And why the nature of the soul is filled up with zeal by anger? And why is it called the wrath (the anger) as natural? Is it that not because somebody gets wrath (gets angry) because of some bodily deed, or because of envy, or because of vain-glory? Or because of similar things? Or because of the things contrary to these ones? Let him who can answer, to answer, and we will follow him.

Answer: The godlike Scripture often uses names with a different meaning than the usual meaning. The things which belong to the soul the Scripture attributes to the body. And vice versa. And the Scripture doesn't separate these. Likewise, the aspects of the Lord's godhead were given as belonging to His holy body, despite being those things which doesn't fit the human nature. And again, the humble aspects were given as belonging to Hid godhead, though they belong to the human nature[623]. And many, by not understanding the purpose of the godlike words, they suffered an incorrigible work. It is likewise with the aspects of the soul and of the body. So, if the virtue is the health of the soul in a natural manner, the passions are illnesses of the soul entering the nature and occurring within nature and getting the nature out of its health. So, it is obvious that the health existed within nature from before the illness coming as something not belonging to the nature (as an accident). And if these are like so, as they truly are, the virtue is within soul as something natural. And the thing coming to it as something different (the accidents) are outside nature.

Question: The bodily passions are said as being natural to the body, or as coming haphazardly to the body, as something differing form the body (by accident)" And the passions of the soul which are into the soul, because of the soul's connection with the body, are they said to be naturally "of the soul", or this is said in an improper meaning?

Answer: The ones which belong to the body nobody dares to call them such, in a proper sense; and those belonging to the soul, once it is known to and it is confesses by everyone that the cleanness belongs to the soul in a natural manner, it would be appropriate one to dare and say that the passions do not belong to the soul in a natural manner, by any means. This is because the illness comes second after health. And it is impossible one and the same nature to be both good and bed. Therefore, necessarily, the goodness precedes the evilness. And the natural one is that one that existed before the another. This is because anything that is added as something different (as accident) is not said as being by nature, but it is said as something entering from outside. And any states which came and entered as something different (as accidents) they mean change. And the souly passions (affects) have been placed within man towards the man's benefit and growth. It is likewise with the souly ones[624]. This is because when the body is forced to be outside its good thriving by being deprived of its things and so the body is forced to follow the soul, the body will weaken and it will be harmed. And when the soul, by leaving his realities, he follows the body, the soul will be harmed as well, according to the godlike apostle who says: "The ghost lusts against the body and the body against the Ghost. This is because of these two being opposite to one another" (Gal. 5: 17). So, let nobody blaspheme on God because God would have sown the passions within our nature. This is for God placed within natures the things making those natures to grow up. But when those are separated from one another then the nature isn't within its things, but it is into the opposite things[625]. But if the passions have been within soul in a natural manner, why would have been the soul harmed by passions? For the things belonging to the nature won't harm the nature.

[623] This was on the ground of the communication of the features between the two natures. Here they authors is showing on himself again as anti-Nestorian, due to the fact that the Bearer of the two natures is one and the same Person or Hypostasis.

Question: But why the bodily passions which make the body to grow up and strengthen the body, they harm the soul, if [624] It is not here about the evil passions, but it is about those which we rather call as affects: hunger, thirst, bodily pain, which are mysteriously felt by the soul too; or, the body feels those because the soul feels those as well. Also, such is the sadness because of the sin, because of the suffering and because of the death of a relative, of a person known to us. In the Greek language these too are called as passions, because of the nature manifests towards them a certain passiveness. The nature doesn't cause those willingly, but they are imposed to nature unwillingly.

[625] The body doesn't commit sin when satisfying the affect of the hunger, neither the soul sins when getting sad for a sin, namely when each of them work according to an own affect. But when the soul is impeded by the body's delectation to get sad, then the soul commits something contrary to himself; and when the soul impeded the body to eat because of who knows what sad thought, the soul pushed the body towards something contrary to the body. The soul is harmed when impeded by the body to get sad. Then the soul's gladness becomes a passion. But is getting glad for sin had been natural within the soul, the soul wouldn't have been hurt by gladness.

they do not belong to this one? Ands why does the virtue persecute the body, but it provides growth to the soul?

Question: Can't you see that the things from outside nature harm the nature? This is because any nature, by getting closer to fulfilling the things characteristic to itself, it will be filled up with gladness. But, do you want to know what is characteristic to each one of these natures? Take heed that characteristic to each nature, are those which help that nature. And the things harming a nature are foreign to that nature and they enter that nature later. So, for it is a known thing that the passions of the two ones (body and soul) are opposite to one another, everything that helps the body it also provides the body with peace. And when the soul is shared with body's peace, we won't say that that peace belongs naturally to the soul. This is because the things which naturally belong to the soul they cause the death of the body. Still, through an opposite use, this death is attributed to the soul, and because of the body's weakness the soul cannot be free from suffering it too, as the body suffers it. This is for the soul is naturally imparted with the things saddening the body, due to the soul's union with the body's movement, through a non-understood wisdom. But though the body and the soul are in such a partaking (communion), still the movement of one is separated from the movement and will of the another; and the body is separated from ghost. And the nature doesn't change, but each of them, even if it tends strongly either towards sin or towards virtues, it is moved by its will. And when the soul is elevated through the care for the body, the soul will flourish through the ghost all his movements so that the soul would will swim into the waters of the heavens in non-understood realities; and the soul won't allow the body to thing at its own needs, even if those needs are accomplished. And if the body is again into sins, the soul's thoughts won't cease from jumping up within mind[626].

[626] Rarely one can find in a patristic writing such an insistence upon the so intimate and mysterious connection between soul and body, upon the union and the movements and the feelings of theirs. But still, the body and the soul are not confounded to one another. We have here some sort of unmixed-union, as in the union of the two natures in the Person of the Word. When the body is weakened and mortified through an intense preoccupation of the soul with the spiritual realities, the intense weakness and mortification will be felt by the soul as well. This is for, on one hand the soul rejoiced of living the spiritual realities, while on the other hand the soul suffers for the body's toils and pains. But the inverse can take place too. The body feels in his pains a comforting coming fork the joy experienced by the soul.

Question: What the cleaning of the mind is?

Answer: Clean in his mind was not him who doesn't know the evil, because in this case he would be like an animal; neither him who is within his nature in the age of the children; neither him who puts on the mask of the cleanness. But the cleanness of the mind is that cogitation that has reached into the godlike realities, after working the virtues. And we do not dare to say that somebody has achieved this, without the trial from his thoughts, because otherwise he wouldn't be dressed up into a body[627]. This is for we do not dare saying that our nature is not warred up to death. And the trial from the thoughts means one not obeying them, but setting up the beginning of the fight against thoughts.

The Causes of the Thoughts' Movement

The movement of the thoughts within man takes place due to four reasons. First, out of the will of the natural body[628]. Second, out of imagining by the senses the world's things, which the soul sees and hears. Third, out of the sinful habits and tendencies of the soul, which the soul bears in mind. Fourth, out of the attacks (bites) from the devils warring us through all the passions, because of the reasons shown by us before. That's why, the man cannot remain without thoughts and war until his death, as long as he is in the life of this body. This is because, you judge if some one of the four causes can cease before the deliverance from the world and before death; or if it is necessary that the soul searches for the things for survival, let him not lust for some of the things of the world[629].

[627] The cleanness of the mind isn't a mind emptied of any thinking, but it means the thinking of the mind gathered into God. That is not reached by anybody without crossing through the experience of the tempting thoughts, because if that was the case, he wouldn't be dressed up into a body.

[628] When the soul gets above the care for his body, the soul's movement flourish through the Ghost, by swimming into the deep waters of the heavenly meanings. And those movements no longer allow the body to be dominated by the sensation of its deeds, even though those deeds are being done. The body eats, the body breathes, but as the body wouldn't eat or breathe. The will of the body is being done, but without any passions. And inversely, when the body moved into sins, the soul doesn't cease thinking, but the soul's thoughts are defiled by the sinful movements of the body.

[629] Those are the thoughts set in motion by hunger, by thirst, by the resting after getting tired, by pain, and by the urge of the blood towards mating in order to procreate children. All these thoughts can take the shape of some sinful thoughts.

And if it is insanity to somebody cogitating at something like this, for the nature needs all of these, the passions move in every one who wears a body, either he wants or not. That's why everybody must guard on himself against not a sole passion that moves within him ceaselessly and manifestly, neither only against two, but he must guard on himself against several passions, as one who still wears a body[630]. They who have defeated their passions by their virtues, though they still are hindered by the thoughts and by the attacks coming from those four causes, they no longer are defeated by those, for they have power and for their mind is kidnapped to good and godlike memories.

Question: What differs the cleanness of the mind from the cleanness of the heart through?

Answer: Something else is the cleanness of the mind and something else is the cleanness of heart. The mind is one of the soul's feelings[631]. And the heart is that one that comprises and keeps together the inward feelings[632]. The heart is the root. And if the root is holy its branches will be holy as well. Of, if the heart is being cleaned up, all the feelings will obviously be cleaned up. If the mind takes care of reading the godlike Scriptures, or if the mind also toils a little in fasting and in vigils and in appeasement, the mind will forget about the previous living and it will be cleaned when getting far from the defiled behavior. But the mind won't have a steadfast cleanness. This is because, as the mind quickly gets cleanness, as quickly the mind gets defiled too.

[630] The passions move within the actual man, or they potentially lay within him, but he still can avoid impropriating them, he still can keep them at distance even though he feels them. This means that there is within man an almost continuous battle between his self and the passions, or that there is necessary a continuous guarding against passions.

[631] This is a definition of the mind in conformity to the whole thinking of the fathers. The most it is conceived like that by Saint Isaac the Syrian and by Saint Simeon of the New Theologian. The mind is feeling, so that the mind is understanding as well. The mind is an understanding feeling, for it enters the contact with the realities which are not submitted to the bodily senses. But for those are intelligible realities, namely they are full of meanings, in the contact with them the mind notices, it received in itself their meanings which are, in the same time, realities. The human subject is a richness of meanings. But the human subject is perceived by another by meeting him by communication between him and another subject.

[632] So, the heart is sharper in understanding than the mind is. The heart doesn't only perceive the meanings of the intelligible realities as the mind does, but the heart rather perceives those realities in their wholeness (life, power, harmony etc.).

And the heart is being cleaned through many troubles and deprivations and by getting far from the partaking with the all the realities world and through the death towards everything. And once the heart has been cleaned, and its cleanness won't be defiled again, by material things, neither the heart will be scared of the great and unseen wars, namely of the fearsome realities. This is for then the heart will have gained a strong stomach that can digest any food that cannot be digested by the weak ones. This is for the physicians say: each meal of meat is difficult to digest, but it gives much power to the healthy bodies when the meal is received by a strong stomach. Thus, any cleanness that is quickly, and in a short time, and with a little effort gained, that cleanness will quickly be lost and defiled too. But that cleanness gained through many troubles and built up during a long time, it won't be scarred by a little attack in some small part of the soul. This is for God strengthen that soul. His to be the glory forever! Amen.

About the Seeing of that Incorporeal Nature. Through Questions and Answers

Question: On how many diverse ways the human nature receives the view of the bodiless realities?

Answer: On three different ways[633], the feeling of the human nature catches any non-composed and subtle nature of [633] "The feeling of the immaterial beings it is received by the human nature on three ways. First is through the feeling of the body: as in case of Abraham at Mamre Oak Tree; by feeling the Three above-being Hypostasis, as in case of Lot; and on the way of those who were a hosted in Sodom etc.; these ones were seen in some thickened and material being and having a human image. Second, through the sight of the soul, as in case of Isaiah who was sitting on a tall and elevated throne, and he saw the Seraphs with six wings around him and he also saw a Seraph who was sent to him; as in case of old Daniel; and as in case of Hezekiel who saw the shiny angels. They saw those in a certain thin and immaterial hypostasis… and they saw those also through the power of their understanding. This last mode is nothing else, I reckon, but the understanding sight of the mind, through which they who have reached the measure of the virtues, they have become accustomed to sometime elevate their cogitation from the earth and from the earthly things to the contemplation of the ghosts of the righteous, on some the times of the hierarchies of the angels, and on some other times of Himself the All-High the spiritual bodies[634]: or in the thickness of the hypostasis in being; or in the thinness of the hypostasis outside being; or through the true contemplation that is the existential contemplation[635].

The senses have the power for the first way of sight[636]. On the second way it is the soul who sees with its most marginal[637] part. And on the third way of seeing, he sees the understanding, by the power of the understanding. And for both last ways of seeing, there have power the will and the understanding. In those which depend of will and on the soul's commendable aspects and on That One Who unites Himself with these ones[638], the first one is the will. And these sights are the grand daughters of the freedom[639], though, when needed, the freedom and the will, they enter the state of the quietude and they stop, and thereafter only the godlike work will take place. Then the two sights seem like one and the true knowledge is being done

Emperor of the glory. This last way was called by the Pious as true and existential contemplation. The first way doesn't depend on us, because the sights through senses are done through the benevolence of God. But the second way and the third way depend on us, for our soul and our will must collaborate with the will of God, in order the sights of the soul and the understandings of the mind to take place. These things are said by the Pious in continuation."

[634] "Spiritual bodies" he calls in continuation themselves the incorporeal and immaterial beings, whom he called also as non-composed nature.

[635] We do not know what this existential contemplation would mean; it seems to us that it is about a contemplation of the spiritual reality in itself, non-dressed up in images, through a full communion with it. In such a man there no longer work anything within him except for the Holy Ghost.

[636] This way too of sights through senses takes place because the senses are penetrated by the power of the Holy Ghost.

[637] We haven't found a satisfactory translation solution to this locution. Though in the source text it is about the "part of the soul situated at the most far edge of the soul", we think that the author intended to express that it is about that part of the soul that is the less in contact with the body's matter, or the most superior from spiritual point of view. And marginal means also unimportant. We beg the interested reader to find a better term, and to improve our translation before sharing it with other people! (E. l. t.'s n.)

[638] If the sights through senses depend only on the work of God, the two last modes of knowledge will depend on the together-working of the human will and of God (they are results of the synergy).

[639] First there is the freedom, and then there is the work for cleaning the will (that is the daughter of the freedom) and then there is the knowledge on the two last ways, which are the grand daughters of the freedom. Nicephorus Theotokis gives us this explanation: "The freedom moves the will, and the will moves the soul and the cogitation, towards contemplation. And in the time of the cogitation, the freedom and the will they get appeased, and the soul and the cogitation work". Better said, after the will and the freedom stop, there will be the Holy Ghost seeing and working through us.

without the will of him who received it. This is for the senses receive, without their will, all the realities which they come across with[640]. On these three ways the Holy Powers fulfill their service in partaking (in communion) with us, towards teaching us and towards founding our life[641].

But the unclean devils cannot move within us except the two first ways, when they draw near to us towards destroying us and not in our benefit. On the third ways the devils cannot come close to us in order to deceive us. This is for the devils have no power, by any means, to move within us the natural thoughts into cogitation. This is because it is impossible to the sons of the darkness to come close to the light[642]. But the holy angels have the power to defeat and to illuminate. The devils are the masters and the contrivers of the liar meanings, or of the grandsons of the darkness. Thus, from them who illuminate the soul will receive luminous light; and from the dark ones the soul will receive darkness.

Question: And which the cause is that it has been given to those, and to these it hasn't been given at all (the third way)?

Answer: Each one of these teachers firstly sees within himself the understanding that he learns it and that he finds it out and that he receives it and that he tastes it and then he can teach it to them whom he teaches to. The first teachers teach further on the detailed knowledge of the things from the healthy knowledge. They are the ones who can understand from the beginning, with a sharp understanding of their all-sharpened and all-clean mind. And the devils have quickness bot they have not light[643]. And something else is the quickness and something

[640] Like the external senses see the things without their will, likewise the soul's senses see, without their will, the immaterial realities. Then, the two sights appear to be one or, like Theotokis says, our work and the work of the Holy Ghost are like one. Our sight has been totally infused with the sight of the Ghost.

[641] On these three ways of seeing, or of knowledge, are not only us working, or only the Holy Ghost, but also the angelic powers are working, when we know them, or, with their help, we can know God too.

[642] The cogitation is luminous light by themselves its thoughts. The devils cannot set the luminous light in motion within us.

[643] There are too people who understand quickly what they are told and they talk back quickly, but they notice only what is at the surface of what is being said, and not the depth and the complexity of what is being communicated. They notice only one side of what they are told, or a superficial summary. They give us the impression of being "smart", but they actually aren't. The devils are likewise. The deep mysteries of the existence remain hidden from them. The devil quickly slide of the vast surface of the reality, but they do not penetrate the reality's endless dimension in depth.

else if the light. The quickness without light, it will lead to perdition him who has it[644]. This makes the hallucination seem real[645]. This is for only the light shows the truth of the things and the light is multiplied or diminished according to the living[646].

The holy angels overpour within us their knowledge about the movements of the things, out of the knowledge firstly tasted by them and understood by them, and thereafter the angels teach that knowledge to us too. The second teachers[647], they also move within us the knowledge about the movement of the things on the measure of their own knowledge. This is for they are not compelled to move within us right thoughts about things which they do not remember[648]. Though, you still must believe, as I said before, that even if we were able to receive, they couldn't teach us the true sight, despite they were, in the beginning, in that sight. And again, each of them, according to the oikonomia which he is appointed to, he urges them whom he teaches, either towards these or towards the opposite things.

And I truly know that our mind can move even without the mediation of the holy angels, by itself, towards good, even without being taught. But the knowledge of the evil things will not be received by our senses without the mediation of the 644 That is a quickness in understanding but without profoundness, and almost only in the service of the criticism. That's why such a quickness without profoundness, it will lead him who has it, to his destruction.

645 "The statue of the truth". Something else is the living man and something else is the inanimate and void on inside and imitating the reality of the man statue, consisting of a brass bark, that imitates the living hypostasis of the man. Saint Isaac gives as cause of confounding the hallucination to the truth, the superficial quickness which somebody looks at the reality with. This superficial quickness is characteristic to the devils and to any man who looks quickly, but superficially, at the realities. This is a quickness coming also out of the impatience of living the reality with the whole being.

646 Only the light shows the truth of the things. But this light depends of the things themselves, or also on themselves. In order to see that light one must live the things in their reality, though this light is had also by them who are in a concordance to the things. Only they know the whole truth who live the true reality; the truth is known only to them who live in the true reality, or who have the true reality within themselves. And the more they live in the true reality, the more they will know the light of that reality, or that reality's truth, and not a hallucination about that.

647 The second teachers are the devils.

648 Theotokis says about the second teachers that they are the devils. That's why he modifies that text which it is said in: "They are compelled to move within us right thoughts about the things which they do not remember". We too have accepted the modification operated by him. But not only the devils, but also the people having not experienced the profound things, they do the same when wanting to teach us.

devils, neither that knowledge will move within our senses. And our senses cannot work the evil by themselves. This is for the good is sown within nature, but the evil isn't by any means[649]. Every foreign thing entering our nature from outside it, it needs a mediator in order its knowledge to be received[650]. But what spring out from within, it will move within the nature without being at all thought to do that. And if the nature is like so, it is possible to the nature to move itself towards good on its own, then it will be possible the nature's growth and the light without contemplating (seeing) the angels. But the angels are our teachers, as they are to one another too. The lower angels take their learning from the upper angels who look at them, and the lower angels have the light on this way, and so they are elevated through others, until they will reach that level which they have on, as teacher, the Holy Trinity. That's why the angels on the first level dare to say that they do not have their light from themselves, but they have Jesus as Mediator Who they receive their light and they share their light to the angels from below them.

But I reckon that our mind has a natural power for moving itself towards the godlike contemplation (seeing)[651]. And [649] Saint Isaac is very optimistic in understanding the human nature.

[650] "A foreigner entering from outside" he is calling here the evil. This is learnt by the nature through the mediation of the demons, and it doesn't move within nature by itself. Saint Isaac affirms always the same optimistic vision upon our nature.

[651] Here seems to be affirmed what it is denied further on. This is because further on he says: "It is stranger by nature to the human and angelic mind". So, what must we say else than that by speaking about the natural power, he actually understands that power strengthened by grace. This is for he says: "For they are moving within us and the grace within them". The mind's nature can receive the grace, and with the power of the grace the mind moves itself toward contemplating the infinite God. So, contemplating God is both according to nature and above-nature. It is according to nature for the nature is capable of fulfilling this fact, when strengthened by grace; it is above-nature because the nature cannot contemplate the infinite God by its own power.

Further on he says again: "In all the rational realities, in the first ones and in the ones from the middle, the contemplation isn't moves by nature but by grace; in all the existing (created) realities, there are both the heavenly realities and the earthly realities". So, according to this word (either we understand by the first ones and by the middle ones the upper and the lower groups of the angels, and lower than those there are the people) the mind cannot contemplate anything of the created realities, by its nature. But he adds: "Not the nature has understood this, as on the other things". According to this word, there are some things which can be understood through the power of the nature. But which those things are? This is because he only said: "In all the existing (created) realities, in the heavenly ones and in the earthly ones". "Earthly" I reckon that he calls the Providence and the oikonomia of the all-loving God stretched over all the earthly realities, or the nature of His material creatures. This is because through this desire we are the same with all the heavenly natures, for both within us and within them there is moving the grace[652]. But it still remains a stranger by nature thing, to the human and angelic minds. This is because the contemplation of the godhead it is counted among the other contemplations. On the other hand, in all the rational creatures, in the first one and in the middle ones, in the existing (created) ones, both the heavenly one and the earthly ones, the contemplation doesn't move according to nature but by grace. And it hasn't understood this by nature, as those of the other things.

The contemplation with the mind, which the level and the sight of the angelic one move in[653], it was not in their power before the coming of Christ into body. So, the angels were unable to enter these mysteries before Christ's embodiment. But when the Word embodied on Himself, to the angels was open the door into Jesus, as the Apostle says[654].

But even if we get cleaned, I reckon - and that is true – that we the people with our thoughts cannot draw near to the unveilings and to the knowledge leading us towards that eternal contemplation (seeing), which truly is the unveiling of the who among angels and people could know the judgments of the Providence of God only by the power of his own nature? "Oh, the deep of the richness and of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God – shouts out Paul -, how impenetrable are His judgments and how untrodden are His ways! This is because who knew the Lord's mind? Or who was His adviser?" (Rom. 11: 33). It is likewise relatedly to the nature of the creatures, not only that of the people, but also that of the angels, it may be non-understood to them. And by "the others of the things" I mean the skillful use of their moral and human features, which can be understood by them who have a rational nature and who are guided by light.

[652] The human and angelic nature is good, it moves by itself towards good and towards God, but this is also because of using what it has in the same time with the help from God, for it is kindred to God, and it is in correlation – at least an implicit correlation – to God. Olivier Clément, after quoting Dostoyevsky's saying that "the man cannot preserve his human image except as long as he believes in God", he adds: "we say it more modestly, as long as the man remains capable of transcending on himself towards the encounter with the mystery. If this encounter is missed, it this surpassing movement doesn't take place, the (human) face will lose its gravitation center, namely this spiritual opening for the other world, relatedly to which it ordinates itself." (Le visage intérior Paris, Stock, 1978, p. 19).

[653] But that can be understood about angels as well. Neither they knew so much the mysteries of God before the embodiment of the Word (Eph. 3: 10).

[654] Apostle Paul says in 1 Cor. 16: 9: "A big door was opened to me"; and in 2 Cor. 2: 12: "When I came to Troas for the Gospel of Christ, a door was opened to me into the Lord"; and in Col. 4: 3, he says: "You pray for us too, in order God to open us the door for us to speak the mystery of Christ Whom I was tied for". He who advises, but also him who is being cleaned up, he will always see being open new doors in front of him, in the richness of meanings of Christ.

mysteries, without the mediation of those ones. This is because of not having out mind such a power as the beings from above have, namely they who receive in an unmediated manner the unveilings and the sights form the Eternal One. But they too receive that in icon and not in a plain manner. And our mind does the same. And each level received that form the superior level, on the ground of an oikonomia and of a knowledge that descends form the first level to the second level and so on, downwardly, until the mystery crosses through all levels[655]. But many of the mysteries are stopped on the first level and they won't pass to the next lower level. This is because of not being able the other levels to receive the greatness of the mystery without receiving it from the superior levels. And some of the mysteries by getting out of the first level, they will be unveiled only to the second level and they will be guarded there silently[656], and other levels won't understand these mysteries. And some mysteries pass to the third or to the fourth level. And it takes place thus a growth and a diminution in the unveiling which can be seen by the holy angels. And it that happens to those ones, all the more we cannot receive such mysteries without a mediation.

So, from them (from the angels) it falls within the saints' mind the feeling of the unveiling of each mystery; and this takes place when it is allowed by God to be unveiled from level to level, from the highest level to the lowest level, and thus, when it is allowed something to reach, by godlike consent, down to the human nature, namely to the people who have been forever worthy of that. Through them the saints receive the light of the understanding up to the glorious eternity, namely the untaught [655] Everything corresponds to what the Areopagites wrote in his heavenly Hierarchy (chapter I). Even the most superior angelic groups receive the seeing of God in "icon" that is something matching their nature. But they are themselves, by their nature, "image" or "icon" of the infinite person, or of the godlike interpersonal communion. In this is too an opening towards the godlike infinity, but also a characterization of what they receive in accordance to their nature.

[656] Each level receives as much as it fits it. So, the first level cannot convey to the next lower level everything that they received, but the first level will keep their silence about a part of what they received, in their own meditation, because the next lower level cannot receive everything. But the next lower level learns something out of the silence of the next superior level. The inferior level sees in the level superior to it a mystery that exceeds its understanding. Even in front of each man one can se also a silence, an impossibility of communicating everything that than man lives, but which himself is sunk into. About this silence heavy with untold silence Olivier Clément spoke in the book mentioned previously.

mystery; and they receive that from one another. This is for they are "serving ghosts sent to them who are being prepared to reach being inheritors of the life" (Hebr. 1: 14). But in the age to come, this order will cease. This is for then will no longer be received from one another the unveiling of the glory of God, towards the joy and the happiness of the soul. But each one will be given – through himself – that what will match him according to his worthiness, directly from the Master, on the measure of his good features; and no one will receive the gift from somebody else, as it is happening now. This is for there will no longer be either him who teaches nor him to learns, neither him who need to satisfy his need for knowledge from another. This is for One is the Giver, and He will give in an unmediated manner, them who will be able to receive. And they who will receive the heavenly gladness they will receive it directly from Him. Then the levels of them who teach and of them who learn will cease existing, and the strength of their desire will hang on The One.

And I am saying that they who will be tormented into Gehenna they will be whipped by the whip of the live. And what more bitter and more awful torment there beside the torment of the love! Namely, they who will feel that they have mistaken towards the love, they will suffer there a worse torment than any other torment regardless how scary. This is because that sadness imprinted within heart by the sin towards the love it is sharper than any torment.

It is a madness to somebody to reckon that in Gehenna the sinners will be deprived of the love from God. The love is the offspring of the knowledge of the truth, which, according to the general witness, it has been given to anyone. But the love works by its power in two ways: it torments the sinners, as for instance it happens here to somebody because of his friend; and the love gladdens them who guarded the appropriate things[657]. And this is, in my view, the sorrow of the torment from the Gehenna. But the love will make drunk the souls of them who will be above, with its delectation.

Question: Somebody was asked: when does one know that he has receive the forgiveness of his sins>

[657] You will be tormented by the conscience that you haven't answered appropriately to the love of your friend, to his hope placed in you by his love, or to the hope of others who were appealing your love.

Answer: And he was answered: when he feel in his soul that he consummately hated those previous sins of his, with the whole his heart[658]; And when in the things shown to him one doesn't lead on himself in an opposite (to God) manner. One like this will have been entrusted that he will have achieved from God the forgiveness of his mistakes born out of sins, as one who will have hated his sin according to the conscience which he will have gained it within himself, according to the Apostle's word: "That though that doesn't condemn on himself that is its own witness" (Rom. 2: 15, according to the meaning). May us too, achieve the forgiveness of our sins, by the grace and by the love for people of the Without-Beginning Father, together with His Only Begotten Son and with the Holy Ghost Whom it is due the glory forever and ever! Amen.

About Diverse Themes. By Questions and Answers

Question: What bond is the man's heart tied with, in order not to run towards the evil things?

Answer: By the fact that it always follows the wisdom and it progresses into the learning about life. This is because there isn't a stronger bond for the disorder of the cogitation.

Question: What limit him who follows the wisdom desires to reach at? And when will his learning have become consummate?

Answer: It is impossible to anybody to reach such a limit in his progress. This is because the saints too have shortcomings when it comes about consummation. The trip of the wisdom has no end. He who follows the wisdom he will be elevated until he will be united with God. And this is the sign of that: that its understanding is limitless. This is for the wisdom of God Himself.

[658] You will have to have yourself souly detached from your sins, in order God too to detach you from those sins; in this you will feel that God Himself will have detached you from your previous sins. It is here too an application of the synergy.

Question: Which are the first path and the first beginning helping us to come closer to wisdom?

Answer: That is the following with the whole our power the wisdom of God and to strive with the whole our soul to following it to the very end and being us ready to yield even our life when we must reject our own life and when we must throw our life from ourselves, for the love for God.

Question: Who can be rightly called as wise?

Answer: He who truly understand that this live have a border, he can set a border to his mistakes. This is because what knowledge or understanding is bigger than that or getting somebody so wise that to exit this life into incorruptibility, by not having any part of his defiled by this life's sweetness? There is no other mindless man within world than that one who, by thinning all his thoughts in order to penetrate the mysteries of the creatures and by enriching on himself through research and understanding into the whole knowledge, he has his soul, in the same time, defiled by the filthiness of the sin and he hasn't' achieved the proof of his hope, but he still reckons that he has reached the shore of the doubtlessness. This is because his deeds haven't brought him except to the hope in this life, in his ceaseless travelling towards it.

Question: Who is the strongest into truth?

Answer: He who preserved his gladness into the temporary troubles, which is hidden in the life and the glory of his victory, and he doesn't lust for a luxury life, which hides in the smell of the shame. He has found the cup of the sigh which has been watering him all the time.

Question: What is that that harms, therefore, in the trip towards God, on him who deviates from the good deeds because of temptations?

Answer: Nobody can get closer to God without trouble, and nobody can guard his righteousness unchanged, without God. And if one stops the things which increase the trouble, he will stop also the things which guard his righteousness, and he will be like an unguarded treasure and like disarmed warrior and like a ship lacking its oars and like a Paradise whose water spring went dry.

Question: Who is the enlightened one in his thoughts?

Answer: Anyone who has reached to find out the bitterness hidden into the world's sweetness and who has impeded his mouth from drinking this cup and who researches the aspects regarding the salvation of his soul and who doesn't stop in his way until he will be separated from this world; anyone who closes up his senses, in order the desire of this life not to enter him and steal from within him the hidden treasure of the life.

Question: What this world is? And how can we know this world? And what harms them who love this world?

Answer: Thew world is a tempter attracting through the lusting of its beauty on them who see it, to (passionately) desiring it. And he who has been partially caught by desiring the world and he mate with the world, he won't be able to ever escape the world's arms until the world will disrobe him of his life. And when the world will have disrobed him of all his things and it will get him out of his house on the day of his death, then he will know that the world is a beguiling and a deceiver. And when somebody strives to exit the darkness of the world, while he still remains hidden into the world, he cannot see the world's intertwinings. And the world masters not only its disciples and its sons and on them who are tied within the world, but the world also masters on the non-earning ones, on ascetics, and on them who have broken their ties and ascended above the world. This is for the world has started to hunt them on diverse ways and the world tramples on them and the world throws them under its feet.

Question: What should we do to our body when it is engulfed by pain and burden; when it gets mellowed the body's ascesis born out of the desire for good and from the body's initial strength?

Answer: This happens often to some people: a half of them have exited the world in order they to follow the Lord's traces, and half of people remained into the world and their heart hasn't got broken from the things from here, but they got divided within themselves. And they sometimes look ahead and sometimes they look back. As I reckon, the wiseman urged them who are thus divided and close to the Lord's way, by telling them: "Do not get close to it with two hearts, but get closer to it as him who sows and reaps" (Wisdom of Syrach[659] 1:

27). And the Lord, by knowing them who haven't totally rejected the world, but they still are divided and turned in their mind, better said in their thought, towards the things from back, on the ground of their fear of troubles and because of not having yet thrown from themselves the lust of their body, He told them a decisive word: "Anyone who wants to follow Me, let him first reject on himself:" and the followings (Mt. 16: 24).

Question: What does it mean somebody to reject on himself?

Answer: As him who has prepared on himself to climb the cross, he no longer keeps in his mind except the thought at his death, and the starts like a man who no longer thinks at having some little piece of the life of this age, likewise is him who wants to fulfill that what has been said. This is for the cross is that will that is ready to receive any trouble. And when the Lord wanted to teach us again, why must we do that, He said: "He who wants to life in this world he will lose on himself from the true life; and he who loses on himself here, for Me, he will find on himself there" (Mt. 10: 3). This one is him who walk the way of the cross.

He who takes care of this life, he has lost on himself by falling off his hope which he has started to walk towards enduring the troubles. This is for this worry doesn't allow him to receive the trouble for God, but it gradually attracts him off from persevering into the trouble, and it get him off the middle of the fight for the happy life, and it makes this though growing up within him until it will defeat him. But he who loses his soul for Me in his cogitation due to his longing for Me, he will be preserved as innocent and unharmed for the eternal life. This is what the following word means: "He who loses his soul for Me, he will find his soul". So, you must prepare from here, from within you, your soul, by your total loss for the present life. And if you lose on yourself from this world, the Lord will tell you in this meaning: "And I will give you eternal life as I promised you" (Jn. 10: 21). And if you remain in this life, I will show you here My promise in the deed, and I will assure you about the future goods. And you will not that you are in the eternal life when you despise thins life. And when you enter the fight for this preparation, there are despised in your eyes all the painful and causing of trouble things. This is for, when the mind is prepared thus, the mind won't have struggle either trouble, in time of mortal danger. That's why you must be thoroughly convinced that, if the man doesn't hate his life within world due to his desire for the future and happy life, he won't be able to endure, by any means, the troubles and all sorts of pains coming upon him on each moment.

Question: How does the man cut off his previous habit and how he accustomed on himself to the life into poverty and ascesis?

Answer: The body doesn't want to live without the necessary things, as long as the body remains tied to the causes of the delectation and of the drowsiness. And the mind won't be able to restrain the body from those, until the mentioned body doesn't estrange on himself from all the things which cause the body's idleness. This is because, when the body has in front of it the image of the delectation and of the things and the body constantly sees the causes of its drowsiness, there will be stirred up within body the hot lust for those, and that lust arouses the body as by burning it with fire.

That's why, with much righteousness our Savior commanded him who wants to follow Him, to empty on himself of all things and to get out of the world. This is for, in the first place, the man must throw away from himself the causes of his drowsiness, and then he must start working. And the Lord Himself, when He started fighting the devil, He fought the devil in the driest desert. And Paul urges them who take up the cross of Christ, they to get off the city: "Let's get out together with Him, he says, outside the city, for He suffered outside the city" (Hebr. 13: 12).

When somebody parts with the world and with the world's things, he will quickly forget about his habit and living from before, and he won't toil for a long time in order to detach on himself from those. And by his closeness to the world and to the world's things, he will quickly get drowsed the strength of his cogitation. That's why, we must know that this detachment helps much and it leads one to progress in the savior fight of the ascesis.

It is ought to and it is very helpful that in this fight the monk's monastic cell to be in poverty and in needs; the monastic call must be empty and lacking anything that can move within the move his lust for resting. This is because, when the causes of the drowsiness are far from the man, he won't be endangered in the twofold war: in the inwards war and in the outside war. So, that man who is far from the things which urge him towards pleasure, he will be victorious with less struggle, than when he is close to those who move him towards lusts. Here he has a twofold fight.

This is because, when the man lacks what he needs for sustaining his dwelling place[660], he will easily despise what it is necessary, and he won't look at that lustily neither at that time when he has it for a small impartation with it, and his body will get satisfied with a little and he will see this little as easily to be despised and he won't get close to the food for its sweetness but in order to use it for helping him and to strengthen his nature.

These behaviors easily elevate somebody to that ascesis upheld by a thinking that lacks the trouble and the sadness. So, the zealous monk must run away without turning back, with a nimble foot, from all the things which wage war to him and he must not get involved with the things which wage war to him, and he must restrain on himself even from simply looking at those, and he must get far from those with the whole his power.

This is because, he who live in such an ascesis he will wound his enemy, by being in that state that is above his enemy's plots, and he is gladdening Lord Jesus Who the deliverance of them who fight together with Him is being accomplished through. This is because, getting drowsy in some regard, by him who lives in ascesis, it will be reckoned as a victory upon him, and of that victory is glad the enemy and is sad the Holy Ghost[661].

And I am saying this not only about the stomach, but also about all the things that can be submitted to temptation and to war, which the freedom of the man is tested and proven through.

This is because the man, when he comes to God, he makes a covenant with God him to keep himself far from these things: not to look at woman, not to see adorned persons, not to lust anything, not to delight on himself with foods, not to look at the beauty of the vestments, not to look at the laymen way of living, not to listen to laymen words, and not to inquire the things related to laymen. This is because of the passions getting much power out of the closeness to such things which mellow up him who lives in ascesis and they change his cogitation and assertiveness. This is for, if seeing good things will move the will to lean with true zeal towards working those, it is obvious that the things which are opposite to the good ones they will have the power to attract the cogitation towards evil. And even is out of evil things the cogitation will only be warred up, this too will still be enough damage: this is because he passes willingly from the peaceful state into disturbance.

[660] It maybe is here about body.

[661] This paragraph is missing from the Greek printed text, as also from the newer typewritten manuscript. This paragraph is in the newer Romanian text printed in the year 1819. So, one can see that this last text used a different Greek text, or one more Greek text, for translation. But this paragraph might also have been, in the beginning, a marginal scholium.

And is somebody among the ascetic old men, by seeing somebody without wearing a beard, like the women, he reckoned that thing as harmful to cogitation and damaging to his fight, won't be wrong him who is careless in other things, while this saint didn't accept a young man to enter his monastic cell and to kiss him? This is for the wise old man thought like so: "Even if I only remember at night that inside here is somebody like that, it will be hurtful to me". And that's why he didn't enter and he said that young man: "I am not afraid of you, but why to allow you to wage me war vainly? This is because the memory of such things causes an unbeneficial disturbance to the cogitation. This is for within each limb of this body there is a spell and the man has a big war because of those and the man owes to guard on himself and to diminish his war from those, by running away from them. This is because, when the man gets closer to those ones, even if the man strives towards good, he still will be endangered by them by looking at them and by lusting them continuously".

This is because we see many smelling herbs hidden into the ground. But we cannot know those in summer because of the drought. But, when they get soaked with water and they spread their fragrance through the mediation of the fresh air, every plant species shows where it was buried into the soil. It is likewise to the man. When the man is in the grace of the appeasement and into the heat of the restraint, he will truly be resting on himself of his many passions. But when he gets closer to the world's things, he will see what each passion will rise up like. And his head will become frivolous, especially if those passions will spread a resting fragrance[662].

And I have said this, in order nobody to believe his body until his death; and in order I to show that somebody is helped much, in the fight of his ascesis, by running away from and by putting a distance between him and the causes of the sin. WE must always fear the things which shame us by remembering them; and we must not trample on our conscience or to disregard our conscience. So, let's strive to bring our body into wilderness and let's make out body achieve the patience. But bigger than all of these, let's somebody strive, whenever he would be, to shun himself from the cause of the war, (for if this is the case, even if he is submitted to troubles, he will be fearless), lest, when some need occurs, he will fall because of his closeness to that[663].

Question: Which is the beginning in the war against the sin, of him who has thrown form himself the whole scattering and who has entered the battle? And where the battle starts from?

Answer: It is fact known to everyone that the beginning of any battle against the sin and against the lust are the toils of the vigil and of the fasting. This last one, it especially is the beginning of the fight against the sin from within us. And the sign of the hatred against the sin and against lusting for the sin, within them who fight the unsees war, it is the fact that they start with fasting and after that they continue with taking vigil during night, and that helps the ascesis

About the Fasting and Taking of Vigil

He who loves for the whole his life the union of this pair he will become the fried of the righteousness. As the resting of the stomach is the cause of all evil things and as the idleness of the sleep triggers the lust for fornication, likewise, the holy way of God and the foundation of all virtue are: the fasting, the [662] He becomes frivolous.

[663] We are going to give here another paragraph existing only in the Romanian translation from the year 1819: "We owe to guard on ourselves against this with the whole our heed: not to see the naked body of somebody, not even on our own, neither us to touch our limbs from beneath, nor to see them. This is because many by not taking heed at that, they fell of the Kingdom of Heavens. This is for they ended to have as habit such an ugly thing and they couldn't get rid of that anymore".

taking of vigil, and the watchfulness into the serving (the liturgy) of God, into the crucifixion of the body for the whole day and night, which is opposite to the sweetness of the sleep. The fasting is the defender of all virtue and it is the beginning of the ascesis. The fasting is the crown of them who restrain on themselves and it is the beauty of the virginity and of the holiness; the fasting is the shininess of the righteousness and it is the beginning of the way of the Christina living; the fasting is the mother of the prayer and it is the spring of the sapience; the fasting if the teacher of the appeasement and it is the forerunner of all the good deeds.

So, when somebody wants to fast, he wants to reach the dialogue with God in his cogitation. This is for the fasting body won't endure to sleep into his beddings for the whole night. When the sela of the fasting has been imprinted into the mouth of the man, his though will be crossed through by pricking and out of his heart will spring the prayer, and on his face will be laid down the sadness; then his dirty thoughts will stay far from him, in his eyes one won't see gladness, and he will be the enemy of the vain meetings. Never has been seen a man fasting with right-reckoning as being enslaved by the lust of the sin. The great road towards any good thins it is the fasting with right-reckoning (with discernment). And he who doesn't take care of fasting he will be shaken of all good. This is for this is the commandment given to our nature since the very beginning, as to guard itself against the delectation of the tasting; and with that out nature has taken its beginning. On the other hand, out of the first transgression, they who fear God have taken their beginning they who live in ascesis, who have started to guard God's laws.

And when our Savior showed on Himself within world at River Jordan, he stared from here. This is for, after His Baptism, the Ghost took Him into wilderness and He fasted there for forty days and for forty nights. Likewise, all of them who get out in order to follow Him, they set the beginning of their ascesis on this foundation. This is for the fasting is a weapon crafted by God. And who among those who disregard it won't be condemned? And if He who gave the law fasted, who among those who guard the law must not fat?

That's why, until then the mankind didn't know the victory, neither the devil felt the defeat form our nature. But through this weapon the devil got weakened from the beginning.

And our Lord was the leader and the first winer of the victory, in order Him to place the first crown on the head of our nature. When the devil sees some of the man dressed up with this weapon, the enemy and the tyrant get immediately scared and he reminds the defeat brough upon him by the Savior into wilderness, and his power get broken and he is burnt by seeing this weapon give us by the Leader of our fight. What weapon is more powerful that the fasting? And what else gives our heart more daring in the battle against the ghosts of the evilness, that the hunger one endures for Christ?

This is for the more the body gets tired and suffers during the time which the army of the devils surrounds the man, as much help his heart receives out of the hope for victory. And he who puts on the coat of the fasting he will burn with zeal all the time. This is for, the zealous Elijah too, when he was burning with zeal for the law of God, he was living into the work of the fasting. This is for on him who has gained this weapon, it will make him remember the commandments of the Ghost and the fasting is the mediator between the old law and the grace given us by Christ[664].

And he who gets lazy in fasting he will be made drowsy and idle and weak in all the other battles and he will show the beginning and the evil sign of the drowsiness of his soul and he will give the possibility of being defeated by his enemy. This is because of entering his fight while naked and unarmed; and it is obvious that he will leave the fight without victory. This is because his limbs haven't been dressed up into the warmth of the hunger brought by fasting[665]. This is the power of the fasting. And he who perseveres in fasting, he will have his cogitations steadfast and ready to face and to bring down the evil passions.

They say about many disciple that in the day previous to that day which they were to receive the crown of their [664] "Mose received the tablets of the law written on Mount Sinai, while he was fasting. And the Savior of everybody started preaching the law of the grace after He fasted for forty days into wilderness. That's why, the fasting is the mediator between the old law and the law of the grace. This is for each of these have been given as preceding and as mediating the fasting". The fasting thins up the nature of the flesh and it strengthen the ghost within man, and by that the man enter the connection with God Who is Ghost. Or, the fasting makes the man transparent to the world of the Ghost and a good mediator of the Ghost.

[665] He who is fasting he will overwhelm the weakness of his body with the warmth of his zeal towards restraint, and no sing will be able to get closer to his soul and to his body.

martyrdom in, if they knew that, or if that was unveiled to them, or out of the story told by some of their companions, during they nigh they didn't eat anything, but they stood in prayer from evening to the next morning, extolling God in psalms and in praises and in spiritual songs, and they were waiting for that moment with joy and with gladness, like those who prepare on themselves for a wedding, and they were waiting for meeting the sword with their fasting. Therefore, us too, who are called to the unseen martyrdom, in order us to receive the crowns of the holiness, let's take vigil and let's never give, in any or our limbs or in any of the parts of our body, to our enemies any sign of rejection (of Christ).

Question: How are there some people, on occasions quite numerous, who might have these deeds but they still do not feel the quietude and the resting from passions, neither they feel the peace of their thoughts?

Answer: The passions hidden within souls cannot be healed, brother, only with bodily toils, neither they stop their thoughts they who constantly watch their senses. These toils guard the man against his passions, so that him not to be defeated by their passions or by the war wages them by the devil. But they do not bestow the quietude and the peace of the soul. This is because the deeds and the toils bestow the dispassion to the soul and they kill the passions form on earth and they bring the resting of the thoughts only when we will be imparted with the quietude; only when the outside senses get rid of disturbance and they persevere for a certain time in working the wisdom. This is because the man, as long as he avoids meeting the people and as long as his limbs avoid the overflowing of the thoughts within them and they are gathered into themselves, the man cannot know his passion. This is for the appeasement, as Saint Basil said, it is the beginning of the soul's cleaning. This is for, when the external limbs stop working the external work and they stop from the scattering into the external world, the cogitation will turn back from its wasting and scatterings and it gets appeased in itself and the heater wakes up to search what comes from outside the soul. And if the man perseveres well into these things, he will start gradually to walk the way of the cleaning of his soul.

Question: So, cannot one clean his soul by living outside the door?

Answer: Does ever get withered that root of the tree that is daily watered? Or, does it even get diminished the content of the vessel which you fill it in daily? And if the cleanness means nothing else but to forget about the free living and getting out of its habit, how and when will one clean his soul if he renews through hid deeds, within himself, or within others, through senses, the memory of the past habit, which is the knowledge by living of the sin? When could one clean his soul by doing that? Or, when will he get appeased from the external wars, in order him to be able to see on himself? This is because, if the heart gets defiled daily, when will the heart be cleaned up od its defilement? This is because, by living those, the heart cannot be cleaned not even against the external work. And all the more cannot him clean his heart while standing in the middle of the battle field and he hears on each day the ceaseless noises of war. And how dare he announce then peace to his soul?

But if he gets far from those, the stopping from them can gradually start resting the things from within. This is because, until he doesn't stop the upstream, the river won't get dry downstream. But when somebody reaches the quietude, his soul will be able to discern the passions and the soul will be able to examine his wisdom with understanding. Then the inward man will wake up to the deeds of the Ghost and the soul will feel daily that hidden wisdom that flourishes within his soul.

Question: Which are the closest and doubtless proof and signs, which somebody can feel out of, that he has started to see within himself the fruits hidden into his soul?

Answer: When somebody is found worthy of the gift of the many tears which spring out unforcedly. This is for the tears have been placed by cogitation as some border between the bodily realities and the spiritual realities, and between suffering and cleanness. Until somebody hasn't received this gift, his work will still be within the outside man and he won't fully feel the work of the hidden things of the spiritual man[666]. This is for, when somebody starts forsaking the bodily things of the present age and he crosses inside this border that is within the [666] Th tears are the sign that the man feels himself overwhelmed by the presence and by the work from on another plan, of the Holy Ghost. When the bridge for crossing from the cold, callous, and insensitive man regarding the heavenly realities, to that man who feels the godlike realities, for he has crossed to those.

nature, he will immediately reach this border of the tears. And from the first dwelling place of the hidden life (from its first level) these tears star and they will bring him to the consummation of the love for God. And the more he progresses, the more he will be enriched with the tears until he will drink them in his food and in his drink due to his much perseverance. And this is the doubtless sign that his cogitation has left this word and it has started feeling the spiritual world. And the more the man gets closer in his cogitation to this present world, the less tears he will have[667]. And when the cogitation will be totally deprived of these tears, that will be the sign that the man has buried on himself into his passions[668].

About How to Discern the Tears

There are some tears which burn; and there are tears which fatten up. Those tears coming out of pricking and out of the pious heart, for sins, they wither and burn the body, and often the leading part of the soul (the mind) feels the harm coming from these tears when they start flowing[669]. And in the first place, the man necessarily encounters this stage of his tears and through them it will be open to him a gate towards the second stage that is higher than the first stage. This is the country of the joy where the man receives the mercy. And these are the tears flowing out of understanding[670]. These tears [667] The moving of the man with his cogitation from this preoccupation with his body and with the present world, it can be known for his tears will start flowing. This is for the world of the Ghost which he moved at, it is the world of the love, and it is not a world of the abstract cogitation; the spiritual world is a world which God works in, in an unmediated manner, for God is the spring of the love. But when the man gets closer to the present material world (of the passions), the tears will get fewer. This is because the man gets souly withered. The living into the wonderful world of the Ghost it makes the man so emotional, with its love, so that out of the man start flowing ceaseless tears.

[668] The tears are a burial of the ghost within the body, or of the sensitive man widely open to the communion into love, into the egotistic prison, taking place a cover up of his transparence and a petrifaction of his souly sensitiveness, or better said spiritual sensitiveness, that is the sensitiveness of love for God and for his fellow humans. The passions mean a petrifaction of the heart.

[669] These are the tears of the pain for sins. These tears hurt the cogitation because of making it sad, and thus the cogitation won't be able to see the luminous meanings of the deeps of the mercy of God.

[670] The tears flowing out of an understanding that is both sight and feeling of the world of the Ghost; out of a feeling of the mercy of God and of the joy for His loving attention. These are tears fattening up with the new life inundating the soul out of God, while the first tears burnt beautify and fatten up the body and the flow down unforcedly, by themselves. And they not only fatten up the man's body, as I said, but they also change the look of that man. "This is for, by getting the heart gladdened, the face flourishes, and when he is in sadness, the face gets gloomy" (Prov. 15: 13).

Question: Which is the resurrection of the soul, which the Apostle said about: "If you have wakened yourself up with Christ" (Col. 3: 1)?

Answer: BY saying, the Apostles: "God, the One Who said the light to lighten into darkness, Himself has illuminated our hearts" (2 Cor. 4: 6)[671], he showed the resurrection of the soul, the getting out of the old state. We must understand this. Namely, there to occur the new man who has nothing from the former man, as it is said: "And I will give them new heart and new ghost" (Ezek. 36: 26). This is for then Christ take image within us through the Ghost of the wisdom and of the unveiling of His knowledge.

Question: What it, in short, the power of the deed of the appeasement?

Answer: The appeasement kills the external senses and it wake up the internal senses[672]. And the external living does the opposite to theses, it is wakes up the external senses and it kills the internal senses.

Question: Which is the cause of the views and of the unveilings, or of the fact that some people see, while others toil over their power and the sight doesn't work within them?

Answer: The causes of the views are numerous. Some of them are out of some oikonomia and out of the new grace. Others are towards comforting the helpless and towards encouraging and teaching them. First of all, the views are bestowed to the people, out of some oikonomia, for the mercy of God. And some of the views are bestowed, in most cases, according to three kinds of people: according to the simples the old life into sin. The first kind of tears are turned towards the past, in order to kill the past, while the second kind of tears are open towards the future which they inaugurate.

[671] God is for us above light, He is the apophatic (untold) darkness; but when God wants to enter the communication with us, out of that darkness of His there will spring up the light. And by that, God resurrects our soul. The living in the closeness to God it is the new life that is, in the same time, luminous light.

[672] The appeasement is not a simple stopping of any feeling, but in is there will be wakened up the inside senses which the world of the Ghost is perceived with. The appeasement is the wakening up of the soul to the love into God.

ones, according to those people who are overwhelmingly innocent, and according to those who are consummate and saint, or those who have a hot zeal for God and he has lost their hope into world and they consummately have rejected the world, and they have got far from inhabiting together with the people, and they have gone naked on the traces of God, but a fear for their loneliness comes to them, or they are in danger to die because of starvation, or because of some illness, or out of some tribulation or trouble, so that they are close to despair. So, the first cause is the comforting coming to some people like those, comforting not coming to them who overwhelmingly tire on themselves; the view is also the cleanness and the uncleanness of their conscience[673].

The second cause doubtlessly is this: For somebody has a human comforting, or from something among the seen realities, he won't be given such comforting through views, except according to some oikonomia of the new grace. And our work is about hermits. And witness to what we have said it is one of the fathers who prayed for this and he heard: "Let it be enough to you the comforting from and the peaking to the people".

And somebody else who lived in this king of reclusion, when he was living that hermit life, he continuously enjoyed that comforting from the grace. But when he came closer to the world, he was looking for that usual comforting and because of not finding it, he prayed God top tell him the cause, by saying: "Isn't it for bishopric that the grace has gone from me?"[674]. And he was answered: "No, but because God takes care of them who live into wilderness and makes them worthy of such comforting". This is because of being impossible that people receive some seen comforting and him they receive that comforting, except by the hidden oikonomia of the said things, known only to Him Who governs these realities.

[673] "The first cause is the cleanness and the uncleanness", it is missing from the Greek text but it is given in the Romanian translation from the year 1819. And in the Grek text it is given the following note: "The cleanness and the uncleanness, or the cleanness of the bodily passions, but not also of the passions of the soul and of the conscience; or the cleanness, but not that that is doubtless and consummate, or that one that is claimed to be, but it is not cleanness". This note that is given in the Romanian translation too, it shows that these words were in the Greek manuscript as well, but they were mistakenly omitted when the Greek text was printed.

[674] "He could tell this about himself, for, after he lives as a hermit, he became bishop of Nineveh". He had the grace of officiating the mysteries but he grace of the personal feeling of the work of God he didn't have it.

Question: Is it the same thing the view to the unveiling, or it isn't?

Answer: No, they differ from one another. The unveiling[675] is often used for both of them. This is for, by showing what is hidden, all the sight is called as unveiling. But the unveiling is not called as sight. This is because the unveiling is used for the knows realities, tasted and understood by the mind. But the view of any kind has an image, or a type, as it happens to the old ones, either in deep sleep, or in state of vigil. And sometimes it takes place in a limpid mode, while some other times it takes place as in a hallucination, without limpidness. That's why, even him who sees he often doesn't know whether he is sleeping or awake. The view make itself known also by hearing a voice, but on some occasions a certain type is seen too, and on some other times in a clearer mode like face to face. But the view and the speaking and the question and the encounter with it belong to some holy powers which are seen by the worthy one and which bring unveilings. Such showings are committed also in places which are desert and farer from people, there where the man has absolute need for those, by the fact that he has no help or comforting in those places. And the unveilings a felt or are received by the mind through its cleanness, but partaker to them are only those who are consummate and knowers.

Question: Which is the sign that somebody has reached the cleanness of his heart? And when the man knows that his heart has reached the cleanness?

Answer: When he sees all the people as good and no one appears to him as unclean or defiled, then he is truly clean in his heart. This is for, how would we fulfill the Apostles's word that asks us to reckon all the people with a sincere heart, as being they above us, it one doesn't reach that what was said: "That the clean eye won't see evil things" (Hab. 1: 13)!

Question: What the cleanness is?

Answer: The cleanness means forgetting the images of that knowledge contrary to nature, which are within world under nature. And the border of the liberation from these and of being outside them it is this: the coming back of the man to the initial simplicity and innocence of his nature, and being him reckoned as s child, but without the child's shortcomings.

---

Question: But can one reach this stage?

Answer: Yes, it is possible. This is for some people reached this measure, as Abba Sisoes did, so that he was asking his disciple if he ate or not. And also, another among the fathers reached such simplicity and innocence, so that he misses only a little to be like the little children, so that he totally forgot about the realities from here; he even forgot whether he ate before receiving the Holy Impartation so that he went to be given the Holy Impartation if one of his disciples didn't stop him. And his disciples were bringing him, as on a little child, to be given the Holy Impartation. He was a child to the world but his soul was consummate towards God.

Question: What cogitation and occupation must have him who lives in ascesis, when he sits in quietude in his reclusion? And what must him work in order his mind not to occupy itself with vain thoughts?

Answer: You ask me about cogitation and occupation, on how a man makes on himself death in his monastic cell? Does the zealous and wakened up in his soul man, living for himself, any need for asking how must he live? This is because what else could be the occupation of the monk, in his monastic cell, then the crying? And what higher cogitation than this one can there be? This is for itself the monk's sitting into loneliness will teach him its likeness to a living into a tomb that keeps the monk far from the joy of the people. This is for his achievement is his crying and itself the name of his state urge him to that. This is for the word "monk"' stands for "crying", namely sad in his heart. And all the saints were crying while living this world. And if the saints were crying and if their eyes were always full of tears until they left this world, who wouldn't cry? The monk's comforting is born out of crying. And if the consummate ones and the victory-bearers were crying, how could him who is full of wounds to stop crying? He who has on himself lying down before himself like a dead, and if he sees on himself as killed by sins, will he still need teaching what thought he could make his tears flowing? Your soul is killed by your sins and you soul is lying down before you and your soul means more to you than the whole world, and won't you need to cry? So, if we enter the quietude and if we persevere in it patiently, we will doubtlessly be able to remain into crying. That's why we must pray with a ceaseless cogitation to our Lord Him to bestow us the crying. This is for if we achieve this grace that is greater than the other gifts (charismas) and that it overwhelms those, we will enter the cleanness. And when he will have entered the cleanness, the cleanness wont' be ever taken away from us until our exit from this life.

Blessed are therefore, they who are clean in heart, for there is not time which they not to rejoice in, for this delectation of the tears, and in this they will always see our Lord[676]. And while still they have tears in their eyes, they are found worthy of seeing God's unveilings, in the height of their prayer, and there is no prayer without tears within them. And this is what our Lord says: "Blessed are they who cry, for they will be comforted" (Mt. 5: 4). This is for from crying one passes to the cleanness of his soul. That's why the Lord, by saying that they will be comforted, He didn't explain the meaning of the comforting. This is for, when the monk is found worthy of crossing through his tears the land of the passions, and to reach the plain of his soul's cleanness, he will be met by this comforting. So, if one passes from those which cause this one here[677], in this one he will meet the comforting that is not here[678].

So, you must understand that that mind that receives the comforting at the end of the crying, it is that comforting bestowed by God, through leanness, to them who cry. This is because one cannot cry ceaselessly as long as he still is disturbed by his passions[679]. So, this gift (this charisma) of the tears and of the crying is characteristic to the dispassionate. And if on one who cries and who mourns for a certain time his tears could not only to lead him to dispassion but also to totally erase his passions from his mind and to deliver his mind from the memories of the passions[680], what should we say about those who have night and day this work into their knowledge (conscience)? But no one knows the help coming out of crying except they who have surrendered their soul to this work. All [676] Saint Isaac ties the cleanness of the heart and the seeing of God, to the tears. Only the tears as extreme repentance, can clean the heart of its sins; only the tears as supreme getting-emotional due to the love from God, only the tears can bestow the sight of God, or they spring out of that sight.

[677] From tears to cleanness.

[678] The cleanness is what one can achieve here, but the comforting comes from above, from the Ghost of the comforting.

[679] The passions are opposite to crying. This is for the clean and emotional (sic!) crying is the sign of the love. And the passions are the sign of the egotism.

[680] The tears erase even the memory of one's sins, through the overwhelming of the love of God being in those tears.

the saints wish this entrance. This is for, by tears, it will be opened to them the door to enter in the country of the comforting, which are imprinted in the all-good and savior traces of God, through unveilings[681].

Question: Give the fact that there are some people who cannot ceaselessly cry because of the weakness of their body, what should they do for guarding their mind, in order the passion not to penetrate their mind when their mind is emptied of all things?

Answer: The passions won't be able to uprise themselves against the soul and they won't be able to disturb him who lives in ascesis, when his heart is emptied of the realities of the life, through the withdrawal that protects him against any scattering, if he doesn't allow to be himself caught by idleness and by the carelessness for the due things, especially if he occupied on himself with the thinking at what he reads in the godlike Scriptures, by examining their meanings, so that he remains undisturbed by passions. This is for, even if only those meanings shine within him, and if he progresses in understanding the godlike Scriptures, his vain-thoughts will run away from him and his mind will be able to detach on itself from desiring and from remembering its passions; and he won't be able to take heed at anything form this life due to the fact that he is elevated by the great pleasure provided him by this occupation with this understanding above these thoughts, due to the much appeasement into wilderness. This is because, by that, he forgets even about himself and even about his own nature and he becomes like a man besides himself, so that he doesn't remember anything about this age. He occupies on himself totally and especially with the aspects related to the glory of God and he thinks at those saying: "Glory to His godhead! Greta and wonderful are all His realities! He has elevated my humbleness at height. What great things He has made my soul worthy of occupying with!".

And by living into these wonderful things and by being him constantly in ecstasy (kidnapped) for them, he always gets drunk of them and he is like living that life from after the [681] Out of that darkness made by God totally inaccessible to us, we are met on the stage of the cleanness of passions, by the godlike powers and meanings and lights, which take some visible features in order us to be able to perceive them. Even the meaning perceived by us it is an image adopted by the ray that starts form the godlike darkness.

general resurrection. This is for the quietude collaborated very much with this grace[682]. Given the fact that the mind has found its place (content) and it wants to remain right into that, in that peace found by mind by appeasing on itself.

He moves on himself, therefore, together with these ones, toward remembering them[683] according to the level of his living. And by taking heed at the glory of the future ages and at the hope for the realities appointed to the righteous ones, realities which will move into God in the future life and in that new settlement into the initial state form the beginning of the Creation, he will no longer thing at and he will no longer remember about this world.

And when he gets drunk of these, he will be again removed from there, with his sight, to the realities of the present age, which he still is into, and he says with bewilderment: "Of, the deep of the richness and of the wisdom and of the knowledge and of the understanding and of the skillfulness and of the oikonomia of the unfollowed God[684]! How unsearched are Hid judgments and how unfollowed are His ways!" (Rom. 11: 33). This is for, if God has prepared another so wonderful age, in order Him to bring in that age all rational souls, and to keep them into the endless life, why did God firstly created this world and He broadened it and He enriched this world thus with the diverse multitude and with the multitude of the types and of the natures, and Go has placed within it causes and substances and the fight and the resistances of the many passions? And what He has placed us for, in the beginning, into this world and He planted in this world with love His richness of life and he suddenly removes us form he e by death and he preserves us after, and not for a little time, in insensitiveness and din motionlessness and he destroys our shapes and He spills out our juices and He mixes those juices

[682] Nothing contributes so much to the grace of the seeing the godlike realities, as the quietude does it.

[683] Towards remembering the godlike realities, and those views which he had had before, and remembering of his desire for seeing those and of the beauty of the future life.

[684] One cannot see the traces of God without God revealing on Himself, by sending, out of His totally transcendent and unperceivable darkness, some of-power-creator and upholder and illuminating rays. He who sees those, by being drunk of the joy for what he sees, as a downpayment of the future life, he won't forget, though, that he sees those while he still is here. And this fills him up even with more bewilderment, for, while still being into body, he can see such wonders. And he also wonders also about the fact that he has achieved their sight by enduring so many troubles into the world and into his body.

up with the soil and He allows to be detached and melted down our composition and to flow until our composition will totally end to exist[685]?

And then, at that time decides by God into His all-worshipped wisdom, when He wish that, He will elevate us into another countenance, known only by Him, and he will bring us to another composition. This is hoped not only by us, the people, but it is hoped also by the angels themselves, who do not need this world, due to the fact that they are, by their wonderful nature, a little less than consummate; but the wait for out elevation from corruption; this is for, when the mankind will be elevated out of earth, the earth too will be renewed and the earth will get out of corruption[686]. This is because of being themselves impeded to enter, because of us. That's why the angels wait for the gate of the new age to get opened (to them too). This is for the creation of the angels will rest then, together with us, of the burden of the body existing within us[687]. This is for the Apostle says: "For also itself the creation waits for the unveiling of the sons of God, in order it to be liberated form the slavery of the corruption into the release of the glory of the sons of God" (Rom. 8: 21), after the full detachment of the present age from its composition, when our nature will be placed again into its initial composition.

And then he is elevated with his mind to the realities form before the foundation of this world, when there was no creation, neither sky, nor earth, neither angels, nor something of the passing realities. And he thinks at what God brought all of those like, at once, to existence, only by His benevolence. And

[685] He asks why God created this full of troubles world, if we are destined to eternally live into that happy world. This question is rather rhetoric, for Saint Isaac Himself gave the answer throughout all his description: in order us to grow up spiritually, in order us to assimilate by our efforts that stature of full of consummation being into the Ghost. That's why God also broadened this world with so many types and natures, in order us to be able to grow up in a complex and multiple manner, by having as rich as possible experiences, by fighting diverse temptations. The insensitiveness, and the motionlessness will touch by death only our body, but not also our soul.

[686] In the same time with the renewal of our body from now, it will go out of the corruption state the earth too, which our bodies are made of. But also, the angels will be elevated through that, by no longer having to occupy themselves with us and with the world being now into a state of corruption, so that the angels will no longer mirror that in their conscience.

[687] The angels' participation to our existence and the help they which provide us with, and a relation with our burdened by body existence and a struggle for easing the impediments presented us by our body in the way of our salvation…

his mind descends again to the creatures of God and he looks at the wonderful things of God's creation and at the wisdom of God's creatures, and he says in awe: "Oh, wonder! How exceeding is God's oikonomia and taking-of-care, and how much stronger is God's power, than all His creatures! And what God brought like, out of inexistence to existence the whole creation, namely the countless multitude of the diverse things? And again, what God will break this wonderful creation like, again, and the hours and the years, and the connection between day and night, and the helping transformations of the year, and the diverse flowers of the earth, the all-beautiful buildings of the cities and the adorned palaces form within cities, and the nimble walk of the people and their tiring nature since their entrance into life to their exit? And what his wonderful order will be stopped like, suddenly, and there will come another age, and the memory of the first creation won't even ascend to the heart of somebody, and there will occur a great transformation and other thoughts and other memories[688]?

And the people's nature won't remember this world at all, neither will they remember their previous life. This is for their mind will be tied to the contemplation (looking at) that new state and it won't turn back again to the fight of the blood and of the body. This is for together with the change of this age, that future will come to existence suddenly. And then, every human being will say something like this: "Oh, mother, how you have been forgotten by your sons whom you gave birth to, and whom you made wise, and who have been gathered in a blink of an eye to another bosom and they have become true sons of the barren one, who has never given them birth!... Rejoice, you the barren who doesn't give birth to sons, for the earth has given them birth for you? (Isa. 54: 1).

And then he cogitates like one who has gone beside him (as in ecstasy) and he says: "I wonder how long will last this age? And when it will begin the future age? And for how long will last these dwelling places in their present countenance and for how long will our bodies remain mixed with the earth? And what will be that living like? And what will be the countenance like, which this nature will resurrect with? And what will be the way this nature will come to the second creation?".

[688] It is about the memories in the sense of anamnesis, namely recalling what it was, due to the repetition in the same mode. This is for the memory of the life from here cannot be erased from the people's souls in the future life. But that memory won't bring together with it the pain for our committed sins, neither the trace of the sadness etc. This is for further on it is said: "It won't turn back again to the fight of the blood and of the body".

And as he cogitates at these aspects there falls upon him an ecstasy and a kidnapping and a peaceful silence, and on that moment, he stands up and he bows his knees and he raises doxologies with many tears, to God Who is The Only One Wise and Who is extolled in His all-wise deeds.

Blessed is him who has been found worthy of this day. Blesses is him who cogitates day and night at these, for all his life. And if at the beginning of his appeasement the man doesn't feel the power of such views, because of the scattering of his mind, and he cannot see the powers of the mentioned wonderful deeds of God[689], let him not get idle and let him not leave the place of his peaceful living. This is for the sower doesn't see together with the seed he sows the wheatears in the same time. And after sowing there will follow the drowsiness and the tiredness and the pain in his limbs and the going out of the relationships with his friends and the parting with the usual things. But after he has suffered all of these there will come another time, which the worker will be sweetened in and he will jump up and he will rejoice. And what will that time be? When he will eat the bread of his sweat and his cogitation will remain guarded into quietude. This is for the full of patience quietude and the mentioned cogitation from within it, they move within heart with much and endless pleasure and it pushes the mind towards untold awe (kidnapping). And blessed is him who perseveres in that, for before him has been opened this of-godhead-gushing spring, and he has been able to drink out of it, and he won't stop drinking out of it aver and always, on any moment during day and night, until the end and the edge of the whole his earthly life.

Question: In what it is shown the content of all the toils of this work, or of the appeasement, out of which one to be able to find out when reaching it, that he has reached the consummation of his living?

Answer: In the fact that he has been found worthy of persevering into prayer. This is for, when one has reached that, he has reached the end of all virtues and he has become dwelling place to the Holy Ghost. This is because, if somebody hasn't received in a doubtless manner the grace of the Comforter, he won't be able to consummate his perseverance in this prayer. This is for, when the Ghost is dwelling, he says, within someone among people, that one won't cease praying. This is for Himself the Ghost prays always (Rom. 8: 26)[690]. Then, neither when he sleeps, nor when he is awake, the prayer won't be interrupted within his soul. But either he eats, or he drinks, either he sleeps, or he works on something, and even in the deep sleep, there sprout out the good fragrances and the breaths of the prayer within his heart[691], effortlessly. And the prayer will no longer be separated ever from him, but during all his days and hours, even when this one gets appeased outside him[692], he continues liturgizing it within himself in a hidden manner. This is for the silence of the clean ones it is prayer, says somebody among the bearers of Christ[693]. The movement of the heart and of the clean cogitation are gentle voices, which the heart sings hiddenly in, to the hidden One[694].

Question: What the spiritual prayer is? How can be found worthy of it him who lives in ascesis?

[690] The Ghost is the Ghost of the prayer. This is for He keeps us in connection to God. When we have the Ghost, we are unable not to think at God. So, the prayer is the sure sign of the Ghost's dwelling within man's heart. Themselves the heart's movements are voices, are words. This is for the spiritual movement isn't but a voice towards God, an answer to His words.

[691] That prayer that doesn't get interrupter even during sleep, it is like an uninterrupted breathing. Within him who has accustomed on himself to unite his prayer with his breath, this union remains also when he doesn't intentionally focus on it. The prayer imprints him a state of kindness within his entire being. That is a kindness that is spread around as a good fragrance. That is a fragrance of the cleanness.

[692] By this he understands, I think, a prayer that gets spread peacefully, through silence, outside him. This is for in the next phrase he speaks about silence.

[693] The thoughts of the clean man who has emptied on himself of all egotistical thoughts, are godlike movements. He has become the subject of the godlike movements. Or, the godlike movements have been imprinted into his movements. The godlike movement into the man's conscience take the shape of the clean and kind thoughts. But of some thoughts which are prayer. This is for those are constantly directed towards God. "Yours, out of Yours". Out of the above-understanding darkness of God there come rays which, within the conscious soul of the man, made in the image of God, they become thoughts referring to God and to God's deeds, with thanks and with praise. The teaching of the uncreated divine energies appears here in plain clarity. This teaching is involved in understanding the unseparated connection between God and creatures and, more specific, between the godlike Ghost and the human ghost. The human being has actualized the theandric character. The God's energies, by becoming meaning within man, they turn back towards God as prayer of praise.

[694] The man speaks even when being silent. And if the man is clean, he will speak to God in profoundness. And this prayer is the work of the Holy Ghost as connection to God.

Answer: The souly movements are imparted with the work of the Holy Ghost through their full cleanness[695]. But only one in ten thousand of people is found worthy of it, for it is a mystery of the future living[696]. This is for that one is elevated and his nature remains unworked by any movement or memory of the realities from here. And he doesn't pray into prayer, but his soul has the feeling of the spiritual realities of that future age which overwhelm the people's understanding, and which we understand through the power of the Holy Ghost. This is the thought sight and movement, and it is not[697] an ask of the prayer. But it has started out of prayer. This is for that's why some of those reached their consummation. And there is no instance which their most inner movement is not in prayer on, as I said before. And when the Holy Ghost comes, He always finds them praying. And the Holy Ghost gets them out of this prayer into sight (contemplation) that is called as spiritual sight. This is for they no longer need the way of the prayer, neither they need to attend the Liturgy and its level. It suffices to them to remember God and they will immediately be enslaved by God's love. Still, they don't disregard the prayer to the end of their life, but they honor the prayer and they stand up at the appointed hours, in addition to the ceaseless prayer[698].

[695] The soul's movement are, at their turn, feelings which take the shape of words. When the soul is clean, the mind won't think at anything else except at the clean and infinite God. But by that, Himself the Ghost is working within them. The limited ones are for the body, are for the earthly and sometimes egotistical life, because they can be comprised and used for the limited and foreign to God life. The Ghost will come only where the soul is widened by thinking at God and so the soul enters the communion with God's infinity through that prayer that is clean of limited thoughts.

[696] In the future live we will no longer look except to The Infinite One, so that we will be in cleanness and in prayer, far from any limitative egotism. There we will consummately be into the Ghost of the communion with God.

[697] This "not" is missing from the Greek text, but it is given in the Romanian translation form the year 1819, and it corresponds to the meaning of this paragraph that reckons that seeing the godlike realities is superior to prayer. The Romanian translation from back then, they not only new the Greek language to perfection, but they also had a high theology. The newer Romanian text, typewritten, it didn't catch this nuance and it remained faithful to the Greek text. It is a more poetical text but it has less understanding of the spiritual meaning of the Greek text. That's why it is also a freer text. The "thought movement" is "thought sight", or understanding sight. It is not a simple movement of the thoughts, but it is a movement of that plan that is beyond the created world, into God.

[698] They who are elevated out of the ceaseless prayer up to "sight" are not elevated forever, but only from time to time. Out of that "sight' the always come back to the ceaseless prayer.

I saw the Great Anthony[699] standing at prayer since the nineth hour (three o'clock in the evening", when he felt his mind elevated. And another among the fathers, by stretching his hands while he was sitting at prayer, he entered an ecstasy that lasted for four days. And many others, when they were praying thus, they were enslaved by the much (deep) remembrance of God, by His love, and they reached into ecstasy. But the man will be found worthy of this state when he disrobed on himself of his inward witness and of his external witness of the contrary sins, by keeping God's commandments. When somebody guards these commandments and he uses them as due, it will necessarily happen to him to get out of the many human things, namely to disrobe his body and to reach outside - to say it that way – not to his nature, but outside his needs. This is for him who lives in the way the Law Giver did and he fulfills His commandments, it will be impossible him to remain with his sins within himself. That's why our Lord promised us that he will make a dwelling place within him who has kept His commandments.

Question: When does somebody reach the consummation of the many fruits of the Ghost?

Answer: When he will be found worthy of the consummate love of God.

Question: And what he knows out of, that he has reached that?

Answer: When the remembrance of God moves within his cogitation, hid heart immediately starts moving into the love of God and his eyes abundantly shed tears. This is for it is the custom of the love to soak in tears the memory of the beloved ones. And if the man is so, he won't ever lack his tears, for there are not shortage of reasons to bring the man to the remembrance of God. This is for it is the custom of the love to do such things. And this is the consummation of the people in this present live of theirs.

Question: If after much tiredness and toil and ascesis done by the man, the thought of the pride cheekily attacked him, taking its occasion out of the beauty of his virtues, and he valued the tiredness that he has been enduring, what would he master this thought of his by, and what would he achieve through steadfastness to his soul, in order him not to believe that proud thought is his?

[699] "Anthony, surnames The Great, whose life was written by the godlike Athanasius, passed away in the year of salvation 357 (Fabricius, in the volume II, p. 344, from "Bibliotheca graeca"). And Isaac the Syrian lives around the year 534. So, how could he say: "I was Saint Anthony"? Either he speaks about another Anthony, or by saying "I saw him" he doesn't mean he saw him with his eyes by that he "heard or received about Saint Anthony".

Answer: When one knows that the man falls off God as a withered leaf fall of the tree, he will know the power of his soul[700]. If he had achieved these virtues and if he had endured the fight for the virtues by his own power, while the Lord had kept His help far from him, and if the Lord had let him enter the fight with the devil and the Lord hadn't helped him as He usually helps them who wage war to the devil, his power would have been shown, better said his defeat and helplessness. But God's taking-of-care is always with the saints, guarding and strengthening them. And by God's power everyone is victorious when he reaches the toil of the martyrdom and the sufferings for martyrdom, and the other difficulties coming upon him for God and he endured those for God. And this is an obvious and proved thing, doubtlessly. This is because, what can the nature defeat like, the power of the thoughts constantly moving within the people's limbs, which can sadden them and totally defeat them? And like other desire and they love the victory but they cannot have it, when they are powerfully warred, but they are daily defeated by their thoughts and they are pained and they are crying and they are toiling for their souls, and you think you that can bear on your own the hardships of your body, which are so burdening, and not to feel your body too distressed? And how could the body, which is suffering, to face the sharp edge of the iron and to endure the breaking of his bones and all sort of torments, and not to be defeated by sufferings him who is unable to endure even to be stung by a thorn under his nail, and he doesn't feel these torments according to the custom of his nature, but there is added another power that is outside nature's power that stope at him the strength of the torments? And for I have spoken about the talking-of-care from God, I think it won't be too much to remember also some story useful to our soul, which strengthen the man into his ascetic toils.

[700] Better said, he will know how little power his soul has. He presents some cases which people were kidnapped from their state of prayer into ecstasy, which is a kidnapping into the contemplation of the love of God, or it is an overwhelming of theirs by the love they feel for God.

Story: A certain young man called Theodore was tormented in all his body, and when somebody asked him: "How have you felt the torments?" he asked: "I felt them in the beginning, but then after I have seen a certain young man weeping up the sweat of my torment and strengthening me and giving me the resting into my suffering". Oh, the mercies of God! How close it comes His grace to them who suffer in His name, in order they to joyfully endure the sufferings for Him!

Let yourself therefore not be ingrate towards the taking-of-care from God shown to you, man! If it is obvious that are not you the one who defeats, but you are only a tool, and the Lord is Him Who defeats in you and you receive the name as victorious only as a gift, who is impeding you to continually ask for this power and you to be victorious and you to be praised, but to confess on yourself to God? Haven't you heard, man, how many fighters have been falling off the height of their days (form their high living) since the foundation of the world, and they fall off the height of their fights, because they showed themselves and ingrate to this grace? And, as many and as diverse are the gifts from God bestowed to the mankind, as many are too the differences among them who receive the gifts from God, according to the measure of them who receive the gifts. And there is a smallness and there is a bigness in the gifts received by us from God. This is for though all the gifts are glorious and wonderful, one gift overwhelms another gift in glory and in honor. And a stage surpasses another stage. And consecrating on himself to God and living into virtue is, likewise, one of the great gifts (charismas) from Christ.

But many, by forgetting about this grace of being worthy to separate on themselves from the people and to worship God and to become partakers to and receivers of His gifts (charismas) and of being chosen and of being found worthy of the holy serving (of the liturgizing) to God, instead they to continuously give thanks to God with their mouths, the has fallen into pride and haughtiness. And they do not serve (liturgize) Him in clean living and in spiritual working, as ones who have received the gift of this holy serving (liturgy[701]), but they reckon on themselves as rather they would do a grace (a favor) to God, instead they to reckon that God has chosen them from among people and God has brought them close to Him in order they to know His mysteries. And while thinking as they do, they do not tremble with the whole their soul, especially when looking at those who cogitated like that previously to them, and how by that it was taken from those, at once, their worthiness and hos the Lord cast them in a blink of an eye off the higher glory ad honor, and how they deviated into uncleanness and into debauchery and into shameful deeds, in a beastly manner[702]. This was because they didn't know their power and they didn't remember ceaselessly about the grace given to them towards His holy serving (liturgizing), in order they to reach inside His Kingdom and there to live together with eth angels and to advance towards Him through angelic living, so that God cast them off their work and, by changing their quietude life God showed them that it was not their the power to endure a well-ordered living, and of not being they disturbed by the nature's needs, or by the devils, or by the other resistances; but the power belonged to the grace that was working within them what the world cannot comprise or hear, because of their difficulty. That's why they endured within them for a long time without being defeated. There was within them, doubtlessly, a power that helped them in everything and that guarded them in all things. But because they forgot about this power, it was accomplished with them the word said by the Apostle: "Since they didn't want to have God, knowing Him as their Master Who united the dust with the spiritual serving (liturgy), God surrendered them to their unworthy mind and to the dishonor due to them which brought them to deceit" (Rom. 1: 28).

[701] The whole life lives in the service of God, or with the thought at God Who imprints that life with a certain seal of cleanness, by filing it up with the power of the Holy Ghost, or with His grace, it is a liturgy.

Question: Doesn't it happen to somebody, who dares to reject the living together with the people and to get out with a clean zeal into the uninhabited and scary wilderness, to die of [702] Our live has not fixity by itself, but it is constantly menaced to collapse into the precipice of the filthiness and of the indifference. We must hold and drive our life with a strong hand and with a sleepless conscience on the ascending way to the cleanness, by ceaselessly thinking at God Who wants us to see us ceaselessly bestowed to Him by ourselves, and us answering with clean love His clean love and His will us to show this clean love to our fellow humans too. That what helps us in doing so, it is to reckon this cleanness has as its spring and upholder the supreme Person, or better said the communion of supreme Persons, and not an impersonal and harsh law. Although you must reckon on yourself and owing to consecrate your life to God, you must also reckon on yourself in the same time, that only through God you can do that all the time.

starvation, or because of not having a shelter or other necessary things?

Answer: He Who has prepared shelters to the speechless beasts before creating them, and He took care of their needs, He won't overlook His creature, especially on them who fear Him and Who follow Him with simplicity and without spying. He who consecrated his will to God in ass aspects, he won't ever worry of the things necessary to his body or of the needs and of the body's heavy sufferings, but he wants to persevere in his hidden living, and he wants to endure the humbleness life, as one who doesn't fear the troubles, but as one who reckons as pleasant and sweet the estrangement from the whole world, for the cleanness of his living, and he lives in ascetic toils in mountains and in forests; and he will become like one who wanders into the land of the speechless beasts, by not accepting to bodily rest on himself or to live that full of defilements life. And as one who surrenders on himself to his death, he constantly cries and prays, in order him not to be deprived of the clean living of God. And then he will receive help from God.

His to be the glory and the honor and Him to guard us into His cleanness and Him to sanctify us into the holiness of the grace of the Holt Ghost, towards the honor of His name, in order us to extoll His holy name into cleanness, forever and ever! Amen.

On Diverse Themes. By Question and Answer

Question: Is it good to somebody to get far from all the things who arouse the passions? And is this running away reckoned as victory, or is it a defeat of the soul by running away from wars and by choosing the resting?

Answer: We are going to speak on these briefly. The monk must totally run away from everything that arouses within him the evil passions and he must fully cut off from him the causes of the passions and the matter, which help the passions and which increase the passions, even if they would be very small. And if the time comes to resist them and to fight them, let's do that as well, and no playing with it but craftily. We must place as obstacle in front of them our contemplation of the spiritual realities, and we must turn our cogitation away from those back to the natural good placed by the Crestor within nature, despite the fact that the devil has destroyed the truth from within man by experiencing the evil. And in order us to say why we ought to, he must run away not only from disturbance of the passions, but he even must sink his senses within his inward man and there him to persevere in a monastic manner into his full of patience work, in the vineyard of his heart, until his deeds will hiddenly and openly correspond to the name as monk. And maybe, in this perseverance in the vicinity of the inward man, we will fully be united with Him Who is known through our hope, with Christ Who inhabits us. This is for, when our mind monastically and reclusively, it remains in there, it is not our mind that fights the passions, but that is the grace. In addition to that, neither the passions move out of it towards deeds.

Question: If a man does something for the cleanness of his soul and the people around him do not understand his spiritual living, and so they get offended, must him leave his godlike living because those people get offended, or must he do what is beneficial to his purpose even if that is harmful to them who look as him?

Answer: We say also about this, if it is according to the law and with what he has received from the fathers who live before him, and if he does that for the cleanness of his mind, and that is the purpose he decided himself for, namely him to reach the cleanness, and other who do not know about that they get offended by his purpose, he won't be guilty, but those ones will be. This is for he doesn't restrain on himself, or he doesn't fast, or he doesn't isolate on himself, or he doesn't do what is useful to his purpose in order him to offend others, but he does all these things in his mind to get cleaned. And those ones, because of not knowing the purpose of his living, they defame him and they are guilty towards the truth. This is because of not being they able, because of their carelessness, to feel his spiritual purpose decided by him to himself towards cleaning his soul. About these ones the Blessed Paul wrote: "The word of the cross is insanity to the perishing ones" (1 Cor. 1: 18). So what? Because those ones reckoned the word of the cross as insanity, as ones who didn't feel the power of the word, must the Apostle stop preaching it? But behold that even up to these days the theme of the cross is impediment and offense to the Jews and to the pagans. Will us stop speaking about its truth in order those not to get offended? Paul not even he didn't keep his silence, but he even shouted out, saying: "Let me not praise myself except with the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Gal. 6: 14). With this praise "into cross" the saint wasn't bragging in order to offense others, but in order to preach that great power of the cross. So, also you, today, oh you holy one, you consummate your living on the purpose decided by you to yourself, in order you to reach God, a purpose which your conscience doesn't rebuke you for, and you examine your living into the light of the godlike Scriptures and of the writings of the Holy Fathers. And if you are not blamed by these ones, you won't fear those which others get offended by. This is because no man can convince everybody, neither can anybody to be pleasant to everybody and in the same time to work for God within his hidden.

Blessed is that monk who truly aims at the cleanness of his soul with the whole his strength and he walks on the thought way, which our fathers walked on, and he climbs the steps they climbed, him ascending step after step[703] and being elevated, as he advances on it, into wisdom and into enduring the troubles, but not on the foreign steps of the plots.

The cleanness of the soul is the first gift of our nature. And without the cleaning of the passions the soul won't be healed of the illnesses of the sin, neither the soul will gain the glory the soul has lost by disobedience. And if somebody is found worthy of cleanness, that is the health of his soul, right inf the things he does his mind will receive joy into the feeling of the Ghost[704]. This is for he becomes son of God and brother of Christ and he no longer have time to feel the good things and the bad things coming in his way.

And[705] he who has the rule of his appeasement for a hour every seven weeks, or one hour a week, and after he

[703] Here we have the idea of the ladder towards God, through virtues.

[704] Our nature was created, in the beginning, in cleanness. Our nature feels good, and unembarrassed, and in normalcy, into cleanness. Without cleanness the man feels himself souly ill. The cleanness is also a superior sensitiveness, feeling the presence and the work of the Holy Ghost, or it is an above-nature sensitiveness for God.

[705] From here to the end of this "Word" it misses the text from the Romanian translation from the year 1819, but it is given in the newer Romanian and Greek texts, typewritten. We can see accomplished his program he meets and he mingles himself with the people and he doesn't take care of his brothers who are in troubles, if he reckons that he observes his weekly rule he will be unmerciful and harsh. And if it obvious that because of his mercilessness, of his self-appreciation, and of his liar thoughts, he won't descend himself to be partaker to such things.

He who despised him who is helpless, he won't even see light. And the day of his who turns his face away from him who is in need, it will be darkened. And the sons of the house of his who despises the voice of him who is in torment, they will grope in blindness. Let's not rebuke, because of our nescience, the great name of the appeasement. This is for any way of living has its own time, space, and kind. And only then it will be its work known or received by God. And outside these, it will be vain the work of all of them who take care of the measure of the consummation. He who expects his helplessness to he noticed and comforted by others, he has humbled on himself and he makes hi brother partaker to his toil, during the times which he is tempted in, in order his work to be with joy in his appeasement, by remaining far from any pride and far from any deceit from the devils.

It was said that someone among the saints, who was a knower, that nothing ca deliver the monk of the devil of the pride and nothing can help the monk in his steadfastness into righteousness, at the time of the ignition of the passion of the fornication, as it does that the visiting of the people laying down in their beddings and being exhausted by the pain in the bodies.

Great is the angelic deed of the appeasement, when it unites with it the right-reckoning on its measure, for the need for humbleness. This is because in what we do not know, in that we will be stollen and robbed. I have said these things, brothers, not in order us to disregard and to despise the work of the appeasement. This is because we are convinced everywhere about these things and we do not speak contradictorily to ourselves. Let no one take a word of our and get it out of context and keeping that word unwisely.

again, that the text from the year 1819 was not translated using as source text the edition of Nicephorus Theotokis that was printed in the year 1770. Actually, this adding in the text of Theotokis is not so organically connected with the rest of this "Word".

I remember that I said in many places, with the intention of comforting, that even if it happened to somebody to stay in total idleness in his monastic cell, because of the forceful helplessness coming upon ourselves, he must not, because of that motif, him to decide to consummately go out of his monastic cell and him to reckon the external work as better than his work done inside his monastic cell. Do not reckon as consummate going out that one when, by occurring a need at a certain moment in time, you go out for a few weeks, for instance to buy the necessary things for the food and for the need of your neighbor. This is because we must not reckon this as laziness and non-working. And if somebody reckons within himself that he is consummate and that he is above all the realities from here by his perseverance near to God and by getting far from all the seen things, it will be good to him if he renounces even to that going out.

Great is the work of the right-reckoning to them who are helped by God. May God give us too to accomplish His word that says: “Anything you want the people to do to you, you do that likewise” (Lk. 6: 31). And where the man cannot fulfill in the seen things and with his body his love for his neighbor, it will suffice to God that love guarded only within out thought, for our neighbor, especially if it remains enough in its isolation and in its quietude and in its height. But is we are deprived of all the parts of that quietude, let’s compensate its absence by the commandment that is next inferior to it, that is the seen deed, which we must commit as an accomplishment of the resting of our life on the purpose of mastering our body, in order our freedom not to be liar motif of our obedience to our body.

May God give us to know His will, so that we will always walk into it, and so we will reach His eternal resting, by the grace and by the love for people of our Lord Jesus Christ Who are due the glory and the honor and the worshipping, forever and in the endless ages. Amen!

EPISTLE I

Written towards a Certain Brother Who Loved the Quietude

For I know you that you love the quietude, but the devil makes you stumble in many aspects, under the liar claim of the good, because the devil know the will of your cogitation and he scatters you away and he impedes the comprising virtue of many kinds of good things, of, my good brother, I want to help you, as a limb helps another limb which it is joined to, in your good desire, with a useful word. That's why I took care of showing you the things earned by me from the holy into virtue men and out of Scriptures and from the fathers and by my own experience.

If the man doesn't despise the honors and the dishonors and if he doesn't endure reproaches and mockery and losses for his quietude, or even beatings, and if he doesn't become a laughing stock and if he isn't reckoned as a crazy and distraught by them who see him, he won't be able to persevere in the pursuit of his good purpose of the appeasement. This is because, if the man opened once the door of the causes (of temptation), the devil wouldn't have any rest until bringing him, through many liar motives, to many and countless meetings. That's why, brother, if you purposely love the virtue of the appeasement, without scattering or deviations or interruptions, which the old fathers were victorious in, you will be able to fulfill your commendable desire when you will resemble to your fathers who love the consummate quietude and they didn't take care of occupying on themselves with their own resting, neither did they feel shame of running away from meeting those who were reckoned as honored.

And these ones were walking on their way and they didn't show on themselves to them who were wise and knowers, as despising their brothers, neither as overlooking their brothers, or getting lazy, or as lacking the right-reckoning, as it said somebody among those who honored and defended their quietude and their withdrawal more than the meeting of people. “The man, he says, who learns by experience the sweetness of the quietude in his monastic cell, he won’t avid his neighbor because of despising him, but for the fruit he picks up form appeasement. How did, he says, Arsenius run, and he didn’t search for the pleasure of meeting anyone?”.

And Abba Theodore didn’t run away from meetings, but meeting him it was like meeting a sword. He didn’t salute anyone while he was outside his monastic cell. And Saint Arsenius didn’t answer a word either to them who came to keel before him. This is because, once, some of the father went to see Abba Arsenius and the old man opened the door because of thinking that it actually was his servant; and when he saw who he was, he threw himself on his face to the ground; and by being begged much to get up, by his visitor, and to bless his visitor in order than one to leave in peace, the saint answered him: “I won’t get up until you will have left”. And he did so. And this was done by the blesse Arsenius in order not to shake even hands with somebody and in order not to encourage them to come and see him again.

Take heed at the continuation of the word, in order not to say that for the unimportance of that one the saint despised him, or on somebody else, while the saint spoke to somebody else face to face. But he avoided everyone, small or big. He had in mind only one thing: to run away from meeting anyone, either big or small, for the sake of his appeasement, and to take upon him the reproach from everybody for the cherishing of his quietude and silence.

This is for we know that the blessed Theophilus – the archbishop - went to see him, having as companion also the judge of that country, for the honor they had for this saint and for their desire for seeing him. And when he sat next to them, he didn’t thank them at all for the honor they did to him, namely he did not tell them any word, though they wanted to hear from him. And when the archbishop asked him to say a word, the monk kept his silence for a little while, and then he said: “And if I told you a word, would you keep it?”. And the answered: “Yes!”. So, the old man said them: “Where you hear that there is Arsenius, to not come close to that place”. Have you seen the wonderful deed of the old man? Have you seen what the old man avoided to see people like? He truly picked up the fruit of the quietude. And the blessed one didn't reckon that in front of him there was a man having worldly power and a head of the Church. But the blessed one reckoned that: "I have died once for all to the world. What can the dead man do for the living?". And Aba Makarios rebuked Abba Arsenius with a full of love reproach, saying: "Why are you running away from us?". And the old men defended himself with a wonderful and worthy to be praised defense: "God know that I love you, but I cannot be, in the same time, with God and with the people". And he didn't' learn this wonderful knowledge form elsewhere, but from the godlike word that told him: "Arsenius, rung Away from people and you will be saved".

Let no man among those who waste their time and who love the meetings, to dare to shamelessly trample over these, by the corrupting craft of his words, and to say against those that they are a human contrivance made up because of the desire for quietude. Because this is a heavenly teaching.

And in order us not to reckon that he told that about the running away from the world, but not about the running away from the brothers, after he left the world and came to live into Lavra, he again prayer to God to tell him how could he live appropriately. "Lord, he said, show me how to be saved!". And he reckoned that he will hear something different. But he heard, for the second time, the same word of the Master: "Arsenius, rung away, keep your silence, appease on yourself. For, if it is of great benefit seeing and talking to the brothers, you won't benefit as much from meeting than as from running away from them".

And thus, by receiving the blessed Arsenius, into godlike unveiling, while he was in the world when he was told to run away, and after that when he was living with the brothers, he was told the same thing, that convinced him that it was not enough to him to run away from the world but he had to run away from everyone. And who can oppose the godlike word?

But also, the godlike Anthony was told in godlike unveiling: "If you want to get appeased, you will leave not only for Thebaid, but for the most far wilderness". So, if God commands us to run away from everything and if God love the appeasement when those who love Him persevere in appeasement, who will bring liar motifs in order him to search for the meeting with and for the closeness to people? And if the running away and the guarding were useful to Arsenius and to Anthony, how much beneficial will be those to the weak ones? And if on those ones, whose word and encounter and help are needed by the entire world, God honored them more for their living into quietude than for the help they could provide to their brothers, or even to the mankind, how much more will be this beneficial to him who cannot guard even on himself?

We know from another saint among saints that a brother of his was sick and he was in another monastic cell. And for the saints controlled his mercy during all the time the sickness of his brother lasted, and he didn't go to see his brother, when that brother was about to die, he sent him this word: "Despite you haven't come to see me until now, come so that I can see you, and I to leave this world, bet it even at night, so that I could; kiss you and get rest". And the blessed one didn't listen to that word, neither at that time, when the nature is used to suffer together with others and to cross over the border of the ascesis. But he said: "If I go out, I will no longer be clean in my heart in front of God. This is because, if I took care of visiting my spiritual brothers, I would cherish more the nature than on Christ". And that brother dies and he didn't see him.

So, let no one invoke as liar excuse for the idleness of his thoughts, by reckoning that it is impossible both to trample on his thoughts and to cease his appeasement, and so him to disregard the care God take of him. And if the saints defeated the so strong nature, and if Christ love His sons when they do not take care of one another because of cherishing the quietude, what other need can occur and being impossible to you to despise that need, when you fall into it? That commandment that says: "Lor your Lord God with the whole your heart and with the whole your soul and with the whole your thought" (Mt. 22: 37), it is greater than the whole world, and greater than the nature, and greater than all the nature's things. And that commandment is being fulfilled when you stay into your quietude. And that commandment speaking about the love for your neighbor is comprised inside this first commandment[706]. Do you want to gain the love of your neighbor, according to the evangelical commandment, within you? Get far from him and then will burn within you the flame of the love and you will enjoy seeing him as seeing an angel of light[707]. And again, do you want them who love you to get thirsty of you? Look at their faces on the appointed days. But, truly, the experience of the teacher of everybody. And of our God are due the grace and the glory forever and ever! Amen.

[706] He who love God so much, he will love his neighbor too by teaching him how to love God and to be saved by doing so. And God loves all the people for all of them are His.

Epistle II

Towards a Brother According to Nature and According to Ghost, Who Was Urging Him and Who Was Begging Him by Letters to Come to See Him, despite that Brother Was Living within the World, for that Brother Was Thirsty of Seeing Him

I am not strong as you reckon me, of, you the blessed one, you who might know my helplessness. So, my perdition it seems an easy thing to you, and therefore you constantly ask me, as one who is lit by nature, a think which I should not take care of and you should not desire it. Do not ask me to rest my body and my body's thought, of, my brother, but you rather should ask me to take care of the salvation of my soul. After a little more while, I will pass away from this century. How many faces won't I met there? And how many people and how many places will I see there until I will have been led to my place there? And how many reason and thought won't my soul receive by meeting those? And how much disturbance will my soul receive because of the passions rising up within it, if I give my soul a little resting?

These things are not known to you. This is for seeing the laymen harms the monks. And you too know this. And think at how much change will receive in his thought him who has been appeasing on himself for a long time into good, when he sits again in these things and he sees and he hears things opposite to his habit. If even meeting other monks it harms him who is in battle and who wages war to his enemy, when those monks are not on the same way as he is, you think at what pit we fall in order to escape the pin of our enemy, especially us who have gained the knowledge by much experience. That's why, please do not ask me to do this needlessly. Let's not allow ourselves to be deluded by those who say "we won't be harmed by what we hear and by what we see, for we are equally much into wilderness and into world and into our monastic cell, through our thought, and we won't be disturbed out of our kindness, neither will us receive some evil change, nor will we feel – while meeting the persons and the things – the disturbance from the passions". They who say such things they do not know either they are hit and wounded. This is for we haven't reached yet that health of our soul. This is because we have stinky wounds and if they are left ever for a day, unattended and unbandaged and uncovered and untied, they will get full with worms.

[707] If you see clean into Christ, you will see your neighbor's mysterious light as undefiled by your passion for him. And the rays of your love for him will go towards him and they will help him without you being bodily close to him. It will happen into the major meaning of the word that what is called as "idealization" of him who is at distance, idealization expressed by the word "longing", which the Romanian language provides it with an infinite paradigm.

Epistle III

Sent Him by Somebody Love by Him, Whom He Was Teaching about the Mysteries of the Appeasement; and about How Many People, because of Now Knowing those Mysteries, They Actually Get Lazi in this Wonderful Word; and about the Fact that Most of Them Received the Order in their Monastic Cells by Inheriting It, and that Order Continued among Monks; and with a Short Gathering of Word Dedicated to Describing the Quietude

Bither, because of being I forced by my duty to write you about the necessarily due things, I am making know to your love, in this letter, according to the promise I made you, that I found you as living into the doubtless living, walking into the order of the appeasement. Therefore, I am going to imprint into your memory, by a short word, what I have heard about this work form them who have the gift of the discernment, after I have taken into my mind the gathering of the words through a close examination upon them, which I got accustomed too, to the things themselves. I am going to send you these words of mine, in order you too, to help on yourself out of the words of this epistle, through the zeal that is within you.

This is for you must come close to the words gathered in this epistle of ours, with the understanding of the wisdom, in a way that differs from the usual reading, and you must take it as a light in the other readings of yours, for the much power hidden into it. By this you can learn what the sitting into quietude is like, and which is its work, and what mysteries are hidden into this work; also, for some people who cherish less the deeds of the virtues (of the righteousness) committed among people, and who give more importance to the lonely life and to the troubles and to the toils of him who appeases on himself on a chair[708].

If you want to find, oh, my brother, the incorruptible life during your few days, let you entrance to quietude be with right-reckoning (with discernment). Try and understand this work, and do not aim to become famous; but enter, deepen yourself, toil, and strive to reach together with all the saints to know the deep and the height if this living. This is for each thing of the people has its way since the beginning to end, and it is expected a hope out of working each thing, a hope that moves the cogitation towards laying down the foundation of that thing. And this purpose strengthens the cogitation to endure its harshness and to take a comforting out of contemplating this purpose. And this purpose will dominate the mind as a master, until the end of that thing. So, also the honored thing of the appeasement becomes a shore of the mysteries for the penetrating look that takes heed at the initial cogitation among layers, until the consummation of the building and in all its big and difficult things.

Ald like the eyes of the helmsman which take heed at the stars, likewise the lonely monk by looking inside himself, he takes heed for the whole his travel, at the target he has fixed it in his mind on the first day which he started on traveling on the harsh sea of the appeasement, until he will find the pearl which he has been diving for, into the unreachable bosom of the quietude's sea[709].

[708] Committing the ceaseless prayer on a chai was practiced even back then (Century VI) and it didn't appear only in the Century XIII, through the "method" of Nicephorus from Loneliness.

[709] The quietude is reckoned as a mean for reaching a great deep, or a great height, as a shore of the mysteries, which one reaches by sailing on the "harsh sea" of the ascetic toils, in order to achieve that. The quietude is reckoned as a building build in layers, as an ascension to ever greater mysteries, to an ever-higher consummation. There is in it a movement of continuous

The guarding the hope it will ease him, from above, the difficulty of his work and the full of dangers harshness he meets during his travel. This is because, anyone who doesn't set up this purpose since the beginning of his work, in his mind, he will accomplish the due work recklessly, as one who punches the clouds. And one like this won't even be delivered from the ghost of the idleness for the whole his life[710]. And there will happen one of these two things: either he won't endure the difficult to endure burden and he will be defeated and he will totally leave the quietude, or he will persevere in quietude and he will make of his cell a prison and he will fry on himself like on a pan, because of not knowing how to trust the comforting that is born out of working the appeasement. That's why he neither can ask, with the pain of his heart, nor he can cry in his prayer, by desiring that. About these things, our fathers who were full of mercy and of love for their sons, they left in their writings some useful signs for the need of our life.

1) One of them said: "My gain out of quietude is this: when I do not get far from the house I sit it, my mind will be free of the preparation for war, and it turn back to a higher work".

2) Likewise, another: "I, he said, am running towards quietude, in order the verses of my reading and of my prayer to be sweetened to me. And when my tongue keeps its silence due to the pleasure of understanding those, I fall into a sleep, by the gathering of my senses and of my thoughts". And again: "When out of the getting far lives into quietude my heart gains the peace instead of the disturbance of my memories, the waves of the joy are sent to me out of the meanings which come inside, suddenly and unexpectedly, towards the delectation of my heart. And when those waves come closer to the ship of my soul, they sink my soul out of the words of the world and out of the words elevation or sinking, and not a petrifaction or an emptying of the spiritual life of any understanding. It might be rather a diving similar to that performed by a diver, into the 'sea of the quietude", but which, until reaching the deep bosom of this sea, into the 'sea of the quietude", he fights great impediments. But this "bosom" is unreachable", it is an abyss whose bottom won't ever be reached. It is the bosom of the non-understood understanding and of the unlimited love of the godhead.

[710] He who doesn't find the true and deep quietude, of who isn't upheld by the sure hope for finding it, he will continuously be menaced by boredom and by idleness in his ascetic toils for achieving that.

of the body into the true wonders, into that quietude into God"[711].

3) And again, another said: "The quietude cuts off the liar motifs and the causes which renew the thoughts, and it weakens and it withers the memories of the bad habits[712]. And when these contents get weakened into thought, the mind returns to its order, by correcting them".

4) Another said, again: "You will know the measures of the hidden realities of yours, out of the differences among your thoughts; the good ones belong to the ceaseless ones; the evil ones are moved by some happening and they pass by in an instant[713]. There is no body-bearer who doesn't experience in his house these two kinds of changes, of the good one and of the bad ones. If he is zealous, the changes will be done form the small one towards the big ones, according to the nature (this is for the parents are parents to those who are born according to their nature); and if he is idle, from the height of the grace that has been place into our nature, as a dough, towards the lower ones[714].

5) And another said: "Chose as your work of delectation the ceaseless vigil during nights, which all the fathers disrobed with the former man and they have been found worthy of the renewal of their mind. During those hours the soul feels the immortal life and in that light the soul disrobes the coat of the darkness and the soul receive the Holy Ghost".

[711] The deep meanings which are within quietude, they are intertwined with joy, for they are meanings of the love of God, of the life irradiating out of God. These full of joy meanings are itself the encounter with God. The meanings do not differ from (are the same with) the ocean of life and of love of God.

[712] The full of joy infinity of God, as met into quietude, it overwhelms the memory of the bad habit and it stops the renewal of the thoughts about the world.

[713] "We know the state of our soul out of our thoughts. Whether the thoughts of our heart are simple and clean, moving into a serene and undisturbed gladness, our soul is in good progress and it has daring towards God. But whether our thoughts are mirky and darkened by bitterness and are carries away by hatred towards our brothers, our soul feels condemned and despaired, because of being rebuked by our conscience". If our thoughts express the continuity of the same godlike content, but in an ever-deeper manner, it is a sign that we are into quietude; but if there are thoughts which constantly change, and which bring to surface very different in essence thoughts, that will be a sign that we are in a superficial state.

[714] The grace is seen as a rising dough that changes our nature, by bringing it together it and by making it aa a bread for God and for our fellow humans. The zealous one experiences changes from the small aspects of the nature towards the great ones (from the less good ones towards the progressed-into-good ones). And the idle one experiences the changing from the ones of the grace towards the smaller ones.

6) And again, another said: "When somebody sees diverse views and he hears diverse voices, which differ from his spiritual cogitation, and he talks to those and he meets those, he won't be able to hiddenly see on himself and to remember his sins, or to clean his thoughts and to take heed at the things coming upon him and to hiddenly talk through prayer"[715].

7) And again: "It won't be possible one to submit his senses under the mastery of his soul, if he is outside the quietude and outside the estrangement from people. This is because the understanding soul is hypostatical united with them (with the senses) and the soul will be unwillingly attracted together with his thoughts, if the man is not full of watchfulness in the hidden prayer".

8) And again: "How much delectation brings within soul the vigil into the soul's watchfulness, accompanied by the prayer and by the reading! And how much does that gladden, rejoice, and clean the soul! These things are known especially by those who during the whole their life live in the most detailed ascesis".

So, you, man, who loves the quietude, place the urges and the advices of the father in front of you, as a target, and direct the course of your work towards getting closer to those. And before everything, you must learn what is in coherence with the target of your work. This is because outside these you won't be able to have the knowledge of the truth. And you must strive to show in them, abundantly, your perseverance.

About Silence

The silence is the mystery of the future age[716]. And the words are the tool of the present world. The man who fasts he [715] This one has come down from quietude through those view of many kinds. He no longer sees on himself, he doesn't see his sins, he doesn't get cleaned, and he no longer talks to God hiddenly into prayer.

[716] When you meet the future age, either here as downpayment, or after your death in fullness, you meet a world of mysteries, which the word cannot interpret. The words cut off the reality in pieces in order to be able to comprise it. Itself the reality from the present world appears in distinct, limited, according to the words' images. There beyond, everything will be so united, they will so much pass one into another, for everything will be full of the infinite godhead, so that the limited words won't be able to express anything satisfactorily. Then, this whole will be seen by everybody, so that there won't be necessary a communication of it to one another.

tries to make his soul alike to the spiritual nature[717] by silence and by ceaseless fasting[718]. When the man parts with all things through his godlike work, persevering into his hidden, he will consummate on himself into these mysteries. And his holy serving (his liturgy) will be full of the godlike mysteries and of those unseen powers and of the holiness of the mastery and of the reigning over creatures[719]. So, the feeling of the passions is stollen from within soul by the sweetness of this view. And by this the soul enters the two stages of that unveiling known with the mind, which are in that plan from above this stage, in that one of the cleanness, and in the plan from above[720]. May God found us too, worthy of these things. Amen.

Epistle IV

Towards the Pious Father Simeon, the Wonder Doer[721]

Your epistle, you, the saint, it doesn't consist of written words, but you have depicted and you have shown in it your love for us, as in a mirror. And what you reckon us that we are like, you wrote so, showing through the deeds themselves that you love us overwhelmingly. What we should have written to

---

There will be a common joy of what everyone will see, a joy being multiplied right by the fact that everybody will have that joy. It will be another form of communication.

[717] Namely to the angelic immaterial nature.

[718] The quietude and the silence from within itself are tightly united to the fasting and to the tears. That's why also the unveiling of the mysteries it is done them who are silence and fasting. The quietude is a means which the endlessness of the mysteries is perceived through, it is a sign of the perceiving of the mysteries, or the overwhelming by mysteries of the man's helplessness of expressing them. The quietude is the gate which God entered the man through, and which God reveals on Himself to the man through. Olivier Clément says: "The saint appears like a man who has lost his word, in the sense of discourse, or domination, of possession – and the saint find his word again through the mediation of the tears stream". "The Ghost is suddenly the breath bringing the word and the silence within heart". A word that doesn't come out of silence, a word that is not silence to itself, it has not profoundness (Le visage intérior, p. 80-81).

[719] The mastery over creatures will be saint, for it will be gentle and full of awe for the mystery of the godhead which the creatures are transparent so that the godhead will be seen luminous through them, and it will be as it should have been on the basis of the godlike commandment from Paradise, if the man hadn't fallen.

[720] On the angelic stage known through cleanness, which they who appease on themselves become like angels through, and in the godlike stage that is above the angelic stage.

your piousness, and to ask you, in order us to learn the truth from you, if we take care of our salvation, you wrote that to us in advance, due to your great love for us.

You might have done this with the craftsmanship of the philosophy, in order that through your subtle and spiritual questions which you have addressed to me, my soul to be waken up from the indifference which my soul has sunk so deeply in. But I, through your love, which you have forgotten through of my measure, I am forgetting of my helplessness, so that I do not take heed at what I should to reach at, but I take heed at what your prayer can do. This is for, when I forget about my measure, you pray God through your prayers, in order your ask to be consummate and to be given to you from God (for me) what you have asked into prayer, as a true servant of His.

Question: The first question from your epistle is this: If one must keep all the commandments of the Lord, and if there isn't any way of salvation to him who doesn't keep the commandments.

Answer: About this fact, as it seems to us, one shouldn't even ask. This is because, even though the commandments are many, we owe to keep all of them. And if it hadn't been so, the Savior shouldn't have given those commandments. This is because, as it seems to me, our Master didn't say and didn't do anything superfluous. This is for the purpose of His coming was that of cleaning up from our souls the evilness of our first disobedience, and Him to change our soul according to the soul's initial state. That's why He has given us His of-life-maker commandments, as some cleaning medicines for our passionate state. This is for, what the medicines are for the ill body, that are the commandments to the passionate soul. And it is proven that the commandments have been given against the passions, as our Lord limpidly says to His holy disciples:

"He who has My commandments and he keeps them, that one is him who loves Me. And him who loves Me will be love by My Father. And I will love him and I will show Myself to him and We will come and We will make a dwelling place within him" (Jn. 14: 21). And again: "In this will know the world that you are My disciples, if you love on one another" (Jn. 13: 35). It is proven that one can gain the love according to eth health of his soul. And the soul cannot become healthy without keeping the commandments.

But the keeping of the commandments is lower than the spiritual love. And because there are many who keep the commandments because of their fear, or for the future reward, and not out of love, our Lord urges us much to keep those commandments of love, which bring the light to our soul. That's why, He says again: "In order the people to see your good deeds and to extoll your Fathers from heavens" (Mt. 5: 16). But it won't be possible to be seen within soul the good stages taught to us by our Lord, if one doesn't keep the commandments.

And about the fact that the commandments are not difficult to be kept by them who really want that, it was told us by the Lord Himself. For He says: "Come all of you who are tired and burdened and I will rest you. This is for My yoke is gentle and My burden is light" (Mt. 11: 28-30). And about the fact that we must keep all the commandments, our Lord commanded us that too, by saying: "He who transgresses one of these too small commandments and he teaches the people so, too small will he be called into the Kingdom of Heavens" (Mt. 5: 19). After all these things issued as laws towards our salvation, I cannot say that one must not keep all the commandments. But neither the soul himself won't be able to get cleaned up if the soul doesn't keep the commandments given us by our lord as medicines for cleaning the soul up of passions and of mistakes.

You know that the sin entered the man because of the man transgressing the commandments. So, it is obvious that, by keeping the commandments, the health will come again. And we mustn't even desire or hope for the cleanness of our body without us working the commandments, namely without us firstly walking that way that leads us to the cleaning of our soul. You must not say that God can bestow us the cleanness of the soul even without us working the commandments, namely only by grace. These judgments belong to our Lord and the Church doesn't teach us to inquire something like that.

This is because the Jews too, during their return from Babylon to Jerusalem, they traveled on the trodden way of the nature and so they came to their holy city and they saw our Lord's wonders. But Ezekiel was kidnapped above the nature, through the work of the unveiling, so that he came to Jerusalem, and by godlike unveiling he became seer of the future renewal. And it happens to some people to reach the cleanness of their soul on the trodden and lawful way of keeping the commandments in their much-tiring living, endured to the blood. And there are others who are found worthy of it by the gift of the grace. And this is a wonderful thing, that we haven't been commanded to ask in our prayers that way bestowed through grace, and so to leave the living united with the work.

This is because to that rich man who asked our Lord: "How could I inherit the eternal life?", our Lord answered him: "keep the commandments!". And when the rich man asked about which the commandments are, our Lord answered him firstly to guard himself against evil deeds, and the He remembered him about the natural ones[722]. And when the rich man asked for finding out a little more, our Lord told him: "If you want to become consummate, sell your wealth and share it to the poor and take you cross and follow Me" (Mt. 19: 21). And this means: make yourself dead towards all your wealth and so you will live into Me. Get out of the old world of the passions and so you will enter the new world of the Ghost. Remove and disrobe from you that knowledge of many sorts and cunning, and so you will put on the simple knowledge of the truth. This is for, by telling him: "take your cross", our Lord taught him to die to all the realities from withing world. And when he has killed within himself the former man, of the passions, the Lord told him: "Come and follow Me" (Mt. 16: 24).

The former man cannot start walking of Christ's way, as the Blessed Paul said too: "The body and the blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither the corruption inherits the incorruptibility" (1 Cor. 15: 50). And again: "Disrobe the former man that is corrupted by lusts, and then you will be able to embrace the new man who is renewed through the knowledge likening to Him Who created him" (Eph. 4: 22). And again: "The earthly thought is enemy to God. This is because it doesn't obey God's law. And this is because of not even being able to. This is because they who are into body they cogitate the things of the body, and being pleasant to God into the thought of the Ghost they cannot" (Rom. 8: 7).

And you, the holy, if you love the cleanness of your heart and the spiritual thoughts as you have said, attach on yourself to the commandments of our Lord, as our Master said: "If you want to enter the life, you will guard the commandments" (Mt. 19: 17), for the love of Him Who has given us the commandments, either because your fear not to, or for reward. This is because we do not taste the sweetness being into righteousness when we do the righteousness, but when the desire for righteousness eats up our heart[723]. And we are sinners not when committing the sin, but when we do not hate the sin and when we do not repent for the sin. And you should not say that there was somebody, either among the ancients, or among the newer ones, who reached the cleanness of his heart while not keeping the commandments, and he was found worthy of the seeing of the Ghost, but, as it seems to us, no one who didn't keep the commandments walked on the tracks of the blessed apostles and neither was him found worthy of to be called as saint.

The Blesses Basil and the Blesse Gregory, whom you said about that they loved the wilderness and they were pillars and light to the Church, and they praised the quietude, they didn't come to quietude until they firstly became workers of the commandments, but they firstly live in peace and they kept the commandments, and so they reached the cleanness of their souls and they were found worthy of the seeing of the Ghost. I truly believe that they were keeping the commandments while living into cities, so that they accommodated strangers, they visited the sick, they dressed up the naked, they washed the feet of the tired; and if one asked them to walk with him for a mile distance, they walked two miles. And after they kept the commandments which were due to be fulfilled when they were living among many and so their mind started to rejoice of the first motionlessness[724] and of the godlike and mysterious views, they hurried up and the left for the quietude of the wilderness and they persevered there into the inward man, so that they became seers and the remained into the seeing of the Ghost [723] If doesn't suffice to only do the deeds of the virtues formally, externally, or because who know which earthly interests we would have, but we must do the deeds of the virtues due to our inward attachment to God, due to our love for Him, or alt least because we fear Him, or for the reward of the Kingdom of Heavens.

[724] Of the motionlessness from the beginning into God. But that motionlessness was on earth and not in heavens, as at the holy angels. The sin was committed on earth into bodies and not above in the state of the bodiless spirits. And the motionlessness from the beginning was only relatively a motionlessness. This is for our proto-parents too were to advance into God. This is for as well that mind gathered up into quietude, it has a certain advancing into God.

until they were called by grace to become shepherds of the Church of Christ.

And regarding what you said that the Great Basil praised once the living together with many, and on other occasion he praised the withdrawal, I am telling you this: “the zealous ones are truly found worthy of gain on two ways, each one according to his power and to his kind and to his target he has chosen. Sometime sis beneficial to the strong ones to live together with many, while on some other times that is beneficial to the helpless too. And with the wilderness it happens alike. Tho him who is strengthened into the health of his soul, and whose mind has been united with the Ghost and he has become dead towards the human living, the cohabiting with many won’t be harmful to him, if he watches on himself; and this is not for him to benefit, but in order others to benefit of him. This is for he has been called by God on behalf of the other fathers. And to him who is helpless, and who still needs to grow up through the deeds of the commandments, it will also be beneficial to him to inhabit together with many, until he will get accustomed to it and he will prepare himself and he will be warred up by temptations, in order him to fall and to get up again among many, and to him to gain the health to his soul. There is no little child not to be nourished with the flowing milk and there is no monk not needing to be nourished with the milk of the little children, in order him to overcome his passions and him to be found worthy of cleanness.

On the same way, as I said, the wilderness too, sometimes is beneficial to those helpless who run away (from the many), while on some other times it is beneficial to the strong one too. To the helpless the wilderness is beneficial for, by not being there present the matter of the sins, their passions will be burnt out and withered, and they to grow up; to the strong ones, for they being deprived of the matter, to be warred up by the enemy.

It truly so, as you said, the wilderness puts the passions to sleep. But one doesn’t search only for that, namely to put his passions to sleep, but he also aims to uproot his passions. This means being ab to defeat one’s passions when his passions uprise against him. This is for the sleeping passions wake up when there comes a certain cause that passes the passions into deed. But in order you to know that not only the wilderness puts the passions to sleep, as you said, thing at a time of sickness, or of deep helplessness, when our passions do not wage us war harshly. But not only this puts our passions to sleep, but they also put one another to sleep, when they give room to one another. The passions of the vain-glory make the passions of the fornication to step back. And again, the passion of the fornication tames up the crazy love for vain-glory. So, we must search for wilderness not only because it puts our passions to sleep, but also for, due to the lack of the things submitted to the senses and by estranging on ourselves from everything, we will get wiser into wilderness and our inward man will grow up, namely that man of the Ghost of Christ, and on each moment, we will see on ourselves, and our mind will become watchful and the mind will guard on itself on each moment, lets will be stollen away from it the memory of its hope. These things, as it seems to us, are enough for your first question, whether they have been ever needed. Let's talk about your second question.

Question: If our Lord asked us to give alms for us to liken the glory of our Father from heavens, why the monks rather chose the quietude?

Answer: The answer it the following. It is good for you have brought an example from the Gospel, in order to examine the great living into quietude. We stay in it and we do not try to remove it, as a superfluous thing. Our Lord appointed the giving of alms towards our likeness to our heavenly Father, in order that to bring them who give alms closer to Him. This is true. But neither us the monks honor the quietude without honoring the giving of alms, but we try as much as we can to shun on ourselves from worry and disturbance. And not because we are against the needed things, when we come across to them, we want to avoid them, but we take care of our quietude in order us to remain occupied only with God. We avoid the disturbance as much as possible, in order us to get closer to Him. But if we ever come across to a real need of our brothers, for a while, we must not disregard the giving of alms either. Therefore, let's strive to be ceaselessly and always full of mercy within ourselves, for all the speaking nature. It commands us so the teaching of our Lord. This is the difference between our quietude and our quietude cannot be whatever[725]. And not against our inward mercy must we shun of; but, when the time asks us for deeds and where there are needed things, we must not be lazy in showing our love in a seen manner. This is done especially by those who do not chose for themselves the consummate quietude, namely those who do not met anyone, but by those who fit their quietude to weeks program, and to that of the seven times seven[726]. Some monks like these do not refrain on themselves from accomplishing the things of the giving of alms to the neighbor, either when they are in the hours of their prayer program. This is for, where there is nobody too rashly or cruel or inhumane, he will keep his quietude also in the front of the eyes of another person[727]. This is because we know that without loving our neighbor, our mind won't be able to become enlightened into the godlike dialogue and love[728].

This is because which wise monk, who has food and clothes and sees his neighbor hungry and thirsty and naked, he won't give his neighbor everything he has and he will spare something for himself? Or, again, seeing somebody who is made of the same flesh, being tormented by illness and weakened by pain and needing to be visited, he will cherish more, for his desire for quietude, his rule of locking himself up in his monastic cell, instead of choosing the love for his neighbor? And when such things do not happen, let's guard our love for and our mercy on our brothers, within our thought. But when we have the things at hand, God asks us, when needed, also to fulfill and to consummate our love and our mercy with our concrete deed. It is obvious, therefore, that if we didn't earn or gather anything, we wouldn't be ordered to fall to worry and into disturbance for the poor. But if we do, we will be required to do that. And again, if we avoid in our living the together-sitting and the mixing with the seeing of people, we won't need to leave our monastic cell and our lonely and withdrawn sitting, [725] The quietude of the Christian monk is not an indifference like that of the Buddhist monks, but it is full of mercy on people. But his trust in God is so great, that he has the firm hope that through it he will help those who are in trouble too.

[726] On each day of the week, they come and attend the seven praises. Soe monks do not choose for themselves the consummate quietude.

[727] Even while looking at someone else and helping that person, he won't lose his quietude, by getting disturbed. He will help his neighbor even with his quietude.

[728] In the dialogue with our neighbor, our mind will be enlightened by our dialogue with God. And in our dialogue with God, the man brings light out of his love for his neighbor.

in order us to surrender on ourselves to the walking through the world and to visiting the sick people, or to occupy on ourselves with other similar things. This is for, it is limpid that such things lower someone, form the height things to the small things.

But if somebody cohabits together with the many, and his dwelling place is close to people, and he is helped by others, or by other's toils, either in time of health or in time of sickness, he owes to do the same. He must not ask for help from others when se sees the brother of the same body in need, better said, he sees Christ cast out and tormented, and he mustn't avoid his brother in need or to hide himself form him, by motivating that he would do that for his liar appeasement. He who does that, he is a merciless man.

Do not mention here John of Thebaid and Arsenius and as who of those two bestowed on himself or he took care of sick people or of poor ones and thus he disregarded his appeasement? Do not touch the deed of such people. That is for, if you refrain on ourself from any help from people and for any encounters with people, as those two did, our Lord will allow you as well to not care about other people. But if you are far from that consummation, and in all your bodily toils you are constantly accompanied by people, why will you disregard the commandments that compel you to obey them according to your measure, giving as liar motif the great living of the saints, a living which you haven't yet come close to?

But I am not forgetting to remember you the word of Makarios the Great, a word that was recorded towards rebuking them who despise their brothers. This is for, the Great Makarios went once to visit a certain brother who was sick, and when the saint asked that man if he wanted something, that one answered that he wanted a little fresh bread, and that was because all the monks at that time cooked bread only once a year (for that was the habit of that place), and that worthy of happiness man immediately stood up and he left for Alexandira, despite he was ninety, and he exchanged the dry breads he brought in his sack for new breads, and he brought those fresh breads to that sick brother.

But also, Abba Agathon, who was alike the great saint mentioned before, he did an even greater thing, being him the most experience among all the monk at that time, and he honored the silence and the quietude more than anyone at that time. This one, he left during the service (the Holy Liturgy) in order him to sell his manual work and he found in the market an overlooked and sick stranger, and he rented a house and the remained with that stranger in order to take care of him, and he worked with his hands for paying for him and for the stranger; and he was serving that stranger so, for six months until that stranger became healthy. Abba Agathon (as the history tells us) said: "I wanted to find a leper and to give my body to him and to take his body for me". This is the consummate love.

They who fear God, you my beloved one, they effortlessly strive to keep the commandments. And if they must escape other with their deed, they will take upon themselves any danger for the sake of those. He Who is of -life Maker, He tied their consummation and He made is depend on two commandments which comprise all the other commandments: the love for God and the love for God's creation, the love for God's image. And the first one accomplished the target of the seeing of the Ghost. And the second one is simple and non-composed, unsees and without any shortcoming by nature. That's why, in its occupation with God neither the conscience needs by nature bodily deeds or some work or thickened meanings. This is for this work of the conscience is simple and it is done by in sole part of the mind, according to the all-worshipped Cause, being a feeling above the feeling of the body. But in the last commandment, that is the love for people, according to the twofold composition of the people's nature, one must show his care for working the commandment in a twofold manner. This is for, what we fulfill in thought in an unseen manner we want to fulfill that into the body as well; but not only in a shown manner, but also in hidden. And what is committed through things we want to be committed likewise into conscience.

This is for, as the man has been made out of two parts, or soul and of body, likewise he must take care of all his things in a twofold manner, according to their twofold composition. And for the deed precedes the contemplation everywhere, it will be impossible to the man to ascent to the highest side if he doesn't fulfill, in the first place, the lower side with his deed. And no man dares to say about the deed of the loving of the neighbor that he fulfills that within his soul, while overlooking that part that one fulfills it according to his power through his body and while not lay his hand on material things appropriately to time and place. This is for one will be believed only if his love from his thought can be seen and known. And when we show on ourselves as faithful and true in these things, according to our power, our soul will be given a power to stretch on himself also towards that big part of the high and godlike contemplation, through simple and different meanings[729].

He wrote also that that monk who wants to love God more than all, he must take care of the cleanness of his soul. And you said that well, if you are capable of this too. But because you have said that that soul who hasn't defeated yet his passions, he won't have daring into his prayer, these two things seem to be contrary to one another, despite I am a simple man. This is for, if he hasn't defeated his passions yet, how will he take care of his cleanness? If, out of the law of the spiritual righteousness he hasn't fulfilled the defeating of the passions, how can you ask him for something even superior to that? But not out of the things one desires it can be known that fact that he loves those things, but it can be known out of the things he loves what he actually desires[730]. The love precedes the desire, by nature. If somebody doesn't love something, he won't desire that either. The passions are like a door locked on the face of the cleanness. And if somebody doesn't open this door, he won't enter the clean realm of the heart.

And when you have said that the soul has the daring in the time of the prayer, you said that rightly. This is for the daring is not only above passions, but the daring is also above the cleanness. And the law of the teaching is like I say: the forced patience fights the passions for cleanness. So, if you have defeated your passions, your soul will gain his cleanness. Sand the true cleanness makes the mind to gain the daring in time of prayer.

But won't we be worthy of condemnation if we ask in prayer for what we have called as cleanness? Or, isn't that a proof for our pride or for our self-appreciation, to ask God for what the godlike Scripture and our fathers command us, and [729] In the Greek text followed from here two pages which have been given in this book also in the content of the Word LXXXVI, and that's why we are going to omit them in this book.

[730] You cannot gain the cleanness by simply desiring it, or without fighting yourself for it by defeating your passions. This simple desire for cleanness, without actually the love for cleanness manifested in rejecting the passions which defile, it doesn't mean actually even desiring it. You must love the cleanness by rejecting the passions which defile you, and by that you will show what you actually desire.

which the monk left everything for, and have gone into wilderness? But I think, you the holy one, that like the son doesn't doubt his father and the son doesn't ask his father telling him: "Teach me the craftsmanship, or give me something", likewise must the monk not to become tired of asking from God: "Give me these and those". This is for the monk knows that God takes care of us as a father takes care of his son. And that's why we owe to get humble and to cry for the causes of our sins, even for those which are outside our will, either we have committed those without thought, or with our deed, and we to say with a crushed heart as the publican did: "Lord, be merciful to me, the sinner". And let's do hiddenly and plainly what our Lord told us to do: "When you have done all the things commanded to you, you will say that worthless servants we are; what we owe to do that we have done" (Lk. 18: 13). Your conscience must bear witness that you are unworthy and you need mercy[731].

You know as well, that not the deeds open you that locked door from within your heart, but the crushed heart and the humbleness will do that, when you have defeated your passions into humbleness and not by contempt[732]. He who is sick he first gets humble and he takes care of healing on himself of his passions. And then he asks for seeing the emperor. This is for the souls' cleanness and healthy are the soul's kingdom.

And which is the kingdom of the soul? Like he who is sick he won't say to his father: "Make me emperor", but he firstly will take care of his sickness, and after his full recovery he will receive his kingdom form is father, likewise that sinner who repents he will firstly receive the health of his soul and then he will enter with his father the country of the clean nature and he will reign there into glory with his father.

[731] Because the author of the letter said also that he doesn't have daring into prayer, for he has no cleanness, Saint Issaac told him that as the son doesn't ask his father for things known to his father that his son needs, likewise he who prayer he must daringly ask for nothing else but for his sins to be forgiven. This is not pride, On the contrary, this is the proof for the awareness of his sins in him who prays.

[732] Not your deeds which you can be proud of will open you the door of your heart, or the door of your heart to God, but themselves your crushed heart and your humbleness will open that door. But this will happen if you have defeated tour passions in humbleness, and not with the despising pride provided you by doing the deeds contrary to your passions. Or, itself your crushed heart is a sign that you have defeated the worst of your passion, namely your pride, and together with your pride you have defeated all your passions.

We remember the Holy Apostle Paul who confesses his sins in the last part and further on unveils his soul: "Jesus Christ, he says, came within world to save the sinners, among whom I am the first. And that's why He had mercy on me to show His long-forbearance" (1 Tim. 1: 15). This is because I was in the beginning persecutor and blasphemer, but I have been given mercy, for I was working with nescience, out of my faithlessness.

When told he these and at what time? After his great toils and after his deeds of power, after preaching the Gospel of Christ that he took it all over the world, after the ceaseless deaths, after his troubles of many sorts, which he suffered from Jews and from other gentiles. But he was still looking at his deeds from the beginning. And not only that didn't reckon that he reached the cleanness, btu he thought that he was not worthy to be counted among disciples. This was because he said: "I am not worthy to be called apostle, because I persecuted the Church of Christ: (1 Cor. 15: 9). And when he earned more than anybody the victory upon his passions, he was saying: "I oppress my body and I bear it enslaved, lest by preaching to others I myself to become unworthy" (1 Cor. 9: 27).

And if you say that in some places, he tells also the great things about himself, let himself explain that to you. For he said that he didn't do that willingly, neither through himself, but for preaching. And when he told those things towards the benefit of the believers, he said about himself that by praising on himself like he did, he was mindless, shouting out and saying: "You forced me" (2 Cor. 11: 17; 12: 12). And again: 'I do not speak according to the Lord, but with lack of wisdom concerning the praise" (2 Cor. 11: 17).

Lo, this is the guidance brought us by Saint Paul the righteous. Let's apply it and let's aspire to fulfill it. And if we as God for the high things and God doesn't give us those, let's be content existing even without those. This is for God knows the vessels chosen for His serving. This is for the Blessed Paul neither after all those he didn't ask for the kingdom of the soul, but he said: "I would have wanted to be anathema from Christ" (Rom. 9: 3). So, how would we dare to ask, before the time known to God, the kingdom of the soul, since we haven't kept either the commandments, neither have we defeated our passions, nor have we paid our debt?

Therefore, I pray you, you the saint, your thought not to ascend to this, but you to earn, above all, the patience in the things coming upon you. And with great humbleness and with crushing of heart for our mistakes and for our thoughts, let's ask for the forgiveness of our sins and for the humbleness of our soul.

It was written by somebody among the saints that the prayer of him who doesn't reckon on himself as a sinner before God, it won't be well-received[733]. And if you say that some of the father wrote about these, namely about what the cleanness of the heart is and what the health is and what the righteousness is and what the souly sight is, we will answer you that they didn't wrote about those in order us to search for them or to wait for them before time. This is for it was written: "The Kingdom of God doesn't come as one that is waited for in order to be seen" (Lk. 17: 20). They who waited for it thus, they achieved pride and falling. We are searching for the place (the land) of the heart through the deeds of the repentance and of the living, which are well-pleasant to God, and the things of our Lord will come from those, if the place of the heart becomes clean and unstained[734]. And those height of God which we try to see them, are not approved by the Church. And they who have received those they have achieved pride and falling. And they are not a sign that somebody loves God, but they are an illness of the soul. And how will we search for the heigh things of God, when the godlike Paul praises on himself with his troubles and he reckons that the high things of God consist of being imparted with the sufferings of Christ[735]?

[733] That's why have been associate to the Prayer to Jesus also the request: "Have mercy on me the sinner", and not the asking for who knows what deeds. Without the conscience of one's sin there won't be humbleness but pride.

[734] It is here about those who waits for it as it would come as an external reality, and they also claim that they would know the signs of its coming. The most appropriate translation of the place from Luke 17: 20 could be also this: "The Kingdom of God doesn't come as one which one take heed at by waiting for it" (εν παρατηρήσει προσδοκίας). In this is hidden a pride claiming that it knows the closeness of the coming of what cannot actually know or waited for. Let's ceaselessly see our sins and let's repent for them, enduring the troubles. In this we live the closeness to us of the Kingdom of God. In this is implied the knowledge of our unimportance and of the greatness of God. In the humble feeling and in the deeds of the repentance we discover the endless deep of the world, and, in front of this deep, we discover the endless height of the glory of God. By doing so, all the things of God (humbleness, cleanness, love) will come by themselves. Then, the pride or any form of egotism will no longer stay as some stains on the transparent deep of our heart. Then the place of our heart will be clean and able to mirror, by receiving into it, the rays of the heavenly Sun. It seems that, by affirming here that the things of God come within our heart when our heart is clean, Saint Isaac is contradicting what he said before, that we must not ask for cleanness, but we must only cry with humbleness for our sins. But both here and above, he doesn't condemn the effort towards cleanness, but the claim of having the cleanness and of being us able to achieve it. One needs the cleanness for God to come within his heart. But we mustn't ever reckon that we have achieved the cleanness. Even the humble though that we are sinners, and therefore we still aren't humble enough, it is a sign of the cleanness.

Also, you have written in your epistle that your soul loved to love God, but you haven't reached to love God, desp9ite you have much desire to love God; in addition to the fact that you desire to withdraw on yourself into wilderness, this has been shown also in the fact that it has started within you the cleanness of the heart and you heart gets warmed up.

If these things are true, that would be great, but I wouldn't have wanted you to write them down. This is because you wouldn't write them in a well-organized order. And if you have written those for asking about them, the order of the questions should have been different. This is because, he who says that his soul hasn't yet daring into prayer, because he hasn't defeated his passions yet, how could he dare to say that his soul loved to love God? There's no way one can set his soul in the motion of the love for God, a love which you secretly run after through your withdrawal, if he hasn't yet defeated his passions. But you have said that your soul hasn't defeated yet his passions, and your soul still love God. In these two there is a wrong stringing. This is because I cannot understand what tells him who affirms that he hasn't defeated his passions but he loves to love God.

But you say: "I haven't said that I love", but that "I love to love". But neither this could happen if the soul is not in cleanness. And if you want to say an empty-of-content word, that it is said not only by you, but everybody says that wants to love God. And not only the Christians, but this word is [735] Being shared with Christ, and with Christ's resurrected life, it consists of being shared with His sufferings. The troubles make this world transparent to God. And this gives us power to endure the troubles. The cross makes us feel the resurrected life of Christ, and the cross makes the world to become transparent to the high realities of God, to him who endures the cross. Or, the cross's transparence to God gives us the power for enduring the cross. The Kingdom of God won't be instituted in the frame of this world, at the end of this world, because this world cannot exist without enduring the cross. The Kingdom of God is in this world always within them who, by enduring the troubles, they discover their heart and, within heart, they discover the presence of the resurrected Christ. The troubles make the Kingdom of God transparent within this world, for they show that this world cannot have a duration and a meaning in itself.

characteristic to everyone. But in these words, only the tongue is moving, while the soul isn't feeling what it is being said. This is similar to the fact that many, while they are ill, they don't know that they are ill. And the evilness is an illness of the soul; and the straying when one loses the truth. And most of the people, by being sick with these, they pretend to be healthy and they are praised by many. This is because if the soul doesn't get healed of evilness, and if the soul doesn't become steadfast into his natural health which the soul has been created into, by being born out of the health of the Ghost, the man won't be able to lust for the above-nature realities. As long as the soul is into the illness of the passions, the soul won't feel the godlike realities with his feeling, neither will the soul know how to lust for those, but he lusts those only because he has heard about those by ear, or he has found out about those in writings. That's why, I rightly said above that they who desire the consummation they must keep all the commandments. This is for only the hidden work of the commandments will heal up the soul's power[736]. And this is not done simply or haphazardly. For it has been written that without the shedding of the blood there won't be forgiveness[737].

First, our nature has received the renewal into the embodiment of Christ, and then our nature was imparted with His suffering and with His death and after the renewal through the shedding of the blood it has been renewed and sanctified [736] In working the commandments the soul gets strengthened, especially for in this work the soul is being helped by the power of the grace. By giving alms, your soul gets softened, and so you will get rid of the helplessness of the callousness. Praising other, you will get rid of the helplessness of the pride etc. This happens especially when you do not do the good only in order to bee seen and appreciated by people. Only if this is the case, you will get rid of the helplessness of the pride. In fulfilling the commandments it is shown, therefore, the desire for loving on Christ, or the actual beginning of loving Him, and the growing up of this love. Otherwise, saying that you desire Christ it will be only an empty word. And anyone can praise with that.

[737] Christ shed His blood on the cross for the forgiveness of our sins. But that didn't happen for a juridical satisfaction to be given to God's offended honor, but in order to show that that life that is full of Holy Ghost can be obtained through the thinning of one's body, through toils and sufferings. All of these are like some kind of shedding of blood, some kind of thinning of the blood of anything that make the blook to stich on the thick realities of the world. WE receive this power through the crucified body of Christ, through His thinned blood, namely through His shed blood. It is usually forgotten when one explains the Eucharist, that we aren't simply imparted with the blood of our Lord, but with our Lord's "shed" blood, or with His blood that is being "shed", in order that to give to our blood too, the power to be shed.

our nature too, and our nature has become able to receive the ne and consummate commandments. This is because, if it had been given before the shedding of the blood, before our nature was renewed and sanctified, it could have been that these new commandments too, as the old commandments as well, the would have cut off from within soul our evilness but they wouldn't have been able to pluck off the itself root of the evilness, form within our soul. But now it is not such. But the hidden work that observed both the new and the old commandments, which are kept by our soul by the fear of God these commandments renew our soul and sanctify our soul and they heal all our soul's limbs in a hidden manner[738]. This is for, it is obvious which passion if healed by which commandment, within soul, in a peaceful manner. And the work (the energy) of those is felt both by him who heals and by him who id healed, in the likeness of that woman who was healed of her shedding of blood.

You know, my beloved one, that is the soul's passionate part was not healed and it was not renewed and sanctified hiddenly, and it was not hiddenly tied to the living into the Ghost, it would not achieve the health, neither it would be liberated from the troubles caused by the thins which it comes across to, which are in creation. And the healing consists of becoming one, by grace, as the blessed apostle became, who become consummate into the love of Christ. And sometimes the soul receives his health according to the law. This is because he who by working the commandments and some harsher deeds of the true living, he has defeated his passions, you will know that he has achieved the health of his soul according to the law. And he has been weaned of that milk of the thickened way of this world, and the habituation to his previous thoughts it has been cut off from within him, and he has been born anew as in the beginning into the spiritual realities, and he has seen on [738] The "hidden work" of God without our soul it is related to the blood shed by Christ. This is for this blood is continuously shed within us through the Holy Impartation. And in this shed blood there isn't only the power of His human cleanness, but there is also the godlike power, for our cleanness. That's why we can work the new commandments which are much higher, which provide our nature with the power for renewal.

By receiving Christ's blood, we can fulfill even His spiritual commandments, which make our nature be become spiritualized, and to be overwhelmed by the Ghost, dying to the former man and no longer searching for the need of the body. Between the fulfillment of these commandments and the shed blood of the Lord there is a tight connection.

himself, by grace, into the country of the Ghost through the meanings of his inward man and he has received into a new and non-composed world.

This is for, when the mind is renewed and when the heart is sanctified, all the good meanings moving within it according to the nature of this world, are set in movement. Firstly, it is moving in it the desire for the godlike realities and it desires the partaking (the communion) with the angels and the unveilings of the mysteries of the Ghost's knowledge. And his mind feels the spiritual knowledge of the creatures and in his mind will sprout out the sight the mysteries of the Holy Trinity, together with the mysteries of the new oikonomia (embodiment), and then the mind will be totally united with the knowledge of the hope for the future realities[739].

You have to understand therefore, these things which I have written to you, as being yours. If you soul was truly able to love God when your soul still was locked into the land of the passions, it wouldn't need to ask for and to learn the mysteries of the Ghost. But it is proven that those learnings and that knowledge achieved in that state dominated by passions are useless to your soul, neither are those able to open to your soul the door of the cleaning. But if the passions are removed from upon the soul, the mind will be enlightened and it will be moved into that clean land of the nature and it won't need to ask anymore[740]. This is because the mind will limpidly see the good realities which are in that land of the mind. This is because our external senses do not feel the natures and the things happening within them by learning and asking, but each sense feels naturally and not by asking about the perceived things (because there isn't a teaching mediating between senses and the sensed things; this is because the blind, no matter how much one would talk to him about the shininess of the sun and or the moon and about the motion of the stars and about the sparks of the precious stoned, the blind will receive and he will [739] The mind will be totally united with the knowledge of the hope for the future realities, better said with those known only through hope. Now the mind has those within itself, or in connection with itself.

[740] We cannot say that in our nature there is a clean land differing from that defiled by passions. But the whole our nature will be moves into a state of cleanness, or in an area of cleanness, or it will gradually enter the plan of the cleanness of God. This area of the cleanness being itself the area of the godlike realities, the soul will no longer need to ask about those, for the soul will know those by experience.

judge and he will understand only by name the beauty had by those things, and his knowledge and his discernments will remain foreign to the pleasure of seeing those) - in the same way you have to understand about the sight of the Ghost. This ids for the mind seer of the hidden mysteries of the Ghost, if it is in the health of its nature, it will see even from now the glory of Christ and it won't ask about it and it won't learn about it, but it will only delight on itself for the pleasure of the mysteries of the new world[741], above the freedom of the will, through the warms of the faith and of the hope into Christ, as the Blesse Paul wrote: "And if we saw, what would we hope for? But we wait for, through patience" (Rom. 8: 25).

So, we owe to wait and to persevere monastically and with simplicity in our inward man, where there are not imprintings of thoughts, neither the sight of the composed things[742]. This is because, if the mind receives the likenesses of the realities which the mind looks at, when the mind looks at the world, according to the images which the mind scatters towards, the mind will receive from those imprintings and likenesses. And these ones, depending on how many they are, and according to the differences among their changes, they will move the thoughts within mind. And when the thoughts move within mind, they put their seal on the mind[743]. But if the mind looks at the inward man, there where isn't possible to occur some change of images, neither is there any possibility to discern any composition by changing the imprintings, but all is fill up with by Christ, it will be obvious that the mind received the simple sight, besides which nothing else can fill the soul's precipice [741] The sigh or the feeling of the godlike mysteries cannot take place in the absence of the grace, or without the effluvia of power starting out of God, which we are place in connection with God through. But the grace of seeing those, or of their understanding feeling, it will be given only to that soul that has become healthy, by getting rid of the passions making that feeling blunt. So, the soul's state of health it doesn't elevate the man only among the realities of the nature from those which are bellow nature, from the state of illness, but it places the soul in touch with the godlike realities. Thus, the soul is either in state of illness and therefore insensitive to the godlike realities, or the soul is in state of health and then it is in touch with the godlike realities, or the soul is crossed through by the godlike realities.

[742] The most inner man is the most far from the images of the things, from the own imaginings, even from those related to the quick coming of the Kingdom of Heavens. There live the endless and bottomless infinite, that is the limitlessness of God as Person.

[743] The imprinting of the things perceived with the senses are answered by the full of lust or full of worry thoughts of the soul. And though thoughts, themselves the thoughts put their narrowing and passionate seal on the mind.

with good fragrance, and that makes the soul to achieve the daring during the prayer[744]. This is for this is the food of the soul's nature[745].

And when the mind lives into the country of the knowledge of the truth, that mind doesn't need to ask something. This is because, like the bodily eye doesn't ask when it sees the sun, likewise the souly eye won't examine firstly and then look at the knowledge of the Ghost. Likewise, the mysterious sight desired by you, of, you the holy, it will be unveiled to your mind after you have achieved the health of your soul. That's why, that urge wanting to learn such mysteries, by research and judgment, that is an insanity of the soul. This is for the Blessed Paul too, he didn't say that he saw or heard the mysteries and the untold words, by learning those and in a material manner, but by being kidnapped into that spiritual country and there he saw the unveiling of those mysteries (2 Cor. 12: 4).

[744] So, the inwards man is reckoned as the imageless state of the mind. In that indefinite, by missing any narrowing through the successive images of the things and of the imaginings, there can dwell Christ Who by the fact that He is God He matches that indefinite place, and by the fact that He is man He is felt close to us and in connection with us. The mind becomes focused on Him and only on Him. He is being explained what Saint Mark the Hermit says in the Word about Baptism (The Romanian Philokalia, volume I), where Christ is seen, in His quality as Hierarch, as receiving all our thoughts on the altar of our hearts, from their first occurrence within mind. But Saint Isaac completes the idea, by specifying that Christ as Hierarch, He fill up everything within us, and He spreads around His good fragrance in the indefinite precipice into the depths of the soul, filling us up with good fragrance. The bottomless precipice of the soul it is so kindred to the bottomless precipice of the godhead that one cannot see a border between them two. You only feel that you heart is not unveiled as precipice, except for there is another precipice more capable of maintaining itself as such, and you feel that your heart discovered or it actualized also the precipice of your heart. Of you feel the difference only in that that your precipice prays to the precipice of Him Who fills your precipice up as another abyss. And then you feel that not only Christ spreads around the good fragrance of the incense, but yourself do that to, by bringing on yourself as sacrifice to Christ. By living on yourself as precipice and by living on Christ as precipice within yourself, you will dare in your prayer. This is for you are no longer separated from Christ by something, but you feel Christ sunk within you and you feel yourself as sunk into Him, but without Him to be confounded to you.

[745] The soul is nourished and taken care of by the prayer, for through prayer the soul is united with God, and God with His endless depth give endless life to the soul. The prayer is said as being the angels' bread. The prayer was the bread of the Mother of the Lord into the Holy of the Holies. That's why, the hesychasts lost into prayer forget to eat for days in a row. Out of the godlike Ghost have been created and are upheld even the material things in their concretized reality. So, the Holy Ghost has the power to nourish not only our soul but our body too.

So, you too, of, you the holy, if you love the cleanness, you will cut off you that love that is overpoured towards everyone and, by entering the vineyard of your heart, you will work that vine; you pluck your passions off your soul and work in order you to no longer know the man's evilness. That cleanness that sees God it doesn't sprout out of request, but it will flourish within the soul, when the soul doesn't see the evilness of any man[746].

If you want your heart to become the place of the mysteries of the new world, you firstly will enrich on yourself in deeds committed with your body, in fasting, in vigils, in the holy service (liturgy) of the ascesis, in patience, in destroying the thoughts, and in similar others. Tie up your mind in reading the Scriptures and in cogitating about them, write the commandments before your eyes and pay the debt of the passions by the fact that you overcome and you are overcome. And by the ceaseless speaking of the prayer and of your request, by thinking at them, you pluck off your heart any image and likeness which you were caught before by grabbing[747].

Accustom your mind to always cogitate at the mysteries of our Savior's oikonomia and let aside the request for knowledge and for sight (for contemplation), which exceed the power of interpretation of the words, for their time and place,

[746] It was said before that one must not ask for cleanness. But we must only ask for mercy because of our sins. The cleanness is innocence. That's why, the cleanness doesn't see somebody's evilness. He who see the evilness in somebody he too will be darkened by that evilness, and maybe even more than that evil man. That's why the cleanness sees God through all people and through all things, for the cleanness doesn't' see the evilness that by its nature narrows the indefinite of the man who is seen and who sees.

[747] Very often, in the spiritual writings, we are asked to get rid of "prejudgments", namely to get rid of our passionate images from before. Those are evil habits which have gradually been strengthened within us, namely ways of thinking which caught us before us to judge whether they are good or evil' those are the thieves abducting us because of our lack of vigil. These prejudgments stop us from receiving the truth, from opening on ourselves to the truth, from judging all the way to the end sincerely. Still, through the prayer that is a dialogue with God, if the prayer is done uninterruptedly, the mind will get rid of all the narrowing images imprinted by habituation into the mind. But in order you to be able to persevere in prayer, you must have paid also your debt which you have burdened on yourself with, towards your passions, because you have been receiving the pleasure from your passions. You will pay this duty by fighting the passions' temptations, a fight that exhausts you and that makes you bleed (you "shed your blood"), sometimes overcoming, some other times being overcome, but not remaining into the same state and, by that, you will gradually get rid of the habituation to your passions.

and you follow the working of the commandments and of the deeds on the purpose of the cleaning, and in your prayer ask the Lord for a fire-sadness, fiery in all things (that one that occurred within the hearts of the apostles and of the martyrs and of the fathers); you ask Him to dripple this one without your heart and ask Him you to be found worthy of the living with the mind.

And the beginning and the middle and the end of this living are these: the cutting off from everything through the union with Christ. And if you want to be given the sight of the mysteries, you will work by deeds the commandments within you and not because you aspire to achieve the knowledge about them. The spiritual sight works within us in the land (country) of the cleanness[748]. And you must not try firstly to learn how to enter the country of the mysteries of the Ghost. So, you must start like this:

The first among the mysteries is called the cleanness, that is born out of working the commandments. And the sight is the spiritual sight of the mind and it consists of amazing you and of penetrating all the made or being made realities. The sight if the sight of the mind and it consists of amazing you of the oikonomia of God in all generations and nations, and of penetrating His glory and the hardships leading to the new world. It consists of penetrating by those which the heart is being crushed through and which the heart is renewed by, and which the heart is nourished by in the likeness of the little children into Christ with the milk of the new and spiritual commandments, in order the heart to reach that lacking-of-evilness state, there where the heart will get accustomed to the mysteries of the Ghost and to the unveilings of the knowledge, by being elevated from knowledge to knowledge, and form sight to sight, to understanding, and the heart will learn and it will be strengthened mysteriously, until the heart will ascend into love and it will be united into hope and it will dwell within heart the joy and the heart will be elevated into God and the heart will be crowned with the natural glory had by the heart when first created[749].

In these orchards (dwelling places) of the Ghost the mind ascends through the unveiling of the knowledge. But the mind falls again and it rises again and it is victorious and it is defeated and it is roasted in the oven of the monastic cell. And so, the mind will be cleaned and it will be bestowed mercy and it will be found worthy through deed of seeing the Holy Trinity which the mind wants. This is for the sights of the natures which the mind will be elevated in and it will work in and it will get accustomed to, are three: "two of the created natures, of the speaking and of the speechless creatures, or spiritual and bodily[750], and the third one that of the Holy Trinity. So, firstly, when approaching any creature, the sight is directed towards creation and through it the mind penetrates to the unveiling of the conscience. For the realities not falling under senses the sight is understanding. And the mind has the power for seeing on itself[751]. But the external philosophers have scattered this cogitation of theirs in created imaginations[752].

But the sight of the sons of the mystery of the faith, it is united to the faith and it is guarded into the orchard of the Scriptures. That sight gathers the mind from any scattering into the external realties and it nails the mind into the union with Christ, in the likeness of Basil and of Gregory.

Thus, the sight of the mind is tied to the mysterious words from within Scripture. And those words which are not understood by knowledge are admitted by us by faith. And by

[749] The sight of the mysteries in state of kidnapping it is not an ecstatic sight, but it is an elevation from knowledge to knowledge. And above all there is the union into consummate love with God, maintaining the hope for an even greater union. Saint Isaac, according to his teaching, he reckons that at that time our nature will be crowned with that glory had by it in the beginning, or with that glory it would have received if it hadn't fell.

[750] First, we cross through creatures to the godlike rationalities. This is called as knowledge, or gnosis, as helped by the Holy Ghost. On this plan the knowledge understands on one hand by the speaking natures, or the souls of the people and the angels, and on the other hand it understands the speechless natures, namely the people's bodies and everything that is a creature by and large.

[751] The sight of God characteristic to the angels it is called as understanding, thought is it above-understanding.

sight we receive a knowledge about them, one that occurs within us after us achieving our cleanness. And for the mysteries of the Ghost, those ones which are above-knowledge, which are not perceived by bodily senses neither known by the mind's rationality, God has given us the faith which we know about those only that they exist. And by itself the faith there will be born the hope within us.

By faith we confess that God is our Lord and Master and Creator and Maker of all realities. And by knowledge we know that we must keep His commandments, and that we must understand that His old commandments are guarded by fear, as the same apostle said (Rom. 8: 15), and that the of-life-maker commandments of Christ are guarded by be love, as Himself said: "I have kept the commandments of My Father and I remain into His love" (Jn. 15: 10). So, it is obvious that not because of fear the Son keeps the commandments of His Father, but out of love. And that why He commands us too to keep His commandments out of love, as He says: "I you love Me, you will keep My commandments and I will pray My Father and another Comforter He will send to you" (Jn. 14: 15). He calls the coming of the Ghost as the gifts of the unveiling of the mysteries of the Ghost, in order to have, by receiving the Ghost, the consummation of the spiritual knowledge which the apostle received it too. And the Comforter was confessed and promised by our Lord, by praying His Father to be the Comforter given to the people, in order the Comforter to remain forever with them after the working of the commandments and after achieving the cleanness.

Can you see that by keeping the commandments the mind will be found worthy of the gift of the mysterious sight and of the unveiling of the knowledge of the Ghost? He didn't mean, as your wisdom did, that et deed of keeping the commandments is an impediment in the way of seeing of the godlike mysteries which are done in the work of the appeasement.

So, I pray you, if you feel within your soul that you have reached the country of the love, you will keep the new commandments, for the love of Him Who issued these commandments, and not because of fear. This is for the Blesse Paul said too: "Who will separate me from the love of Christ? Some trouble, or some prison, or some persecution" and the followings (Rom. 8: 35-38) and he adds also: "For I am convinced that neither the death, nor the life, neither the present realities, not the future realities can separate me from the love of God into Jesus Christ, our Lord". And in order one not to believe that he wants the much payment, of the honor, or the overwhelming gift of the spiritual realities, as your holiness wants, he said: "I would have wanted to be anathema from Christ", in order the foreigner to come closer to Him (Rom. 9: 3). And in order you to know that he didn't aim to see the mysterious and hermit's sight, but he wants that sight which some people often were found worthy by grace, listen to what he says in another place: "If I spoke in angelic tongues and in human tongues, but I had no love, I would become sounding brass and resounding cymbal; and if I had prophecy and if I saw all the mysteries and if I had all the knowledge and even faith as to move even the mountains, but I had not love, I would be nothing" (1 Cor. 13: 1-2).

This is for the appointed door leading to these ones it is the love. If we achieve the love, the love will lead us to these ones. But if we are found worthy of these ones without love, by grace, it will happen to us to lose them. So, the love is the one that gains and guards the high goods of the saints and the godlike living. Immediately after the monk has lost the love, his heart will lose the peace too (and this is the dwelling place of God)[753] and the door of the grace will be shut to him, that door that our Lord said that He will enter and He will exit, as He said: "I am the door of the life and into Me he will enter to guard and he will find pasture" towards nourishing his spiritual life (Jn. 10: 4), But where there is peace, the monk won't be impeded either by evilness to enter, or by deceit, but he is helped by love to enter and to exit, through all the levels of the unveilings of the knowledge and of the mysterious views[754], like whose who are free into Christ.

And in order you to know the truth of these ones, namely that truly the spiritual life is the sight of the mind, you listen to what the great Paul says. This is for he shouts out: "I do not want to be in it without love". And if I enter the lawful sadness due to the love, or if I enter the sight, I won't lust for it with my [753] The love is reckoned as one with the peace, but not vice versa. That is a warm peace embracing everyone. That's why this peace lasts. And where this peace is, there is God too. This peace springs out of God, or God shows on Himself through this peace.

[754] So interprets Saint Gregory of Nyssa the goings in and the goings out within that soul that Ascends spiritually: entering with the soul to a new view and exiting that view with the soul, in order to enter again a higher view.

lust. And if it is given me by grace, when I haven't achieved the love yet, that won't be because I have asked for it. So, I will have not entered at it through the natural door, that is the love[755].

Therefore, we must firstly gain the love, that is before seeing the Holy Trinity[756]. And after that there will occur within mind without being bestowed, naturally, the sight of the spiritual realities.

You have to understand the wisdom of the Blessed Paul, as he left all the gifts bestowed him by grace and he asked for the itself hypostasis of the things that receives the gifts and that guards them, as somebody says[757]. The gift of seeing the creatures was given to Moses too, and many others were found worthy of it, but not by steadfast entrustment, but by unveiling. But I the one baptized (immersed) into the Holy Ghost, and being I full of grace, I want to receive within me the feeling of Christ Who dwells within me. And He is the One Whom we have put on out of water and Ghost, and through an untold mystery He has united us with Himself and He has made us limbs of His body. But here, as downpayment. And in the new world, He shares out of His life to the other limbs. So, why do you want to search for the sight before having achieved the love, when the godlike Paul reckoned the sight as worthless without love?

When you said that working the commandments impedes you from seeing, it was obvious that you defamed the love for your neighbor and you have valued more the sight (contemplation-knowledge) and you wanted to have it when it

[755] One must enter at the view through love; one enters so, after a real spiritual growth. And one reaches the love by enduring the troubles, which God sends him for the love for the spiritual strengthening, for the strengthening into love of them who Him wants to elevates them towards Him.

[756] The love is being defined here like that view from before seeing the Holy Trinity. God is loved, namely, for all the things He has done for us, for understanding those, or for seeing those. Only then the man is prepared for understanding that God is love, namely the consummate communion of the Three Persons. Only then the man will feel the love as coming from the Holy Trinity, of he feels the Holy Trinity Themselves in that love.

[757] Saint Paul wanted, more than all the gifts, the communion with the hypostasis or with the foundation of all the realities, or with the godlike Person. But you cannot unite yourself with a person and you cannot know a person but through love, while views of knowledge of the things can be bestowed also by a special gift. But the most proper and the highest gift is it is the grace of the communion with Christ, the grace of the love. We are firstly imparted with this union with Christ Who is the hypostasis of all the created realities, at our Baptism. Then we immerse within Himself as Person, through the power of the Holy Ghost Who irradiates out of Christ into us. Any sight, if it is by a gift and not by love, it is inferior to the union with Christ as Person.

was impossible having it. This is for, until a certain time arrives, we won't be able to have the sight, oh, you all-wise one, but then the sight will show itself to us by itself, at its time.

As in the aspects of the nature, as our body is growing up, our soul receives an ever-diverse knowledge and our soul feels the realities form within world and our soul is getting day by day accustomed to them, likewise in what regards the aspects of the Ghost somebody receives the spiritual sight and the godlike sanctification and he will get accustomed to them as his mind advances in the life of the cogitation. But when his mind reaches the country of the love[758], the mind sees at that place the spiritual realities, which, until somebody forces them to descend to him, they won't listen[759]. This is because, despite him daringly imagining those, and despite him wanting to see those and to understand those before time, his sight gets weakened and instead of the true spiritual realities he will perceive hallucinations and imaginings[760].

When those imaginings come into your mind, if your mind is able to discern them, you will say that you are not searching for the sight before time, because even though what it is shown to you seems to be sight, it actually is the shadow of the sight and that sight is not sight. This is for everything that is on that plan thought with the mind, it can produce a resemblance and an image of the imagination. But it also can cause a true view. This is for the composed natures too can cause imaginings. But sometimes they also cause true views. If the view is true, there will be a light in it. Then, what is being seen it is close to the truth. But when what one sees is not true, the eye will see a shadow instead of truth. The eye sees water there where is no water, and the eye sees lifted buildings

[758] Saint Isaac discerns between "seeing" the true spiritual and godlike realities, that comes after working the commandments, namely after gaining the love, and the imaginings of the imagination, which haven't been preceded by that working of the commandments, those imaginings being produced by the pride knowledge, until the man gets consummate by gaining the virtues which have as their culminant level the love for God as Person.

[759] One reaches to love through the life of the cogitation, for the live of the cogitation is that cogitation that no longer occupies on itself with the material things, but with Him Who is its life: with the Person of Christ, with God as Person.

[760] The Beloved One doesn't' descend, at order, by being forced, but by being His will fulfilled, and through the proofs of love shown Him out of the fulfillment of this commandments of His, and by enduring the hardships on the tiring road to Him. He reveals on Himself, freely, to them who love Him. And He is not forced to unveil on Himself, or He is not unveiled in His interior, without His will.

floating in the air when those buildings actually are sitting on the ground. If it is so in the bodily aspects, you must think that it is likewise in the case of the incorporeal realities.

If the sight of the mind is not cleaned through the working of the commandments and through the deeds of the living into quietude, the sight of the mind won't gain the light of the love into consummation[761]. And if he doesn't grow up into the renewed age of Christ, and if he doesn't get close to the spiritual natures by knowledge, namely close to that level which he searches on for the angelic living of the Ghost, one won't be able to reach to be true seer of the godlike unveiling. And no matter how many resemblances the mind tries to contrive, they will be imaginings and not true. And the fact of seeing the mind always different, it will happen to him because of the fact that he hasn't cleaned himself up yet. This is for the nature of the truths remains always unchangeable, by never changing itself into likenesses. The cause of the hallucinations of the imagining sis the weakness and not the cleanness of the mind[762].

This can happen also to the outside philosophers, because they reckoned that these ones are spiritual, and because they haven't received this teaching from God. This is because, out of the shaking and of the moving of their rationality and by the meanings of their thoughts, they reckoned, in their imagination, that these ones would be something. And together with these ones, they cogitated how those ones are. They contrived so the way they were composed [761] Only into love there is the light of the consummate knowledge. On the measure of the love there will increase the knowledge too. The consummate love has consummate knowledge. This is for him who loves consummately, he will unite himself consummately with the one whom he loves on, and he knows the realities from within Him as communicated freely by Him. There where the love is, there will be the truth too, or the unveiling of the truth, or the light.

[762] The products of the imagination, as also all the succeeding imaginings having limited and material shapes, they are contrary to that "sight" lacking any imaginings, of the godlike realities, a sight that is characteristic to the spiritual people also called as Ghost bearers. This is for, this "sights" is always an indefinite feeling of the unlimited, of the bottomless deep. In all these pages Saint Isaac explains the difference between the "sight" into Ghost and the products of the imagination or of the defined knowledge, as applied to the spiritual order, or of the chaotic imaginings. This is for the infinite of the godlike reality is in the same time full of a harmony of meanings, of characters perceives and imprinted into the seer being, producing within him a life of a great harmony and or right-reckoning. This order of the Ghost can be expressed, therefore, thought symbols, but in its feeling one must cross beyond symbols, through the symbols themselves, being shown right in that that this order is the origin of the meanings and of the images of the harmony of the created world.

and their changing. And they spoke about those ones on the basis of some inappropriate opinions and they divided The One God and they explained Him and they composed Him in many gods by the occupation of their mind. And this hallucination of their mindless thoughts they called it as sight (contemplation) of the natures[763].

But the true sight of those natures submitted to the senses and of those unsubmitted to the senses and the seeing of the Himself Holy Trinity, we receive it in that unveiling into Christ which He taught it and show it to the people when He brought, for the first time, the renewal of the human nature[764] in His hypostasis and so He has opened within Himself the way us to cross through His of-life-maker commandments to truth[765]. And the nature is able to become seer of the true view and not of a hallucination, when the man disrobed on himself of the former man of the passions, at the beginning by enduring the sufferings and through troubles, as the newborn child disrobes the placenta which he has been wrapped in until his birth. Then the mind will be able to be spiritually born and to show itself in the world of the Ghost and to receive the sight of its country.

But the present sight of the creatures, despite being sweet, it is a shadow of the knowledge and its sweetness is not separated from the hallucination of the dreams. And the sight of the new world into the ghost of the unveiling, which the spiritual mind is being delighted in, it is a work of the grace and it is not the shadow of the knowledge. And tis sweetness is not separated form that of that one, which the Apostle wrote about: "The realities which the eye hasn't seen yet and the ear hasn't heard yet and which haven't ascended yet to the man's heart, [763] By dividing The One God in many gods, they confounded those gods to the diverse parts of the nature. Through that they didn't' know either the godhead. Knowing the true God means knowing that the nature of the things is not identical to the godhead. This is said by Saint Isaac in continuation.

[764] Only into Christ, in Who God has taken the human nature as differing form the godlike nature but still maintaining the godlike nature as well, one can know both God as God and the nature as created. Out of the way of speaking about Christ as Hypostasis of the human nature that has been renewed and resurrected by Christ just because He has taken it within Himself, we can see that Saint Isaac is opposed to Nestorianism, that was wrongly attributed by some critics.

[765] Out of the importance granted by Saint Isaac to the human work of Christ in the accomplishment of the renewal brought by Christ to our nature, one can see also that Saint Isaac was opposed to Monophysitism too.

those ones have been prepared by god to them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9). But to the saints God unveiled through His Ghost. "For the Ghost visits all realities, even the deeps of God" (1 Cor. 2: 10). And this view becomes nourishment to the mind, until the mind will be able to receive a higher view. This is for the view is imparted to the sight, until the mind enters the country of the consummate love. This is for the love if the country of the spiritual realities, and the love dwells into the cleanness of the soul. And when the mind dwells into the country of the love, the grace will work and the mind will receive the sight of the Ghost and the mind will become seer of the hidden realities. This is for I said that two are the givers of the gift of the unveilings of the sight of the mind[766].

Sometimes it is given by grace, through the warmth of the faith. On some other times through working the commandments and through cleanness. Out of grace it has been given to the blessed apostles, who didn't clean their minds by working the commandments and who were not found worthy of the unveiling of the sight, but of the warmth of the faith. For they believed in Christ into simplicity and they followed Him unhesitatingly, with a fiery heart. And when He consummated His all-worshipped oikonomia, He sent them the Comforter Ghost and the Ghost cleaned them and Hew consummate their mind and He killed, with the work, that former man of the passions from within them, and also with the work He made alive within them the new man of the ghost; and they received the feeling of both of these. Likewise, the Blesses Paul was renewed mysteriously and then he receive the sight of the unveiling of the mysteries and that's why he didn't despair and one who would have received with the work the grace and the gift; but for the whole his life he traveled the road of answering according to the power of the grace that he was found worthy of, since Christ spoke to Paul on the way as with one of His disciples and He send Paul to Damascus. It hasn't been written only that Christ spoke to Paul manifestly, but also that Anania told Paul: "Saul, brother, our Lord Jesus Christ Who has shown on Himself to you on the way, He sent me to you in order your yes to see and to be filled up with the Holy Ghost"; and that when Anania baptized Paul, Paul was filled up with the Holy Ghost and Paul felts the hidden mysteries of the unveilings (Acts 9: 17), as those unveilings were worked also within the holy apostles when Jesus was walking together with them. For Jesus told them: "I still have many things to say you, but now you cannot bear those. But when the Holy Ghost will come, That One will lead you to the whole truth and the future things He will herald you" (Jn. 16: 12).

[766] Out of grace and out of working; or, out of the cleanness of the mind and out of grace. Sometimes, these two are: the grace and the faith, some other times the working of the commandments, that reaches the cleanness, and from cleanness it reaches the love. But int this case too, the grace still helps. Sometimes the mind "sees" by faith before reaching the love. But, usually, the mind in love "sees" the godlike realities. But the love dwells into the clean soul. And one reaches the cleanness by the removal of his passions. There is not "sight" without love. Only him who loves he "sees" into the beloved one. All the more, only that one "sees" into God.

And it is obvious that the Blessed Paul, when he received the Holy Ghost and so Paul was renewed, he was made worthy of consummation and of seeing into the Ghost of the unveilings and he was delighting on himself into seeing and he heard untold words and he had a sight superior to the nature and he rejoiced of the views of the heavenly Powers and he was delighting on himself with the spiritual things. And it is not true what the heretics called as "Ehvites" that Paul ascended that climbing by his own will (because the man cannot ascend there by any means), but Paul was kidnapped by the Ghost of the unveilings, as he said in his apostle addressed to Corinthians against the vain people who liken on themselves to the holy apostles and they confess the imaginings of their thoughts and they call those as spiritual views. That was said against many heretics, I mean those close to Origen[767], to Valentin[768], to the son of Disas, and to Marcion[769], and to Manes[770], and the other chiefs of the evil heresies, which started in the time of the apostles and they still are up to this day in some places.

[767] "As many teachings dogmatized about faith and about a higher sight (Origen) are more insane than those belonging to all of them who were before him and after him, except the ugly deeds of the heresies" (Epiphanius, Bibl., tome I, About Heresies, 44, 64). It can be seen that Saint Isaac wrote after the Fifth Ecumenical Synod took place.

[768] "Those who were around Valentin, besides nonsense, they reckon on themselves as superior, as Irenaeus says, by calling on themselves as consummate and seeds of the choice. They say about us that we receive the grace through a seen work, that's why we lose it too; but they have received the grace through ads descending from above, from an untold and nameless pair" (Epiphanius, Bibl. I, tome II, Heres. 31).

[769] "Marcion didn't believe only in three principles: that God is good, that God is seen, and in the devil, but Marcion broke the Holy Scriptures and he multiplied the godlike Baptism and he dogmatized only the resurrection of the soul" (Epiphanius, Bibl. I, tome III, Heres. 22, 42).

[770] "Manes who was also called as Manichaeus" (Epiphanius, Bibl. II, tome I. Heres. 44, 66).

So, because some people broken by the imagination of the devils wanted to break the teaching of the Holy Apostles, the godlike apostle was forced to undermine the praise of the heretics who was boasting on themselves with the shadow of the work of the devils which were showing to them, when he described the godlike view of his with humbleness and with much fear, as attributing it to somebody else: "I knew, he said, a man into Christ, who fourteen years ago, either outside body, or into body, I do not known, God knows, he was kidnapped into Paradise and he heard words which the man is not allowed to speak" (2 Cor. 12: 2). So, he says that he was kidnapped with kidnapping and not that he willingly ascended there, with his mind, in that view from the third sky. He wrote that he saw views but he couldn't describe those views in writing. This is because his mind when it saw those views into the Ghost of the unveilings, at their place, the mind didn't receive the permission to speak about those views in a place inappropriate to those views. He couldn't speak about those even if he wanted. This is because he didn't' saw those with his bodily senses. This is because what the mind received through the bodily senses, the mind can interpret those through the things form the material world as well, into the world of the bodies. But what the mind sees, or hears, or feels inside, or in the motherland of the Ghost, in a felt manner[771], and therefore when the mind turns back to the body the mind cannot describe those, but the mind only remembers of seeing those, but how the mind did that the mind cannot explain limpidly.

Through these are proven as liar the writings called as unveilings, which are composed by the chiefs of the heresies, and which are caused by the hallucination form the devils, about the dwelling places of the seen sky, which their mind leads them with its own will, in order they to know those, and about the entrances into the sky of the mind and about diverse places of imagination, and about the diverse images of the powers and about the work of those powers. All of those are shadows of a mind drunk with pride and wounded by the work of the devils. That's why, the Blessed Paul closed with a sole word the door of any view, and it locked that view inside silence. This is because, those realities which the mind couldn't describe even if it wanted, how could him be allowed to talk about those? This is for he said that all the views which can be described by the tongue in the world of the bodies, are imaginings of the soul's thoughts and not a work of the grace[772].

So, your piousness, as I told you, take heed at the hallucinations of the deep thoughts[773]. This war usually starts against the monks who have a sharp mind and who search for the vain-glory and who desire the novelties, and against those monks who live in front of others[774].

They said that a certain man called Malpas, who originated form Edessa, he contrives the heresy of the Ehvites, while living a high life in deeds of great harshness and in troubles. This is because, as they say, he was the disciple of the Blessed Julian, called as Sava, and he left for a short while, together with him, for Sinai and Egypt, and to visit the great fathers of that time. And there he saw the Blessed Anthony and he heard from him secret words told about cleanness and about the salvation of the souls; he also heard subtle words about passions, which that one explained through, that the mind has many views about the mysteries of the Ghost after the mind gets cleaned; and that the soul can be found worthy of dispassion by grace, when, by working the commandments, the mind is described of the old passions and the mind becomes steadfast in the first health of the nature.

And when Malpas heard those words, for he was at the peak of his age, he got hot like a fire and he turned back to his city and he was burning with the passion of the vain-glory. And he chose for himself an isolated dwelling place and he dedicated on himself to soke harsh deeds and troubles and to ceaseless prayer. And there was burning within himself the insane passion of the glory, and he hoped to reach the high things which he heard about, but before he got accustomed to the craftsmanship of resisting the enemies of the truth and before [772] Any "view" that can be described in concrete images isn't a true view, but it is a product of the hallucination. The godlike realities lives by the spiritual people have no images and they cannot be described in images. They are untold. There cannot be captured in limited images the limitless realities.

[773] The expression "deep thoughts" has here an evil meaning: those are thoughts form the demons deep of evilness, form the inferior deep of the passions which in their instantiation seen to be a bottomless deep.

[774] It is here about those who live theatrically, in order to be seen by others.

knowing the traps and the tricks and the plots of the enemy, which the enemy tried to steal with, towards perdition, even on the strong and powerful ones. So, he based on himself only on deeds and on troubles and on poverty and on toiling and on restraint, because he didn't gain the self-despise and the humbleness and the crushing of the heart, which are the undefeated weapons against the opposition coming from the cunning enemy. Neither he remembered about the Scripture that says: "When you will have fulfilled all the deeds and you will have kept all the commandments and you will have endured all the troubles, you will reckon on yourself as worthless servants" (Lk. 17: 10). But he walked with a high-self-appreciation for himself, and for the work of his living and he was burning with the desire for the high things which he heard about.

And after a while, when the devil saw him emptied of the work of the humbleness and desiring to feel only the view of the mysteries which he heard about, the devil showed on himself in a stranger light and told him: "I am the Comforter and I have been sent by the Father to you, in order I to give you the dispassion and to rest you from deeds since now on. Instead of deeds, that plotter asked for him to be worshipped by that poor man. And that insane man, because of not feeling the war waged him by the cunning one, he immediately welcomed the enemy with joy and he worshipped the enemy and he immediately fell under the enemy's mastery. And instead of the godlike sight he was filled up with the hallucinations form the evils and that made him cease from doing deeds for the truth, and he was deceived by vain hope for dispassion, because he was told that: "Now you no longer need deeds, or to work torment your body, or of that ascesis that resists the passions and the lusts". And the devil made him the beginner of the heresy of the Ehvites. And when his disciples become many, and they made know their ugly and lair teaching, they were condemned by the bishop of that county.

Also, another man called Asinas, by composing in the same city of Edessa many verses of three words song even up to these days, he lived a high living and he tied on himself, recklessly, to some very harsh deeds, in order to achieve glory. That one was deceived by the devil and the devil got him out of his monastic cell and the devil took him on a mountain called as Storios, and the devil materialized and showed him image of chariots and horses and told him: "God has sent me to take you in heavens with me, as on Elijah". And when Asinas allowed on himself to be deceived with his childish soul, and he get in a chariot, the whole hallucination scattered away and he fell off that mountain and he died a mockery death.

I haven't told these things here vainly, but in order us to know the mockery form the devils who are thirsty for destroying the saints, and us not to lust, at an inappropriate time, for the high aspects of the living with the mind, in order us not to become laughing stock to our cunning enemy, because I am seeing even today some younger and full of passions one, who are hallucinating and fearlessly dogmatizing about the mysteries of the dispassion. It was written by a certain saint about those people who were full of passions and who were spying the meanings of the bodily and of the bodiless realities, and they didn't differ from the ill people teaching about health. The Blessed Paul, when he heard about those disciples who were disregarding the commandments, but they lusted for the happiness of that sight from after cleanness, he told them: "You must disrobe firstly the former man of the passions and then after you can desire to put on the new man, who is renewed into the knowledge of the mysteries, in the likeness of our Maker. And you must not lust for mine, of the apostles, which it consummated in a working manner by grace" (Eph. 4: 20).

"Therefore, God has mercy on whom he wills, and on whom he wills He makes callous" (Rom. 9: 18[775]). So, who will stay in front of God, or against God's will?

This is for, on occasions, God bestows as a gift; while on some other times God asks for the deeds and for the cleanness of the life and then God bestows. But sometimes God won't bestow the cleanness here even after deeds, but God keeps the cleanness to give it in its country. We find out that God does that also with the things that is inferior to cleanness, namely with the forgiveness of the sins. This is for, lo, in Baptism God bestows the forgiveness of the sins as a gift, and God doesn't ask for anything else except for faith. But in the repentance for sins from after Baptism God won't bestow that as a gift, but God asks for toils and for troubles and for sadness and for pricking, and for tears and for crying, for a long time, and only then God will forgive our sins. God forgave the thief as a gift, and God promised the thief the Kingdom of Heavens, after the sole confession, with the word, on the cross. And from the sinner woman, God asked for faith and tears. But from the confessor martyrs, together with the faith of their heart, God asked for troubles, for torments, for pricking, for punishments, and for death in many ways.

[775] In KJB we have: "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Convinced of these things and of similar ones, your holiness must take heed both at the first things and at the last things, and you must not ask for the sigh before the time for sight has come[776]. And as long as you are locked into the world of the body, you must strive to do the deeds of the repentance and you must fight your passions and you must endure into the fulfillment of the commandments and you must guard on yourself against the mockery coming from the devils and form those who herald the unchanged consummation in this passionate and tending to deviations world[777]. This is because those are not characteristic even to the holy angels who liturgize to the Father and to the Ghost, and who wait for the renewal of the world from within middle[778], and they to be liberated from the slavery of the corruption into the freedom of the sons of God (Rom. 8: 12). This is because, could be consummation here where the sun rises and sets in the middle of the clouds, and here is clean sky and there is cloudy, where here is joy and there is sadness, and here where against these the wolves have their part too, as one among the saint said? And may God support the foundation of your living in the true steadfastness and into the holy teaching. Who it is due the glory and the [776] On one hand, Saint Isaac asks the monk for deeds for, by reaching through deeds the cleanness and the thinness of his body and the subtlety of his mind, the monk to become able of seeing the imageless realities, while on the other hand Saint Isaac askes the monk not to search for that sight while still in this life. Saint Isaac asks the monks not to trust them who herald the unchanged consummation in this world submitted to corruption. And here Saint Isaac is telling a full of mystery word, by affirming that neither the angels will reach this unchanged consummation as long as this world submitted to corruption lasts. By this, Saint Isaac means that also the angels will reach the supreme consummation only after the whole creation will have reached its consummation unsubmitted to corruption, and the angles too wait for the renewal of the world from the middle, namely of the Creation placed within us and God. This last part of his epistle it is a total rejection of a consummation that one could achieve within this world, and therefore it is a total rejection of the millenarism.

[777] It is probably here about the devils which can tempt and cause trouble in this world.

Troparion of the Saint, voice III

You have made on yourself a godlike sacrifice, you the blessed one. This is for like another great Isaac you shined in Syria, you by God instilled, and as one who urges to quietude, and made wise by God, by godlike appointment you have been priest in Nineveh, you the blessed one. Holy Father, you pious Isaac, pray to Christ Him to give us who desire you, a great mercy.

Churchly Son: To The Defender Lady…

You have shown on yourself as an all-luminous Morningstar, with the beginning of holiness luminating and on those who were in the darkness of the passions making them shine, as an all-illuminated adviser of the quietude. And as the one who took the gift of the grace, you give them who ask for it you give them the forgiveness of their mistakes, in order us to shout out: Rejoice, Father Isaac!

On the great adviser of that quietude according to the law and of that non-strayed sight illuminated helper, and of Nineveh wise and deified hierarch, and the beauty of the Syria and its offspring, and the clean vessel of the godlike Ghost, let us praise Isaac the all-heralder and the glorified.

Oikos

As an angel, father, living your life, you were extolling That One Who alone is before all realities, and from Him being your mind enlightened, you have shown on yourself as light-bearer to them who strive on themselves towards Him, so that we are humbly singing to you these:

Rejoice, you whom the world is overlooked through;
Rejoice, you whom the passions are uprooted through;
Rejoice, you who are the monk's all-great comforting;
Rejoice, you who are of the fallen ones a new standing up;
Rejoice, you who wrote books which overwhelm many other books;
Rejoice, for you enriched the soul of the hesychasts;
Rejoice, for you flew on the height of the sight;
Rejoice, for you satiate the mind's thirst;
Rejoice, you shepherd among people, you by God chose;
Rejoice, you the candlestick of Christ's image;
Rejoice, you who the poverty is honored through;
Rejoice godlike Isaac, you the pillar of the good things;
Rejoice Syrian, you the threefold blessed!

The Prayer
Towards Our Lord Jesus Christ
Of Saint Isaac the Syrian

Lord Jesus Christ, our God, who cried for Lazarus and tears of sadness and of mercy You shed for Lazarus, please receive my tears. Heal my passions with Your sufferings. Heal my wound with Your wounds. Clean my blood with Your blood, and mix within my body the good fragrance of Your of-life-maker body. The gall which You enemies gave You to drink, may sweeten the bitterness which my enemy gave me to drink. May Your body stretched on the cross to stretch towards You my mind pulled downwards by the devils. May you head that You leaned on the cross to elevate my head slapped by my enemies. May Your holy hands nailed on the cross pull me towards You, out of the precipice of my perdition, as Your all-holy mouth promised us. May you face mocked with slapping and spitting to fill up with shininess my face defiled by my lawlessness. May Your soul whom You gave to Your Father while on the cross, to advise me towards You, through Your grace. I do not have a full of pain heart in order to search for You, I do not have repentance, neither I have humiliation, which turn the sons back to their inheritance. I do not have comforting tears, my Master. My mind has been darkened with the worldly things, and it cannot look in pain at You. My heart has become cold because of so many temptations and it cannot get hot with the tears of my love for You. But You, Lord Jesus Christ, You God, You the Treasures of the goods, You bestow me endless repentance and a heart full of pain, so that I could start, with the whole my soul, in searching for You. This is because without You I will become stranger to all good. Therefore, You give me, You the Good One, Your grace.

The Father Who gave You birth out of His bosoms, without years and before eternity, may Him renew within me the image of Your icon. I have forsaken You, please, You do not forsake me; I have left You, please come out an search for me. Take me to Your pasture. Countr me among Your chosen sheep, nourish me together with them with the greenery of Your godlike mysteries. This is for their clean heart is Your dwelling place, and one can see within their heart the shininess of Your unveilings. Your shininess is the comforting and the resting of them who have toiled for You, in troubles and in all sorts of torments. Please make worthy of this shininess me who are unworthy, by the grace and by the love for people of our Savior Jesus Christ, forever and ever! Amen.

Introduction

1. Content of the Writing

The Christendom is the religion assuring the eternal life of the human persons created by a loving Father of a beloved Son, in order to extend His love as Father to the human persons too. This eternal life is provided to each human person through the union with Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of the eternal Father, made man for this non-confounded union of His with us. This salvation for eternity of the human persons is done, on one hand, through the embodiment of the Son of God as man for eternity, and on the other hand through the sacrifice brought by Him and through His resurrection by getting the man, with the man's will, out of the man's passions which lock the man egotistically within himself, and within the seen and perishable world, and through the union with Christ resurrected to the eternal life. This elevation of the man from his passionate, egotistical state, and the man's loving union with the resurrected Christ it is done through the work of the Holy Ghost. But this, on one hand the man is united increasingly more with Christ and the man is imprinted by the Holy Ghost, and on the other hand the man increasingly accomplished his humanity, a humanity bearing within the thirst for the living communion and for the ternal life in the infinite horizon of the loving supreme or godlike life existing from ever within the Holy Trinity.

Thus, the Christian faith sees a foundation of the salvation what God into Trinity has done through creation and through Jesus Christ as embodied Son of the Father, namely the doctrine on the Holy Trinity and the Christology. In Christology we also have the fulfillment or the target of our salvation as eternal union with Christ and the consummation of our humanity through that union with the Son of God Who has taken upon Himself our humanity and He has brought our humanity to consummation. Christ helps us in this, by Himself working with us through His Holy Ghost. But this also implied a pneumatology, and also a certain conception on man, namely about the man's powers and destination, or an anthropology.

The doctrine on the Holy Trinity, the Christology, and the pneumatology, are united in the savior work with the anthropology.

The New Testament tells us about Christ and about the Holy Ghost separately, namely without Their connection with the man. But neither the man who has entered the way of the salvation is seen outside Chsit and Holy Ghost. Everything from the Epistles of the Apostles present as united the man who is being saved and Christ working within that man through the Holy Ghost, or Christ embodied, crucified, and resurrected as working within us in order to sanctify us through the Holy Ghost. "God hasn't appointed us towards anger, but towards achieving our salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ Who has resurrected for us, in order us to take vigil, either we have fallen asleep with Him, we live together with Him" (1 Thes. 5: 9-10). "Faithful is Him Who calls upon you. He will fulfill too" (he will take you to what He is calling you) (1 Thes. 5: 24).

But the man isn't saved without a collaboration of his with Christ. The man's salvation is but his active union with Christ Who works within man through the holy Ghost. The man's salvation is the man's getting out of the prison of his egotism and the man's entering and growing up into the communion with Christ, accomplished both through Christ into the Holy Ghost and through the man strengthened by Christ. The liberation of the man of egotism it is one with the man's liberation of his passions, or it is one with the man's deification. "For the will of God is this: your sanctification… to know each of you to master his vessel into holiness and honor, and not in the passion of the lust, as do the pagans who do not know God… For God hasn't called us to uncleanness, but to sanctification." (1 Thes. 4: 3-7). But the man can do the efforts towards this cleanness only into Christ, namely coworking with Christ's power and by having Christ as role-model. Therefore, if you have resurrected together with Christ, you will search for the realities from above, where Christ is sitting on the right hand of God… You search for the realities from above and not for the realities from on earth, for you have died and your life is hidden with Christ into God… Therefore, you kill the limbs of the earthly man: the debauchery, the uncleanness, the passions, the evil lust, and the covetousness (Col. 3: 1-5).

Every believer who accepts to work for his salvation he will do this work into Christ, or he will have Christ working within him, to bring him to an ever-greater likeness with Him. This likeness to Christ through the union with Him, it is also a movement of Christ towards an ever-greater union with the man, but it is also a movement of the man towards this target. Saint Apostle Paul considers that his duty is to present "every consummate man into Christ Jesus" (Col. 1: 28). For "if there is Christ, the man will be a new creature" (2 Cor. 5: 17). "The life of Christ is shown into our mortal body" (2 Cor. 4: 11).

It must be especially highlighted that Christ works within us through His Holy Ghost. His Holy Ghost is our sanctifier power. Christ "has given us the earnest of the Ghost" (2 Cor. 5: 5). The man, in his movement towards the heights of his clean and loving humanity, he reaches to an ever-greater understanding and feeling. And in this it is shown that the man is imprinted within his whole being ever-more with Christ, through the loving and clean warmth maintained within man by the Holy Ghost. The man is like a living paper receiving into it the spiritual traits which the image of Christ is being composed with, as living image. The Ghost mellows the man's heart in order to be able to easily inscribe within man's heart the image of Christ. Thus, the Ghost is like some kind of hot pen imprinting Christ into man.

But the Ghost works upon a man also through another man who has reached, before the first man, to a stronger and more communicative faith. That's why Saint Apostle Paul can say that the believers from Corinth are the letter which he wrote Christ on, with the pen of the Holy Ghost: "Our letter you are, by showing that you are the letter of Christ, served by us, written not with ink but with the Ghost of the living God, not on stone tablets, but on the flesh tablets of the heart" (2 Cor. 3: 2-3).

Behold how the man, by being ever-more united with Christ and by becoming ever-more like Christ, on one hand the man accomplished on himself ever-more like man, like the consummate man who is Christ, and on the other hand the man gets ever-closer to Christ, the role-model man, by impropriating to himself the warmth and the cleanness of the Ghost. The man becomes bearer of Christ and, in the same time, spiritual.

The Holy Fathers following the New Testament, on one hand they persevered in describing the man in the union with Christ through the work of the Holy Ghost, but on the other hand they presented Christ not as separated in His work within man through the Holy Ghost, but in itself His work within man.

The separation of the Holy Trinity and of the work of Christ from their work within man started to be asserted later by the scholastics, by too strictly dividing the theoretical dogmatic theology - which one cannot see how Christ works like, through the Holy Ghost, within man – from the equally theoretical moral theology – which one cannot see in how the man's work is upheld by Christ, through the Holy Ghost, and how the man advances like, through that, into Christ.

It has been said that the Dogmatics has to present us what God is in Himself and what God has done for the man, while the Moral has to present what the man has to do. They overlooked the fact that what the man does he doesn't do by himself but strengthened by Christ and by Christ's Holy Ghost. They overlooked the fact that God is in Himself a God of the love, and this explains the creation and the work of the salvation. They overlooked that everything Christ did before uniting Himself with us, He did it for His love for man and the fact that this work is brought to an end in Christ's union with the man. They overlooked that what Christ did, He did it in the first place in the humanity assumed by Him, and that this work continues within each man individually. They overlooked the fact that the purpose of God-in-Trinity is the savior work within man through Christ into the Holy Ghost. And this purpose consists of uniting the man with the Embodied Son of God, and having to that also the collaboration of the man. They also overlooked the fact that we cannot work anything for our salvation without the Holy Trinity working through the sacrificed and resurrected Christ within us. Properly-said, the salvation consists of the penetration and the dwelling of the Holy Trinity, through Christ, within us, in order They to fill up us too with the love that is among the Trinity's Persons. We will reach the target which Christ is taking us to, when we have become transparent to Christ as the embodied, sacrifices, and resurrected Son of God, and that means our deification. And if the salvation consists of us becoming transparent to Christ, as He is within saints, this won't be only a theme of Morals but also of Dogmatics.

Actually, our moral deeds are God's deeds too, and the savior deeds of Christ reach their end or are fructified in the moral deeds of the man. The Dogmatics comprises in itself the non-unfolded Morals, and the Morals comprises the Dogmatics in its unfolding on the way to consummation.

But between our moral deeds which we unite ourselves through, ever-more with God, and God is united ever-more with us, an important role is played by the prayer. By praying we bring thanks to God, we ask Him to work with us, we praise Him for what he has done and for what He is doing within us. But we do that in the cult of the Church. Thats why the theological writings of the Holy Fathers are in the same time also writings of praising of God, those writings being very close to the Church's cult.

Following them, the whole Orthodox cult is full with the teaching about God in what God has done and in what God is doing for man and within man, namely God is presented as unseparated from the man. Thus, it is explained the theological content of the Orthodox cult, but it is also explained thus the emotional, existential living of the theological content within this cult. This stays in connection with the emotional presentation of the dogmas of the faith and with the continual theological foundation of the moral advices given to the man.

Only when the Fathers had to defend a point of the right-teaching about God or about Christ, they developed more the dogmatic side of that teaching. But not even then it missed from this presentation the connection of that point of the dogmatic teaching with the man's salvation, with its consequences for the living required to the man, with the praising and giving of thanks the man gives to God for the way God's work is reflected in the man's spiritual growth and in the man's power that is given him to collaborate with God to his salvation.

But most of the writings of the Holy Fathers have a preponderant spiritual content, namely they do not present God and Christ's savior work as such, but as that work takes place within man, through the Holy Ghost.

One of the most beautiful writings of spiritual character are "The Spiritual Letters" belonging to Barsanuphius and John.

The pundit monk from Mount Athos, Theocritus Dionisiatis, he writes in the "Foreword" to the second edition of the original Greek text of this writing, printed at Volos, by the Printing House belonging to Sot. Shoinas, in the year 1960: "One of the sweetest and most full of Holy Ghost writings, belonging to the Fathers of the holy Church of the East, but in the same time one of the less know writings to the rightly-believer people, it is, without doubt, "The All-Useful Book to the Soul" of the ones among saints our Fathers Barsanuphius the Great and John also called the Prophet, a book consisting of 836 Answers".

Rightly so, this writing is of a great spiritual sweetness and it is of a special use not only for monks, but also for all the believers of our Church. Itself its title: "All-Useful Book to the Soul", under which the book was published for the first time in Venice, by Nicodemus the Hagiorite, and reprinted with small improvements at Volos in the year 1960 and at Thessaloniki in the year 1974, it mentions this fact. This fact is also repeated when explaining the title, through the words: "Towards the Use of All Rightly-Believer Christians".

Actually, these writings are appropriate answers, at any time, to a multitude of questions asked partially by monks, but also asked by laymen, questions which – as they were asked at that time or as they are similarly asked today – preoccupy any Christian.

But this writing didn't circulate among the believers' circles before the year 1816. Until then, this writing was only in diverse manuscripts, nu monasteries, destined for the use of the monks, thought through the connection the monks had with the lay believers, the content of this writing could have been spread outside monastery as well. Only in the year 1803, Nicodemus the Hagiorite – a monk pundit from Mount Athos – who published numerous spiritual works of the Fathers, he sent to Venice this work too, in order to be published, as given in an old manuscript existing in the library of the Lavra Monastery from the Holy Mountain, as copied by the Monks Anania, Cyprian, and Euthimios, who also paid for the publishing expenses. Nicodemus the Hagiorite endowed the published book with a biography of the Saints Barsanuphius and John, and with an alphabetical index of the content of the "Letters" from the book.

In the more recent times, this book has been arising a vivid interest in Occident as well. The Anglican priest Derwas James Chitty - a great admirer and living of the Eastern spirituality – has prepared the publishing of a critical text in Greek. A first fascicule of the text, containing 124 Letters, it has been published in the Patrologia Orientalis (t. XXXI, fascicule no. 3, Paris, 1967).

The unexpected death of priest Chitty, it impeded him to publish the integral text in Sources Chretienne. The task for bringing this critical edition to an end, it was taken by Francois Neyt, who presented, in the year 1967, at Luvan, a remarkable doctoral thesis upon "The Letters towards Dorotheos in the Correspondence of Barsanuphius and John of Gaza".

But, by thinking that the integral publication of this work by Neyt was to be late, L. Regnault, together with Philippe Lemaire published a French translation from Greek, at Solesmes Monastery, in the year 1971. By reckoning the Nicodemus's Greek edition as "insufficient" (according to Hausherr, in "Dictionnaire de spiritualité" I, 1262), Regnault and Lemaire resorted also to some manuscripts from the National Library from Paris and from other libraries. The first 223 Letters were translated by them out of Cod. Coislin, Greek, 124, which they said it was the best. B. Outtier corroborated to their translation also the main Georgian manuscripts, some very old ones, Sinai no. 34 and 35, but which contain only 79 Epistles. Two of these, the first one and the 73rd one, it seems they weren't preserved by the Greek text and they were added at the end of the French translation.

L. Regnault declares that he was urged to translate and publish this writing in French by the "considerable influence this writing exercised in the history of the Christian spirituality" (Introduction to translation).

Our translation, though it has been following mainly the Greek text of the edition from Thessaloniki, it has been taking in account also the French translation. Also, we have been following the order of the "Letters" as taken by the French translation from the better Greek manuscripts used by the French translator, and we have placed between parentheses the different number of the "Letters" according to the edition from Volos.

We have reproduced in our translation also the references provided by the French text, between parentheses, to some sentences from Paterikon, comprised in the Grek manuscripts used by the French translator.

Many wrote about the life of Barsanuphius, also called the Old Man and of John, also called as the Prophet. The first to do that was Nicodemus the Hagiorite in the "Introduction" to his edition, which he described in especially their virtues, on the ground of the news about them.

Lately, S. Vailhe wrote about their lives in: Les lettres spirituelles de Jean et de Barsanuphe, edb. In Echos d'Orient, 7

(1903), pp. 268-276; and then in: Saint Barsanuphe, edb. 8 (1905), pp. 14-25, and; Jean le Prophete et Seridos, edb. 154-160. Appreciations upon the two Fathers and upon their teaching formulated also L. Regnault in his Preface wrote to an anthology of 50 Letters belonging to the two Fathers, which were published in the year 1967, bearing the title "Maîtres spirituelle au desert de Gaza".

We are not going to try here to offer the reader a systematic presentation of their lives. This is because anything we know about their lives it is comprised in their letters. We are going to limit us here only to some brief reflections upon the content of their "Letters", according to some of the data regarding their lives.

Barsanuphius and John were two spiritual Fathers, living as great ascetics during the first half of the Century VI, in the monastery founded by Serid and led by him, in the South of Gaza. Barsanuphius died around the year 540, being know also as "The Great Old Man", and John, also known as 'The Prophet" died sometimes earlier, between the year 530 and 535. Serid, the abbot of the monastery, he died fourteen days before John died. Dorotheos, who came to that monastery for he was attracted by the two Fathers, he was disciple to one of them, and he was also the administrator of the infirmary from the monastery, after the death of John he withdrew from the monastery and he totally locked himself up in his monastic cell refusing even to answer any question addressed to him. (In this regard to be seen The Romanian Philokalia, volume IX, p. 465). Vailhe reckons that Dorotheos founded his monastery around the year 540. To Dorotheos had been addressed around one hundred of the Letters, buy the two Fathers.

The two monks lived, each on them, locked up in their monastic cells. Serid was the one who brought them the written questions of some monks or of some laymen, and they told Serid what he should wrote as answer to those questions.

Nicodemus the Hagiorite used the witness of Theodore the Studites in discerning between this Barsanuphius and a certain Barsanuphius who were an acephalus heretic, whom Patriarch Sophronius of Jerusalem spoke about. In this sense, he answered a question addressed by Theodore the Studites to Patriarch Tarasios of Constantinople, who presided the Seventh Ecumenical Synod form the year 787. In this answer addressed to Patriarch Tarasios he said that this Barsanuphius, unlike the heretic mentioned by Sophronius, Egyptian by birth as that one was too, he was totally Orthodox and he was reckoned by the Church as saint. Theodore the Studites, by presenting this witness bore by Patriarch Tarasios, he also says that during his time existed even an icon of Barsanuphius exposed in the great church from Constantinople.

Regarding the content of the "Letters", it is a concrete application of the doctrine that had been crystalized in the Christian spirituality form the centuries before Barsanuphius and John lived, upon passions and virtues. By that, their content was kindred to that of the Paterikon. But, while in Paterikon this doctrine is concretized in gestures, deeds, and short sentences issued by the Fathers, in the "Letters" of Barsanuphius and John that doctrine is concretized in advices given as answers to the questions raised by some people who strived to apply that doctrine in diverse concrete situations of their lives, while fighting all sorts of impediments, of temptations, and of hardships. It is, by that, also an application of the doctrine from the Philokalian writings.

The advices given in these letters have a remarkable not of realism. They take heed at the spiritual level of those who asked the questions. They asked greater things from them who were spiritually advanced, while they asked more modest things from those who were less advanced, according to their measure. That's why, this book can be of a real help not only for monks, but also for the believer laymen, and especially for the priests who are spiritual guides.

"What the Apophthegmata of the Father (Paterikon) allowed us only to intuit in a few fugitive glitters, on rare moments, here it is unfolding in front of our eyes, as a movie showing us in plain daylight the most-hidden aspects of the monks' life, who are following, day by day, their humble effort of ascesis and of prayer, upheld by the advices, by the teachings, and by the encouragement coming from their Father into God. We do not know what to admire more: the advice given to the disciple who repeats ceaselessly the confessions of his helplessness and who ceaselessly asks for the same advice and help, or to admire the patience of the teacher who doesn't get tired of using all his natural and supra-natural gifts in order to lead towards salvation his spiritual sons entrusted to him by the Savior" (L. Regnault, in Introduction to the French translation of the „Lettres", entitles: Barsanuphe et Jean de Gaza, Correspondence", Solesmes, 1971).

It is hard to resume faithfully the great richness of so nuanced advices comprised in these "Letters", according to eth great diversity of situations presented by them who asked for those advices.

Barsanuphius and John aim in their advices addressed to them who asked for guidance, in the first place at humbleness, that is the condition of the love for God and for people, as supreme virtue and achievement of the man. Only those who reached at them, only they have been elevated above all passions.

The humbleness is especially opposed by the vain-glory, because the vain-glory locks the man up into the self-preoccupation in an egotistic manner. This vain-glory can take endlessly diverse and subtle forms, which can deceive the man. In order to reach the humbleness, one needs an increasingly subtle attention, an attention which is increasingly more attentive at the own self, aiming to notice the diverse movements of the vain-glory and aiming to clean up from on the real image of the man all the thicker or thinner layers of slag that covers or cunningly crooks more or less visibly, the real self of the man.

The instrument which this slag is scrapped away with, it mainly is the cutting off of the own will, and the obedience to the authority of the spiritual Father, or to the monastery's abbot. This is because the vain-glory, which all the other passions are tied on, it can crook or falsify the man's being until giving to the man the impression that right this crooked, pretending for it is his true being and the will to uphold that form it is his own will. That's why the man just be helped to break up with this will of his.

Throught humbleness, the man reaches to see his own real self, as cleaned of the layer of opacity, of darkness, which have been place over it. On this way, the uncovered self discovers on himself as a clearly dependent on God self, one could say a self that is transparent to God Who, by the meaning He gives to all realities, He brings within man the great light. At this seeing of the luminous greatness of God cannot reach but the one who sees his smallness, his meaningless, or the darkness of his existence as locked up in itself. This is because once man's smallness admitted, that smallness makes inexplicable the man's existence without God. The more reduced the man feels himself, the emptier, the more clearly, he sees on himself that he cannot exist except through God, and the more he will feel the presence of God as his own foundation.

The humbleness is upheld within man right by the fact that the man realizes the world's limits and his limits, by living all sorts of imperfections (illnesses, death, the world's incapacity to really and definitively satisfy the man), and the man still cannot reach the edge of the cosmos and he cannot ever reach the consummate self-knowledge.

In the human being's imperfections and the world's imperfections and in the continuous unsatisfaction which these ones leave us through themselves, it is shown their limitation, but in the man's impossibility to reach their edges with his knowledge we ascertain their indefinite. They appear to us as indefinite and as limitation in the same time. The world is finite because of not being one with God; but the world is infinite because it has been created by the infinite God and the world is in connection with God and with the man as image of God.

The man is indefinite regarding the complexity and the permanent novelty of his spirit. Due to that the man is made for progressing into the self-knowledge, but the man cannot go all the way to the end in this self-knowledge. And even if the man had reached that end, he wouldn't have exited his imperfection. And the world is inferior to the man because of being an object of knowledge lacking an own conscience and lacking the capacity for communicating its love in a conscious manner, and it lacks the capacity to consciously know on itself. Still, the man has been created so that he cannot totally dispose of the world's physical existence and also the man cannot reach the world's edges without knowledge. Thus, both the human self and the physical world, they appear to be, on one hand, as a limitation, as imprinted with imperfections and with helplessness, but on the other hand they appear to be as exceeding their own powers of disposing of themselves, and this is especially in what regards the man's powers to know on himself and to know the two realities all the way to their edges.

The man progresses in self-knowledge and in the knowledge of the world, in an indefinite whose end the man cannot reach, but which, on the other hand, it constantly closes the man's thoughts and feelings on the same unsatisfactory plan. The man progresses in knowing the world, but he progresses in knowing some endlessly specified aspects of the same general laws, while remaining with the knowledge about the physical world and of the knowledge about himself on a finite and in the same time indefinite plan.

Both of these show that the man's self and the world, once they are finite, but in the impossibility to be comprised one through another, they are dependent, but not on one another, but on a superior reality.

What could exist like, through itself an imperfect world? If that world existed through itself, what it could not be perfect like?

This question was given by the antiquity's philosophy a pantheistic, emanationist, or evolutionist answer. It was said that the foundation if perfect, but the things emanated from that foundation are imperfect, or that they will reach the perfection by evolution. But what could come out of it those imperfect emanations like, once they have started on the road of perfection since eternity, since they have been existing? Only the idea of the existential difference between the foundation of the world and our world it could answer the problem of the world's imperfection. The foundation is uncreated, while the world is created. It is the same regarding the man. But the world and the man could achieve the perfection by remaining in perfect communication with their foundation. But this was left as the disposal of the human freedom. Only the freedom of the created conscious beings can bring the world to perfection. But neither the world nor the man can sip their perfection out of themselves. This is because otherwise they won't be forced to reach perfection. If that had bene the case, there wouldn't have been freedom in creation.

Thus, thought created, the world appears as invested by its Creator with the greatest value. The world's perfection depends on its freedom. The world reaches this perfection through the freely accepted communion with its foundation, Who, in addition to the fact that He is fee and loving, He also created the world out of His love, in order the world to reach the happiness of the consummation, by freely accepting His love. Only a created world can be a world of the freedom and a world of the love, due to the fact that it is the work of a fee and loving person-like foundation. Otherwise, everything would have stayed under the necessity of some laws of the repetition which cannot give a meaning to the existence. The man and the world are not some slaves carried away by the monotonous repetition of some laws, because the man and the world have been created by a free and loving Being. And imperfect existence dominated by such paws all the way to its foundation, it would have presented right those laws as inexplicable, as lacking any conscience and freedom. A general, fatal, and imperfect blindness would have dominated the entire existence, and that would be totally meaningless.

By explaining the world and the man as God's creations, the Christian faith related the man's growth to his humbleness, as a conscience of his dependency on God the Creator, but also on the man's love for his Creator, a love that keeps the man in connection with the Creator.

A great tole in man's advancement towards achieving his real image, it is played by man's patience in troubles. Patiently enduring the troubles, it really strengthens the man's spirit, while the attempt to avoid troubles it will make the man spiritually drowsy. BY enduring the troubles, the man shows that his strength doesn't come from an attachment to the world, but the man's strength comes from the Almighty and loving God. The world alternates the pleasures it provides, with many troubles. Themselves the slavery and the weakness which the passions lower the man into – as excessive attachments to the world -, they show the world's incapacity to consummate the man, namely to save the man. The man, in his life, he is especially united through his spirit with the non-passing and infinite God. That's why the man must cultivate his relationship with God, so that the man will be liberated from the world and the man will truly become the world's master. All the searches for avoiding the troubles, for having a comfortable life by the things offered by the world, are intertwines with the egotism that breaks the man from another man, an egotism that impeded the man from advancing towards the Kingdom of Heavens that is the Kingdom of Love between man and God and between man and another man. That's why Barsanuphius and John reckoned that there is no other road to the Kingdom of Heavens except by patiently suffering the troubles. And they even reckoned that the doing any good it would be intertwined with the suffering of some trouble, because of stirring up seen and unseen envy.

The power for suffering the troubles comes to the man out of his relationship with Christ Who, by being the Son of God made man, he suffered the cross out of love for us, and He didn't allow Himself to be overwhelmed by cross's pains.

Likewise, the whole man's power to be humble it comes out of the kenosis – or the willing depletion of glory – of Christ.

Thus, the man's advancement towards his true image it is an advancement by the power of Christ and towards the likeness to Christ as man; the man's advancement has Christocentric grounds and target. Only the patience and the humbleness can lead the people to the loving union among themselves, as Christ wanted. But this union cannot be achieved by men except into Christ. This union with Christ consummates us also through the fact that in the same time with it we also achieve the union with other people. Besides, the Son of God made Himself a man on this purpose: in order us to become one with Him. And only the humbleness and the suffering of the troubles patiently, only they will bring us towards that love that can united us. This is for Christ too achieved this real image of the man through kenosis (humbleness) and cross.

Actually, out of Christ's death as sacrifice on the cross we learn and we take power for preparing ourselves towards our own death as an exit from a live closed into ourselves, as tearing down of the barriers which impede us from a full communion.

In suffering the troubles is manifested a relativization of our connections with the worldly realities. Through it the plan of the superior spiritual life can be felt again – the superior spiritual life being characterized by kindness and by love into the eternal life.

This sense of the relativeness of the earthly realities, a sense that weakens our passions, it gives to the man an increasing resting from the worries for the things of this world. That's why the "resting" it is another important spiritual state, perseveringly highlighted by Barsanuphius and John. Through this one it is shown the fact that the world hasn't been created to enslave our spirit, but the world has been created to be transfigured through our spirit united with God, to be take in mastery by our spirit.

If Saint Maximos the Confessor highlighted the "eternal resting reached by the man after his movement towards consummation during his earthly live (contrary to Origen, according to whom the souls constantly turn back from pleroma and the soul constantly move back and forth from pleroma, because of getting bored of pleroma, and therefore the souls remain in an eternal unrest, or they obtain only passing resting), Barsanuphius explained this resting, by showing that the resting is achieved as a downpayment even from here, by suffering the troubles as relativized hardships, and through humbleness.

By increasing into this "resting" from the worries and from the troubles caused by a too tight attachment to the world, which keep us in a tormenting agitation, we will advance towards the great and imperishable resting of the future life, one that is not a petrifaction, but it is an undisturbed joy for the love which we will live forever into.

The eternal resting reached by them who strengthen on themselves from here by suffering the troubles, it also has within itself a serenity of the conscience of having done nothing evil to anybody, or of having obtained the forgiveness for the evil done to others. Their forgiveness comes to us also through their prayers, after we will have passes away from this life, but also through the prayers of all the people who are part of the Church, especially the saints. From here came the great importance granted in these "Letters" to the forgiveness of ones by others, and to the prayers for others. Asking for forgiveness it will soften down both the soul of his who asks for forgiveness and the soul of him who is asked for forgiveness, as also the granted forgiveness softens up the souls of both of them, and it will make possible the real communication of power and of life from one to another. This is for asking for forgiveness and granting forgiveness both contribute to advancing into humbleness and to set one free from vain-glory.

The communion is especially helped by the prayer of ones for others. Nobody is saved alone; nobody brings joy to God by only praying for himself. God wants us united among ourselves, given that God is the God of the love and God wants to gather all of us together into Himself. That's why, in this striving for uniting ourselves with others, one shown especially in prayer, God Himself is working too. Only in our love for another, a love shown through prayer, we can get humbled and we can liberate ourselves from freedom, as also we can liberate on ourselves from our envy that doesn't rejoice for others' wellness. That's why, only by praying ones for others, we can get our prayers answered by God.

We think that there is no other spiritual book from the period of the Church Fathers that speaks so much and so concretely about the prayer for others, and especially about the prayer of the saints. By that, it is highlighted the meeting of everybody in the catholicity of the prayer. Everyone meets with all the other and with God, in prayer. Each one feels himself responsible for the salvation of the others, and he is called to work for that by praying.

As relative as are the material -things in the vision of the "Letters", as important is the human person: "What would the man benefit if he gained the whole world, but he lost his soul?". I can be saved without material things, or I can be saved more easily if I gather material things without being greedy and without depriving others of their rights. But I cannot be saved without caring about others and without helping them to be saved. It is implied in this the fact that the material things have no value except for humans if used towards increasing the communion among them and for advancing to the eternal communion in the future life. That's why the material things, the galaxies, the cosmos make sense only for humans. Even the ideas and the books preserving the ideas, and which the ideas as transmitted through, over space and time, in order the ideas to be perceived by other consciences, without this purpose the books would have been like inexistence, or they would have been a pure virtuality non-actualized in the benefit of our life and or our eternal communion. The books would have been nothing without people whom the books to serve for their aspiration top communion, an aspiration that is consummated in the eternal communion. Thus, if the cosmos proves to be meaningless without the human persons, the human persons are the great and the important reality giving value to the cosmos. On the other hand, despite the whole their unspeakably superior value, because the human persons cannot cerate the cosmos and they cannot maintain their life in front of it, it will be obvious that there must be a person-like existence superior to the cosmos, namely an existence capable of creating the cosmos and capable of maintaining the cosmos in existence, a being capable of maintain himself in existence in front of the cosmos and capable of giving the cosmos a meaning. But this meaning is not for him who has created the cosmos, but this meaning is for other persons who have a weaker power than the Creator of the cosmos has. But without a superior existence which to be conscious or the meanings of the existence and of the created world, there would have been absent the original spring of the meanings. And without this spring of meanings there couldn't have had, or there couldn't have come to existence, any existence. In this case there wouldn't have been possible beings capable of reaching to meanings, neither would have been possible a reality with a virtuality of meanings; and there wouldn't have been any guarantee for the value and for the eternal preservation of the meanings noticed by the human conscience, together with the persons who noticed those meanings and who can preserve those meanings in their conscience, in accordance to the person-like supreme spring of all meanings.

The reciprocal forgiveness, the prayer for others, the humbleness, the rejection of the vain-glory, they are equally numerous means which can lead towards the image of the loving man and which can imprint the reports among people with an endless sweetness and delicateness, by leading all people to the Kingdom of Heavens that is the Kingdom of the Consummate Love. The work of Barsanuphius and John is a universal symphony of the love, as manifested in the heard and unheard prayer of all people for all other people, as expression of the together-love of all people, of the move which all people believe in the eternal value and existence of all the other people as unique and non-confoundable persons.

"The Letter of Barsanuphius and John" describe the gradual polishing of the man of everything that has lowered the man below his humanity, a polishing that cannot be done except within the communion among people, a communion nourished out of their communion with God. This polishing work is done not only by God upon each person, but it is a work done also by each person upon himself while always helped by God and by the believers who are spiritually more advanced. We advance together towards a consummate life in communion, which each of us grows up in, in what regards his spiritual strength and his love, in freedom from the own passions and from others' passions, and in communion, towards the Kingdom of God into Trinity, of God of the love. If there we won't live any division among us and between us and God, we must not accept it, with resignation, either here. We cannot have a full and happy life except in communion, in getting far from any egotism.

That's why, another steadfast recommendation formulated by Barsanuphius and John was, on one hand, the cutting off of the own will, but on the other hand they urged us to make efforts in order us to fulfill the will of God Who loves all of us and He wants us to love on one another and He gives us the power that strengthens us to fulfill those. This is for the will of God, contrary to our egotistic will, it is the will that embraces all of us in love. By fulfilling this will of God, we too really contribute to the fulfillment of the ask: "Your will be done". Abd by that, we also contribute to fulfillment of the other asks, as: "Your Kingdom come".

The Present Writing in the Romanian Spiritual Tradition

We have seen that the French translator of this writing spoke about the great influence this writing had over the Orthodox spirituality. This affirmation an be confirmed also by the attention this writing enjoyed in the tradition of the Romanian spirituality. I noticed before translating this writing, the presence of the way of speaking characteristic to the "Letters" among the monks living in the Romanian monasteries. But I didn't know that the Romanian monks learnt this way of speaking from the texts of the "Letters" themselves, as they read these texts in the Romanian monasteries. I believed that the Romanian monks learnt that ways of speaking by frequenting and by living in the monasteries from the Holy Mountain Athos.

But, when I inquired about the existence of this writing among the manuscripts owned by the Library of the Romanian Academia, I found out about its existence in numerous Romanian manuscripts which were translated before the issuing of the Greek edition from the year 1816, most of the manuscripts dating from the time when Abbot Paisius lived at Neamţ Monastery. It is true that most of the manuscripts called as "Miscellaneous" do not contain but a few pages of the "Letters". Such are: "Ms. No. 1913 form the year 1811; Ms. No. 1621 from Cernica Monastery, dating from the XVIII Century, originating from Argeş Monastery; Ms. 1995 from Cernica Monastery and dating from XVIII Century; Ms. no. 1994 from the year 1793, originating also from Cernica Monastery and signed by Saint Calinic; Ms. no. 2100 from the XVIII Century, originating from Lainic Monastery; Ms. no. 2115, dating from the year 1789; Ms. no. 2466 from the XVIII Century, originating from Argeş Monastery; Ms. no. 5548 originating from XVIII Century; Ms. no. 5944 dating from XIX Century; Ms. no. 3574 dating from the XVIII Century.

Manuscripts containing the whole writing are: Ms. no. 3723 from the year 1787, f.1 r. – 343 r.; Ms. no. 1532, ff. 1-327 from the XIX Century; Ms. no. 1539, ff. 1-366.

About the last-mentioned manuscript, it is specified that: "This book belongs to the monastic community of Abbot Paisius, Saint Monastery Secu". It seems that the whole work is given also in the Ms. no. 2147, that comprised 604 pages, and that originates from the disciples of Abbot Paisius from Neamţ Monastery; and in the manuscript no. 1899, from the year 1796, containing 426 pages and entitled: The Book of the Holy Abbots, or the Great Barsanuphius and John". On this manuscript it is also specified the fact that it originates form Cernica Monastery, from the time of Archimandrite Gheorghe, Disciple of Paisius, as a copy made after a translation from the year 1789 from Neamţ Monastery. This manuscript is also signed by Saint Calinic.

Also, the Ms. no. 3723, entitles "The Book of Abba Barsanuphius" it appears to be a translation from Greek, made at Neamţ Monastery, by an anonymous monk, and revised by the "Teacher Ilarion", whom we know about that he had such authority that Paisius didn't dare to do his translations in Slavonic (printed in Russia under the title of Dobrotoliubie) directly from Greek, be he translated according to the Romanian translations made by Ilarion and Makarios (Cetvericov).

More attentive research could find out whether all the manuscripts of the translation are copies after the translations mentioned above, or there existed other translations as well.

We are going to give below, form the Ms. 3723, f. 346 r., about its translation. Then, we are going to give from the same manuscript, as sample of Romanian text from that time, the questions and the answers no. 314 and 315. They are remarkable by many words which have been preserved in the succulent language of our monastic and peasant tradition, despite the whole clumsiness and some inexactitudes making them difficult to read maybe even at the time they were written.

Ms. 3723, f. 346 r.: "[2]Has been translated this holy and useful-to-soul book of Saint Barsanuphius, from the Hellenic language into our Romanian language, by someone among the all-small and last disciples of Abbot Paisius and it was seen by Teacher Ilarion."

F. 176(3)-177(v).

Question of the same one.

My thought tells me that the quietude is more necessary than everything, and it is useful to one. Does it tell me right?

Answer of John.

The quietude is without one restraining his heart from giving and form taking and from being pleasant to people and from the other things; for the Lord rebuked that teacher for that man who fell among thieves and asked him who was his neighbor, and the teacher answered that him who have mercy on that man. The Lord also said: "I want mercy and not sacrifice". So, once you have understood that the mercy is greater than the sacrifice, lean tour heart towards mercy. This is also for the producing of the quietude bring one to high-cogitation, before he will have gained on himself, namely the man must become righteous for then will be the quietude, for he has worn the cross, so that if you have mercy you will find help; but if you hold on yourself as exceeding the measure, learn that you will lose even that what you will have had before, so that neither within nor outside you must travel, but on the middle, by understanding what the God's will is, because all the days are bad.

Question of the same one: "Unveil to me, master, how neither inside nor outside, but o the middle; must I not appoint certain days to the quietude, and certain days to the worries?

Answer of John:

Not to hope either for quietude nor to defame into taking care, this is the middle path that doesn't fall, and having quietude towards humbleness and into taking care for watchfulness and shouting out wit the thought; there is not time limit, all the more of days; but somebody owed to suffer with thanks the things coming upon him; and all the ones from the monastery must be compassionate. This is for the apostle's command fulfills: namely, if somebody is troubles, let him be troubled together with him: in order to save him, in order to heal his soul, for this is the mercifulness and suffering together with the helplessness and helping to their healings, it is good, because if the doctor is paid for taking care of the ill man, all the more will be rewarded him who commiserates in everything with his neighbor, according to his power; for if somebody will have mercy on everything, he will fulfill his will even in what he suffers.

SPIRITUAL LETTERS

1. Answer of the Great Oldman (or of Barsanuphius) towards Abba John from Bathsheba[3], who asked him to allow him to come and live by their side, in their common monastery.

It is written in the Apostle that "He who started within you the good work, Himself will fulfill that work until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1: 6). And again, our Master said to the one who came to Him: "If somebody doesn't reject everything he has and his nation, or if he doesn't event hate his own soul, he could not be My disciple" (Lk. 14: 33, and 26). And it is possible to God Him to fulfill this word for us. "For what is better and more pleasant than the brothers living together?" (Ps. 132: 1[4]).

So, I pray for you, you to reach that measure written in Acts: "All of them who had wealth they sold it and bringing the price of the dols things they place it at the feet of the Apostles" (Acts 4: 34-35).

And knowing I your zeal, as being according to God, I said to our beloved son, Serid, who has covered us with God from the care for people (and we hope in God that you too will be covered together with us): "Welcome brother John with much love and do not doubt at all. This is for even two years earlier God unveiled me that he was to come here and many among the brothers were to come to us. And I have been guarding the unveiling until seeing what the Lord has done. Therefore, when the time has come, I talked about that unveiling to you too".

[3] In the Greek text: Μεσωραβι.

[4] In King John Bible (from now on abbreviated as KJB) we have: Ps. 133: 1: "BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"; in the Romanian Orthodox Bible (from now on abbreviated as ROB) we have: Ps. 132: 1: "Behold, now, what it is good and what it is beautiful, except only the brothers to live together!" (E. l. t.'s n.)

And for I have reckoned to send you something of the things I wear, behold I have taken my monastic hat off my head and I am sending it to you through the brother, saying to him: "Give this one to him, and bring me another, in exchange". Therefore, you keep that to your death. For it will shelter you against many evils and temptations. Do not give it to somebody else. For it is the blessing from God to you, through my hands. And force on yourself to bring your work to the end and liberate yourself of any other worry, like we have been liberated too. And sit with us, within the whole carelessness, bestowing on yourself to God.

And I, Serid[5], I am telling you a wonderful thing. While the Oldman was speaking these things, I thought into myself: how can I memorize all of these, so that I will be able to write them down? If the Oldman wanted, I would bring here ink and paper so that to write down any word I hear from him. But the Oldman knew what I was thinking, and his face started glowing like fire, and he told me: "Go and write, and do not fear. If I told you tens of thousands of words to write down, the Ghost of God wouldn't let you writing either more or less words than I told you, even if you wanted that, for He will lead your hand in order you to write these down one at a time.

2. Answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one, heralding him in advance the diverse sorts of troubles which were to come upon him and his bodily helplessness united with those troubles, but also his souly progress he will have it out of those troubles.

Tell to brother John[6]: Strengthen you hear as a hard stone. And I call as stone the strength of the soul, in order you to be able to bear what I am going to tell you. So, take heed at yourself, lets by hearing these things you to get haughty in your heart, and so you to fall off the spiritual promise. This is because many were lost because of their haughtiness, even [5] Serid(os) was the founder and the hegumen of the monastery and in the same time he was the servant of Barsanuphius and John, and he was the one who was writing the answers and who was sending the answers to their recipients. In this letter Serid is adding this paragraph from himself.

[6] The Oldman addressed himself to Serid to write down this answer and to send it to the same John.

among those who reached the measure. So, prepare yourself to give thanks in everything, listening to the Apostle who says: "Give thanks in everything" (1 Thess. 5: 18), "either into troubles, or in needs, or in tribulations" (2 Cor. 6: 4), or in bodily toils and helplessness. Give thanks to God in all the things coming upon you. This is for I hope that you too will "enter His resting" (Hebr. 4: 1). "This is because through many troubles we have to enter the Kingdom of God" (Acts 14: 22). Therefore, you do not doubt in your soul, and let not your heart to weaken in anything. And remember the Apostle's word "that even if the outside man gets broken, the inside man gets renewed day by day" (2 Cor. 4: 16).

So, if you do not endure the sufferings, you won't be able to reach the cross. And if you firstly endure the sufferings, you will enter the realm of His resting. And then you will be appeased into the whole carelessness, by having your soul fortified and stuck with the Lord forever, and guarded into faith, and rejoicing into hope, and gladdening into love, and guarding into the Holy and of-one-being Trinity. And then will be fulfilled with you that what was said: "Let the heavens gladden, and let the earth rejoice" (Ps. 95: 11[7]). This is the worriless life of the man of God. This is, my beloved brother, that the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost rejoice of your salvation.

3. Answer of another Oldman towards the same one, who asked him for a meeting.

Tell to my brother: Forgive me, for the Lord, for I want to see you, but I cannot find any spare time because of the conscience of others. But I rejoice myself for the love for the blessings sent to you by the Holy Oldman. And blessed are you for you have been found worthy of those.

4. Because a temptation occurred for the monks form the places where Abba John was living before coming to the common monastery, and because there was an uprising while he was

[7] In KJB we have: Ps. 96: 11: "Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof."; in ROB we have: Ps. 95: 11: "Let the heavens gladden and let the earth rejoice, let the sea shaken and all the things from within it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

there, and by spiritually knowing those things in advance, the Oldman wrote him the followings:

Wrote to brother John: Behold, I am sending you three testimonies of the power of God, from the Scriptures of the Holy Ghost, which I want to wake your mind up through, in order you to know what fits the present times[8].

The first testimony is this: "God told to Prophet Isaiah: "Go my people, enter your room, clock up your door, hide yourself for a little while until the anger of the Lord will pass" (Isa. 26: 20).

The second testimony is this: "Get out from their middle and differ from them and do not touch that what is unclean, sys the Lord, and I will receive you and I will be like a Father to you, and you will be sons and daughters to Me, says the All-Keeper Lord" (Isa. 17: 18).

The third testimony: "Take care of what you are walking like, not like some unwise, but like some wisemen, by redeeming the time because the days are bad" (Eph. 5: 15-16).

And I am saying to you: Run towards the things ahead of you and quickly consummate your work, by remembering about the lord Who says: he who lays his hand on the plow, but who turns towards the things from the back, he won't prepare himself for the Kingdom of Heavens" (Lk. 9: 62). For I am looking at the peaceful life that is into our Lord Christ Jesus Whom to be the glory forever. Amen.

5. Answer of the same Great Oldman towards Abba[9] who was sad because of Abba John was late and that's why he thought that Abba John wasn't coming at all.

Do not be discouraged, my son, neither be you sad because of our brother. This is for, even he is missing with his body, he is always with us. This is for he is of one soul with us and nothing separated him from our love from now and forever.

[8] Or of John, also called as The Prophet, towards the same John from Bethsheba.
[9] Or towards the monastery's hegumen: Serid.

6. The Letter of the same Great Oldman written towards Abba John, who was occupying on himself, in his country, with some things needed for monastery and he was troubled by a war waged him by his own body[10].

Write to your father: you are still outside, toiling according to your power, for God and for your brothers' souls, better said for our and yours resting and peace. This is for, if our brothers are resting and are sheltered through us, we too will find through them the consummate resting[11]; and it will be fulfilled with us the written word: "A brother helped by another brother is like a fortified and surrounded by walls stronghold" (Prov. 18: 19).

Cut oof all the ties and all the apparent causes had by you as long as you are outside, and do not permit any contrived cause and any connection with somebody to draw you towards the old things. This is because, if you do not do such, you won't be able to appease on yourself into a consummate quietude. This is for we have done it so. By doing so, I hope that you will consummately appease on yourself, with the help of God, and your odds and your part will be with us forever. Let nobody find out, for now, about the things I have written to you as answer to your request, and if you work goes well, you will thank God and pray to Him. This is for, this is what it means: "Give thanks in everything" (1 Thess. 5: 18). Let's not overlook our duty to give thanks to God. Let's do as did him whom the parable said yore about: He went to pray within church to be appointed to him to find out something to eat and he met somebody who told him: come and eat with me, today, and then go and pray, but he answered: I am not coming, for I have left in order to ask this from God. Therefore, us too, either we find or we do not find, we will give God prayer and thanks. Take heed at always bearing within your body the cross of Christ[12].

[10] This answer was sent by Abba Barsanuphius to Abba John from Bethsheba. It is not about Abba John surnames The Prophet, who live in Serid's monastery. Abba John from Bethsheba came in Serid's monastery, but later on he went to his country for procuring some things for Serid's monastery.

[11] By helping our brothers to gain the resting and the peace against the body's war, their resting and their peace will come back to us, so that we too will gain more resting and peace.

[12] From here one can see that the body's war endured by the recipient of the answer, it was from hunger. Barsanuphius told him that is good to bear this cross too, within his body, for it will shelter him against other lusts as well. In the same time, he must pray to God. This is for God will provide him, when He will see fit, the needed food.

7. Answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one who thought at going with the brothers to pick up the things they needed for manual labor, but he feared of the wilderness of those places[13]. He reminded him to take heed at the war of the body that bothers, and he promised him the help from God in this departure which he took the responsibility for, upon himself.

Tell him who has been called by an entrustment from high, to come and live next to us not only in the present age, but also in the age to come, to our brother and the one of-one-soul with us, John: Our Master Christ told to His disciples: "Are not two sparrows sold for a penny, but none of them will fall on the ground without the will of My Father Who is in heavens. To you, thought, even the hairs of your head are numbered. Therefore, do not fear. You are more precious than a great number of sparrows. Everyone who will bear witness for Me in front of the people, I too will be his witness in front of My Father from heavens" (Mt. 10: 29-32). Therefore, take heed at yourself, so to watchfully place God always before you, in order to be fulfilled, regarding you, the prophetic word: "I saw the Lord always before me, for He is at my right side, so I won't wabble" (Ps. 15: 8[14]). Therefore, stretch your hands, with the whole your soul, towards the things you have to accomplish, in order you to hear the voice of God telling you: "Behold, I am sending My angel before your face, and he will prepare your way in front of you" (Mt. 3: 1; 11: 100).

8. That one, after toiling a lot, because of not finding the things he was searching for manual labor he got sad and he wondered why "hasn't been sent the angel before his face", according to the Oldman's words. He didn't know that the Oldman told him that in order to ease up his departure. That's why the Oldman wrote him the followings:

[13] They were to go, probably, to gather material for weaving baskets.

[14] In KJB we have: Ps. 16: 8: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 15: 8: "I have been seeing the Lord always before me, for He is at my right side so I won't wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Write to your brother that as long as the ship in at sea, it expects dangers and the blows of the winds. But when the ship reaches the shore of the quietude and of the peace, it will no longer fear the dangers, the troubles, or the winds' blows, but the ship will be in quietude. Likewise, you our beloved brother, as long as you are with the people, you expect troubles and dangers and the attacks of the immaterial winds; but if you reach the things prepared for you, you will be without fear. And regarding what I told you before, that our Master said: "Behold I will send My angel in front of your face", the angels had actually been sent. And about the fact that you haven't found the materials needed for manual labor, God wrote in Moses's book: "That's why he detoured you and punished you and exhausted you with hunger in that scarry desert, in order you to know the things form within your heart" (The Second Law 8: 2-3). Understand, our beloved brother, the things I told you, and keep yourself strong and unhesitatingly in your toil.

9. The letter of the same Oldman towards the same brother who left for the needs of the monastery and he got discouraged for the many troubles which he reached in.

Write, my son, to our brother John, that we embrace him into the Lord, I and you and our brother John. And tell him: do not get discouraged in the bodily troubles and hardships which you are enduring for us and for our community. This is for, by doing so, you put your soul for brothers and I hope that your reward for this toil will be abundant. And like God appointed Josephus to feed his brother during the hunger in Egypt, so God appointed you too to help the monastery together with my son Serid. And I am telling you the word of the Apostle towards Timothy: "Therefore, you son, strengthen on yourself in the grace of the Holy Ghost" (2 Tim. 2: 10). For I am seeing how your peace will come to you and I am rejoicing together with you into the Lord. This is for, as long as you live outside, you will find trouble and bodily toil. But if you reach the shore of the quietude, you will find resting and peace. This is for non-liar is our Master Who says: "I will give to them hundredfold in the present age and eternal life in the age to come" (Mk. 10: 30). You strive, therefore, brother, with the whole your heart, in order you to find more love and resting. This is because, before reaching the harbor, the ship is pounded and shaken by waves and by swirls. But when the ship reached the harbor, it finally finds much peace. Understand the said things and keep them. "For the Lord will give you understanding in everything" (2 Tim. 2: 7).

10. The answer of the same Oldman towards the same brother, after a stone fell on his feet and it caused him much pain and discouragement.

To our beloved into the Lord brother John, joyfulness. According to your body's toil for us, and due to the crushing of your leg for us, may our Master God fill your soul up, my beloved one, with the heavenly goods, in a hundredfold manner. Understand, brother, the words written by me, for they will make you feel a heavenly and dominating and godlike joy. This is for, in the name of the Holy Trinity, I am unveiling to you that you are together-inheritor of my charismas, given to me by God. And I expect you to quickly reach at Him by advancing step by step. This is for, through your toils for God, you will reach God's resting. And I hope that you will have both of them if the sadness will die within your heart, by being your wrath chocked up within you. Then will be fulfilled in you the word: "See my humbleness and my toil and forgive all my sins" (Ps. 24: 18[15]). And regarding the fact that I told you that you will reach, by advancing step by step, think at the Gospels, how and for how many times Christ gave His disciples the charismas of the healings and of the casting of devils out, as also the consummate charisma of forgetting the sins, by saying them: "Who you will forgive their sins, forgiven they will be" (Jn. 20: 23). So, when God forgives your sin for your great toil, you have reached the measure which I want you to reach at.

And if you find in my letter words which to be difficult to understand, you will ask Serid, he who is of-one-soul with you, my beloved son, and by the grace of God he will explain to you the words which you find as more difficult to understand. This is for I have prayed to God for him, in this regard.

Therefore, you the man of God, run on the road prepared for you in order you to joyfully reach the shore of Christ, which we have reached too, and you to hear the voice of the fulfilled joy, or the life, of the light, and of the gladness, saying to you: "Well done, you good and faithful servant, enter the joy of your Lord" (Mt. 25: 21). Rejoice yourself into the Lord, rejoice yourself into the Lord, rejoice yourself into the Lord! May the Lord guard your soul and your body against any evil and against any devilish opposition and against any hallucination causing disturbance. The Lord will be your light, your shelter, your way, your strength, your crown, your gladness, and your upholder for eternity. Take heed at yourself, because it has been written: "Do not disregard the words exiting My lips" (Ps. 88: 35[16]).

11. The answer of the same Oldman towards the same brother, urging the brother to remember the things wrote to him, for his benefit and for supporting his heart.

Solomon said about his parents: "They who were teaching me, they were telling me: may our word to be planted within your heart" (Prov[17]. 4: 4). I am telling you the same, brother: may my words be planted within your heart and you always cogitate at all the words I wrote to you, as God said through the mouth of Moses: "Glue them on your right hand and they will be always steadfast before your eyes and cogitate at them when you go to bed, when you wake up, when you walk on the road, and when you go to sleep within your house" (Second Law 6: 6-8). Therefore, you show these into the consummation of your deeds and my God will be with you forever. Amen.

[16] In KJB we have: Ps. 89: 34: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips."; in ROB we have: Ps. 88: 34: "Neither will I break My covenant, and the words coming out of My lips I will not change." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[17] In ROB this book is called as: "The Parables of Solomon". (E. l. t.'s n.)

12[18]. The same one commanded to the brother a thing and because the brother didn't accomplish that thing quickly, he rebuked that brother. And because the brother got sad, the Oldman commanded him no to talk about that to any of the brothers. On that purpose, the Oldman told the brother the followings:

Tell to brother John: Our time is weak. And with much toil you find, in the present time, a man with a strong heart. But keep the word of the Apostle who says: "Reproach, rebuke, urge with long-patience and with teaching" (2 Tim. 4: 2).

13. Being erected a building in the monastery, that one (Abba John) as a skillful man, he drew the measures of the work. But some of the brothers, without him knowing it, they reckoned to do a good thing by adding something to those measures and they change the plan a little. And being that one troubled and discouraged because of them, he showed that to the Oldman. The Oldman answered him:

Tell to our brother John, who cogitates alike us: Many are the thing wrote to you, by me, through the hand of our beloved and sincere son, who loves us with the whole his soul, equally, on all three of us[19], with consummate love and I am writing all of these not out of my own will, but by the command of the Holy Ghost, towards straightening and towards the benefit of your soul, and of you man from within, for troubles and for the persecution of your body, and for the crushing of your heart. In the first place, you shun on yourself against the ghost of the discouragement, because it gives birth to all evil and to diverse troubles. If I wrote you the temptations suffered by me, I would tell you that your ears couldn't bear hearing those; and not even the ears of anybody in the present time. But I hope that you will reach them and you will even see them with your own eyes, and you will be delivered from them by the grace of Christ and by your will. Why gets your heart weakened and discouraged, because of the sheep of Christ? Don't you know what headaches endures the good teacher from the part of his children until the children become sapient? But you heard from me the word of the Apostle: "Reproach, rebuke, urge with the whole long-patience and teaching" (2 Tim. 4: 2). Listen and take heed at the things which I am telling you. The long-patience is the birth-giver of all goods. Think at Moses who better chose "to suffer together with his people than to have the passing sweetness of the sin" (Hebr. 11: 25). Therefore, when the thought from the devil troubles you against some man, you tell that thought to have patience: have I submitted myself to God and still I hit others?[20]. And that thought will leave you alone. You run manly and with strength, remembering my words, or better said the Lord's words, in order you to understand us into Jesus, our Lord. May that be! Amen.

[18] This is not our numbering mistake or our omission of questions-and-answers between 7 and 12. This is what it has been printed like, in the Romanian text. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[19] Abba John came to the monastery for he loved the Great Oldman Barsanuphius, and on John also called as the Prophets, and on Abba Serid. This son is Serid, who served like writer and sender of the letters of Barsanuphius to John.

14. The answer of the same Great Oldman, towards the same brother, for he endured with difficulty to heart one of the brothers saying, in order to humiliate him: And who is this? And what is him upset for?

You tell to your brother: As Michal is judged for the body of Moses (Jude 9), likewise I am fighting for you, until you will be delivered form your former man. But the Jews too murmured against our Savior and told Him: "Isn't this the son of Josephus? Don't we know his mother and his brothers? (Jn. 6: 42; Mt. 13: 55). Think at these and endure it to the end (Mt. 10: 22)[21].

15. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who was still not delivered from his discouragement:

[20] I have obeyed myself to God, fulfilling greater works, but I still get upset when others disobey me in fulfilling these works? Should they be the servants of my commandments?

[21] Michal was fighting the devil for Moses's body, which the devil claimed it for who knows what gossip. The Great Oldman was fighting for Abba John not to fall prey for others' slandering. And who escaped the Jews' slandering? Not even Jesus was spared by them. But the slandering must not become to us a temptation so that we will get upset on those who contrive it.

Tell to your brother: "I remember the prophecy of Jeremiah the Prophet: "Who will give water to my head and spring of tears to my eyes so that I could cry for this people day and night?" (Jer. 9: 1). I expected you to be nourished by the hard food and I am seeing you again needing milk (Hebr. 5: 12). Look at what has been written: "And you clean me of my hidden things" (Ps. 18: 13[22]). Take heed and not allow yourself to be kidnapped by evil dragons and they to spill their venom on you. Because of being bringer of death. This is because one will never correct the good with the evil, because of being conquered by evil. But the evil is being corrected with the good (Rom. 12: 21). Behold, you are in the stadium: you owe to fight the wild beasts, as the Apostle did (1 Cor. 15: 32). For he praised on himself as he defeated the wild beasts. You have been thrown into the storm of the sea in order you to endure many dangers and to fight the fury of the waves. And by being victorious, by the help of God, you will come with us to the shore of the quietude, into Christ Jesus, our Lord Whom to be the glory forever and ever. Amen.

16. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who started to get upset on his brothers, because of some bricks were destroyed by rain. And he blamed the brother for that, because of their carelessness. By knowing in advance that that was to make him thinking bad things about Abba too, he woke him up and he strengthened him up, in advance, against such thoughts, by reminding him also about the true love had by Abba for him, so that the brother could reject by that recall to reject the thought enemy to him.

Do a deed of love, my son, and think at bringing ink and paper and leave for now the answer which you have come to me for, and, firstly, write down a salutation to brother John from my part. This is because he is on the way to get upset on others and to be upset by them. And tell him: Rejoice yourself into our Lord, my brother. The sea's weaves are many, but isn't there anyone to wake Jesus up so that He to rebuke the winds and there to be calm whether, so that they could know Jesus and worship Him? (Mt. 8: 22). If all the things are vain and perishing, why your heart is pushed towards them, so that if forgets the evangelical word: "What would the man benefit if he gained the whole world, but he lost his soul" (Mt. 16: 26). Know this, my brother, that if somebody upset another either with his deed, or with his words, that one will have later a hundredfold annoyance. For many times have been written to you, at my request, the Lord's words from the Scripture, so that you to have long-patience in everything and to take heed at not being your will mixed[23]. But, when you send me some question through my beloved Son Serid, who is always upset because of seeing you upset, force on yourself to keep your thoughts under guard, in order your thoughts not to cast some deadly venom within your heart and so you to reckon the mosquito as a camel and the sand grain as a marketplace. This is because so was the man who had a beam in his eye but he took heed at the straw from another's eye (Mt. 7: 3-5).

I have written you these things as I would have written them to my soul. For I know that your heart will rejoice of them. This is for it is said that: "Rebuke the wise" and the other things (Prov. 9: 8). And, you know, brother, how much I have you into the love of Christ.

I hope that you are, finally, close not to worry anymore about the earthly things, and close to be in the spiritual work of the Fathers. This is for, my Lord Christ won't shame me, for I am praying to Him say and night for you[24].

17. A question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman. Father, I know that this happens to me for my sins; and I know that I am mindless because of my evilness. Ands he who drives me into such a trouble is Abba, for he [23] Not to be our will divides between the good and the evil things, or not to be united with some evil thought, or with some deed unpleasant to God.

[24] One must not make a cause for a bit grief out of any unimportant word or gesture belonging to somebody. The clean life and the ceaseless prayer, unscattered, it gives the saint not the proud certitude as lacking any vibration, that his ask will be fulfilled, but it gives him a strong trust, one that is not void of the continuous tension of the asking, hoping that he will be listened to. There is in prayer a continuous struggle, but a struggle full of hope. There is not absent from it either the hope or the struggle.

doesn't take care and he overlooks the things. And these things are lost because of Abba and I cannot stand that. And what should I do, for I want to gather my thoughts[25], but I am powerless? Forgive me because: "I said once, I won't add it (say it) for the second time" (Job 39: 35). And I wonder about the fact that my love that I had before for my brothers it has diminished. Prayer for me, for the Lord.

Answer: Brother, remember that our Lord told His disciples: "You too are now unskilled?" (Mt. 15: 16). I told you to guard your thoughts. If you toiled to guard your thoughts, you would find out that the power which you have recently written to me about, I showed it to you in a previous letter, and it was no need for you to ask again about that. Still, I am going to add another answer to your question.

But first I am reproaching you. You have called on yourself as sinner, but you do not reckon yourself as such in your deeds. This is because, he who reckons on himself as sinner and as cause of the evil things, he won't resist anyone, he doesn't wage wars, he doesn't get angry against someone, but he will reckon all people as better than he is. And if your thoughts make you say, without joking, that you are a sinner, how come that your thoughts move your heart against them who are better that you are? Take heed, brother, at the fact that this isn't the truth. Therefore, we haven't reached yet to really reckon on ourselves as sinners[26]. That's why, when somebody loves the ones who reproaches him, he proved to be a wise man. But if he says that he loves that one but he doesn't do what that one tells him to do, he rather hates that one. If you are a sinner, [25] Answering the tempting thoughts by refusing to listen to them.

[26] This is a complicated state of the soul: you can say about yourself that you are a sinner, as a joke, or because of a false humbleness. This doesn't mean that we must not tell that we are sinners. But your statement that you are a sinner there must correspond to it an admission, within yourself, that you are a sinner. In other words, this statement must really urge you to overcome your sin. So, when you state that you are a sinner, but you will behave proudly and enviously with others, these behaviors of yours contradict your statement that you are a sinner, for you actually show that you do not reckon on himself as being a sinner. Your real conscience that you are a sinner ought to help you always fight away your evil thoughts. That is a very complex state. He who actually reckon on himself as being a sinner, he will always fight against everything he sees as non-consummated within himself, but on the other hand no man reached to be consummate. A sign that you do not only brag with a false humbleness, it is that of not getting yourself upset when somebody agrees your statement that you are a sinner.

why do you blame him and rebuke him because your trouble has come to you through him? Don't you know that each one is tempted by his own lust? (Jas. 1: 14), and that is what give birth to your trouble? This is what I wrote you about the brothers, not to take the mosquito as a camel and so on. You should rather pray for them to be partakers to you into your fear of God. And when you say about yourself that you are unskillful, do not say it jokingly, but examine on yourself and you will ascertain that you do not reckon as such about yourself. This is because, if you were such, you should not get angry, because you would not be able to discern whether the work has been done well of badly[27]. But he who is unskilled he is stupid. And he who is unskilled and stupid he will be unskilled in his judgments. And how could the unwise to correct and make others wise? Can't you see, brother, that we are speaking jokingly, and only with our mouths, and this is proven by our deeds. That's why when we answer to our thoughts, we have no power, because of firstly accepting to condemn on our brother, so that the power of our ghost weakens[28], and we blame our brother while the culpable are ourselves, actually[29]. If you reckon that everything belongs to God who shares His mercy, and neither to him who wants, not to him who runs (Rom. 9: 16), why can't you understand that, and why you do not love your brother with a consummate love?[30] This is because, there were many who wanted to equal us the Fathers, and they were running on that purpose, but it was not given them to reach us. That's why, because he was unable to succeed, God has sent us to him and God has made him our sincere son. This is for God loves the inward will.

In what regards the word: "I said that once" and so on, if you fight for reaching yourself there, you will be happy. But that hasn't been given to everybody.

[27] You say that you are unskilled, but you say that jokingly. This is because, if you really reckoned on yourself as unskilled, you shouldn't get angry with any of your brothers because of him doing something wrong, because of being you unskillful so that you wouldn't be able to assess whether something has been done well or wrongly.

[28] L. Regnault and Philippe Lemaire translated wrongly the Greek word εκνενρουται as "getting angry".

[29] We won't be able to defeat our own thought once we condemn our brother. Instead, just by doing that, we will strengthen our thoughts.

[30] If everything belong to God, how could we justify the fact that we brag on ourselves and we defame somebody else, because of reckoning him that he impeded from doing our deed?

And regarding the other thoughts of yours, bring to God every one of your thoughts, saying: "God know what is beneficial". And you will have rest. And gradually, it will come to you're the power to endure. Do not cease from saying. And if you say but nobody seems to hear you, neither you find grace (obedience) to your word, you won't get sad. But you will benefit even more of that.

And regarding the things which you wonder about, the consummate love doesn't fall, and he who has achieved the consummate love he will remain warm by being locked into his love for God and for his neighbor.

As about the prayer which you have written about, at the end, be satisfied with the word which I have written to you, for I am praying for you to God ceaselessly, day and night. So, you have asked, uselessly, for this one too. So, you have from me that nourishment according to God, for a log time from now on. Persevere and wait for the Lord, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom is due the glory forever. Amen.

18. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who asked him where are coming from the warmth and the coldness and the callousness of the heart; and about the bodily war.

About warmth and coldness, it is a known fact that our Lord was called as fire that warms up and sets in fire our heart and entrails (Ps. 7: 9[31]; 35: 2[32]). If it is so, that you will reckon the devil as coldness, and all the coldness as coming from him. If it hadn't been so, how would our Lord have said that "then the love of many will get cold" (Mt. 24: 12)? And what would have meant "then" if it hadn't been about the times of the enemy? So, when we feel the coldness, let's call on God and He will come and warm up our heart towards loving Him and our neighbor with a consummate love. And by being His warmth present, the coldness of the hater-of-the-good will be banished away from us. And when this one has dried up the spring of the tears from your heart, he has filled up that spring from under your belly. But received the Lord in your house and He will dry up the last spring and he will clean up the spring of your tears so that to flow out of it the spiritual water[33]. He who wants to come to the fear of God, he will come through persevering waiting[34]. This is for it is said: "Waiting, I have been waiting for the Lord and He has looked at me and he has listened to my ask" (Ps. 39: 2[35]). And what he added to that? - "He has brought me out of the pit of my wickedness and out of the mud" (Ps. 39: 3[36]). And through this pit we also understand the heart's callousness. So, if you have achieved what you desired for, you will be saved by into the Lord.

19. The Answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, whoa sked the Oldman about the long-patience.

Tell to our brother: I wrote you before, about the long-patience. And now I am telling you: "Behold, I have given you power to step over snakes and shrews and over all the power of the enemy. And nothing will harm you" (Lk. 10: 19). Therefore, you make yourself like Job did by drinking the mockery as one drinks the water" (Job 34: 7). Do these things and be always cogitating at them.

[33] The body gets stronger when the spiritual life gets diminished – whose essence is constituted by the love for Christ, a love that is born out of feeling His presence and the communion with Him. And the full-of-vigor body becomes the source of other sorts of leakages. The heart's tears are the sign that the man is not alone, but he feels Christ our Lord within himself.

[34] He who doesn't wait, patiently, for the Lord, he is agitated. He will forget about fearing the Lord.

[35] In KJB we have: Ps. 40: 1: "I WAITED patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry."; in ROB we have: Ps. 39: 102: "Waiting, I have been waiting for the Lord and He has leaned towards me // He has heard by ask." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[36] In KJB we have: Ps. 40: 2: "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 40: 2: (…, see above) "He has brought me out of the pit of the wickedness and out of the mud." (E. l. t.'s n.)

20. The answer of the same Great Oldman addressed to the same brother, who asked him: If God gave him power to step over snakes and shrews, why would he still get troubled?[37]

He who has received power for stepping over snakes and shrews, he will no longer be harmed by those. So, you search your heart in front of each thing and if that thing still can trouble your heart, even for a little, you will know that you are still far from having received power over those ones, and to you won't be careless lest some instant to be stolen from you[38]. But regardless what thing you see – and I am not telling you here only about the things from within world, which are passing, but either in heavens of on earth – bring it in front of God and let His judgment be in front of your eyes. And think at the fact that we have little time to spend within world. And do so, in order the gentleness to dwell within your heart, by remembering Christ, the without-evilness Lamb; how many he suffered, while being innocent: reproaches, beating, and other things. And we, despite we are guilty for the fact that we start against our neighbor, while our neighbor doesn't' do anything against us? Remember that the love doesn't get haughty, but it manifests long-patience, and the other things (1 Cor. 13: 4). And pray to reach the things in front of you, so that your toil won't be futile. Stick yourself with Christ Who loved us. His to be the glory, forever. Amen.

21. The answer of the same Great Oldman addressed to the same brother, urging him not to command anything to anybody, but to decide as lipid rule to take care only of himself.

Brother, the more things I write to you, the more you must strive to understand the things written to you, and do not disregard them. This is for those things are told towards the knowledge and towards the good-settlement of the soul.

[37] Why doesn't he last in the state of lack of temptations? Why does ne move against that one?

[38] In the Greek text: "Lest the time will go before you", namely not to let is escape from under your mastery even for an instant; in order not to happen to you that what wasn't under your attention. Not to be stolen, by the devil, the time from the moments given to you towards your growth.

Let yourself know, brother, that if somebody cannot stand the reproaches, he won't see the glory, and if somebody doesn't reject the bitterness of the anger, he won't taste the sweetness. You have been appointed in the middle of the brothers and of the things in order you to burn and to be tested. This is for the gold must be tried in fire (1 Pt. 1: 7). Do not keep anything for yourself, because by doing that you will come to war and to worries. But you must judge the things of the time according to the fear of God and do nothing with a spirit of strife (Phil. 2: 3). Do everything you can in order to estrange on yourself from anger and be useful example to everybody, by not judging anybody, neither condemning anyone, but by advising them as on some true brothers. This is for I loved too them who were tempting me. This is for, if we think good things about them, these ones will help us to advance. Do not impose any rule to yourself[39]. Be obedient and humble, and hold yourself accountable about what you have done on each day, for the Prophet by explaining the word "on each day" he said: "And I said: I have started now" (Ps. 76: 10[40])[41]. And Moses says: "And now, Israel" (the Second Law 4: 1). Therefore, you too keep the "now"[42].

And if it is imposed to you the need for commanding something to somebody, you must probe your thought, whether it will move some disturbance. And if your thought doesn't seem beneficial, you will hide your thought under your tongue, by [39] Do not say: I will forgive that much, or I will obey up to that limit.

[40] In KJB we have: Ps. 77: 10: "And I said, This is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High."; in ROB we have: Ps. 76: 10: "And I said: Not I have started to understand; this is the change of the right hand of the All-High." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[41] The poet Charles Pegui spoke about "l'éternel commencement". Each time I travel the same road I will think at something else. No moment is like another. Kierkegaard spoke about the novelty of each moment ("der Augenblick"). One can generalize this: the man is always new, for the personal spirit is always new. But the personal spirit will be a truly a new one, when stopes wallowing in his passions.

[42] Do not let any "now" to pass unused. Kierkegaard asked us not to postpone what we are askes to do in this moment, or otherwise we will get accustomed to constantly postpone. Do the good deed required from you by the moment, right on that moment. Reconcile yourself with your brother, while you still are on the way. The whole time and space are imprinted by a moral imperative. The fact that each moment of the time and of the person has its uniqueness, it shows that neither the moments of the time nor the accomplishments of the person are destined to melt down in an indistinct essence, but they will have their prolonged and unique echo as reward or as condemnation in the person's eternity. But we also must see what is inappropriate to do in this moment, so that we should wait for another moment. This is helped by the discernment.

remembering Him Who said: "What would the man benefit if he gained the whole world but he will lose his own soul"" (Mt. 16: 26). Brother, you must learn that every thought that ash within is the renunciation to humbleness, it is not according to God, but it is proven to be from those from the left side. And even if your thoughts seem dressed up in ship skins, they will be unveiled, because of the disturbance they cause, that they are "ravening wolves" (Mt. 7: 15). This is for he says: "Out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 16). May God give understanding to all of us, so that we won't be deluded by their justice. This is for "to Him all the things are naked and unveiled" (Hebr. 4: 13).

Therefore, you my beloved one, make everything succeed with your hands, by placing before your eyes your fear of God. And you thank Him. For His is the glory and the honor forever. Amen.

22. The answer of the same Great Oldman addressed to the same brother, full of comforting and or advice, for the brother to turn himself back to the spiritual gladness, by leaving the discouragement caused him by diverse happenings.

Write to brother John a spiritual advice, which to gladden his heart into Christ Jesus our Lord. And tell him: "because you long for us, "like the stag desires the water springs" (Ps. 41: 1[43]) – but not so much as we desire you – and because of no longer being able to endure that, as the godlike Apostle Paul says (1 Thes. 3: 5), I have written to your love these sayings of ours, batter said of God. May your life bring fort grapes, which, when trampled, to produce you the spiritual wine, in order to gladden your troubled soul. May your field bring forth, abundantly, one a hundred, one sixty, and one thirty (Mt. 4: 8). And may your heart be warmed up forever by that fire which our Master Jesus Christ said about: "I have come to throw a fire on earth" (Lk. 12: 49). May the peace of the Lord be mastering your heart, according to the Apostle's word (Col. 3: 15). And may your date-palm raise with its branches, according to David who says: "The righteous one will flourish like the date-palm" (Ps. 91: 13[44]). May yourself be cleaned up of your anger and of the wrath of your passions, as the consummate saints are, whom by no means is manifested in the movement of passions, not even an instantly leaning towards any passion. And may your soul be found worthy of dwelling into righteousness and gentleness, so that you will be a good food to Christ, as an innocent lamb. May you be walking on our traces as a sapient descendant, and may you be raised at our canon as a good inheritor of my charismas. May your eyes see God, for you have reached clean in heart (Mt. 5: 8). Be long-patient in your troubles, as one who has known the promise of the Master who says: "Within world, you will have troubles, but dare, for I have defeated the world" (Jn. 16: 33). May you reach the undefeatable love that introduce them who have achieved it in the imperial courts and it make them brothers of Jesus[45]. Suffer together with Christ in order you to be glorified together with Him (Rom. 8: 17). By doing so, you won't disregard the treasure that stays in front of you[46]. But until know you have not known its meaning, or what it is. But when you will have reached the consummate quietude, you will

[44] In KJB we have: Ps. 92: 12: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon."; in ROB we have: Ps. 91: 12: "The righteous one will flourish like the date-palm and like that cedar from Lebanon will he multiply." (E. l. t.'s n.)
(Editor's note: In text there is no a 27b footnote, but it may be introduced in the next edition of The Romanian Philokalia). This is a beautiful application of the idea of food, to us, of the Lamb Christ. Each gentle human being is a truly a nourishment fill of sweetness for his fellow humans. But only united with Christ in His self-sacrifice, the man is able too to become such a gentle lamb, sweet to eat, and thus sweetening the life of the one who eats him.

[45] Jesus has made on Himself our brother, through the love that urged Him to make on Himself man and to receive the death in order to elevate us to the eternal and happy communion with Himself, into the Kingdom where we are going to be sons of the heavenly Father and brothers of Jesus. And the eternal Father created us and He made His Son man, in order to extend His love, the love of a Father, also over other sons of His. We live our brotherhood with Christ and our quality as sons of the heavenly Father, answering that love of Theirs and also by loving ourselves, the people, with Their love. In the Kingdom of God, God will not be a Master of ours, but God will be our Father and our Brother. In the Kingdom of God there will reign the love between God and us, and among all of us as brothers of Christ and sons of the heavenly Father.

[46] The treasure staying in front of us is the love of Christ and all His goods which He gives them to us too. One cannot know this treasure except by reaching the consummate quietude, namely when ceasing to worry about the passing and narrow things of this world. We will reach that love after being able, at our turn, to die to the world that narrows us, us to die for Christ as He dies for us.

know that treasure[47] and you will wonder about the gift from Christ. But how impenetrable are His ways! (Rom. 11: 33). Until you are with the people, you won't be able to understand those ways. But when you are without worries, as we are, then you will understand what I am telling you now. That's why I pray God, day and night (2 Tim. 1: 3), for you too to be there where we are, for you too to be in the same feeling with us, into the untold joy of the saints and into the eternal light, so that you too to find you part in what has been promised to the saints, "into the things which the eye hasn't seen and which the ear hasn't heard, and which haven't ascended to the heart of the man, which God has prepared to them who love Him". Strengthen on yourself, into the Lord; rejoice. Amen.

23. Question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman: Please, Father and Teacher, do not get upset because of me, because of my mistakes, and please give me a canon (a rule) on how I must use the psalmody, the fasting, and the prayer. And please tell me whether I must do differently according to the day.

Answer: Brother, if you paid attention to the words of your asks, you would have the power to understand them. If you reckon me as Father and Teacher, how will you think that I can get upset with you? This is for the Father is lenient and he doesn't allow on himself by any means to be dominated by annoyance, and the Teacher is long-patient and stranger to any annoyance.

And regarding the rule which you have asked me about, many are the ways which one can enter the narrow gate thought, to the eternal resting. Behold, our Lord Christ tells you, briefly, how you must enter. Leave the rules of the people and listen to Him Who says: "he who endures to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). So, if the man is impatient, he won't enter the life. Therefore, do not ask for a commandment, for I do not want you to be under the law, but I want you to be under [47] Only by dying to the sinful egotism, the man crosses into the infinitely wide life of the love, into the true life. And by feeling that he has everything, the man will no longer be agitated, by peaceful.

the grace[48]. This is for it was said: "To the right one there is no law" (1 Tim. 1: 9). And we want you to be with the righteous ones. Keep the right-reckoning, while steering your ship, as a helmsman, among the waves. When you are sick, keep doing what I have written to you, according to your health condition. And when you are healthy, adapt those also according to your condition. This is because, when the body gets sick, it doesn't' ask food as usually. So, neither in this regard must one keep a certain rule.

And regarding the days, you will have all of them equally holy and good. So, you do all the things wisely and thus you will reach that life into Christ Whom is due the glory forever. Amen.

24. Because a difference of opinion occurred between Abba and him regarding a certain place form the Scripture, and both of them fighting for long-patience, the Oldman sent them this answer which he showed them in that the long-patience is lacking any disturbance. This was in order they to always guard their non-disturbance in a consummate manner.

My beloved son, do not reckon that you understood by yourselves the chapter from yesterday, form the Epistle of Apostle Paul addressed to Thessalonians. That's why I, by knowing the weakness of your patience, or the fact that your patience is mixed with annoyance, I have been praying to God for you to understand this chapter. Of this consists all the meaning of the letters written through you to brother John.

In addition to that, please take heed also at the chapters you are going to read today form the Apostle Paul and from the Holy Gospel, for they have the same meaning. Read those for three times, examining the meanings of their words, for your souly benefit. This is for I bear you very much within my soul and I am taking care of you, according to the will of God. Therefore, strive with me and fight together in order to cut off from you the annoyance and the anger. This is for this is needed for the battle fought with the help from God.

[48] He who believed in Christ, he will receive the grace as power of His love, the grace giving him also the power of that love that I not narrowed by the law. And he who loves, he will be also strong and free and in eternal advancement. Such a person fulfills all the good for the love for Christ, for Christ likes the good. And Christ is the One Who give the man wings of freedom.

Behold these chapters:

From the first one towards Thessalonians, from: "I pray you, brothers, to recognize them who toil among you and who lead you into the Lord" (1 Thes. 5: 13), and until the end of the epistle.

From the first one towards Corinthians, from: "And regarding the spiritual gifts, I do not want you, brothers, to be in nescience: you know that while you were pagans" (1 Cor. 12: 1-2), until: "But I want to speak in the Church five words with my mind, in order to teach others, rather than ten thousand of words with the tongue" (1 Cor. 14: 19).

From the Gospel according to Matthew, from: "Going Jesus out He saw many people and He felt mercy on them and He healed their sick ones" (Mt. 14: 14), until: "And those who were in the ship bowed down before Him, saying: "Verily You are the Son of God" (Mt. 14: 33).

25. The answer of the same one towards the same brother and Abba who suddenly wanted to tighten the rule of the brothers.

I am telling you too, my son, and to the brother too, that I wrote you before, about the long-patience. And I am telling you now too: "squeeze the milk and it will become butter; but if you squeeze the tit with your hand there will come out blood" (Prov. 30: 33). And Saint Paul says: "I have made myself Jew to the Jews in order to gain the Jews" (1 Cor. 9: 20) and so on. Then he says: "I have made myself everything to everybody, that o any way to save some of them" (1 Cor. 9: 22). If somebody wants to bend a three, or a vine, he will bend that gradually and it won't break. But if he pulls it suddenly, the wood will break immediately. You must understand what I am telling you[49].

26. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who discovered certain things which the Oldman commanded him not to tell anybody about, and that's why he fell into temptation. And about the consummate long-patience.

[49] It is recommended not to be set to the beginners in the spiritual life a too harsh rule.

Tell to our brother: “If somebody doesn’t have the Ghost of Christ, that one won’t be His” (Rom. 8: 9). Take heed where these thoughts came to you from, which ceaselessly upset you. Isn’t that because of your transgression of my command that has become a habit to you? Because I often commanded you not to tell the mystery to anyone, but you instead heralded to many. Am I Christ Who, when He commanded somebody not to talk about certain deed of His, then the word about that deed was heralded to peoples and to everybody (Mt. 7: 36)? Still, the will of Christ is not that of hitting the neighbor, for He has come to save the people with much gentleness and sweetness. This is because if the man doesn’t become like an unimportant little piece, he won’t be able to live together with the people[50]. Look at what Christ says to His disciples: “Not you have been the ones choosing Me, but I have chosen you” (Jn. 15: 16). So, if you ask us with love from God and not from people, you will strive to achieve long-patience[51]. This is for I wrote you yore: “into your patience you will gain your souls” (Lk. 21: 19). Therefore, set another beginning in preserving and in guarding the things I told you[52]. This is for it is not yet the time to unveil those[53]. Be courageous into the Lord!

[50] Christ has made on Himself to us as an example of delicacy. And the saints are the most resembling to Him. This is the positive power of the humbleness. This gives others the whole freedom in their manifestation. The saint reckons about himself as being an unimportant little piece among others.

[51] If Christ has chosen us, then when somebody chooses us in order to help him with the advice and with the deed, God will be the One choosing us through that person. But that person too must realize this fact and to listen to what we are telling him, for we are chosen through Him by God Himself on his behalf. On this is founded the delicacy of the reports among people and the reciprocal responsibility for one another. God hasn’t chosen us only to be, but He has chosen us to be one for another. I am respecting you, for thought you there is Christ Who appeals me; and you are respecting me, for I have been chosen by Christ on your behalf. I must be patient in listening to your request and in fulfilling your request with responsibility; but you must also be patient in listening to my advices and in responsibly fulfilling them.

[52] Patience means reckoning that each instant is given to us for a new beginning as we wouldn’t have done anything until now. Thus, we can be always new in taking heed at what we are asked on each instant and not to become heavy to listening and to fulfilling the commandment on each instant. We are in an eternal novelty, one that is, in the same time, a ceaseless growth, but we must not present that, proudly, to others. But what we must fulfill on each moment, we can also find that from the advices of our spiritual fathers.

[53] By telling to other too, before the right time, the things you have been recommended to do, you risk make those trivial; you risk those not to be understood by others, because those things are not given for them in their present condition, and they will superfluously perceive those and that will make you reckon those things as less important. You will be able to

27. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who got saddened by the fact that the Oldman forgot about writing him, so that the brother thought that the Oldman forgot him.

Write immediately to our brother, by firstly showing my joy, my gladness, and my embracing into the Lord. And tell him: Do not reckon, my beloved one, that I have forgotten to remember you within my heart, because I was late in writing you back. But, by taking heed at your behavior, I have prolonged my patience until now. Be entrusted that, as our God doesn't forget to have mercy on the world, neither I will forget about your love, but I pray to God night and day for the salvation of your soul, in order you to reach the measures which I showed you in the previous letters.

And you must also find out that, when you leave for serving the monastery, there always go with you my heart with the benevolence of God. Therefore, do not discourage yourself, my brother. For I hope you will reach to rejoice of all the things I have written you. This is for God doesn't lie when saying: "he who endures to the end, that one will be saved" (Mt. 10; 22). You think at the things I have told you and at the tasks you have to accomplish. "This is for through many troubles we have to enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Acts 14: 23). Rejoice, therefore, into the Lord, and I am saying you again: rejoice (Phil. 4: 4). Let no one known your secret. This is for it was written: "And these words seemed to them as a nonsense" (Lk. 24: 11)[54].

beneficially unveil those things to others after you have grown in fulfilling them, in order to irradiate out of you the force of your consummation which you have been elevated to by practicing the things commanded to you. But also, after the people whom you are telling about those secret things, they have grown up as well, they will be able to fulfill those things at their turn. That's why Christ could tell strong things to others, but He forbid those to further communicate what He told them, before themselves to be elevated to the power of exemplifying those things by their own life.

[54] He urged not to unveil, to the unprepared ones, the secret that one reaches the eternal happiness through troubles, or the of-life-bringer mystery of the cross. "This is because the word of the cross is insanity to the mortals" (1 Cor. 1: 18). The mystery of the suffering that ennobles cannot be understood except by those who have got thinned through spiritual experiences.

This is because if somebody has not a strong heart, he won't be able to bear those[55].

28. He thought to set to himself, as a rule, not to go anywhere during the fasting days, but the Oldman stopped him from doing that, lest, by occurring some need sent by God, him to go out and to get sad as one who has transgressed that rule.

Tell to our brother: Haven't you heard from me that anywhere you will go and anything you will do for God, my heart goes with you? Neither now, my brother, as you heard before, do not set any rule to yourself. And if you leave the monastery when a blessed need occurs, do not get sad in your thoughts. Please understand the meaning of the things written to you by me. And work thus, and you will have resting. Peace to you from me, better said from God[56].

29. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, by which the Oldman strengthen the brother's faith into the things promised to him, and the Oldman elevates the brother through this entrustment to an even greater zeal.

The resting and all the good gifts and all the godlike charisma come to the man through faith. So, do not be insensitive at the power coming to you on every day, from God, through my humbleness[57]. And find out that we wondered a lot [55] A strong heart consists of enduring the troubles while remaining in love for those who defame you; a strong heart consists of the perseverance to be sweet to those who give you to drink the cup of the bitterness.

[56] Barsanuphius constantly asked the addressee not to enslave himself to some rule given once for all. But he asked him to work, on each time, as the circumstances will tell him as it is useful. The freedom in good, this is the recommendation. The man must not fence on himself by adopting any rule of a formal repetition.

[57] Every gift from God comes through faith. But this means, in the same time, to believe him who assures you about that gift that will come to you from God. The faith in God doesn't exclude but it actually implied the faith into the man who urges you to faith, especially what that man confirms his sayings with his way of living. Within such a man God is present and working. It is required a great trust into the spiritual fathers.

about your coming to us[58]. So, you must run towards the things from ahead of you, in order "to take those things" (1 Cor. 9: 24). And always remember where God has got you out from. And let's thank God for everything, by praying you to God for Him to fulfill His mercy in all things. Amen.

30. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, whoa sked him if he should leave, on a ship, with the brothers, in order to find some manual labor in Egypt. The brother was hesitating because both him and the other brothers didn't know the sea and the places.

Tell to our brother: "As long as you are outside, you must toil for God together with your brothers. So, place in front of your eyes the troubles of the Apostles. This is for "he who endures to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22), into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

31. Because of wandering much in Egypt before finding some manual labor to do, and because of enduring many and diverse hardships and troubles, Abba Jon got discouraged. The Oldman foresaw all those things with his ghost, and he prepared, in advance, an answer to Abba John, with the following content:

Write down, my sons, the things I am telling you, better said God is telling them, and prepare them to send them to brother John[59]: in the first place, my salutation to him into the Lord. Then tell him: You are getting discouraged into troubles as a bodily man, as if you haven't heard that troubles are waiting for you as the Ghost told Paul too (Acts 20: 23), while [58] The addressee asked, as we saw at the beginning of the present Letters, to be permitted to come and live into monastery. That was done by the will of God. He was then serving the monastery by being sent with diverse missions to diverse places.

[59] It is about the same Abba John who cam to monastery and who went to diverse places for the monastery's needs. He was like an administrator of the monastery, who was supervising some works done within the monastery and who was also going out for procuring the things needed by the monastery. He was coordinated by Abba Seric, the hegumen of the monastery. But he was not the same with John the Prophet, the other Oldman, who was also living locked up in his monastic cell. On this Abba John the Great Oldman called him "brother", as he also called Serid as "son".

Paul was comforting those who were with him on that ship, urging them to be in good spirit (Acts 27; 22). "Don't you know that many are the troubles of the righteous"? (Ps. 33: 19[60]) and that in troubles the man is tested as by fire? So, if we are righteous, we will accept to be tested in troubles. And if we are sinners, we will endure the troubles as ones who are worthy of those. This is for the tribulation works (produces) patience. Let's think at all the saints since the beginning and see how many troubles they have been enduring. This is because by doing the good and by speaking the good and by persevering into truth, the saints have been hated by people and persecuted by people until their death, while they have been praying for their enemies and for their persecutors, according to the word of the Savior (Mt. 5: 44). Have you been sold as the righteous Josephus was? Have your hands slaved to baskets (Ps. 80: 6[61])? Have you descended twice in the pit (Genesis 37: 24; 40: 15)? Or, have you been persecuted like Moses was, since his childhood to his old age (Hebr. 11: 25)? What have you endured, you the lazy one? Or, have you been persecuted like David was, by Saul, and by his own son, but he still cried when those ones died (2 Kings[62] 1: 11-27; 18: 33)? Or, have you been thrown into the sea as Jonah was (Jonah 1: 15)? You the forgetful one and our beloved one, why is your thought weakening? Do not fear and do not tremble, like one who lacks his manhood, so that you won't miss the promise of God. Do not be scared like a non-believer, but you must encourage your of-little-faith thoughts. You must love the troubles in all things, so that you to become an experiences son of the saints. Remember Job's patience, and the patience of those who followed to him and you must crave for walking on their traces. Remember the dangers, the troubles, the chains, the hunger, and the multitude of other evil things endured by Paul (2 Cor. 11: 24-27) and you tell to your fear: I am a stranger to you! Remember him who wrote: whether you succeed or not in the work staying in front of you, you must thank God. You must thing that the things are corruptible and perishable. And the patience according to God will save him who has gained it.

[60] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 19: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 18: "Many are the troubles of the righteous and out of all those the Lord will deliver them" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[61] In KJB we have: Ps. 81: 6: "I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands were delivered from the pots."; in ROB we have: Ps. 80: 5: "I have taken away the burden from on his shoulders, for his hands slaved to baskets." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Behold, you are striving to bring some manual labor and to work. In order to show you that, according to Apostles' word, the success doesn't depend "either on him who want or on him who runs, but on God Who has mercy" (Rom. 9: 16), behold that God sends us people who have the things necessary to the world[63]. By receiving those, do not tell them that I spoke something about them, so that they won't fall into the vain-glory[64]. Love them as on some true brothers, and you make your thought to rest their thoughts[65]. This is for they despise the world in order to save their souls. And God brings them through me – for I am writing with foreknowing -, to you, in order you to find out that they despised the world very much. You, therefore, my brother, by being upheld by my hand, you must walk on the narrow and full of troubles path, that one that leads us to Christ Jesus our Lord Who to be the glory forever. Amen.

32. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who asked him if he must eat differently and not to go out on Wednesday and on Friday at the Holy Impartation; and whether he must stop from taking care of his work; and whether he must use some healing means if it happened to him to get ill during his ascesis; and he asked for being given commandments for his salvation.

I do not want your love not to know about the benefaction coming to you from the loving-of-people God. This is for, behold, [63] Are not us who find them who come to God, but God send them to us. And they are converted through God.

[64] I.e. the addressee not to tell to those people who were coming to him, that the Oldman told him something about them, so that they won't imagine about themselves as being very important, and that's why the Oldman spoke about them. It is good that the one who is drawn to faith to know that God d did that, so that he won't fall into the imagination that he is more important than other people. The spiritual life is a continuous oscillation between the contrary realities.

[65] We can rest on one another through thoughts, as we also can disturb on one another. Better said, both the resting and the disturbance always come to some people through other people. So, it is a duty of ours to rest on others, and we owe gratitude to those from around us when they rest us, as also we must feel ourselves guilty when the people next to us are not rested.

the labor pains (of the birth-giving) have reached you[66]. For Jesus has started to work together with you and to bring you, according to the rule, to His blesses peace, to that patience that doesn't get shamed[67]. And even if some weakness or some illness will come upon you, you will direct the whole your hope towards God and you will get resting. This is for I trust my God that you are not far from the way of God.

Regarding the different food you would eat while sitting into your monastic cell, it will be useful and helpful to you. And if there occurs some occasion which you have to eat with your brothers on, do not hesitate, neither eat to much, but gradually narrow your desire.

But do not stop yourself from Impartation as long as you enter and come out, because otherwise you will cause offence to others.

And take heed at doing you sitting in humbleness, and in fear of God, and with non-hypocritical love. Build up your house on hard and steadfast rock; "And the rock if Christ" (1 Cor. 10: 4).

And other commandments aren't necessary to you now. Are enough to you the things written to you, until now, on my behalf. Those are sufficient to bring the former man to the consummate man. You must cogitate at those and remember them and do not forget them. This is for they comprise the whole Scripture. Strengthen on yourself into the Lord, by always preserving the humble-cogitation in words, in deeds, and in movements.

33. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, because his brother according to the body was thinking to withdraw himself form the monastic life and he asked the Oldman about that through his brother.

[66] The sign of the benefactions coming from God to that man who has started walking on the road to spiritualization, it is that one that troubles have started for him. That means that God trusts the man can endure those troubles.

[67] That peace achieved by the spiritual man against the worldly worries, it actually is the work of Christ, or the work into Christ Who we have everything into. And Christ bring that man to that peace, by dwelling Himself within that man, but not without the man crossing through e patient heroism of the cross, one that implicitly is also in the peace from Christ. The ascesis is Christocentric.

Our Lord Jesu Christ said: "Nobody will come to me if the heavenly Father doesn't attract him", and: "I am going to resurrect him on the judgment day", and: "I will show Myself to him" (Jn. 6: 44; 14: 21). And: "Look at the wheatfields that are white and ready for harvesting and he who harvest will receive payment and he gathers fruits towards the eternal life, in order him to rejoice together with him who reaps and with him who sows". This is for in this is proven the word that "somebody else is him who sows and somebody else is him who reaps" (Jn. 4: 35-37).

Brother, nobody will sleep if he wants to enter the city; and nobody will be lazy when seeing the sun, if he wants to work; but him who wants to enter the city quickens up his steps, instead of waling more slowly; and he who sees the sun starts working fearing of being impeded soon; and he who wants to work his field hurries up not to be his crop harmed by tares. He who has ears to hear, let him hear[68].

34. When the brother came to him for the second time, he was worried about his salvation and he reminded him about the previous promise. And that one asked to be given a sign from the Oldman, about that. And the Oldman told him the followings:

Regarding the brother whom you have told me about, he is warred by faithlessness. And this is the Pharisaic heresy. About these ones the Lord said: "This generation asks for a sign but they won't be given a sign" (Lk. 11: 29). I have nothing to tell him except what the Apostle said: "The old things have passed, behold, everything has been renewed" (2 Cor. 5: 17). And: "Now Israel" (The Second Law 4: 1). And: "Do not tempt your Lord God" (The Second Law 6: 16). And again: "If you hear [68] He who gets accustomed to postpone, he will escape this habit with difficulty. He who stops climbing, he will fall, in the same instant, lower than he is. Nobody stays except he who ceaselessly climbs. This is an idea developed by Saint Gregory of Nyssa. Stopping because of laziness it will cause a certain palsy to the soul's powers. He who cedes himself to the laziness, he will become laziness's slave, and he will weaken his own freedom or his control over himself. You are yourself when controlling on yourself. In Greek the freedom is also called as self-control (αυτεζουσιον). We could lose a man if we didn't help him when he needed our help. Each instance imposes us a duty for eternity, a duty that you cannot fulfill it in another life. Each moment is given to us, as totally unique, from God. Each moment is important for eternity.

His voice today, you won't harden your heart" (Ps. 94: 8[69]). He who has ears, let him hear[70].

35. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the one who asked him about the brothers who are helpless with their body and about others who are helpless within their thinking: must him take them to himself? And must him tell Abba to ease the beginner a little from taking vigil? And about his long silence.

My brother, the answer to the three thoughts of yours is one: do not force the will of somebody, but you must sow with hope. This is for our Lord forced nobody, but he preached. And if somebody wanted to listen to Him, he listened. I know that you know that I do not disregard or despise your love. But the patience is very useful. This is for when we pray and God is late to listen to us, He does that for our benefit, in order us to get accustomed to the long-patience. So, let's not get discouraged, by saying that we have prayed by God hasn't listened to us. This is for God know what is beneficial to the man. Rejoice into our Lord, my brother, and be worriless in everything. And pray for me, you whom I love, and who are of-one-soul with me[71].

[69] In KJB we have: Ps. 95: 7-8: "For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. Today if ye will hear his voice, // Harden not your heart, as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 94: 7-9: "For He is our God and we are the people of His pasture and the sheep of His hands // Oh, if you could hear His voice that says: "Do not harden your hearts, // As in the day of the examining, as in the day of the temptation into wilderness." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[70] Here we have the same idea as in the previous answer. He who ascends, he does that for he hears the voice of the Lord calling him. He who gets accustomed not to pay the due attention to the Lord's commandment immediately when he hears that commandment, and he waits for being told for the second time, namely to be him given a clearer sign, he will gradually lose the sensitiveness of his heart. He will start getting blunt, to getting spiritually sclerotic. He starts to no longer be alive; he starts dying. He falls from the feeling of the godlike plan that makes him free, i.e. the vibrant plan of the Ghost, on that plan of the nature's automatism, and he will stop being himself. Here is being affirmed the importance itself of the "now" and of the "today", the importance of fulfilling in this moment what God asks us. Each moment is given to us in order us to fill it up with the fulfillment of our duty related to it, in order to imprint in it that what God Himself tells us in it, namely what is out duty in that moment.

[71] Persevering in climbing towards God doesn't mean forcing on each moment to fulfill some deed for somebody, or always waiting for the result of a prayer for that person. God wants us to get accustomed to be patient. Sometimes, the continuity of the climbing consists of the continuity of our prayer for others and of not weakening in waiting for the result. The prayer and the patience can uphold, together, the continuous climbing and a ceaseless tension, as a warmth that, if gets cold, it will be rekindled only with much difficulty.

36. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, which he allows him through, to start his appeasement liberated from all worry; and also, the answer to the thought the brother said it came to him in the last moment; and also, to the question whether he did good by tarried together with some of the Fathers, dialoguing with him.

Brother, listen to me for I love you into Christ. Our Lord Jesus Christ said about the monastic cell: "There comes the time, and it is now, when the dead will hear the voice of the Sn of God and they who will hear they will resurrect. This is for as the Father has life into Himself, so He has given to His Son to have live into Himself" (Jn. 5: 25-26).

And I am telling you that the time of your entrance, with the help of God, it is now, so you must build u your new monastic cell. Enter it, by having God as your guide, and you will dwell into that monastic cell, and you will no longer worried about anything. This is for the need of the things and the temptation uphold on one another. And the thought sown within you is useless, and it even brings with itself the vain-glory, because who doesn't know that we are at the end of the time?[72]

And about dialogues, when you see yourself feeling the urge to speak about God, find out that the silence is mode wonderful and more honored than the speaking[73]. So, there is nothing more you would need me to write you about. This is because I have written you from alpha to omega, as you love knows it well. I am leaving you with God, for His are the help and the mercy. Amen.

[72] Any moment can be our last moment. In this sense, let's think that any hour can be the last hour of our dead-life and the hour of our wakening up from death to life, if we hear the voice of Him Who is able to wake our responsible conscience up, to make us waken, so that us to realize that we exist. And if we do not open the ear of our soul to this voice now, we will get accustomed to never hear it again. So, we will remain forever in death, making out of this moment, on the opposite, our last moment. He who enters the "monastic cell", or the sensitive intimacy with God, by detaching himself from the dead things, he lived in that moment, and he will have been living the whole time he remains in that state, the last hour in a good sense.

[73] God is above word. The main fact is to feel God's presence as an above-word power. And to feel it strongly through the responsibility waken up and upheld by God within you.

37. A certain layman, who loved Christ, he sent a message to be Abba John asked about a thing, and Abba John answered his message. But after that, Abba John felt sorry because of doing that, so that he unveiled what he did to the Great Oldman, telling him: "Forgive me, for I am drunk, and I do not know what I am doing".

I am telling you for many times: "Let the dead to bury their dead" (Lk. 9: 60). Aren't you disgusted still, because of their bad smell? Take heed at what you are saying. This is because you do not know what you are saying. This is because the drunk one is mocked by the people, he is hit, he is despised. He doesn't honor except on himself, he doesn't teach others, he doesn't advise on anything, he doesn't discern between good and evil. If you say one with your mouth but you show something different with your deed, you will speak into nescience. Do not let yourself to be caught by sleep, lest to come, to your ears, suddenly, the shouting: "Behold, the Bridegroom is coming, get out and welcome Him" (Mt. 25: 6), and you to say then: "I am busy". God have made you worriless, but you do not want that. God has taken away from you your worries, but you still entangle on yourself among them. God has rested you, but you want to get tired again. It is the time of the end, for you to weep and to cry for your sins. Remember that Christ told us about that gate that it will be locked (Mt. 25: 10). Horry up, not to remain outside together with the crazy virgins. Remove your thought from this vain world to the age to come. Leave the earthly realities and search for the heavenly realities. Leave the corruptible things and you will find the incorruptible realities. Run away with your thought from the temporary things and you will encounter the eternal realities. Die consummately, in order you to survive consummately into Christ Jesus our Lord[74] Whom is due the glory forever and ever. Amen.

[74] Only him who dies consummately to the former man - to that man who was spiritually dead, and who was tied to the passing things, and submitted to their narrowness, and therefore submitted to all sorts of impediments in his relations with his fellow humans -, only him can enter a life that is: non-narrowed, non-darkened, unimpeded, free and fully communicative, good and generous in the relationships with others, relationships strengthened by the non-narrowed relationship with the Subject of extreme freedom and infinite kindness. Whom has remained sleeping in the chains of the narrow and passing preoccupations, it remains him locked up the gate of the entrance to the life that is nourished out of the of-life-giver food.

38. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who wanted to receive from him, more often, answers towards help and towards the salvation of his soul, and who was seeking form finding out if he should dialogue with some of the br0otehrs, or if he should allow to be asked by the brothers concerning their thoughts.

For I know Whom have you entrusted on yourself and what nourishment I have given you, if you took heed at those, I wouldn't need to write you more often. This is for He Whom I have entrusted you knows what you need even before you ask Him. So, do not worry about the things you heard. The lack of any worry brings you nearer to the stronghold[75]. Sand the fact of being overlooked by people will make you inhabit the stronghold[76]. Or, the fact of dying towards any man, it will make you to inherit the stronghold and its treasures[77].

And because you want to hear the same word about some dialogue or about some thought of the brothers, when needed I will tell you what to do. So, do not worry about anything, and take care only for undertaking your trip to the end. I am ceaselessly embracing your love. And on how to quench within you the movement of the too-fiery anger, you can learn from yourself. Peace to you brother and our beloved John.

[76] Another meaning of the stronghold can be the communication with others. He who seeks too much to fulfill his egotistic interests, he will be avoided by others, he will be outside the stronghold. He who is a kind person and who doesn't try to pull everything to himself, he will no longer be feared by others but he will attract them by his gentleness and kindness: "Blessed are the gentle for they will inherit the earth". When the people noisily pay attention to you, the people do that because of fear of because of interest, not because they love you, but in a cunning way. Inwardly they are separated from you. On the opposite, he who is "overlooked" in this sense, he will attract the others to himself.

[77] It is about that death stopping you from searching for people for your interests, for exploiting them in a way or another, in a total insensitiveness. Only when you die to such an interest, you will elicit the people's interest and they will search for you sincerely, for finding comforting in you. Then you will have become alive to them. Then you will have entered the "stronghold".

39. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who wanted to cut off the dialogues even with his servant, because the Oldman told him that "the lack of worries will bring nearer to the stronghold"; and for he has come to the thought to examine the causes of the diverse temptation which were rising within him.

Tell to our brother: Wait a little longer, for the time hasn't come yet. And I am taking care of you more than you take care of yourself. Better said, God does that. Brother John, do not fear the temptations occurring for testing you. This is for God won't give up on you. When something of this sort comes to you, do not tire yourself trying to find out its causes, but rather call the name of Jesus, saying: "Jesus, help me!". And He will listen to you, for He is near to them who call Him. Do not get discouraged, but run, and you will take into Jesus Christ our Lord Whom the glory to be forever. Amen.

40. The answer of the same Great Oldman: Should him teach his servant the craftsmanship of braiding? And about a brother who asked him about his thoughts, not directly but only hinting at those: did him right (advising that brother)?

The all-luminous teaching of our Savior is this: "You will be done". So, if somebody says this prayer with the whole his heart, he will leave his own will and he will bring everything to God's will. Therefore, teaching your brother is useful, but it can also be a cause for envy. But the work can be done rarely, from time to time, and in this way, it will be covered to the conscience of the brother[78].

Regarding the insinuating question, it has its origin in a self-sparing, one that lack the right-reckoning, and therefore that brother needs many prayers. This is for "the signs are not for believers, but they are for faithless ones" (1 Cor. 4: 22)[79].

[78] Even teaching on somebody can elicit the envy from others, and it can seem contrary to humbleness, and it even can be so. In order to avoid the own temptation and to avoid tempting others, you must teach one as rarely as possible and as covert as possible.

[79] He who doesn't confess clearly his sins and his shortcoming, but he only does that in riddles, he hasn't yet totally defeated his pride, so that he tries to spare on himself. He still wants to hid what he has evil. That's why he needs many prayers in order to get rid of Pride.

41. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who fell to many thoughts and worries regarding the monastery's future.

There are many things springing out of your heart. This is for He says: "I will count them up and they will multiply more than the sand" (Ps. 138: 18[80]). Brother, nobody knows where this place will reach, but only the "hearts-knower God" (Acts 15: 8). But He has made it known to me too. You know, therefore, that the Lord won't forsake him, and He will guard him and he will glorify him towards the glory of the name of His glory. His to be the glory forever and ever. Amen.

42. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who asked him about the helplessness that came to him, where that could be from; and if he should tell to the brothers who were about to leave for Egypt hos they should take care of themselves, lest they will get into troubled because of not knowing the customs from there.

Tell to our brother: The Egyptians and the Jerusalemite are mixed to you. But do not worry. For God will take care of you. Regarding your though, you must work into the fear of God and do not worry about your brothers. Bu you only pray and the Lord will guide them according to His will in everything. This is for nothing is being done outside God, especially at that place, if it is done into the fear of God and towards the resting and the benefit of the souls.

43. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, for the brother to consecrate to God everything regarding himself.

Speaking in riddles has its purpose to cover the sinful thoughts towards the faithless ones, but not towards the believers. One can openly tell his sins to the spiritual father.

[80] In KJB we have: Ps. 139: 18: "If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 138: 18: "And I am going to count them up and more than the sand they will multiply. I have woken up and I am still with You." (E. l. t.'s n.)

If somebody drinks the water which I have been sending it to you through letters, he won't get thirsty again forever (Jn. 4: 14). And you must wait for and to hope for the resting by your faith into Christ. Take this bread out of my nourishment and be worriless. Do not fear anything, but take your hopes too through the Holy Ghost. You must believe that the hand of God is with you.

44. Out of the blessing sent to you he gave to his servant as well[81], but not out of his own hand for he was not a cleric, but he placed it in front of the servant and the servant took it by himself. And by receiving the blessing for the second time and for the third time, he did the same. And because he did that without approval, he didn't realize that he was mistaking[82]. But when he saw on himself alleviated from passions by the prayers of the Oldman he said: the passions got weakened within me. And after that he sent a message asking about his blasphemy thoughts but he didn't receive any answer. And by wondering himself what could be the cause for that, by the lenience of God, towards correcting him, he saw a fearsome hallucination once, and twice, one that disappeared immediately, and he was filled up with disturbance and he remembered his mistake with the bread. This

[81] It seems that here is about the Holy Impartation. This is for that is the true bread. As it is called as Eucharist, for it has been committed at the Last Supper, by the thanksgiving prayer of our Lord, as well it was called during the first Christian centuries as "Eulogia – Blessing", for was done through the "blessing' from the Lord (to be seen at 1 Cor. 9: 16 – where the blood of our Lord was called as "the cup of the blessing"). And it actually brings us a great blessing of God.

[82] He who has taken the Holy Impartation with himself suffered no harm because he took it from the hand of the priest. But he who took it by himself, he got ill because of not receiving it from the hands of the priest. The priest gives the Holy Impartation for he is the seen image of Christ Who gave the Holi Impartation as the Last Supper. The believer must be aware of the fact that Holy Impartation is not from the priest, or about the fact that he doesn't take the Body of Christ by force, but he received it from Christ Himself, as God and man differing from him and on some kind of godlike plan differing from the human plan: from mediator between God and man. And this human mediation out of godlike sending, it is mediated by the priest. By being invested from above, the priest will somehow become a good conductor of godlike energy. But when he got rid of his troubles by the prayers of the Oldman, he praised that that was due to himself. Consequently, he fell prey to some blasphemer thoughts. It is not clean whether these passions and blasphemy thoughts come to him who allowed his servant to impart himself without a priest, of they came to his servant. It seem that that happened to both of them.

was because he forgot about what he said about the weakening of his passions. And by putting on his head the hat sent to him yore by the Oldman, he fell for many times to the ground and prayer for being found worthy of mercy.

And the Oldman wrote him about the two mistakes of his[83]. Abd the Oldman wrote him also about the blasphemy thoughts. Then the Oldman told him that by letting the Blessings at the hand of his servant, in order that one to eat them by himself, he didn't do a deed of humbleness but he rather did a deed of pride and he manifested a childish thinking.

When one knows that he transgressed a commandment he admits that he has known that commandment. And knowing a commandment: it means that he who know it he will correct on himself. But let talk simply: I surrendered you in the hands of God and you deviate from that? But the Scripture says, out of God's mouth, that "the righteous do not deviate" (Prov. 24: 7). Shul I tell you what you are thinking? And the Scripture says again: "Do not let bragging words come out from your mouth" (1 Kings[84]: 2: 3). And did you dare to open your mouth in front of God and say: "My passions have become weaker within me", instead of saying that all your passions lay in you like in a storehouse? That's why you were forsaken for a little while and your mistake were shown to you. And if there had not been not the cover you chose, you would have been exhausted. "But faithful is God Who will not allow us to be tempted over our powers, but He will bring together with the temptation also the escape from it, in order us to be able to endure the temptation" (1 Cor. 10: 13). As about the thing you did inappropriately, because of your desire to brag yourself, namely that of giving the blessing to other like an archbishop, but without having you the ordination as priest, I do not know how to speak about that. Couldn't I send the blessing to everybody instead of sending it only to you?

Behold how you have been punished for bid and many mistakes. Therefore, you should take vigil in order you to destroy the eight sorts[85] and you not to be attracted by childish [83] About the impartation without the mediation of the priest and about the blasphemy thoughts coming him because he bragged that he got rid of those by himself.

[84] In KJB we have: 1 Samuel.

things; and do that in order you to gain manhood and not only naiveness. This is because you have heard for many times: "Do everything with advice" (Prov. 24: 72).

And for all the passions and for all blasphemy pray to God and He will gradually help you.

Take vigil from now on, and guard these within your heart (Lk. 2: 51). And there is no need for somebody to know these, but let pass what happened. May Jesus be with you. Forgive me my past mistakes and I will correct my future things. Forever. Amen.

45. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, when, having a high fever for several days, not eating and not sleeping, he shouted out against Abba[86] and against the brothers who were serving him, because he was moved by the work of the devil.

Brother, why has your heart got sharpened, so that you have forsaken the beloved One and you have chosen the enemy? You have left the voice of Shepherd Christ and you have followed the wolf-devil. What has happened to you? Wha has occurred to you? What is this shouting named by the Apostle with the ugliest names when he said: "Let any shouting and blasphemy and anger perish from you, together with all evilness" (Eph. 4: 31). You haven't suffered anything over your power. This is for the Apostle says: "Faithful is God Who won't allow us to be tempted over our power" (1 Cor. 10: 13). Wake up out of the disturbance of these evil thoughts. Take the staff of the cross which you will chase away the wolved from you, namely the devils[87], and remember you to say; "What are you sad for, my soul, and what are you troubling me for?" (Ps. 41: 6-7[88]). For now on pay attention and do not let yourself to get [86] Or against hegumen Serid, as was specified in the Greek text.

[87] The staff of the cross is the staff of the victorious patience. This is for, with this staff Christ was victorious as well. Do not allow yourself to be defeated by pride, or by blasphemy, when the suffering comes to you. Preserve your serenity and your kindness. Become even stronger through these ones by the fact that you preserve them even in illness, in hardships, and in troubles brought upon you by others. Only thus you will be able to defeat the enemy.

[88] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 5: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance."; in ROB we have: Ps. 41: 6-7: "What are you upset for, my soul, and what are you troubling me for? // Hope in God, for I am going to praise Him; the salvation of my face angry like a mindless and insensible child, for you owe to climb the cross with Christ and you to be nailed with nails and you to be pricked with the spear. Why do you allow yourself, miserable, to shout out against the power of Christ[89] and to curse your brothers? Where do we leave the urge: "In honor you give to one another primacy" (Rom. 12: 10). That's enough. This is for he says: "Give occasion to the wiseman and he will become even wiser" (Prov. 9: 9). Suffer and remain peaceful and give thanks in everything. This is for he says: "Give thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18). It is obvious that also "in tribulations, in troubles, in illnesses, and in moments of ease" (2 Cor. 6: 4). So, you keep God and God will remain with you. For Him is due the glory forever. Amen.

46. After he got better and healed of his illness and after he crossed through those temptations, the enemy showed him some evil dreams in order to trouble him again. But because of not succeeding in that, the enemy showed him also a monastery and a church and many people running there in order to, allegedly, find help. In order to strengthen him, the Oldman wrote him the followings:

"Glory into the highest, to God" (Lk. 2: 14) brother, our enemy, the devil, has started "roaring like a lion" (1 Pt. 5: 14) to swallow you. But he was not allowed to do that by the shielding hand of God. So, when the enemy saw that he is not allowed to do what he wanted, he started troubling your mind and he brought you some filthy dreams. And, full of evilness in his cunningness, when he saw that God doesn't allow you to be tempted to the end, neither over your power, he made you see a church and a monastery, allegedly for your help. Therefore, you must put your heart in a safe place, by sealing your heat into non-disturbance in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost[90]. And I believe that He will help us to step on is my God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[89] He who shouts out, when in troubles, at others, he actually shouts out against the power shown by Christ on the cross. This is for Christ showed His power by suffering and by rebuking nobody.

[90] This seal is, obviously, the sign of the cross. This is for this sign we imprint it within us in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Thus, we show whom we belong to, by the seal imprinted within us. And the enemy will no longer have the courage to the head of our enemy (Gen. 3: 15). You must achieve, therefore, a humble heart and give thanks to God who has saved you from the trap of the devil. This is because you have suffered that because of your carelessness.

47. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, because of the brother feel into the very hard – and to many non-understood – war of the thoughts.

Tell to our brother John: I wonder, my beloved one, that you do not understand these things. This is because I, by seeing your many troubles, I have been sending you blessings, for many times, in order you to take power through them, from God. But you must always think at the Psalm 107[91], that says: "He said, and there was a blow of blizzard, and his waves stirred up; he ascends to heavens and he descends to deeps". And again: "Their soul gets melted down into evilness" (Ps. 106: 25-26[92]). These things have come over us and we must endure such dangers, until we will have reached "the shore of His will" (Ps. 106: 30[93]), as I wrote you before. This is because, once God has surrendered you in the hands of your enemies, do not surrender yourself too in their hands. And if you do this, God neither will surrender you in their hands[94].

come close to us, and to try and steal us form our Master Who is the Almighty God. in the cross as seal are imprinted the Persons of the Holy Trinity. We must do this on each time when we feel the tempter stalking us. We belong to God in Trinity Who accepted that One of Trinity to suffer, with the victorious patience, the cross on our behalf, and so he has strengthened the humanity he assumed in an endless freedom from all the pains and pleasures, from all helplessness that entered our nature by sin.

[91] In KJB we have: Ps. 108.

[92] In KJB we have: Ps. 107: 25-26: "For he commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof. // They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble."; in ROB we have: Ps. 106: 25-26: "He said and a stormy wind started and the waves of the sea raised // And they went up to the skies and they descended into deeps, and their soul in dangers got petrified." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[93] In KJB we have: Ps. 107.

[94] "To the shore of His will". It is that state which we won't want to be done in anything according to our will, but we will want everything to be done according to God's will. That is the state which we are going to want in what God wants, and we are going to understand that what God wants is the best for us; in that state we will no longer be slaves to our "will". That will be our full freedom. This is for, actually, the will of God is that what corresponds to our true nature. Our will that is contrary to God's will it is that by which we want that which is not towards our true freedom. By that will we do not truly want freely. That will is not actually our will, but it is the will of some contrary forces which enslave us. But when we

And if you want yourself to be delivered from troubles, and if you want yourself not to be drought down by troubles, you will expect even greater troubles to come upon you and so you will find resting[95]. Remember Job and the saints from after him, how many troubles they endured, and achieve their patience and your ghost will be comforted. Encourage on yourself, and be strong, and pray for me, by reminding my words and your soul (in the Greek version: my soul) will be renewed.

48. Abba, invoking a certain motif, he was late in bringing the answer to that brother mentioned before. That brough to that one a harsh rebuking, and that caused him deep sadness. And the brothers who were serving him because of his helplessness, by telling him about things committing in the monastery, usefully and uselessly, that one, instead of rebuking them and thus to correct them for such a gossiping, he told that neither him would those things be pleasant. And Abba telling him later that he did those according to the advice of the Oldman, that one told him: "The Oldman let you working according to your own will". The Oldman send the following answer to all of those, showing him that the things seemingly did wrong they actually were done good, for they have been committed out of an oikonomia that is above our understanding.

Behold that, after a while, our love entices us to hit again with the staff of Christ, towards rebuking and correcting, in order to be accomplished with us the written word that says: "More trustworthy are the wounds of the friend" and the others (Prov. 27: 6). So, if we rebuke you, you won't be discouraged, by remembering the proved that says: "My Son, do not get discouraged by the rebuking from the Lord, neither get you know what the will of God is, and when we work according to God's will, we are peaceful like during a fasting period, and we will be so after that period too.

[95] By expecting even bigger troubles that the present ones you will feel the present ones as light and by that you will feel on yourself as above them, and therefore rested too. The freedom and the resting are inseparable. But one cannot reach this state by searching for comfort. This is for the comfort too it enslaves us to laziness, and it makes us, in the same time, insensitive in an egotistic manner. We got humanized not by avoiding the troubles, but by enduring them. This is, in the same time, the true comforting from the Holy Ghost Who will comfort our ghost. This is the true resting.

weakened because of His rebuking. This is for the Lord rebukes and beats every son that received Him" (Hebr. 12¨5; Prov. 3: 11-12). Therefore you, even if I am rebuking you, you know what the Apostle says: "Reproach, rebuke, comfort" (2 Tim. 4: 2).

Where is your mind, you hypocrite? Or, where is your thought tarrying, you lazy? Why the masters of your mind resist within you against the disciples of the Master, so that your mind not to be taken and used by the Master to climb in towards entering to Jerusalem (Lk. 19: 33-35) and so to get out the sellers and the buyers out of the temple of God and to shame up the scribes and the Pharisee[96]? Why, despite you must live in Jerusalem, they drag you to Babylon? Why, by leaving the water of Siloam (Isa. 8: 6), you still want to drink the mirky waters of the Egyptians? Why are you deviating from the way of the humbleness that says: "Who am I? Dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27) and you want instead to walk the twisted and full of troubles and of dangers way? Where have you thrown my words which I have been telling you night and day? Where is the target which I am telling you as I would tell that to myself, you to reach, and where do you see that you have reached at? Where do you want to be and where are you at, because you have an uncontrolled tongue and you untie it quickly[97]? And if you say that your neighbor is right, why don't you strive to understand that we must reckon as right especially him who, according to God, he covers us and put his neck for us[98]? We must thank him and we must pray for him, in order him to be sheltered against any evil, for the benefit of the many, as the Apostle teaches us. This is for, the Apostles thanked to some people, saying: "Who put their necks for me" (Rom. 16: 14).

Don't you remember all of these? Don't you remember the lack of worries bestowed you by God through him? Don't you

[96] The disciples of the Lord want to make out of any mind (in Greek mind is of masculine gender = νους) a gentle donkey, so that the Lord to mount it and to enter the Upper-Jerusalem riding it, and so the mind to be imparted with the glory of the Lord. Our Lord doesn't want to enter the heavenly Jerusalem without us. Our Lord embodied on Himself for turning Himself to heavens as man, together with us, while us allow Him to lead us and while we served Him as well. Our mind must not remain to nobody as a feral donkey.

[97] Note to the Greek text: Without guarding, without attention, you speak without thinking and in a hurry.

[98] The gossipers said about one another that they were right, and not the leader of the community who was bearing the burden of the worries on behalf of them. Putting the neck for somebody means to take upon himself any burden on behalf of others, as also one who was ready to give his life for others.

remember the chair you are shared with, in peace, like an emperor? It is not him who bears the burden of those who come to us and who leave from us, while we remain untroubled? This is for, if they come for us, we will be the one who should take care of them, and not him. Therefore, we owe to give God many thanks, for God have given us a true son, according to our soul, as he wanted. And instead of these, you told him, stupidly: "I wash my hands regarding you". And you did that not once, but for many times, so that his soul has been sunk in much grief. And you didn't remember the word of the Apostle who says: "In order not to be one like this one overwhelmed by too much sadness" (2 Cor. 2: 7). This is for, if there wasn't the hand of God and the prayer of his Fathers, his heart would be torn apart within him.

Where are my commandments which I have given to you, which I have said you: "Cry, weep, do not seek for being noticed, and do not value on yourself in any regard. Have I attracted your love on another way? Since now, remove yourself from the world. Climb the cross[99]. Detach yourself from earth. Shake off the dust from your feet[100]. Despise the shame[101]. Do not let yourself to be trapped in the Chaldeans' oven, lets you will be burnt, together with those, by the anger of God. Reckon any man as superior to you[102]. Cry for your dead (Joshua Sirach 8: 10[103])[104]. Remove your beam (Mt. 7: 5). Build your ruined house. Hout out: "Have mercy on me, Son of David, so I can see" (Lk. 18: 38-41). Learn that "every moth will be shut" (Rom.

[99] He who climbs the cross, he has liberated himself from the world. He has become truly free; he has entered another existence plan, that plan of the of the freedom, that plan of the Ghost, that plann0of his love for God and for people, so that he has exited the world of the egotisms.

[100] Shake off the dust that keeps you glued to the earth and that impeded you from flying in the sky of the freedom and of God Who is enslaved by nothing, the sky of the disinterested love.

[101] Despise that what the people reckon, by a judgment contrary to truth, as shame.

[102] By reckoning any man as superior to you, you will have gained the true superiority. You will no longer be dominated by your desire to be superior, to seek for being recognized as superior. This is the height of Christ's kenosis, and of our humbleness. "He who humbles on himself, he will be raised".

[103] Cry for the dead near to you; think at the fact that your will die too. But you also cry for yourself, if you are dead, in order you to resurrect.

3: 19) and do not speak haughtily[105]. "Close your door" (Isa. 26: 20) to your enemy. Keep your word in yoke and lock up your door.

You know what I am talking to you. Think at the things I have said to you. Force yourself to understand those words, and you will find the worthy of God fruits comprised in those words. And do not feel shame for my grey hair, for I am praying for you day and night. May God give you to understand and to understand those words in His fear. Amen.

And because you told him: "The Oldman allowed you to do your will", The judgment uttered by our Lord through the prophet it is directed upon me: "Amen, I say to you, that if you see your brother walking a way that is not good, and you won't show him that that way if not good, his blood will be asked from your hands" (Ezra 3: 18). Do not take this in derision, but you must believe the Apostle who says that we are going to be held accountable for our neighbor. But you do not understand what is happening.

49. Thanking to the Oldman for guidance, he asked him to write him for many times, about the salvation of the soul. Also, about the thought that he wanted to tell it to Abba, but he asked the Oldman to tell that to Abba.

Brother John: I do not know what this is. I have been writing you from alpha to omega, from the state of the beginner to the state of the consummate, from the disrobing of the former man, together with that one's lusts, to the burial of the new man, that one built according to God, from the estrangement in the land of the senses to that state of the heaven's citizen and inheritor of the intelligible land the Gospels. Ruminate the Epistles and you will be saved. This is for you will have in Epistles, if you understand them, both the New and the Old Testaments, and if you understand them, you won't need any other book. Shake off the forgetfulness and get away from darkness, in order the peace to come and dwell within your hear and within your senses; and all of these will come to you. Let the smoke of the idolater sacrifices to scatter away from your intelligible Nineveh, and in your intelligible Nineveh's marketplaces it will be spread the fragrance of the incense of the spiritual repentance, and that will stop the anger that menaces it with the destruction. Why are you sleeping? Why have you placed under your head, as a pillow, not only the answers regarding your own salvation, but also the answers regarding the salvations of the brothers who would study them faithfully? Stop dreaming now. Wake up from the heavy sleeping. Love your feet. Enter Segor so that you won't be caught by the destruction of the five cities. Do not turn yourself to the things from past, in order not to become a pillar of salt (Gen. 19: 22-26)[106]. Make yourself wise like the snake is, so that your enemies won't deceive you, and make yourself innocent like the pigeons are, so that you won't be warred up by the ghost of the revenge (Mt. 10: 16). Make yourself true servant of the Master, or otherwise you will be enslaved by many[107]. Do not separate yourself from Him, because only the worthless makes such a decision (1 Cor. 7: 15). See how you are and tell to yourself: what am I like this, what will I gain by being like this? And the loving-of-people God will enlighten your heart, so that you will be able to understand. Behold, God has made you free of all earthly worries. Take heed at yourself where you are and what you want, and God will help you in all things, my brother.

[105] Every mouth will remain shut when everybody will be exposed as guilty. The bragger, or him who reckons on himself as being good, he is the one speaking the most.

Regarding about your thought which you want me to tell him, I could do that myself, but if you do not tell that by yourself, you will estrange on yourself from the consummate love that you feel for him[108]. If your soul is one, and if your hear this one, according to the Scripture (Acts 4: 32), nobody hides [106] Motionless and fruitless salt-pillar becomes everyone who do not ceaselessly move forwards, but he reaming fixed into the things from his past, in the same monotonous sins of his. Those sins bewitch him, and they constantly call him to them. He cannot part with those sins of his. That one remains a pitiful monument of his spiritual death.

[107] He who becomes servant of God, he will escape any other slavery. God makes us free from all power which are inferior to our ghost, inferior power which otherwise will enslave our ghost, but when our ghost is sovereign, he makes ourselves sovereigns as well. We have escaped from the slavery of the passions which are themselves mastered by the decayed and automatic forces of the nature. But only God Who is consummately free Ghost, only Him can strengthen our ghost too, and therefore our freedom as well (2 Cor. 3: 17). God keeps us attached to him through the love we feel for Him and which we grant Him joyfully, for he comforts us with His love.

[108] It seems to be about the same John who prayer the Oldman to tell Abba Serid a thought of his.

anything to his heart[109]. Make yourself sapient, you who are heavy in heart. May our Lord forgive you!

50. Of the same Great Oldman towards the one who asked him if he must no longer meet anybody starting from the Blessed Week.

After the feast, you will appease on yourself (stay in isolation) for five days a week, and then for two days meet your brothers if there occurs any need. And I am telling you what to do further on. Use the whole your power so that you to be worriless. This is for God takes care of any man according to what is beneficial to that man, either than man repents in his heart, or he keeps his heart awake by doing something else beneficial to him.

51. After the feast, there came a bishop who asked to meet him, and some brothers came to ask him about their thoughts. That's why he sent a message asking the Oldman what to do about those.

You know that I haven't ever placed any tie upon somebody, neither upon ourselves. And because I told you: appease on yourself for five days a week and for two days meet your brothers, do not worry in this regard either. And for I say: meet them, when you meet them do not be worried about what will you say or about what will you speak. This is for Christ said: "The Ghost of roue Father speaks within you" (Mt. 10: 20). And relatedly to the brother whom you have told me about, do not reject them, when the need asks for receiving them, and God will help you. Amen.

[109] The hearts of those who love on one another are one, and their souls are one, meaning that both must be of one heart and of one soul, as Barsanuphius often says. They souls and their hearts are one, for they feel good things (σμοουσαιοζ). And when the love on one another, their feeling is common to both of them, though it is lived by two persons.

52. Answer of the same Oldman towards the same brother, who asked him about the disorder from within world.

Brother, let's take heed at ourselves, for all the things have become mirky. And let's get accustomed to be silent. And if you want to rest on yourself, you will make on yourself as dead towards any man and you will find resting. Understand that I am telling you to rest on yourself in peace, regarding your thoughts and your work and all of your worries.

53. After this answer he tried to consummately cut off any dialogue. And a brother was very sad because of that. And that brother was asking him to talk to him if there was any need. And, because he had mercy on that brother, he promised that. And that brother asked him about that and about the coat sent him by a certain brother, if he must accept it or not.

Brother, I sent you word: Be worriless, what do you want more from me? Take heed at yourself. "The harvest is plenty" (Mt. 9: 37). Do not leave the harvesting for gathering the wheat grains fell behind the reaper. Leave all of those and occupy on yourself with the harvesting and with the gathering, so that you will have all the fruits of the wheat and of the vine, so that your heat will be strengthened and gladdened into the Lord. Read again the letters I wrote to you before, for they are not useless. And relatedly to that coat, if the brother wants you to have it, with the whole his heart, you will receive it, but by reckoning on yourself as worthless.

54. A brother, because of having a very harsh war, and because of being impeded to unveil that war to Abba, due to his shame, he sent word to the same Aba John to receive him without Abba being aware of that, and to listen to his thought. This one was tormented because of two motives: he didn't want to receive that brother without approval, but neither he wanted to make that brother sad. And because of not knowing what to do, he asked in his ghost, on the same Abba, if he had to open his door to that brother.

Tell to your brother: Who is so mindless to choose to himself the most damaging thing that causes him a greater trouble, and not the easy to endure things, with humbleness and prayer? Do not open your door to your brother. This is because not in the locking up the door consists the killing, but in locking up your mouth. I embrace you with holy kiss.

55. A certain Egyptian Father came to live in the monastery where the Fathers were, and he wrote in Egyptian, to the Great Oldman – for that one was Egyptian too – asking him for prayer and for telling him a word for the salvation of his soul; and he asked also if he can be found worthy of having a discussion with him. But the Oldman wrote him the following answer in Greek:

Because I have decided not to write myself to anybody, but I am sending my answer through Abba, that's why I haven't written you in Egyptian, but I have imposed myself to tell him to write to you in Greek. This is because he doesn't know Egyptian. If in your letter you reckon me as your Father all-beloved into the Lord, and for you reckon me as knowing the needs, the tribulations, and the dangers of the soul, if I am your Father as you have written me, I am commanding you not to disturb me anymore by asking me for having a discussion. This is for I do not discern among people as long as I live. That's why, if I open my door to you, I will be compelled to open it to everybody. And if I do not open my door to you, I won't open it to anybody.

I have written you this, for you have written me, saying: "Make me worthy of your gentleness and have mercy on my troubled soul". And because you also say in your epistle: "My sin separated me from you, my master", I am telling you that by the grace of Christ, Son of God, I haven't separated on myself from you, but I am always together with your love in ghost. And for you have written me in the same epistle: "I beg you pray for my sins", I am telling you the same" Pray for my sins". This is for the Lord says: "As you want the people to do to you, you do likewise to them" (Mt. 7: 12). And I, despite being the most wicked among people, I am doing what I can for him who said: "Pray for one another, in order you to be healed" (Jas. 5: 16)[110].

Brother, we are strangers, let's make on ourselves like strangers and let's do not value on ourselves in any regard; and so, nobody will notice us and we will have rest[111]. And if you have entered to us, fight for enduring. This is for He says: "he who endure to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22)[112]. I everything, you fight for dying towards any man and you will be saved[113]. And tell to your thought: "I have died and I am lying into my tomb".

Believe me, brother, that I have exceeded my measure by being forced by my love for God, and so I have told you these things to your love. This is because whom am I the all-unimportant[114]? That's why, by asking for forgiveness, I am saying you: forgive me, the much-speaking, for the Lord. And pray for me, you the servant of the God of Abraham.

56. Of the same Oldman towards Abba Paul, the Oldman who live in quietude and who wanted to take to himself a brother who was blind and to serve him.

Brother Paul, there is a proverb saying: "When you see a young man running, you will know that there is an old man [110] Each one will be healed of the sin of the envy, by praying for one another, but by doing so he will also heal on another, for he feels within him the one who is praying for himself and so he will defat his passion.

[111] We are strangers to the world by our ghost, and by our aspiration to part with the world we will become strangers to the world, by our will. If nobody notices you, do not get troubled. And so, you will get appeases into your ghost. Let's make on ourselves strangers also from those who tempt us to search for being appreciated and understood by others. This is for only this will provide us with the resting from the thirst for searching for being appreciated by others.

[112] He who has endured to the end, he shows that he hasn't allowed on himself to be overwhelmed by any hardship and by any temptation to get rid of any hardship. He has fully gained his struggle for his freedom, which he has united himself in with the Holy Ghost Who is the Ghost of the freedom.

[113] You fight for you to die to the death, to die to what makes you dead, namely to everything than enslaves; you fight in order to open yourself to the generous life, and for out to be elevated in the free broadness of the true life.

[114] I have exceeded my measure by advising you to do what myself haven't reached yet to do. BY doing so, I have mistaken and I ask you for forgiveness. This is for, you whom I have advised, you are better than I am. But I have done that out of love for you. But the love doesn't belong to be but to God. We have here an intertwining of paradoxes that expresses, with a great delicacy, the great care for him who asked to be advised.

who stirs him up". To us, the old man stirring up is satan. Out of his envy, he wants to push us to bad days, while seeming to us that we work for righteousness. And we do not think at the fact that many, by wanting to get others out of a river, themselves got drowned together with those ones. See when he wants to catch you in a trap. And when you ask and receive answer, he will use another more cunning trap (another deceit), that is over your power[115]. God doesn't ask you to do good to your neighbor, above your power. For he says: "Do not cease to do good to your neighbor, according to your power" (Prov. 3: 27). There has come the blind. But you too are very sick. Who is going to serve both you and the blind? And he who always places in front of you these images of the righteousness, he will always tell you: Behold, you have brought a burden in monastery. And, as you know, the man I s a being who doesn't endure easily, as the Scripture says: "Who will suffer a man, especially one old and discouraged?" (Prov. 18: 14).

If you must taste those days, do what you want. If I wasn't asked, I shouldn't speak. And the things I have said, I have said them for the love of Christ, in order my brother not to be deceived. But if you commiserate with him for God, and if you strongly think that God will help you, pray God and God will do with the blind as he wills. I haven't bonded you, brothers, neither have I given you a command. So, do as you wish. And forgive me for the Lord, and pray for me the all-unimportant.

[115] Often, satan urged somebody to do something, by deceiving him that thus he would work for advancing into righteousness, namely into consummation. After Abba Paul got rid of many deceits from satan, by asking and by receiving answers from the Great Oldman, what was him to do in those situations, the enemy has come now with an even more cunning trap: with the urge him to receive and to take care of a blind, thought he was an old man as well.

The old man realized the difficulty for giving the right advice in such a situation. He would not want to impede Abba Paul from doing a good deed, but he also showed Abba Paul the difficult top bear burden that he wanted to take it upon himself, thought he was old and ill. The last decision belonged to Abba Paul who according to the power he knew that he had for enduring the hardships coming after taking the blind man to live together with himself, a knowledge that actually was one with the faith he had in the help he followed to receive from God. But if he had taken the blind, he would have added to them who were serving him to serve that blind man too. And he followed to always here in his thought the reproach: "Behold, you have brought one more burden to the monastery".

57. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother, who move a word towards somebody about faith and he was not able to win that dispute and that's why he got disturbed because of that opposition.

The godlike Apostle, moved by the Holy Ghost, he said "Faithful is God Who won't let you to be tempted more than you can endure, and He will make, together with the temptation, also its end, so that you will be able to endure it" (1 Cor. 10: 13). My brother, you who are of one soul with me and whom I truly love, be entrusted that God, by seeing the grief and the disturbance that have come upon you because of the temptation you are experiencing, I felt a bigger pain that ever before. And I reminded the Apostle who says: "Who is weak and I won't be weak too? Who is offended and I won't burn myself too?" (2 Cor. 11; 29). And again: "If a limb suffers, all limbs suffer together with it" (1 Cor. 12: 26). This is for, despite I am not doing the things of the Apostle, I still have heard him saying that he cries together with them who cry, and he rejoices together with them who rejoice (Rom. 12: 15).

But, glory to All-High God Who hasn't promised to your enemy to allow him do the whole evilness and the whole enemy's will upon you. This is for the enemy wants to swallow all the living people, as the Coryphée of the Apostles, Peter, confessed, by saying that the enemy "roars like a lion searching whom to swallow" (1 Pt. 5: 8).

Master of mine, make us not always quickly receive the disturbance from the evil thoughts which urge us to go against our neighbor with disturbance. This is because that is out of the devil's work and nothing else. And where have we left the work: "Blessed in him who endures the temptation, for he becomes experienced" (Jas. 1: 12)?

But I have written these words to your love not because you would need to be taught. This is for, if you study the Scriptures, you will see and you will get wiser than I am. This is because I am a wicked and a helpless and I have nothing but an empty name. But I have written you due to the pain of my heart and out of an abundant love that I have towards God "with may tears" (2 Cor. 2: 4). So, may Him support your heart into His fear, "He Who strengthened the sky and placed it" Isa. 42: 5). May Him found your being on the hard rock (Mt. 7: 24), "Him

Who founded the earth upon waters" (Ps. 136: 6[116]). And may Him rebuke your tempters (your pirates), He who rebuked the winds and the sea (Mt. 8: 26). May Him remove from you the forgetfulness of the commandments, Him Who put the distance between dawns and dusks (Ps. 102: 12[117]). May your soul receive mercy "as a father has mercy on his sons" (Ps. 102: 13[118]). And may your heart be enlightened by Him Who enlightened the realities which were darkened before. And may Him give you patience do dwell with me, whom you love in peace to the last of your breath, as it was shown, in advance, through His grace for he said: "he who will endure to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22[119]). And may Him give you peace among yourselves, that peace that He gave it to His disciples (Jn. 14: 27). And may Him give you to reach His consummate love, Him Who said: "If you love Me you will keep My commandments" (Jn. 14: 15); or again: "By this all of them will know you that you are my Disciples, for you will have love among yourselves (Jn. 13: 35). If we have this love, nothing would separate us from one another, until our death.

This is for it was written: "And now Israel" (The Second Law 4: 1). And again: "If the ghost of him who masters comes upon you, do won't leave your place" (Eccl. 10: 4)[120]. I am telling you that word from Ruth: "May not be to me I to separate

[117] In KJB we have: Ps. 103: 12: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us."; in ROB we have: Ps. 102: 12: "As far thew dawns are from dusks, so far you have removed from us our lawlessness." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[118] In KJB we have: Ps. 103: 12: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 102: 13: "Like the father has mercy on his sons, so the Lord have mercy on them who feared Him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[119] This is for that one will gain the ultimate victory, and he will affirm his freedom in the last instant of his life submitted to temptations and to trials, and so will remain free forever, namely united with God.

[120] Only satan wants to be master, meaning that he wants to master upon people, by enslaving them. God is Lord and Emperor by love, by making the man free, and by giving the mans the power to love Him, free of any passions. Though this, God give the man the power to overcome "the master of the world", by becoming himself master. To the man who is free of satan, the world will become the ambience of the freedom of God and of the freedom of the man. The man must liberate on himself from the slavery to the world (to the satan from the world), but he must not despise the world. The world can make the man see God through itself, and to meet God. Only satan makes the world do dominate the man. Or, only satan masters upon man through world. The world will become to man transparent for God, when the man lives the unmediated relationship with God through the world. In this sense, satan lowers the world and it makes the world his instrument for mastering upon the man. Sant in, in last analysis, the master of the world for that man who obeys satan through sin.

myself from you. Only the death will be between me and you" (Ruth 1: 16-17).

But if you allow to yourself to be shaken by these, I will be totally not guilty, you will see and you will answer on that fearful day. This is for I gladly put my soul to death your you, my brother. Without be it a commandment, I am telling you: Live in quietude with conviction, wondering about God Who has delivered you of great dangers and troubles and all sorts of temptations; and glorify Him. Him to be the glory. Amen. Forgive me, for I have been speaking to much. Because I have prolonged the word because of much sadness and for great joy.

58. By receiving the answer, that brother sent back this word: Master, Lord please forgive me for the Lord and pray for me because I know that my sadness and my disturbance are from the devil. But you know, master, that I received the faith into the 318 bearers of God Fathers, when I was a child. And I have never received any other teaching except that. But I am troubled. So, if you know that I am disturbed, Father, assure me that the Lord will say a good word for me to God and so I won't suffer any loss. If you do that, my sadness and my disturbance will cease. This is for I am awfully tormented by those. This is because I am stupid and full of craziness and tormented for my many sins. So, do not be against me, Master. But write me my pardon. And help me regarding those in your well-received prayers. And I believe in God that you will gain my wicked soul.

Answer: (V. 59) If you cogitated at the things written to you by me, you would find out if I wrote those from myself. This is for my saying that I put my soul for you, it is interpreted like: I put a word for defense, for your love. This is for I am not ashamed to tell you, my brother, that you cannot understand the realities of the faith. Therefore, by not being you able to do that, do not examine those. Because, otherwise, you will attract upon yourself sadness and disturbance. But the believer, even if he speaks to heretics or to unbelievers, or if he resists them, he won't be ever disturbed. This is for he has Christ within him, he has the Chieftain of the peace and of the quietude within him (Isa. 9: 6). And one like this, by peacefully resisting, and with love, he can even bring many heretics of unbelievers to the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Therefore you, brother, because examining these things exceed your power, you will keep the imperial way, namely the faith of the 318 Fathers[121], which you have been baptized in. This is for this faith have all the things as it should for those who understand what is consummate. So, you will live in quietude taking heed at your sins and at the way you will answer to God. And if you observe my commandment thus, better said the commandment of God, I am confessing that I will put a defense word for you: "that day which God will judge on the hidden things of the people" (Rom. 2: 16)[122]. Therefore, do not hesitate, because that will bring you to even worse things. This is because the sweet things will be turned towards bitterness by the enemy whom will be firstly defeated by Lord Jesus[123]. Do not be worried about other things. This is for the Lord has removed the worry from you[124]. But the evil demon, by seeing that you have been delivered through the prayers of the saints, he tried to leave with you a part of smoke of these temptations.

Pray for me, brother, so that I won't be told too: "You who teach another, why don't you teach yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21). Therefore, do not stumble yourself in these things again, for you will make sad me whom you love. May the Lord cover you under His wings. Amen.

59 (V. 151) A certain old man, Abba Euthimios, he sent this prayer to the Great Oldman, so that God could answer him to the questions he wrote in that prayer: You the Life-Giver, You the path of the ones who are in darkness, You enlighten us who are in the fog, for You the Holy have said: "Ask for and you will take (Jn. 16: 24). Knock and it will be open to you" (Mt. 7: 7). And for [121] The faith of the Father from Nicaea.

[122] They who exposed their hidden sins in front of their confessor and who have been forgiven by their confessor in the name of God, they won't be ashamed by those sins at the final judgment. This is for those sins won't be exposed for the first time, and those sins have been detached from them by confessing them.

[123] Saint Maximos the Confessor sys that the sweet thing will become bitter, or pains. Here is blamed the devil for that.

[124] Once He assured us about the eternal life, why would we benefit by bearing so many worries, especially by knowing that those worries impede us from achieving that eternal life.

you want to open the door to us too, please hurry up. This is for You have started. This is for, if You didn't want to save us, You would not show the realities which are impossible to us, and to You, our God, those are possible (Mt. 19: 26; Lk. 18: 27). You the Holy have asked us: "You will clean up yourself if you want me to come". And I have said to You the Holy: "The mud cannot clean itself". And You the Holy have told us again: "He who want to be found worthy of gifts, let him see My traces in all things". But how will be able him who is blind from birth, to see (Jn. 9: 1), if his eyes are not open? The blind searches for a guide in order to find his unimportance ministration. Bartimaeus, the son of Timaeus, was sitting beside the road, asking for mercy, and when he heard that the light of the righteousness was passing on that road, he shouted out, saying: "Son of David, have mercy on me". And when Your kindness had mercy on him and called him and asked him: "What do you want me to do to you?", he said: "Master, to see", and Your kindness immediately said: "See". And he saw Your traces and he followed You (Mk. 10: 46, 52; Lk. 18: 35-43).

And I want to shout out. But I am rebuked by that one who always wants to darken the eyes of the ones who see. If Your kindness deigns to call me and to tell me: "What do you want Me to do to you?" I will shout out like that one did: "Lord, my eyes to be opened".

But even the lepper, if he had been able to clean up himself, he wouldn't have shouted out: "Lord, if You want, you can clean me up" (Mt. 8: 2), but he would have cleaned up himself. So, I am shouting out like he did. Give me too this holy answer: "I will, be clean" and the leprosy will leave me. And being cleaned and by seeing, I will see your traces[125], so that I will be able to step on Your traces. For Youa re the path of the strayed ones".

But I prayer you too, Father: Yes, Father, pray to our Master Christ, for my eyes to be opened, for you are my guide [125] One won't be able to walk on the Lord's traces if he doesn't see Him. He who doesn't know that himself is totally sunk in his passions which tie him to the material things, he won't be able to ascend to a superior life-plan. To see that superior life-plan the man doesn't reach by himself. But the man must ask God for the power of seeing it, for God is the light-Source, the sight-Giver, by itself His showing. So, if one doesn't ask God for this sight, he will show that he doesn't actually want to see that superior life-plan, namely that he doesn't actually want to part with the darkened plan which he is on.

taking me to Master Jesus. For His is the glory together with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, forever. Amen.

Answer sent back by Barsanuphius (V. 152) "Now is the well-received time" (2 Cor. 6: 2) for understanding the word of the Gospel: "Not the healthy ones need the doctor, but the ill ones" (Lk. 5: 31). But when the ill one comes to see the doctor, he must guard the things ordered him by the doctor, according to him who said: "He who comes close to God he must believe that God is and that God rewards them who are searching for Him" (Hebr. 11: 6). This is for faithful is Him Who said: "I will give them hundredfold in this age and in the future age eternal life" (Mk. 10: 30). Therefore, they who come closer to our great Doctor are enlightened by Him and He heals them of all their souly illnesses. Let's therefore not bragging ourselves by saying that we are believers. This is because, if we brag that we are believers, we will be judges as hypocrites and unbelievers. Out of the external things it is shown the unshown faith which dwells into the hidden realities of the heart. If we believe in our Savior Christ Who says: "Be it to you according to your faith" (Mt. 9: 29), He will say to our soul that live within our body: "Dare, daughter, your faith has saved you" (Mt. 9: 22).

So, our faith doesn't consist of uttering it and of heralding it with our mouth, but it consists of the consummate faith shown after healing[126].

If, therefore, you have believed and you have been healed, you will walk and you won't stumble. Have you been healed, you won't limp. Show that the leak of your blood has stopped. And if you have reached, man to these things, you will have come closer to that state when you will hear our Savior saying to the fully cleaned and beautified soul: "You are wholly beautiful my near one and there is no stain in you" (Son of Song 4: 7), and when you hear the Apostle Who says: "Not having any wrinkle, neither anything like that"[127] (Eph. 5: 27).

So, the door has been opened to us and the it has been laid in front of us the path leading to life, but in the same time we find out that "through many troubles we must enter the [126] All of us are weak and ill regarding out faith, and we can, at most, affirm our faith by word. Only him who has ben healed of his illness, without material means, only him shows that he has believed strongly.

[127] The soul in Greek is of feminine gender (ψυχη). That's why it is called as "daughter" or "beautiful you are".

Kingdom of Heavens" (Acts 14: 22). Let's therefore persevere in the toil of our deeds. This is because verily "the present sufferings aren't worthy of the glory that will be unveiled to us" (Rom. 8: 18); and "God isn't unjust so that to forget" (Hebr. 6: 10) such toils, if we keep our obedience to the end. This is for he says: "He who has endures to the very end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22), into Christ Jesus. Amen.

60. (V. 153) Question to the same Great Oldman, in form of a prayer, about the defiled thoughts and about resurrection:

You Who are my life and my resurrection (Jn. 11: 29), You examine us for we are Your creature, and You clean us up, Fou Holy, of the legion of the evil, for You have had mercy on us and yore You cast out the legion of devils when they asked to enter the pigs (Mk. 5: 9-12). Have the devils entered the speechless pigs or they have entered me the speaking one? This is because I have received them and I have thrown myself form height into the sea[128]. And the waves carry me without being I conscious about that. But now somebody pushed me from within me I to wake the helmsman up, so that him to stretch me his hands and to pull me out from deep, as He did to Peter, and Him to tell me: "Why have you doubt yourself, you of little faith?" (Mk. 4: 38; Mt. 14: 31). And for you have let us know through the answers of Your servant Barsanuphius, that you will place us in a sole tomb, will we also resurrect together? This is because I fear Him Who said: "There will be two in a field; one will be take and one will be left. Two will be at the mill; one will be taken and one will be felt" (Mt. 24: 40-41).

So, because since the creation of the world the people have been sleeping and the bodies of the saints and of the sinner are often buries together, will they also resurrect together? When your chosen angels will come to resurrect the righteous, will there be resurrected all the people, or only the chosen people? That's why, by fearing, I am asking you through Your servant that, as he has shown us that we will sleep together in the same tomb, so You to show us we You will resurrect us together as well. And I pray my Father Barsanuphius that, after both of us have taken crops to harvest (Jn. 4: 35), and I am sick and unable to reap, him to strive, as one who has power to bring to You, Master, for me too, the sheaf of the righteousness. This is for we can see at the ancient Fathers such a parable, because three went out to reap but one got weak as I am and he turned back to his monastic cell, but the other wto manly gathered the harvest. And when the finished the harvesting, they turned back to their places and they forced the ill one to take his payment as well: "What payment, for I haven't toiled? Only you have been toiling". And in their strife with him, so that him to take the payment, the Fathers gave him the honor to be him the first to be paid[129]. And that judgment was reckoned as blessed. So, You Master Christ God, strengthen my ask, for Your isa the glory forever. Amen.

[128] It is noticeable the existential exegesis of the Scripture, applied to the own person. Everything said in the Scripture has value at any time. This exegesis is characteristic to all Fathers. The people are always the same in their ultimate depths and God always talks to them.

Answer: (V. 154) A master among people choses some faithful administrators, and he give them the keys and the goods and the things of his house. And it depends of the faithful administrator how to sleep, hos to feed himself, hos to be honored by master, and whom to make friend with: with the drunkards or with them who live decorously. And the first one will meet his rebuking, while the second one will meet his happiness.

Likewise, our God has chosen his administrators from among the faithful people. God has given them His keys to lock up or to open, namely the self-mastery (the freedom). They are believers for all of them have been baptized as Christians. And they are good administrators when managing well the thing entrusted to them, namely the goods received by them at their Baptism, for their salvation. But if somebody deviated from this path, his part will be with the drunkards who are drinking the wine of the lawlessness. One like this is a speaking pig and you know what will happen to him when the Master comes (Mt. 24: 44-51). And if he manages well the things entrusted to him, everybody knows the happiness he will be given from the [129] If they reckoned themselves as deserving primacy, they wouldn't have humbleness. The humbleness always give primacy to another. The best one reckons another as better than him. By that, the humble one maintains his primacy. This is for the other won't accept, at his turn, to receive the primacy. So, the humble gains his neighbor to even more humbleness. This is another paradox beneficial to both of them. And in this positive human delicacy one can feel the closeness of God. The humble one has thinned himself and he has become as a spiderweb, so that he allows to be see God through him.

Master. This is for he says: "All over the place their voice has been heard, and to the edges of the world their words" (Ps. 18: 4[130]).

Regarding the resurrection, other is the present age when are together the wheat and the tares (Mt. 3: 12, 13, 30). But when the resurrection comes, the evangelical word teaches us that the people wake up mixed. This is for he says: "And He will separate them one from others, as the shepherds separates the sheep from the goats" (Mt. 25: 32).

And regarding the two women and the two men He told us those things about the end of the world, and about faith and faithlessness. Regarding the harvesting done by those brothers, the good is done by two[131]. He who got ill had the will to work, but his illness impeded him. But they reckoned that the Lord strengthened them by the prayers of their brother who got ill, and both of them were helped by the grace of the Holy Ghost. So, as our Lord told to Apostles: "do not rejoice for the devils obey you, but rejoice for your names have been written in heavens" (Lk. 10: 20). Therefore, us too, let's not ask if all of us will resurrect, but let's ask if we will hear" Come, you the blessed ones of My Father, and inherit the Kingdom prepared for you siren the foundation of the world" (Mt. 25: 34), and we will be together with Jesus into the Father, as He told us (Jn. 14: 20). Him to be the glory forever. Amen.

61. (V. 155) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman:

Lord Jesus Christ, the Doctor of our wounded souls, we bring You prayers out of Your holy words. Please receive them through Your servant. This is for You the Holy said Yourself: "Do not need the doctor they who are healthy, but they who are ill" (Lk. 5: 31). About this Your servant Paul said too: "He who is lame let him not limp but rather to heal himself" (Hebr. 12: 13). You have said, you the holy one, in one of your answers: "If you are healthy, why do you limp? The healthy one doesn't limp but walks straight". But I, because I am lame and wounded, I am shouting out for you to take care of me too, as on him who descended towards Jericho and fell among thieves (Lk. 10: 3034). This is for me too I have felt among the same thieves and I have been wounded, so that I beg you bandage my wounds too and take me on your donkey, namely on the good faith, and take me to your guesthouse, so that I will be cared there where are cared all of them who suffer.

[130] In KJB we have" Ps. 19: 4: "Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world."; in ROB we have: Ps. 18: 4: "All over the world went their heralding, and to the edges of the world their words." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[131] There is no good done alone or in isolation. The good id a product of the communion, or it consists of searching for and in achieving the communion. This is for nobody to brag himself egotistically. Actually, the very our existence comes from others, it comes to us and it is upheld by all people and by the entire cosmos, and the cosmos comes and it is upheld by God.

Master, that woman that suffered of a blood spill came behind you and touched Your vestments. And I take the healing on each day out of Your holy limbs, namely out of Your body and blood, and out of the water coming out of Your side. But my passion still oozes puss. This is for you have said, You the Holy, that him who comes to see the doctor and who wants to be healed, let him do the things ordered him by the doctor, so please send me, Master, if You wish, cauterizations, cataplasms, but please stop my blood spill, namely my unclean thought. And, for You have said, Lord, that the door has been opened but the god stalk from all quarters and they do not let me come closer to the door, the Good Master of the house, by seeing from far the poor coming nearer, but the poor if impeded by dogs, the Masters sends the doorkeeper to chase away the dogs and thus the poor to be able to draw nearer and to receive the mercy of Master's kindness.

Father, what does it mean what you have written me that him who has live a week of years he will see things unseen since the foundation of the world? And what should we do, for we are younger? How could we be saved? Pray the Lord for Him to show us which are those holy mountains where He told us to run so that us to be saved (Mt. 24: 16). Are those spiritual or unsee mountains? We too want to know this, so that when the hour will come, us to run there are to be saved. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Forever. Amen.

The answer of Barsanuphius: (V. 156) Brother, let's think at what we are saying and we will see that out of our word we will have our reproaching. This is because, he who comes to the doctor, if he doesn't set himself in order according to the doctor's command, he won't be delivered from his illness. And because you are saying that one must accept other medicines and means of healing as well, I wonder about our, my beloved one, for you do now know the all-knower wisdom of our Doctor Who has cut off any motif of the man who searched for an exoneration. This is for, by combining His medical books, to every man who wants to look in those books and to be saved, He showed that they are defenseless. This is for the women always sing: "I am a worm, and not a man, and the despised part of the people" (Ps. 21: 6[132]), what should the man do? This is not said because of despising the women. Let that not be! For we haven't received the command to do that. But because the women have made on themselves, since the beginning, the causes of the falling.

But God hasn't removed them form the godlike teaching[133].

So, if we like this medicine, why do we reject it? Even though, by being deceived, we say that we do not reject this medicine, but we use it, we still say that formally: and not with our deed. And this is the truth. This is because, if we examine our inward man, we will truly find out that we do not suffer any reprimand, any rebuking, any defamation, any despising, and any reproach.

And out of the thought that you have had today, and which you have been tempted with on some other occasions too, you could have known the answer – though you have said that you didn't know that I did the things you know in order to test your love. This is for I have found, as still inhabiting you, the former man. Still, I reckon that your love benefited a lot out of these.

Our Lord is consummate and He wants all of us to be His and consummate. This is for he says: "Be consummate as your Father in heavens is" (Mt. 5: 48).

So, he who suffers these burnings with the hot iron, he will be saved. This is for, he who has in his nostril own stench, he will no longer feel another smell, even if he sits upon dead

[132] In KJB we have: Ps. 22: 6: "But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people."; in ROB we have: "And I am a worm and not a man, the rebuking of the people and the defamation of the people." (E. l. t.'s n.)

bodied[134]. And he who has been robbed by thieves, he won't have anything to give to others. Take heed, my beloved one, that all of us who are mastered by laziness, we cannot be totally worriless, neither can we truly recon what we really are: dust and ashes. And we have been growing old while nourishing our vain-glory. This is because, reckoning that our work is pleasant to God, or that sitting within our monastic cell teaches everyone, and that we have been delivered from judging and from being judged, it is the greatest vain-glory and nothing else[135].

Therefore, if the Great and Heavenly Doctor has given us the medicines and the cataplasms, where will the cause of our perdition come from, if not out of the weakness of our will[136]? In the first place, He has given us the humbleness that banishes away from within us the whole our pride and "the whole uprising that rises against the knowledge of the glory of His Son" (2 Cor. 10: 5); then He has given us the obedience that quenches the fiery arrows of the enemy" (Eph. 6: 16); then He has given us the cutting off of our will towards our neighbor[137]; and this give birth to lack-of-disturbance within our heart, and to the ever-brighter all-joyful showing of His face and of the mastery of His looking[138]. And as the biggest cataplasm that ties [134] The not from the Greek text: "This was said by Saint Syncletica, namely he who feels his own sins we will no longer feel the sins belonging to others.

[135] They who lazily sit in their monastic cells, without repenting, without praying, they are submitted to the temptation of reckoning themselves as doing a great thing by that, so that they will be filled up with vain-glory. They reckon that they will no longer be judged for anything due to the fact that, by sitting in their monastic cell they do not know what others do, and therefore they have escaped the danger of judging others.

[136] Wanting that what God wants too, it doesn't mean having a weak will, but, on the opposite, having a weak will means wanting that what our enemy wants, who tempts us to commit evil deeds. By receiving the temptation, we renounce to the effort of our will, and we choose the easy path of doing what our enemy likes. Such a man no longer has a strong will, despite the fact that he is said as having a strong will by existing the obedience to God.

[137] The strength of the will is shown, in the same time, in the "cutting off of our will towards our neighbor, of course not for fulfilling his caprices and his urges to evil, but in order not to dominate him, but to help him, by renouncing to our will to do what we like, so that to do what is beneficial to our neighbor. The hardest thins is that of being master upon your own will.

[138] When you have cut off your will, you r will gain the lack-of-disturbance, for you will no longer want anything for yourself. You cut your will off in the benefit of your neighbor, obeying God. This makes you transparent the presence of the joyful face of God. You will see God every time your cut off your own will, everything that you have surpassed yourself by doing that. You will see God's look, in the same time shiny and loving, you will see His look as mastering upon you through love. When you feel that you no longer exist by your own will, up all the limbs and "it heals all illness and helplessness" (Mt. 4: 23), he has given us the love that is like His love. This is for He made Himself our example, according to the saying: "Making Himself obedient all the way to death" (Phil. 2: 8). And by putting His soul for us, He taught us, saying: "Love on one another, as I love you" (Jn. 13: 34), and: "Into this all the people will know that you are My disciples, when you will have love among you" (Jn. 13: 35).

So, if you want not to limp, take the staff of the cross and hold it with your hands and so you will die and you will never limp again. This is for the dead never limps[139]. And if you have this staff, you will no longer need a doorman. By this staff you banish away not only the dogs, but even the chief of the wild beasts, that lion that roars (1 Pt. 5: 8). That's why Jacob said too: "with my staff I crossed the river" (Gen. 32: 10); and again: "He bowed down on the top of his staff" (Gen. 47: 31). And Moses did signs with his staff (Exod. 4: 17). And he who is nailed on the staff, he will doubtlessly be delivered from the flowing moisture. This is for him who dies, he will die to the sin[140]. And what will we hope for after these, if not for the resurrection on the third day? This is for it suffices to the crucified one to be resurrected together with Christ.

And by what I said about the weeks, I showed that there will be diverse troubles and changes. And by the mountains which you have asked about, let's understand the Holy Mary, the Birth-Give of God, and the saints from later who will live during those times, by doubtlessly bearing the seal of the Son[141]. This is for God saves many for His Son[142]. Him be the glory, forever. Amen.

when you feel that you exist through God, you will feel yourself as assured within Him. All these virtues are modes of the communion.

[139] The cross is the staff which the man leans on in his righteous spiritual walking. That's why, someone grabbing this staff with his hands means allowing himself to be nailed, to be crucified, and so to become unseparated from the cross. This makes the man strong in his righteous walking, and it makes the man dead to the evil things of the egotism. By both these ministrations, the cross banishes ways the spiritual dogs. BY that, the cross keeps also the place of the doorman at the door of our being. With these thoughts, we place on the outside side of our being the sign of the cross, so that we lock ourselves to the temptations.

[140] Actually, he who dies, he will die to his egotism. But he dies for God, and not because of disgust he felt for his life, namely he dies by sacrificing himself as a man unseparated from God, in order him to life in God and in his fellow humans, as sons of God.

[141] The seal of the Son is the cross, for the cross has been imprinted within their being, by crucifying the former man of the sin, who was separated from God, and by imprinting withing

62. (V. 157) The question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman: Unseparated Trinity do not separate Yourself from us! "Out of the mouth of the children and of those who suckle You have prepared praise to Yourself (Ps. 8: 2[143]).

Father, you are a true and good disciple of the true Doctor. You have given us medicines and means for our healing. And the first means of burning pricked through my heart and I cannot endure the pains. This is for you have written to us, us to sing: "I am a worm not a man" (Ps. 21: 7[144]). I will truly sing and I will worship and extoll God forever. But do I dare to say that I am worm and not man? This is because I am munched away by the worm of the corruption. I wonder, is this too the meaning of the incorruptible worm? Is this the worm that has come for me in order to get me rid of the corruption's worm that corrupted the mankind? This is because by being this worm corruptible and by corrupting everything which it enters, it penetrated the wounds and it caused rottenness and stench, and has come the incorruptible worm which they said about: "I am worm and not man". And as the corruptible worm was entering the wounds, likewise the incorruptible worm enters "in the deepest parts of the earth" (Eph. 4: 9) and therefore, as you said, it has broken all the uncleanness of the old worm. And thus, by cleaning up everybody, He elevated them but He has remained incorruptible. This is that worm that cleaned Job up of the old worm, telling him: "Get up and girdle your waist like a man" (Job 38: 3 and 40: 2). This worm also pulled the dragon with the fishing rod (Job 40: 19020), hanging the dragon on the cross. This this worm all the them the quality as sons of the Father, who no longer live but for fulfilling His will and for loving Him as His godlike Son loves Him, and together with His Son.

[142] He who runs to the prayers of the Mother of the Lord, and to the prayer of the saints, as to some mountains, he actually runs to the faith into Christ. He who doesn't believe that Christ has been born out of Virgin, he won't believe that God has made Himself man. He who believed in the prayers of the saint towards Christ, he will believe in the saints' faith in Him as God Who can save us therefore.

[143] In KJB we have: Ps. 8: 2: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger."; in ROB we have: Ps. 8: 2: "Out of the mouth of the children and of those who suckle you have committed praise, because of Your enemies, so You to mute out the enemy and the avenger." (E. l. t.'s n.)

things obeyed "except Him Who submitted Him all realities", for He submitted all realities under His feet (1 Cor. 15: 27).

The corruptible worm corrupts everything, and there is nothing on earth, either wood of food, or soil, or body, which not to be consumed, except the salt and the oil. But what is the salt and the oil, except the Father Who has obeyed Him all realities[145], and Who also salted the creation with His mercy, and Who gave the Apostles salt too, so that they to salt up the world, by protecting the world against the stench of the idols, and the world to come to the good fragrance of the true God. Amen.

But what does it mean the mustard gran, and why He likened the Kingdom of Heavens to it, and not to an olive tree and not to a date palm, or to other among the tall trees, but to one that is so small (Mt. 13: 31)? This was because the mustard is the sourest and it stings our hearts. Yes, Father, pray the Lord for Him to show us the mystery of this worm and of the mustard grain, in order us too to extoll the Father and the Son together with the Holy Ghost, forever. Amen.

Father, you reminded me about your old letters, which I haven't forgotten either, but I remember the things done to me by the enemy. This is because the enemy got furious when seeing the fruit that was brought forth in that place. But your patience and God's love for people didn't aloe enemy's evil will to be fulfilled. But we have been, until now, extolling God. And for you have told us that you repent after doing inappropriate things, I am telling you: only if I was able to repent too, so that I wouldn't remain totally unrepented.

And because him who has fallen among thieves he has been robbed and no longer has what to give to others, I beg you, as a hungry that I am, you to throw me the crumbles remaining to you, so that I too to receive my food as a dog sitting under your table, out of the things you have. And because you also said that [145] One of the ideas present in these rows it is that the evil lives by corrupting the existing things. The evil doesn't have an existence by itself. "For neither the nothing ever existed, not the question could have been… But behold, the inexistence has its existence out of Is, because it can water itself", says poet Lidia Stăniloae in the volume The Place where You wait (in the poetry entitled Munchausen). The second idea: the salt and the oil are reckoned as symbols of the heavenly Father Who, as origin of existence cannot be evil or corrupt, and who, through His Son made man, He is preserving, forever, the creation as well. One could say that the Father is the salt that liberates all things from corruption, and into the Holy Ghost there is the oil giving fluidness or youth to everybody's non-aged life.

the pride has grown old within me, and the impulse of laughing at others, please pray for me so that that to leave me.

Answer of Barsanuphius: (V. 158) David said, yore: "My wounds got stinky and have rotten because of my insanity" (Ps. 37: 5[146]). Therefore, the insanity is the source of all evils. This is because my insanity gave birth to my disobedience, and the disobedience gave birth to wound. And, consequently, to the wound, the same insanity gave birth to indifference, and the indifference caused the rottenness and the stench. And the wicked body has been filled with worms and has rotten. And because of being rotten it has been thrown into the sea and it has become food to the big fish. And the body has been dwelling into the entrails of the big fish until the heavenly worm has come and nailed the fish rod, and he has descended within the entrails of the big fish and he has got out, through the fish's mouth, the food swallowed by the fish, together with the fish's entrails. And by taking the body he has anointed the body with oil, he has soaked the body into water, and he has backed the body in fire. For he says: "He will baptize you into the Holy Ghost and into fire" (Mt. 3: 11). And then he has nourished the body with bread, and he gladdened the body with wine, he has sprinkled salt on the body, and he has escaped the body from corruptness. In addition to that, he soaked the body with mustard, so that he has removed all the rottenness. Then he has withered the nostrils of the dragon in order the dragon no longer be able to smell, and he made the dragon's eyes fogy in order the dragon no longer be able to see the consummation of His humbleness.

So, by knowing all these things, let's not overlook His urge, so that not to be accomplished with us to the word: "if the salt gets broken what it will be salted with?" (Mt. 5: 13).

And what is the absence of these ones except that what was said: "The insane one said within his heart: there is no God" (Ps. 13: 1[147]). If you haven't forgotten anything form the [146] In KJB we have: Ps. 38: 5: "My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness."; in ROB we have: Ps. 37: 5: "My wound has become stinky and the have rotten, form the face of my insanity." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[147] In KJB we have: Ps. 38: 5: "THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good."; in ROB we have: Ps. 13: 1: "The insane one said within his heart: "There is no God!". old things and if you know the last things, you will listen to Him who sys: "He who know the will of his master but he doesn't fulfill it, he will deviate much" (Lk. 12: 47). Therefore, if by knowing those we tell them, but in the same time we overlook them, that "woe to you" - uttered against them who commit sins knowingly - it won't be far from us. But if we reckon ourselves as dust and ashes, as Abraham and Job did (Gen. 18: 27; Job 42: 6), we won't ever be robbed, but we will forever have what to give to others: not gold or silver, but humbleness and patience and love towards God[148, 149]. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

63. (V. 159) The same brother, by feeding himself on a little bread, he again asked the Great Oldman about the diet.

Answer: Brother, rejoice into the Lord. Pray God to give me consummate patience. Because I start a thing but I do not bring git to an end, and I immediately wobble in my work. I want to lay down a beginning and to reach an end. This is for I am hearing the Apostle who says about beginning and about end: "He Who starts withing us all the good thing He will bring that thing to an end until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1: 6).

But even if I, the needy, I do nothing pleasant to God, at your request I am giving you my opinion as to a brother: take, if you can, four little breads[150] a week, and on Sundays, because of the helplessness of the body, take a soup, or some boiled

there is no one." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[148] It is mentioned the foundation of the monastery where they were both of them, which the enemy didn't do it, but the enemy wanted to destroy it, because of seeing the fruit of the true life growing within that monastery.

[149] When you reckon yourself as nothing, you are more than him who has no conscience. This is because that one by being nothing, he doesn't even have at least the conscience of being nothing. He is a nothing in an increased degree. Having the conscience that you are nothing it means having a conscience. Sand through this conscience you not only know your nothing, but you will also know the greatness of God. And in a way, the man, through his conscience, he participated more to Him Who the man is from. This is for the man knows about the greatness of his Creator. The man can give forever, through his humbleness, something to others too.

[150] In the Greek text: λαιτιγα, which is explain in a note as: πίττα (pitta).

vegetables. I reckon that is good you to take those. And whether I speak stupidly, I don't know. Forgive me, brother, for I should have asked you to guide me, but my pride hasn't left me yet, and the pride is the root of all evils. Pray brother for us to cross over the stretch of the road from ahead of us. Because it is full of swirls and of dangers, and I stupidly laugh at it and I remain careless. But I do not cut off my hope. For I have the Master merciful and loving. Give me your hand, with love, and pull me towards Him, in order Him to save me because I am miserable. Him it is due the glory forever.

64. (V. 160) The same brother, by not keeping the diet recommended him by the Oldman, he asked the Oldman the same thing for the second time. And the Oldman answered him like this:

Brother, obeying I your love, I am giving you an advice. You find my word powerless. And this is not because of you, but it is because of me. And this is because my words are fruitless. My words do not have power because are not from deeds accomplished with sweat. But he who asks and doesn't obey, he angers God, because after the question there will come also the envy of the enemies. We still do not know even up to these days the craftsmanships of the devils. This is said, ceaselessly, by the Apostle, saying: "We do not know his thoughts" (2 Cor. 2: 11). Dare, my brother, for if I didn't reckon you of the same soul with me, I wouldn't answer you. This is because, as I said before, I am not worthy of something like that. But for God attached me to your love, I am saying you again, stupidly: use four little breads a week, and on Sunday take a soup or some boiled vegetables. But do not reckon in your heart that I have given you a command. For this isn't a command, but it is the opinion of a brother of yours. The stadium has been opened; let's run in order to take the crown (1 Cor. 9: 24). This is because we are humans submitted to corruption and lasting shortly on earth. Let's run in order us to find the mercy on that fearful and scary hour, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

65. (V. 161) The answer of the same great Oldman towards the same brother about the meaning of the answer sent by the Oldman.

Brother, what can I tell you about that, because I haven't really done anything? So, you say that I have been doing and that I am doing; I do not remember anything, except, that I have been always upsetting God because of my deeds. That's why I do not expect anything for my deeds, but I hope that God will save me for His love for people. This is for He dies in order to save the sinners (1 Tim. 1: 15). I therefore trust His name, until Himself will come to me and ask me: "What do you want Me to do to you?", in order I to answer together with the blind man: "To see, my Lord" (Mt. 10: 46-52). This is because, if I had deeds, by fearing the condemnation of the Pharisee (Lk. 18: 10-14), I wouldn't dare to say it. That's why I am telling you, brother, that the whole my life and the whole my hope hangs on Him, and I pray day and night I to be cleaned of my shown and of my hidden passions. So, what could I tell you about deeds, when I hear that "any mouth will be shut" (Rom. 3: 19), and that: "him who praises himself, let him praise himself into the Lord" (1 Cor. 1: 31)? But blessed is him who has been cleaned up of his anger and of his other passions and who kept all the commandments and he still says: "Unworthy servant I am" (Lk. 17: 10). This is because, if we do a good deed but we lose it because of our pride, what will we benefit of it, because we build and tear down on each day? But he who despises that glory and that dishonor, that one can be saved into Christ Jesus our Lord. Him to be the glory. Amen.

Surrender yourself to the Lord and assertively live a life in quietude, praying for me, for I am unworthy and humble.

66. (V. 162) The question of the same brother towards the same Oldman: Brother, pray for me, for I am getting tired. Before taking advice from you, anything that I was reckoning that it was good, I was doing that according to my opinion, and without getting tired. But ever since you have been giving me advices, I am getting so tired that I am getting ill. I wrote you before, about these things, but you reckoned me as haughty and you have sent me a word about Pharisee. But I didn't write you, Father, because I was bragging, but because I was in need. I beg you, Father, you to pray the Lord so that Him to unveil me what is it with me?

The answer of the same great Oldman: Brother, the Holy Scripture says: "Do all things with advice and without advice" (Prov. 24: 72). When you were working without advice, and according to your will, you tell me that you were not getting tired with your mind. But there is nobody needing no advice, except only God Who has made the wisdom (Prov. 3: 22). But when you searched, according to the will of God, you to cut off your will and to achieve the humbleness, by taking as adviser your smaller brother, you infuriated the demon that hates the good and who is always full of envy towards all people. Can you see the devil's cunningness? I didn't appoint you anything from me, but you asked me and I advised you like a brother. And you heard my advice, but you disregarded it and you accomplished more than I told you. And I told you about the things of the Pharisee, for the Pharisee said what he said by bragging himself. And you asked for an assurance based on your deeds, and that is nothing else but a sign of pride. Take heed and look carefully at how, when you lay down a beginning, the demon immediately brings you a motif for you to leave that beginning. And you lay down again another beginning, but you will leave that beginning too, by not reminding that "he who endures to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22) and that "He Who starts within you all the good thing, That One will bring it to an end until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ (Phil. 1: 6)[151]. If you are pleased to do it according to your will, as you have been doing it until now, I won't be upset, because I don't want to be somebody's Abba or teacher. This is for I have as reproach the [151] Here the patience has a meaning of perseverance into the good thing that you have started in repentance, in fasting, in prayer, in taking care of somebody. Him wo has not perseverance, he won't fulfill anything and he won't accomplish on himself. On the contrary, he will produce within himself a disorder. And such a man won't be able to stand next to God, or such am man won't be able to feel God, for God is the spring of the steadfast order and He is the Subject of the consummate Self-control. Being such, God is present with His help there where this road of the accomplishments takes place, accomplishments growing up one out of another; and there where this road is not traveled, God is not present there, but there is present the ghost of the disorder that tears all things apart, and he makes the man not to fulfill on himself and in all things there to be spread the chaos, and this is because the devil cannot lead the created world to anything, nor the created world can reach anywhere by itself, once the created world exists by the will of God, so that the devil attempts to at least bring the world to disorder, by which it cannot fulfill anything really.

words of the Apostle who says: "You who teach another, why don't you teach yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21).

Brother, it depends on them who work for their salvation "to thin up their soul as a spider net" (Ps. 38: 15[152]). Therefore, we need much patience until entering, through many troubles, the Kingdom of God, into Christ Jesus our lord. Amen. Forgive me, brother, and pray for me.

67. (V. 163) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: You who searched to the strayed sheep (Mt. 18: 12) of Jesus, you teach us too how must we search for the Shepherd. Father, I want to ask you about a word: It was written: "Search for the Lord and strengthen yourself. Always look at His face" (Ps. 104: 4[153]). But how could the sinner man always to look at the Lord? Teach us too, through Him Whom you have been wised up by, for Us too to always look at the face of the Lord. For Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother Euthimios, I always pray myself to your love, toil together with me in my prayer towards the loving-of-people God. You love asked me to write to you how we must search for the Shepherd. Since the first day and until today I have been praying God for your ask, and God tells me: "Clean your heart of the thoughts of the former man and I will fulfill your asks[154]. This is for My gifts take place within the clean ones, and My gifts are bestowed to them, and as long as your heart is moved by anger and by the remembrance of the evil and by the passions resembling to the former man, the wisdom won't come within your heart. If you desire my gifts, you will remove from within you the vessels of the foreign one[155] and My gifts will come to you by themselves. Haven't you ever heard the word: "One cannot serve to masters" (Mt. 6: 24)? If one serves Me, he won't serve the devil. If one serves the devil, he won't serve Me. If one wants to be worthy of with My gifts, let him take heed at My traces. This is for, as an innocent Lamb, I have received all the sufferings, while not opposing in anything[156]. I have told you too, you to have the innocence of the pigeon (Mt. 10: 16) and instead of that you have the savageness of the passions. You see that I am not saying: "Walk in the light of your fire" (Isa. 50: 11)[157].

[153] In KJB we have" Ps. 105: 4: "Seek the Lord, and his strength: seek his face evermore."; in ROB we have: Ps. 104: 4: "Search for the Lord and strengthen yourself; look at His face, always." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[154] One can feel Christ after removing from the own heart the disturbance, the narrowing of the worries, and the egotistic passions. In such a state, one can feel the broadness of the generosity, the calm of the sovereign self-control of the supreme and all-loving Subject Who gives peace to the man as well.

By hearing these things, I am in grief and in moans, until His kindness will have mercy on me too, so that he will deliver me from the awful passions of the former man, in order I to step on the traces of the new man and to receive everything coming upon me with much patience. This is for you know what the patience works. The Apostle reminded about that too (Rom. 15: 4). Pray for me, my brother, so that to be bestowed to me too I to correct myself. This is because I am mindless, but I love them who teach me and who rebuke me, for I know that their teaching will be towards my soul's salvation. Pray for me also for I to escape from falling off what it is right, because of the troubles I have from all things. And especially forgive me for I am always throwing you into tiredness. This is for that will bring you much reward into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

68. (V. 164) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Father, my tiredness which I told you about, you have taken them upon yourself. This thing is done by the wiseman not only for sharing the burden with somebody who is [155] Those are the narrow, agitated, and dirty vessels of the passionate senses, in which cannot be contained the broadness of the sovereign generosity and peace of God.

[156] The unselfish limitlessness, the generous and self-mastering broadness of God has taken in the embodied Son of God, the form of enduring the sufferings to death. Far from avoiding to suffer for us and far from being contrary to that, the dispassion of God is its premise, its foundation. This thing should be deepened by the newer Occidental theology, which reckon that we must leave the idea of the dispassionate God and to replace it for the idea of a God Who is capable of suffering.

[157] They who are passionate light up a fire among themselves too, a fire of the evilness, of the enmity. They will eternally be burnt in that fire, and they will suffer the torment caused them by that fire. There where isn't the calm of the self-control, there won't be felt the presence of the All-Mastering God Who reconciles all things with His love.

close to them, but also for many, and for the benefit of our souls. And even more than that, as a true parent, you urge us to ask you about the way of our life. Therefore, I beg you, once the Lord has sent you to me as a shore and as a place of escaping, have mercy and prey the Master for Him to have mercy on me and to show me a little light, for I often fall because of my nescience; and you teach me as you taught me for the first time, how must I repent myself. And after that, please show me the path so that I will know how to walk on it.

Answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, I am talking to you as to my own soul. This is for the Lord tied my soul together with your soul, by telling me: "Do not part with him". That's why it hasn't been me teaching you, but you have been the one teaching me. This is because I fear him who said: "You who teach another, why don't you teach yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21). But because you are telling me that, despite being said that "It is enough a sign to the wiseman" (Prov. 9: 9), "just because of that it is not enough to me"[158], but you wish to hear it more limpidly, I am going to answer you. Although, I know that if a mindless man mistakes in his words, he will be forgiven by anybody. This is because he is mindless and he is excused. But is a wiseman is wrong, he won't be forgiven. This is because the wiseman is wise and he mistakes knowingly. So, if one of the brothers from outside[159] are wrong in what they say, he will be forgiven for he is like everybody. But if we are wrong, while we are reckoned by people as withdrawn and living in quietude and kind, what forgiveness could we have? So, if you have to know openly the thing which you are asking me about, I will tell you: Sit inside as one who is dead to the world. This is because, when you go to meet somebody out of love and joyfully, but you turn back angrily and dominated by the memory of the evil and you defame another and not yourself and you do not say: "I'm worthless" but you respect yourself, and when an occasion occurs you say: "Tell them that I said that and they will obey you with pleasure", what do you thing that you are, by saying that they will receive your word with pleasure? Do you reckon yourself alike Prophet Elijah? So, you must defame yourself and all the things happened to you in this case. You must know that nothing happens to you without the will of God, either restring, or giving of thanks, either trouble towards patience. Take heed at the written word: "You must bear even him who slap you on your cheek" and so on (2 Cor. 11: 20). How far are we from God! If you want to find out the way, it is this: You will reckon him who hits you as one who caresses you. And you will reckon him who dishonors you, as one who glorified you; and you will reckon him who troubles you, as one who rests you. And if because of your forgetfulness, or if willingly, some people do not pay you the usual attention, you won't mind but you will rather say that that will have been the will of God. And when some people like those come to see you, you will receive them joyfully, by saying that being you worthless God will have had mercy on you as on Daniel who, when God visited him, Daniel was saying only this: "Gor has remembered me (Dan. 12: 37), because he reckoned on himself as worthless. Do not reckon as right to conclude your sayings with the expression: "I have said that well" or, when you have thought something, to say: "I've thought it well". Where it is the good? Why can't us see the good in not upsetting anybody either with our word, or with our deed, so that God will be together with us in all things?[160] You have fought to show your thought to your brothers and to accomplish you will, by saying: "If this won't be done today…" and you have wounded the thought of the younger ones who say: "What a big deal would be two more days? Why the old man has not patience to wait a little longer?". Tell me, it has been really done a good thing? And have you ascended to heavens[161]? You were simply stricken by the devil at it was due, [160] This gentleness makes our being transparent to God. This gentleness vibrates by the presence of God as by a love-breeze, like the petal of a flower vibrates by a gentle breeze. But that makes also our fellow humans, for they are sensitized by our gentleness, to become transparent to God at their turn. Wherefrom this force of the gentleness come if not from God Who has the supreme quality of the existence shown in an untold noblesse? On the contrary, by affirming your own righteousness, by separating yourself from all others and by placing yourself an everybody else in the disturbance of the insensitive strife, you will have locked yourself towards God. God cannot be contained by this narrowness, neither by the opaque disturbance that is incapable of clear sight.

[158] "Because I am not wise".
[159] From outside the monastery.

[161] Have you ascended to heavens by hurrying yourself up to immediately accomplish something because you wanted that to be done so? Wasn't in that a disturbance and a pride, that locked you up, and you even locked you up to yourself, and so you separated yourself from God Who is the spring of the non-narrowed ambience of understanding and of love whose subject you are called to be.

by brother. Let's now leave the dead to bury their dead ones[162]. And let's preach the Kingdom of God in to Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

69. (V. 165) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman, addressed in form of a prayer: "You who are the life of the despaired ones, please do not overlook me! Because I lay down in despair". "The showing of Your words lightens and it wises the little children" (Ps. 118: 130[163]). You told me, you the holy, that I must clean up myself and I must get out from within myself the former man. But how could the mud clean itself up? Or how can the house adorn itself, without he who has built the house up to adorn the house? Or how can the claypot, made by the potter, to burn itself, if not the potter himself will place that claypot into the oven and without the potter checking the pot whether it is good or not? Therefore, You too, You the holy, if You want to save this creature of Yours, send the godlike fire of Yours, so that the claypot made by You to receive from You the oil and not to fall apart. For Your is the glory forever. Amen.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, please do not force me to speak, for I want to embrace the quietude and the silence. Therefore, you must support your heart and persevere in steadfastness. This is because he who envied Adam since the beginning and he determined Adam to be cast of our Paradise, he envies our union into thought. But He who said: "I saw satan falling from sky as a lightning" (Lk. 10: 18), He will make satan helpless and He will break satan's snare apart. That's why you msut not allow yourself to be deceived by satan in any concern, neither you must allow yourself to be wabbled from your place. Satan deceived even Malchus. Because he is awfully infuriated against us. But when we humble ourselves, our Lord hinders satan's work. Let's therefore always defame ourselves. This is for, of this consists the victory. As about the thought to leave the monastery for the wilderness, the Fathers said that there are three precious things which if somebody guards them, he will be able to live in the mid of the people, or wherever he would be, as in wilderness: one to defame on himself, to throw his will behind, and to lay himself down under the feet of all creatures. Your love must also know that the whole devil's fight is to separate us from one another. This is for the devil sees the Scripture as truly fulfilled at us: "The brother helped by the brother, he will be like a stronghold fortifies and surrounded by walls (Prov. 18: 19). May God not give satan to fulfill his will with us, but, according to the Apostle's word: "To crash him quickly under our feet" (Rom. 16: 20). This is for I hope that both of us will be thrown in the same pit, as I said you before. And that's why God has gathered us together, in order us to benefit from one another. Even these temptations are means towards our benefit and strengthening.

[162] Saint Gregory of Nyssa urged the monks not to allow themselves to be taken into mastery by vain-glory as some souly dead ones, who are buried by praises and in other praises by other dead ones (About the rule of the Christian life in: Churchly Fathers and Writers).

[163] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 130: "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 130: "The showing of Your word enlightens and it wises up the little children."

Therefore, my brother, you must live in quietude, and pray for us to cross over this part of our road, so that our days won't be spent vainly. This is for the time draw closer and our enemy is furious[164]. God won't leave his toiling to be in vain. Let that not be! But as One Who "wants all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 11), He wants you to enter to consummation. But our Lord said to His apostles: "Then you say that unworthy servants you are" (Lk. 17: 20). That's why we control ourselves. And our Lord works His mercy on us for His name which we call it upon us (Jer. 14: 9). For Him it is due the glory, forever. Amen.

70. (V. 166) The devils sowing, because of his envy, in the thought of the Oldman who was calling the Oldman, a doubt concerning his answers, The Oldman knew the thought from within his heart and wrote him these:

Before all, I extoll the All-Holy and of-one-being Trinity, by saying: Glory to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, now and always and forever and ever. Amen. I haven't [164] We must not spend our time either in sins or vainly, but in order to do good and to advance in consummation, in the closeness to God, and in communion with one another, in getting liberated from the slavery of the separator passions which have neither purpose nor horizon. One must use his time the more seriously as his time draws closer to its end, and the enemy is furious on them who he thinks they will escape from him, for they have started on the road that takes them to the harmonious and eternal living into God.

started with this doxology without a purpose, but in order I to prove to the devil who hates the good, that is the hallucinations shown by him there cannot be seen anything of such a doxology, but there is only disturbance, sadness, and fear. Let's therefore, brother, give thanks to God for the deliverance from the temptation that has come upon us as upon some mindless people. This is for God's love for people hasn't allowed us to be lost to the end. This is for always will be true the word that says: "Alive I am", says the Lord, "for I do not want the death of the sinner, but him to turn back and be alive" (Ezek. 18: 23). Therefore, let's give always thanks to Him Who has saved us and Who always saves us: Him Whom the angels thank, the Powers which are above the world, the heavenly hosts, the Cherubs and the Seraphs, ceaselessly and uninterruptedly, with high voices, by shouting out and raising their voices and saying: "Holy, Holy, Holy is Lord Sabaoth" (Isa. 6: 3). By thinking at that, let us too to give thanks Him Whom "the sky is a chair and the earth is the stool of His feet" (Isa. 66: 1), Whom all the creation serves (Judith[165] 16: 14).

Starting from this example from the Scripture, let us too to give thanks to the Father for He has saved the world and He didn't spare even His Only Begotten Son, but He has sent His Son as Savior and Deliverer of our souls. Let's give thanks to the Son Who has humbled Himself, by making Himself obedient to death on the cross (Phil. 2: 8) for us the people. Let's give thanks to the Holy Ghost of-life-Maker, Who made Peter to repent and commanded Peter to go to Cornelius (Acts 10: 19-20), and He gave Peter power to rise from dead ad in case of Tabitha (Acts 9: 40), for the He always goes ahead and crushes the enemy's snares in front of those who call Him, saying according to David's prophecy: "The snare has been broken and we have been delivered; our help in the name of God Who made the sky and the earth" (Ps. 123: 7-8[166]).

[166] In KJB we have: Ps. 124: 7-8: "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. // Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 123: 7-8: "Our soul has escaped as a bird from the snare of the hunters; the snare has been broken and we have been delivered. // Our help is in the name of the Lord Who made the sky and the earth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Behold, therefore, that He has had mercy on us and He has healed us from such a grave illness. Let's hear Him saying: "Behold, you have been healed, from now on sin no more, lest you will suffer even worse" (Jn. 5: 14). Let's come in everything to humbleness.

This is for the humble one lays on the floor; and he who lays on the floor, where could him fall at anymore? But it is proven that him who is at height he will easily fall[167].

So, if we have turned ourselves and whether we have corrected ourselves, that is not from ourselves. "God's is the gift" (Eph. 2: 8). This is for "the Lord, he says, straightens them who have been crumbled and He wises the blind" (Ps. 145: 8[168]). And in the written word: "Who will separate us from the love of Christ?" (Rom. 8: 35), it is comprised a thought of a great consummation. But we have cut off the rope of the love, so that we are dying and we got separated from the ship of Christ.

But it will be good if I do not break the seal of Christ by speaking too much. This is for I am urged by him who says: "There where the wisemen are, you won't claim that you are wise" (Sirach[169] 7: 5). Therefore, I am stopping my word. I have written you as to a truly loved brother. If you do these things, you will reach at the path leading to the eternal life, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory, the honor, and the mastery, together with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, forever. Amen.

71. (V. 167) BY receiving that answer the Oldman surrendered himself to the crying and to the tears. In order to comfort him, the Great Oldman wrote him these: [167] If you reckon about yourself that you are the lowest one, you could fall because of your pride anymore. If you reckon yourself as the lowest one, you will no longer like to boast yourself out of pride. You will no longer be tempted by pride and you will no longer be able to reckon somebody else as lower than you are; you will no longer want to affirm yourself. You will no longer fear that somebody's opinion will lower you, lower than you are.

[168] In KJB we have: Ps. 146: 8: "The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind: the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down: the Lord loveth the righteous:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 145: 8: "The Lord straightens the hunched over, the Lord wises the blind, the Lord loves the righteous;" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[169] This book - together with other thirteen books – it is not given in the KJB, but it is given in ROB. It can be downloaded in English translation from www.academia.edu, bearing the title Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

Brother, let's throw behind ourselves all the past things, according to the Apostle's word, who says: "The old things have passes, behold, all the things have been renewed" (2 Cor. 5: 17). Let's unite ourselves together under the gentle yoke of Christ and let's strengthen ourselves into Christ's love. This is for it has been said: "God is love" (1 Jn. 4: 8). So, if you say that somebody has love, let him have nothing that Christ hates[170]. Let's strive and clean our heart up of the former man who hates God. This is for "we are dwelling places (churches) of His" (2 Cor. 6: 16) and God won't dwell in a place that is filled up with the ugly stench of the passions.

Therefore, let's enter our tiny dwelling place and let's appease ourselves in there[171], for it has been made as big as we need it; and let's pray for our quiet life to be according to His will, by glorifying the Holy and the righteous Trinity. You enter, therefore, and you surrender me too to God and no longer get yourself disturbed by asking me and by writing me. This is because I too am busy now.

I am sending you the prayer which you have asked me for, knowing that I am but "dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27). I am not sending it to you as one who is worthy, but as one who is unworthy, for I am unclean and debtor in all things, and I am sending it to you only in order not to disregard the commandment that says: "To everyone who asks from you, you give him" (Mt. 5: 12). And am sending it to you for that love into Christ. When you receive it, pray for me. And pray for: "our toil not to be in vain" (1 Thes. 3: 5), but to be (fruitful) into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

72. (V. 168) Some ill old man named Andrew, who lives in the congregational monastery, he confessed to the same Great Oldman some of his secrets and he also thanked him for being found worthy of living near to him; also, about his illness…

[170] He who believes in Christ, let him show that he no longer has anything ugly in him.

[171] That is a practice developed in the prayer done within heart by the hesychasts from the Century XIV. You appease yourself within your heart, for you will encounter God within your heart, by withdrawing yourself from all the worries related to the world. Our heart is the tiny temple where God lives within, and we will meet God if we appease on ourselves. But our heart – our temple – has been created big enough for accommodating God within. Our temple is tiny but it is opened to infinite.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If you truly believe that God is the One Who has brought you here, then you will entrust Him the taking care of yourself, by throwing upon Him all your worries (Ps. 54: 25[172]; 1 Pt. 5: 7). And He will order your thing as He wishes. And if you doubt about a certain thing, or about your bodily illness, or about some souly passions, you must take care of yourself by your own, as you know. This is for the doubt that appears in him who has left all the thing in the care of God, in case he has a minor annoyance, it will always make him say: "If I took care of my body, I wouldn't reach to suffer thus"[173]. But he who gives himself to God wholeheartedly, he must surrender yourself all the way to death. This is for God know more than we know what is beneficial to our soul and body. And the more God allows somebody to be tormented by his body, the more alleviation God will bring to that man of his committed sins[174]. This is for God doesn't ask from you anything but thanking and patience and prayer for forgetting your sins.

But take heed at how proud I am, because while being I the mockery of the devils and by reckoning I that I have that love according to God, I am defeated: for I am telling you: "I bear half of your burden and regarding the future may God help us"[175]. I have spoken like a mindless, by telling you these [173] The less you believe that God takes care of your things, the more you will take care of yourself. This is lest, by coming to you, still, some upset consequently to your decision to let everything in the care of God, some doubt to engulf you that you haven't done right by totally letting yourself in the care of God. Besides, when you do not fully believe that God will take care of you, it will necessarily appear the worry for taking care of yourself. On the other hand, a weak faith diminishes also objectively the work of God upon you, because you haven't opened yourself fully to God's work. The faith is the entrance door of God within your being and within your works.

[172] In KJB we have: Ps. 55: 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 25: "Throw towards the Lord your worry and He will feed you; He won't ever give wobbling to the righteous." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[174] He who surrenders himself, out of a strong faith, in the care of God, let him do that thinking at even enduring the death through his taking care of himself, for only in this he will show his full faith in God and by that he will show his faith that God will escape when it will seem to himself that he can no longer escape by himself. This will be if God wants to escape him.

[175] He fears being there a shameless pride in affirming such a strong faith, so that him no longer be able to despair, despite the whole his worthlessness, or despite the whole pride that could be hidden in claiming such a great faith. Amazing souly analyzes! Amazing and subtle souly complexities! The gentleness of the saint takes here the shape of a paradox: I cannot things. This is for I know myself as weak and helpless and empty of any good thing. But my shamelessness doesn't allow me to despair. This is for I have my Master full of tenderness and of mercy and of love for people and He stretched His hand to the sinner until the sinner's last breath. Attach yourself to Him and He will fulfill everything we ask from Him or everything we think. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen. Forgive me, brother, and pray for me.

73. (V. 169) Hearing from the Great Oldman: "I bear half of your burden" and getting sad because the Great Oldman didn't promise him the full forgiveness, the old Andrew begged the Oldman for the second time to be merciful to him and to give him the consummate forgiveness through Christ.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I wonder about your love, brother, because you do not understand the things of that love according to God. Firstly, God know that I reckon myself as "dust and ashes" (Job 42: 6) and as being wholly nothing. Though, if I tell to somebody something that is over my measures, or that is over my power, I will do that for I am moved by the love of Christ, knowing that through myself I am nothing and that I am a "worthless servant" (Lk. 17: 10). Therefore, because you didn't understand what I told you, that I am bearing half of your sins, you find out that by saying that I have made you together-partaker with me. And I didn't tell you that I bear a third, so that I would allow you to bear more than I do, and so you would be more burdened. On the other hand, I told you these things in order to cast out my pride from within me. That's why I didn't tell you that I am bearing two thirds, so that I would show myself stronger than you are. This is because such saying would be an image of the vain-glory. I didn't tell you either that I bear your entire burden. This is because that is characteristic to the consummate ones who have reached to be brothers of Christ Who put His soul for us and Who wants them who love to love with a consummate love.

allow you unassured about my participation to the burden of your troubles or about the help that God will give you, but on the other hand I fear that that will sound like pride, but despite the risk of seeming I proud or tempted by pride, I cannot avoid encouraging you. This still doesn't allow him to tell that brother that the whole burden is his.

And again, on the other hand, if I didn't tell you that, I would leave you outside the spiritual work. So, I do not search for vain-glory by taking everything upon myself. Neither I envy you once I reckon you as partaker to the good-turning[176]. If we are brothers, we will share equally the inheritance of our Father, so that there won't be any injustice between us. And if you want me to take everything upon myself, I accept that too due to my obedience. Forgive me, because my much love drives me to much-speaking. But may this too to be towards your joy into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

74. (V. 170) The ask of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman for the Oldman to pray for him because of the illness that came upon him.

The answer of the Great Oldman Barsanuphius: The Scripture says: "We crossed through fire and through water and You brought us out in order us to breathe" (Ps. 65: 11[177]). They who want to be pleasant to God they must cross through some troubles. How could we bless the holy martyrs for the sufferings they endured for God? Tell to your troubled soul: Isn't more useful to you the fever from now than the Gehenna? Let's not allow ourselves to be discouraged in illness, for the Apostle said: "When I am weak, then I am strong" (2 Cor. 13: 10). Think that "God examines the hearts and the entrails:" (Ps. 7: 9[178]). Let's be patient, let's endure, let's become disciples of the Apostle, who says: "In sufferance be patient" (Rom. 12: 12), thank God for everything (1 Thes. 5: 18), so that not to happen to us too what it was said: "He will confess to You when you do him good"

[176] If he said that he bears the whole burden of the brother, on one hand he would risk to show a visible pride, and on the other hand he would risk to envy the brother for no longer bearing the burden of his mistakes.

[177] In KJB we have: Ps. 66: 12: "Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place."; in ROB we have: Ps. 65: 11: "You raised people over our heads, we crossed through fire and through water and you brought us out to resting." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[178] In KJB we have: Ps. 7: 9: "Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just: for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins."; in ROB we have: Ps. 7: 9: "May the evilness of the sinners come to and end and You strengthen the righteous, You Who examine the hearts and the entrails, You the righteous God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

(Ps. 48: 19[179]). And if you have a bodily health and a small suffering came to you, why wouldn't you remember Job who says: "If I have received from the hand of God the good things, won't I endure the bad things too?" (Job 2: 10). Think at the fact that they who want the resting in everything, they will hear: "You have taken the good thing of yours during your life" (Lk. 16: 25). Let's not get discouraged. We have a merciful God Who knows our helplessness more than we do; and if God, in order to test us, He brings upon us some illness, we have the Apostle offering us the comforting by saying: "Faithful is God Who won't allow you to be tested more than you can endure, but God will bring together with the trial its end too, in order you to be able to endure" (1 Cor. 10: 13). The Lord will strengthen you too who are ill, and him who serves you, and your deeds will be towards the glory of God. Keep your patience all the way to the end. Do not get discouraged. Do not get despaired. This is for close in God Who says: "I won't leave you; I won't forsake you" (Hebr. 13: 5).

Believe me, brothers, that I was mastered by vain-glory, for when I was ill, I never laid down, neither did I leave my handwork, despite great helplessness coming upon myself. But now too, the vain-glory sets up its trap to me. This is because ever since I have entered this monastic cell it hasn't allowed the illness to try me. And I am sad because I want to endure. No suffering comes upon me and I get melted down when hearing: "He who endures all the way to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22)[180]. But pray for you to be able to persevere in the hope of that salvation into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

[179] In KJB we have: Ps. 49: 18: "Though while he lived he blessed his soul: and men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself."; in ROB we have: Ps. 48: 19: "Even if his soul will be blessed during his life and he will praise you when you do good to him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[180] Another nimble play of paradoxes. The Great Oldman deplores the fact that, by giving his previous patience as example to others, he allowed himself to be mastered by vain-glory. But he was unable to leave the addressee unstraightened by the example of his patience. But he complains that since he has locked himself in his monastic cell no trial of illness affected him, so that he had not occasion to be patient. And without patience, how could he be saved? Still, on one hand, he fears to desire for the illness to come upon him, by affirming that if he was able to endure it, he would appear like one who searches for vain-glory. On the other hand, he fears that his high-living could stop the illness to come to him. That's why he called the monastic cell which he locked in, as the cell of the vain-glory.

75. (V. 171) The same old man, still sick, he begged the Great Oldman to pray for him, in order him to be found worthy of being helped by God.

The answer of Barsanuphius. Once you have God, you do not fear, but you throw all your worries upon Him and He will take care of you (Ps. 54: 25[181]); 1 Pt. 5: 7). Don't you know that if this earthly house of our tent gets undone, we will have as building from God a house not made by hand, and eternal, in heavens?" (2 Cor. 5: 1). Believe without doubting, and God will help you. This is for God is merciful. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

76. (V. 172) The same old man, by living together with a certain brother who was sick too, and he asked the other Oldman to pray for him.

The answer of John: The Lord said: "Into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 29: 19). And the Apostle, following Him, he said: "You need patience" (Hebr. 10: 36). And the prophet said: "Waiting, I was waiting for the Lord and He looked at me" (Ps. 39: 1[182]). Our sweet Lord said: "He who will endure all the way to the end, that one will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). Both of you must persevere in patience, giving thanks and looking at the holy power of God that comes from above. This is for all these things are for your testing. Take vigil on the things we said: "Tempt me, Lord, and forgive me" (Ps. 25: 2[183]).

77. (V. 173) The question of the same old man addressed to the same Great Oldman: For my thought tells me that I cannot

[181] In KJB we have: Ps. 55: 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 25: "Throw your worry towards the Lord and He will feed you; he won't ever give wobbling to the righteous." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[182] In KJB we have: Ps. 40: 1: "I WAITED patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 39: 1: "Waiting, I was waiting for the Lord and He leaned towards me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[183] In KJB we have: Ps. 26: 2: "Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 25: 2: "Examine me, Lord, and test me; set my entrails and my heart in fire." (E. l. t.'s n.)

be saved, pray for me, you merciful Father, and tell me what must I do, for I am impeded from fasting.

The answer of Barsanuphius: God of the heavens and of the earth may give to you and to me the unworthy, to find mercy at that time and to daringly stand before His fearsome and glorious judgment throne. My beloved brother, for we have such a merciful God, you must not throw yourself into despair. This is because seeing you fallen into despair will be the great joy of the devil. You must trust our Lord. This is for nobody will be pulled out of the Lord's sheep flock - for He is our God – if we endure in this place all the way to the end. This is for there are some people in this place who have much daring towards God and they persevere in their prayers addressed to God so that not to be separated from them those who are united with them in this blessed place; but as they remain together in that place chosen by God to be His name called there, likewise they to remain together in the future too[184].

Therefore, you the most-honored, do not fear, for I the helpless and all-unimportant, I have received the assurance that you will be counted and written down together with the blessed flock of Christ, and how much more were entrusted of that the saints of God who were worthy of Him? Therefore, you must wait for the lord, and you must hope in Him. And about the bodily fasting, you mut not be sad, because of fasting bodily is nothing without fasting spiritually. This is for "not the things entering (without pleasure) the man defiled the man, but the things coming out of man" (Mk. 7: 15). On the other hand, God [184] They who are weaker spiritually, if they remain united with them who are spiritually stronger – and that depend on living in the same place – the weaker will rejoice themselves too in the future life of the good things which the stronger will rejoice of, as well. By loving the stronger, by honoring the stronger, the weaker receive within them something from the stronger. There will take place a communication of the soul state from the more advanced to the lass advanced. The weaker won't be separated from the stronger not even when within the stronger will be overpoured the whole knowledge and consummation of the full communion with God. There is an interior communion among those who are on the higher and on the lower spiritual levels. This implies a great responsibility of the stronger ones for the weaker ones; the stronger ones must make themselves loved by the weaker ones for the way they behave to the weaker. Besides, this fact is an unavoidable consequence of the high-quality of their souly state. But that doesn't spare the weaker ones of opening their soul with understanding towards the better ones. Thus, if there are in a certain place a few who are spiritually very strong, all of those living there can be saved. But if there are not such strong ones, by living together only weak ones, they can ever-multiply the evil in all of them, by the bad examples they give to one another.

has given to the monk, as helmsman, the right-reckoning (the power of discernment). You discern therefore, my beloved one, whom asks God to give alms, the poor or the rich? This is for he says: "Do not cease to do good to the needy, as you have at hand" (Prov. 3: 27). So, God doesn't ask them who are sick in their body to restrain themselves, but he asks that to the powerful and healthy in their body. Descend, be a little indulgent with your body. This is for that won't be a sin. God won't ask from you the restraint for God knows the helplessness sent to you by Him.

Therefore, you must thank in all God's things (1 Thes. 5: 18). This is for the giving of thanks will raise to God the prayer for your helplessness. Take off you, therefore, your former man who gets corrupted together with the lusts of the deceit, and you must put on the new man who is built according to God (Eph. 4: 22-24). And you must rejoice yourself into the Lord, gladdening yourself together with His saints who are always rejoicing. Who can understand that? Who can intuit the untold joy of the saints? Their indescribable joy? The unimaginable light? Who is Him who unveiled to the saints, even from here, His wonderful and glorious mysteries and the glory and the resting waiting for them, and the image estranging their mind from this world, so that the saints always see themselves as in heavens, together with Christ and with the angels? They are not bothered by hunger, nor by thirst, neither by anything earthly. This is for they have been freed of all burdens and passions and sins. Or, according to eth Scripture's words: "Where their treasure is, there will be their mind" (Mt. 6: 21). He who has reached this, he knows what he hears. But what should I do because of not having I anything done? But I do not despair. This is for God is powerful to place us among those who will find mercy into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory together with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, forever. Amen. May our Lord hear His true servants and Him to send you quickly His great mercy, and Him to give me I to know so that "I to be able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4). Pray for me and embrace my brother, who is together-servant with you, and pray him to do the same thing for my fewness.

78. (V. 174) Question addressed to the same Great Oldman: I awfully suffer of rheumatism in my feet and in my hands and I fear that not to be from demons, please tell me Father if that is so. But what should I do, because it bothers me so much, because I cannot fast and I am often forced to eat. And what is the fact that I see in my dreams like some wild beats on a wall? I beg you, Master, for the Lord, send me a small blessing out of your food and water, so that I will be comforted by taking them.

Do not be sand, my beloved one. That is not from demons, but it is a rheumatism allowed by the pedagogical will of God towards bettering us up, if we accept it with thankfulness. Wasn't Job true friends with God? And the end of his patience brought him to an unimaginable glory.

Therefore, you must endure a little and you will se ethe glory of God.

Regarding the fasting, do not be sad. This is for, as I told you before, God doesn't ask us something over our power. What is the fasting else but a pedagogy of the body, towards the obedience of the healthy body and towards weakening its tendency towards passions. This is for he says: "When I am weak, then I am strong" (2 Cor. 12: 10). And the illness is above the pedagogical rebuking, and it will be reckoned to him who endures it patiently while giving thanks to God for it, instead of ascesis, or even more than that, and he will collect out of this patience the fruit of his salvation. So, you must not weaken your body by fasting, when your body is weak by itself. Give thanks to God for you have been delivered from the toil of the restraint. I am telling you tenfold: do not get sad. If you eat, you won't be condemned. This is for that doesn't come to us out of the devils' work, neither out of the drowsiness of our thought, but in order us to be tested and towards our soul's benefit.

And the dreams with wild beasts are hallucinations form the devils which want to delude you through those to believe that your illness is from them. But our Lord will empty them of power by the word of His mouth (2 Tim. 2: 8) through the prayers of the saints[185]. Amen.

[185] The name of our Lord Jesus Christ is fearful to the devils and to them who allow themselves to be dominated by the passions from the devils. But His name is fearful due to its gentleness and cleanness of his humanity, one that means in the same time a freedom from

Do not get sad. This is for "him who is loved by the Lord, the Lord rebukes him, and the Lord whips anyone who receives Him" (Prov. 3: 12). I believe that God will have mercy also on this bodily illness of yours, as He wishes. May the Lord give you power and strength for you to endure it. Amen. I am sending you a little water out of the pitcher of our bless Father Euthimios. I am sending you also a little blessing out of my food, so that you too to bless this food, Pray for me, you all-desired brother.

79. (V. 174) The ask of the same old man addressed to another Oldman: Pray for me Father for my grave illness and tell me about diet. Isn't that a mistake eating quickly and often? And about singing psalms: what it is the extent which I can pass over it to? Because I cannot sing. Plan me, Master, and water me (1 Cor. 3: 6-8). Explain to me what our saint Father told me that "the Lord will have mercy on you": did he say that about my death?

The answer of John: I kept my silence because of not knowing what to say to you, and not because of hiding something good from you. Why do you ask for bread from him who eats carobs? And I am not writing to you for, despite I am nothing, I rejoice together with you of the things written to you by our blessed Oldman. This is for he nourished you with the strong food of the spiritual bread. Why do you need for my watery milk that cause you disgust? Neither the Scripture nor the Fathers impeded the descent to the body, one done not out of pleasure but with right-reckoning (discernment). So, as I told you before, if you do not eat and when you do not drink in a wasting manner, neither out of pleasure, the food and the drink won't bring you condemnation, for they won't be towards offense. About them the Lord said that they won't defile the man (Mk. 7: 15).

Regarding the singing of Psalm, or regarding the Liturgy, do not get troubled. This is for God won't ask them from you if you are ill. He who takes heed at himself, he will cause top himself the suffering of the ascesis for the Lord and for his own salvation… But you have the suffering of your illness instead of everything that is evil, and an absolute power against the evil. In Christ the humane existence is not submitted to any enslavement.

the suffering of your ascesis. Regarding your illness, do not get discouraged, for the lord won't forsake you, but the Lord will use your illness as only Him knows, towards your benefit, in order you not to suffer overmeasure.

And the Oldman didn't say to you about death, but only about the mercy that God will have on your love. Therefore, I beg you to endure it as he told you and you will truly see the glory of God.

Regarding the planting, if he who plants and waters is nothing, and for you put those on my behalf, you better have God instead of me – because I am nothing –, for God give the growth and He shelters and He does with you according to His mercy. Therefore, you must rejoice His kindness and encourage yourself and be strong in Him. And pray for me so that His mercy be made with me.

80. (V. 176) The same old man tormented by illness asked the same Oldman to pray for him.

Ane answer of John: Your illness is towards your testing. Endure it while giving thanks to God and God will quickly have mercy on you. I embrace you into the Lord and I ask you to pray for me.

81. (V. 177) The same one askes the Great Oldman the same thing.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Behold that brother John too, he told him that you that God will quickly have mercy on you. So, because I am all-unimportant, what could I say to more to him? I today am still rejoicing for I believe that God will send him today the relief through the prayers of His saints. Pray, my beloved ones, for me.

82. (V. 178) After this answer, that ill brother got immediately healthy in that very day and he sent thanks to the Oldman announcing him the mercy that God has on him.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Our Lord Jesus Christ said to His disciples: "Do not rejoice for the devils will obey you in MY name, but for your names are written in heavens" (Lk. 10: 20). So, us too, if we jump and shout out for the help that came to our body in the name of God and in the name of Jesus Christ Who is the Protector of our souls, what will we say about the cleaning of all passions which will be given to our soul into the fearsome and glorified name of His? How many voices, tongues, thoughts, and hearts will be able to give Him the due doxology[186]? But I reckon that is not even in the incorporeal beings[187]. This is because the godhead is non-comprisable. Him it is due the glory and the mastery and the power, forever. Amen.

83. To this old man a certain brother told him: "behold that with the prayers of the saints you have been renewed, old man. And the old man answered to the brother: "Each time you have been telling me this word, even despite this time if the fourth time, I have been noticing that the devils are crushing my body". And the other Oldman was asked about that too.

The answer of John: This thing comes out of envy and of faithlessness. Out of envy because the devils do not rejoice about the good done to the man. Out of faithlessness, because by seeing the illness they to doubt in their heart[188].

[186] They will raise His doxology for the countless benefactions done to the diverse creatures, which will extoll him with the whole their being. But they will extoll Him full of bewilderment especially for the supreme accomplishment of the human which they will see it in Him, one that will be overpoured as a gift within those creatures too. This is for those creatures will be elevated with their sight and with their existence on a plan which we cannot now even to suspect it.

[187] The creatures will extoll the godhead. But that won't mean that the godhead will wholly be within them or that the creatures will wholly be understood by the creatures. The glory of the godhead will irradiate within the beings and the power of the godhead will work within the beings. But the godhead will remain, in the same time, eternally above them.

[188] That brother often told that old man: "Behold, you have been healed", but he was telling that because of the envy sown within him by the devil. But that brother told that to the old man also with a certain doubt, and that caused within the old man too, the doubt that he became healthy. And this doubt, as weakening of the faith, it made the old man to feel himself as sick again. The doubt, at its turn, it causes illness too. If you say: "I do not think that I am healthy" you will truly feel a beginning of getting sick.

84. (V. 180) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Tell me, Father, do we have our faithlessness within us or the devils bring us to faithlessness?

The answer of John: The devils bring us the faithlessness out of envy. If we accept it, that will make us devil's servants and partakers.

85. (V. 181) The question of the same one addressed to the Great Oldman: If I got relieved of my illness, how will I have to spend my day?

Answer: Rejoice into the Lords! And I am saying you again: rejoice (Phil. 4: 4). I have been gladdened by your question; better said, your questions rejoiced God and His angels.

Regarding what you have asked me, our Lord said: "These things you ought to do and those things you ought not to leave" (Mt. 23: 3). You must sing for a little while, and you must tell a few prayers by heart, and you must examine and guard your thoughts. This is for he who has many kinds of food on his table he feels the pleasure for eating out of many. And he who eats a sole kind of food on each day, he won't only feel no pleasure by eating it, but he might become, in time, even disgusted by it. It is likewise in this regard too. It stays in the power of the consummate ones to get accustomed to be shared with the same food on each day without getting disgusted of it. Regarding the singing and the uttering by heart, do not tie on yourself but do those according to the power given you by the Lord. And do not deprive yourself of reading and of prayer. Do a little of this one, and that do a little of that one. And so, you will spend your day being you pleasant to God. Our consummate Fathers did not have a rule, for the whole their day was a canon: to sing a little, to utter a little prayer by heart, to examine their thoughts for a little, and to occupy themselves a little with the food. And they did all of these with the fear of God. This is for it was said: "Everything you do, do them towards the glory of God" (1 Cor. 10: 31). May our Lord Jesus guard us against all evil. Amen.

86 (the V is missing) The question of the same one addressed to the same Oldman: How must we examine our thoughts? And how must we guard ourselves against the slavery to the passions?[189]

Answer: Examining the thought means that, when the thought comes, you will take heed at what is born out of that thought. I am giving you this example: suppose that somebody rebuked you and you are tormented by the thought to answer him who rebuked you. Then you tell to your thought: "If I answered him, I would trouble him and he would get upset with me. So, I better endure for a little and it will pass from me". If there occurs not a thought against somebody, but a thought in itself, you must examine this thought as well and tell him: "Where will it finish this evil thought? It will end in Gehenna". And that thought will leave you in peace. And do the same with all your thoughts: immediately that a thought occurs, you will examine it and you will cut if off. Regarding the slavery, one need much watchfulness for, as the Father said, if a thought attracts your mind towards fornication, you will direct that thought towards cleanness; if towards the covetousness of the belly, you will lead that thought towards temperance; if towards hatred, you will guide it towards love, and you will do likewise with all the other passions. Do not get sad, for you will find much mercy according to the promises made to you. Therefore, "if we live, let's live for our Lord, and if we die, let's die for our Lord" (Rom. 14: 8).

87 (V. 182) Question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, what stage of consummation belongs to, the fact of prying ceaselessly, (1 Thes. 5: 17) and must I keep a canon (a rule, a program)?

[189] The fight of the man against his passion's it is his struggle for his freedom. The most difficult it is to liberate yourself from what enslaved you from within yourself, or, better said, to liberate yourself from the unseen powers which stir up these passions by wakening up your inferior impulses from within yourself. It is goof you to reach to do what you want without feeling that you are forced to do that; that is to be master over everything from within you, to be free of yourself. You are yourself when you are free of yourself as well. I am free when I do what I want to do, without being forced at all by what is within me. But this means doing the good and maintaining yourself in the state of doing the good without difficulty. There is the greatest of your power in that. Only the evil enslaves you under the appearance of being good.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Rejoice, brother, into our Lord; rejoice, my beloved one, into our Lord; rejoice, into our Lord, you the together-inheritor[190]! The ceaseless prayer belongs to the measure of the dispassion[191]. But then one becomes aware of the coming of the Holy Ghost Who teaches the man everything (Jn. 14: 26), and therefore the things of the prayer as well[192]. This is for the Apostle says: "And I do not know how I ought to pray, but the Ghost prays for us with untold sighs" (Rom. 8: 27). What I would speak you about the buildings of Rome, for you were there not yet?

That man who lives in quietude, especially that man who is sick and lays on his bed, he won't have any canon. But you be like a man who eats and who drinks as he needs. And when you feel the need for reading and when you see repentance within your heart, read as much as you can read. Do the same regarding the singing. But keep the giving of thanks and the "Lord, have mercy" according to your power and do not fear. "For the gifts from God won't be taken back" (Rom. 11: 29).

88. (V. 183) The same brother after he got healthy, because of experiencing a helplessness in his stomach, he sent supplication to the Great Oldman for the Oldman to pray for him,

[190] You are together-inheritor of the Kingdom of the Holy Trinity, with me, in your quality as son of the Father, or the supreme Emperor, submitted to no coercion. Rejoice of your freedom which you are called to, in this quality of yours as inheritor and together-master in His Kingdom, where there is not coercion. This freedom is one with the dispassion. That's why the dispassion is announced in the next phrase. We are together inheritors of the Kingdom of Heavens whose Emperor is our Father from heavens.

[191] You won't be able to pray ceaselessly as long as you haven't liberated yourself from passions. This is because any occurrence of the passion will stop the prayer, it will take you into slavery breaking you from God Who the freedom is within. Only in prayer, as act of love from God Who doesn't take you into submission as the passion does, only in prayer it is manifested the full freedom from ourselves. Staretz Gheorghe from Cernica Monastery said, at his turn: the ceaseless prayer belongs to dispassion.

[192] The freedom cannot be but into the Holy Ghost. This is for the Holy Ghost, the Supreme Ghost Who is free of any coercion, and He is not submitted to any passion and to no law which is not given you by Him. And the Holy Ghost can infuse His freedom to the man too, for the man is endowed with a ghost. "Where the Ghost of the lord is, there the freedom is" (1 Cor. 3: 17). That's why, there where the Ghost is, there is too the possibility of the ceaseless prayer, of the loving dialogue with God. The Holy Ghost instills us with the ghost of loving and beloved sons of the Father, ghost of freedom and ghost of love towards our Father and towards Christ our Brother. That's why when we pray, the Ghost prays within us (Rom. 8: 26).

saying: "Starting with midnight my mouth and my eyelids get dry, and my hands and my feet get weakened. And when I wake up my whole body shakes for about an hour, starting from my stomach. Then I get drowsy and I become like mud. And I want to utter a psalm but I cannot utter it with my mouth. And if I want to say a psalm in my heart, I will fall asleep. And I no longer know what I should do, for I am seeing my salvation endangered. Be king to me, Father, for our Lord, and pray for me and explain to me what is happening to me?

The answer of Barsanuphius: This state is a little helplessness of your stomach. But it is also a heaviness caused by the devils. Do not take heed at any of them. This is for he says: "And they who belong to Christ they have crucified their body together with its passions and lusts" (Gal. 5: 24). Behold that the Oldman prays for you. You too must cry a little in your prayer, while giving thanks to God, and pray for you to receive mercy and He will have mercy on you. This is for we have a very merciful Master and a lenient Father. And nobody can, either among the Powers from above or among the servants from below, to worthily describe His kindness and how much He wants to have mercy on the mankind[193]. That's why God is long-patient with us, so that our patience to increase in order us to be saved[194]. This is for he taught us so, saying: "Into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 19). Therefore, do not get discouraged my brother, for Jesus has started to work His mercy on you. Him it is due the glory, forever. Amen. Pray for me.

[193] One cannot describe the godlike mercy, neither can one describe how much God wants to have mercy on us. Our mercy is only a faded image of God's mercy. This is for the mercy depends on freedom. And the mercy will not be able to elevate us into freedom if we do not strive too to gain our freedom. I cannot give somebody his freedom of himself. Our freedom can be strengthened by God's love for us and by our love for God. But the love cannot be imposed forcedly, but it only is accepted willingly.

[194] Our patience is fueled up out of God's patience, God's patience being also the endless power for the steadfastness into good. If God has patience, why won't we be patient as well, especially for He give patience to us too? It depends only on us to remain in connection with God. In the strength of the patience, it is affirmed and it increases the freedom, the non-ceding to whatever would pressure us, especially when we know that the difficulty we are encountering it is approved by God. And the salvation consists of the consummate and definitive freedom lived in the loving communion with God.

89. (184) Question of the same brother towards the other Oldman: I wonder what said our Father for: "Jesus has started to work His mercy on you"?

The answer of John: He said that for the prosperity and for the great benefit of your soul, for you are in a together-living with such people, whom you will resurrect together with, on that day, into great joy, if you will keep to the very end the patience and the giving of thanks.

90. (V. 185) The ask of the same brother addressed to the Great Oldman: I believe that all things you tie on earth they will be tied in heavens too; and that all things you untie on earth, they will be untied in heavens as well (Mt. 18: 18). I beg you, Father, for the mercy of God, help my helplessness because I am limping with my soul and with my body and I trouble the brothers whom I am living together with. Please ask God I to fulfill my needs through myself, so that my brother no longer to be forced to bear my burdens. This is for I believe that all the things you ask from God, God will give those to you. Bear together with my helplessness, Father, and forgive me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, you small key opens my door[195]. This is for I am mindless and I cannot endure hiding from you the wonders of God. So, if somebody heard my words and he wonders about those, he won't be able to say anything else but: "He has gone out of his mind". I reckon that such a man doesn't know that "all things are possible to God and nothing is impossible to God" (Job 42: 2). That's why, as our Lord worked through His first disciples, by rising up a man with palsy (Acts 9: 33-34) and resurrecting Tabitha who dies (Acts 9: 40), likewise He can work through His disciples form now too. I am speaking in front of Him and I am not lying, for I know at this time and in this blessed place a man who can rise dead people in the name of our Master Jesus Christ, and he can banish aways devils and he can heal incurable diseases and he can work mightier things than the Apostles worked, as confesses Him Who has given to that man the charisma (the gift), of better said the charismas (the gifts). And what are these things worked today in the name of Jesus? These are things which he cannot be helped by his own power to[196]. This is for he is able to stop wars too, and he can open and close the sky, as Elijah did. This is for the lord always has true servants, whom He calls servants and sons (Gal. 4: 7). And even if they are envied by the enemy, by the grace of God the enemy cannot harm them. This is for the ship sailed through the storm, the soldier crossed through wars, the helmsman crosses over swirls, the plowman weathered out the bad weather, the merchant crossed through the midst of the thieves, and the monk has consummated himself into loneliness[197].

But who won't say by hearing such more-than-huge things, that I haven't gone out my mind? And I truly have gone out of my mind. But I do not confess about myself, but about somebody else. And if somebody wants to say that I have gone out of my mind, let him say it[198]. So, if somebody aspires to reach this measure, let him not hesitate. I have told these things to your love, in order to assure you that it is possible you to reach what you wish. This is for, if I begged God for you and God has bestowed you the heavenly and untold and eternal goods "which the eye hadn't seen and the ear hasn't heard and to the man's heart they haven't ascended, which God has prepared them for those who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9), and if those will be your for you have kept the teachings, how much more will there be no difficulty for us to ask God and us to receive the gift for you not longer be ill even for one day[199]?

But Jesus knows better than us what each man needs: one to take the payment for his patience as Job; others, to take their payment for their service, as Eulogius from among advocates (Lausiac History 21: 3-14). So, you must not ask for anything from God, through His servants, except for help and obedience. This is for "He who will endure to the very end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22) into Christ Jesus our Lord. This is for [196] It seems that Barsanuphius hinted to himself. He cannot hide the wonders of God, but by doing so he reckons himself as mindless. Christ Himself confesses that to Barsanuphius.

[197] Here is given also the condition for one to reach such a charisma: the total resting from passions.

[198] The note to the Greek edition: "I reckon that the saint says these things about himself, but he doesn't admit that openly, because of his humbleness, and that's why he says that his words are about somebody else".

[199] If God gives us the goods of the eternal and unspeakable goods, cannot Him give us the much smaller gift of the health?

He will take care of us forever. Amen. Don't you know what the Lord told to Saint Paul who asked Him to take away his sufferance?: "It is enough to you My grace" (2 Cor. 12: 9). Did the Lord say that to Paul because of His lack of love? Or because He knew that that was in Paul's benefit? Remember that "are worthy the sufferings of the time of the glory that will be unveiled to us" (Rom. 8: 18). Forgive me and pray for me the wicked, in order I too to keep these measures to the very end. This is for he who keeps these measures he has already become brother to Jesus. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

91. (V. 186) The ask of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman about finding mercy on that day.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother and beloved into Christ, Andrew! I wonder about your love, or better said about your simplicity that doubts the promises. The Lor said to Philip: "I have been all the time together with you and you haven't known Me, Philip?" (Jn. 14: 9). Believe me, brother, that we will have everything promised to us. And if you wish, we will have even a little more than that. This is for one can achieve a little mercy. But one can also achieve great mercy. And Davis chose the great mercy (Ps. 50: 30[200]). So, him who wants the great mercy, he will find that through humbleness and gentleness and patience and through other similar gifts[201]. If you find mercy, you will have found it out by the prayers of the saints. But choosing the little or the great mercy it depends on you. Choose whichever you want[202]. Live with another in peace and [201] If you have mercy on other, you will have that for you, for your mercy on others moves within your being and it will sweeten yourself. If you love others, yourself will have the joy of the sweetness of that love. Asking God for mercy means not feeling yourself capable of reaching that high state by yourself. It means asking for sweetness that makes yourself happy in the first place. It means humbleness and love for others (contrary to Nietzche who despised the Christians because of asking God for mercy).

[202] Even in the prayers of the saints done for you it is present their generous mercy on you and they have, by their closeness to Him Who is the source of the mercy, this generosity in common with His generosity. He who asks God for mercy, he will become capable of bestowing himself even to death, so that he gains a supreme strength, and not a state of fearful servant as Nietzsche said. And when the mercy is steadfast, it gets spread among persons as a contagious feeling. Unintentionally, you will be contaminated by another's mercy on you. But you also can push the brake to that, by receiving it but giving back less than you have holiness, by humbly enduring your neighbor like a monk as you are, so that you will be an example as a monk and as s spiritually advanced. Have your brother near to you as a son and as a servant, and if he mistakes in something or if he loses something, you will advise him and you will show him his mistake, so that he could correct himself. And pray for me.

92. (V. 187) The same brother towards the same Great Old Man, given me a canon (a rule) as to a beginner who hasn't received the schism yet, and pray for me, for that brother who loves me he troubles me and he rests the other brother.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All-beloved brother, you have written me a thing that exceeded my power: to command you a thing which I won't be able to bear myself either. You have asked me to give you a canon as to a beginner, who hasn't taken yet the schism, and the rule of the beginner is this one: to live in much humbleness, not to value himself in any regard, not to say "what is this?" or "what is this for?". But into much obedience and submission not to reckon himself as equal to somebody. Him not to say "somebody is honored, why am I not honored the same? That one is spared in everything, why am I not so?". Even if he is pay attention in everything, he must not resist. These are the deeds of the true beginner who truly wants to be saved. But these things are difficult for you to bear now, both for the helplessness of your body and also because of your old age. So, you have asked me to bear that what is heavier, and I am giving you that what is easier, not by forcing, you, but by advising you. This is because, if God wants that brother to rest that other brother and to trouble you, and if God has given that brother to feel that he must do such, you will have to endure and do not get troubled. This is for by enduring the troubled we will gain our souls (Lk. 21: 19). And we cannot become partakers to the sufferings of Christ but by enduring the troubles[203]. Keep thanking in everything (1 Thes. 5: 18).

received. Instead, you can also allow it to get as wide as possible within your being which the mercy is wakened up by another's mercy in. In perseveringly asking God for mercy, it is shown also a power of unquenched love of the man for his fellow humans.

[203] Enduring the troubles makes us partakers to Christ's sufferings. And this places us in communion with Himself. By this we too are imparted with His power for being elevated above ourselves, and not only above the pleasures but also above the sufferings which can

This is for the giving of thanks mediates for our helplessness in front of God[204].

Let your canon be you to sit and take heed at your thoughts and you to have the fear of God, while you saying to yourself: "How have I lived the past time? I am going to repent myself at least now, because my exit has come closer; and I will endure my neighbor and the annoyances and the trials from him, until the Lord will have mercy on me and He will take me to the state of the non-getting-angry and He will take out from me my envy that is the cub of the devil". Spend the few days left to you by examining your thoughts and by resisting them who bring you disturbance and advising your son in the fear of God and by remembering his mistakes, because you know that he is a man too and therefore submitted to temptations. Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, may give us state of peace and state of together-dwelling into the fear of God. I wonder about the fact that, you read the Scripture that says: "Brothers, rejoice when you fall in diverse temptations" (Jas. 1: 2) but you still are disturbed by the almost-unimportant things. You must at least know where you are and what power you have and the iron-neck will get humbled and the peace of the Lord will be with you. Forgive me and pray for me, in order I not to hear the word: "You who teach another, don't you teach yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21). And "what will I answer to love?" But the mercy for anybody is at our Master God (from Paterikon, the saying no. 318).

have a great power upon us. Having us mercy on others it will liberate us from both pleasures and sufferings. This conception is totally different form the Protestant conception according to which Christ has done everything for us and we have nothing left to do. In the teaching of the New Testament and of the Holy Fathers, Christ has suffered for us but not in order to spare us from doing anything else, but in order Him to ennoble our being. BY placing in His human nature His power for defeating the passions, He communicates that power to us too. Otherwise, Christ wouldn't have made Himself the beginner of a new life of the humanity. The Occidental mankind has renounced to any self-improvement effort out of the power of Christ. That has brought them to a great weakness, or to a great ethical indifferentism and libertinage.

[204] Giving thanks to God, it will help us to be saved even if we cannot do anything positive for God. This is for, as when you praise God for the good things you use the powers He has given to you, likewise you use those powers when you praise God for the strength that He has given you for you to endure the illness and the helplessness which He allowed to come upon you. See also in this the God's wisdom and care for you. Thus, you can be saved through those too. It is shown a power and a strengthening of ours given us by God, also in the fact that we thank for sufferings, for helplessness, and for hardships. It is shown thus a greater strengthening than in simply enduring those.

93. (V. 193) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: My thought tells me: "You have told to your brother once and for ten times. From now on, let him do whatever he wants. And no longer take care of him, as the Fathers said".

The answer of Barsanuphius: My all-beloved brother who are of one soul with me, may be with you the peace given by the Lord to His Saints. This is for He gave them, firstly, the peace, by removing from them all the bodily thoughts and all the devilish thoughts, in order their hearts to be clean and able to receive, with cleanness, the teachings and the commandments of their Master.

Therefore, you too, my beloved brother, by receiving this fearsome peace[205], not from me, but from our Savior Jesus Christ, you must prepare yourself with sapience and without disturbance for hearing and for doing (that what you hear). This is for you know that I want to take you and to wing you up towards heavens. But the devil surrounds you from all quarters through envy and anger[206].And if the devil doesn't find room, he will mock you through insignificant things and he wages war to you through those insignificant things and he disturbs you are your brother through those insignificant things. And this is because I told you in my previous letters you to tell the brother his mistakes and to advise him; better said, this is because I haven't told you how to do that correctly, and you have despised your brother, or, even if I told you that correctly, you were defeated in war. And that's why the devil rejoices and comes, by having the bitter rights upon you, and says to you: "You have told him once and for ten times; let him do, from now on, whatever he wants and you no longer take care of him, as the Fathers said". And the devil laughs at you by that too[207].

[205] The peace of Christ is a fearsome peace because of being achieved through harsh efforts and it scares him who thinks as starting to achieve that peace through such efforts and by enduring trials and hardships. It is a scary peace, therefore, to the addicted ones and to the demons upholding them in their addiction and who rejoice of the war and of the enmity among people.

[206] He who starts advancing into good he will be surrounded by the envy and by the anger of the devil, but also of many of his fellow humans whom he works among.

[207] The addressee strives to advance himself in his spiritual occupations, but the enemy troubles him through insignificant discontents, which the devil causes him through his servant. There is a silence from God when you do not answer him who rebukes you. But there

This is for you are so far from the level of the Fathers, as far as the sky is from earth. Do you want to know why the Lord said about trees that even the bad-trees bring forth fruits (Mt. 7: 17-20)? In order you to find out what has caused your silence form the devil: disturbances, anger. Each time you start doing something by yourself, without asking about that thing, you will be quickly caught in the snare. It happened so to the simple ones because they are untaught. I am going to limpidly show you that in this particular case your long-patience is not according to God[208]. This is because, by pilling up (your upset) for many days, you will empty your barrel in one day. But that patience according to God will keep its silence all the way to the very end. But you, brother, you behave like the master does to his servant: instead of slapping him once a day, by telling him his mistakes and thus to bring the peace, you suffer for many days and then you will hit him in the back (with a deadly hit) and you take his soul away from him.

94. (V. 189) The same brother asked the other Oldman the same thing; and he also asked whether he should move out from his monastic cell, because by doing so he thought that his war (from within his soul) could stop.

The answer of John: If you paid due attention to the answer of the Great Oldman and if you obeyed that what he told you to do by bot valuing yourself in anything and not to search to be equal to anyone, you would find your resting and you wouldn't reach to disturbance; and if that was the case, you wouldn't need me or anyone else. Take heed, brother, at the fact that the demons mock you. You say that the mistakes of your brother are true. But you tell me: do you surely know that those mistakes are true? This is because, by speaking about somebody's mistakes because of suspecting him, some of his mistakes will be proven as not being real. Then, what sort of mistakes our Lord has told the people about, when He said: is also a silence from the devil in two cases: when you no longer want to tell him a benevolent word, or to advise him who has upset you; the second case is when you start doing a thing without asking your father-confessor or the father whom you obey to. Both these sorts of silence bring troubles and anger.

[208] When you leave unadvised him who depends on you to be corrected, because of your disgust of telling him anything, that patience of yours won't be from God.

"Amen I am telling you, if you do not forgive their mistakes to the people, neither your heavenly Father will forgive you your mistakes" (Mt. 6: 15)? Which mistakes He talked about? About the real mistakes or about the suspected mistakes? Doubtlessly, the Lord talked about the real mistakes. And again, you have been judging and condemning you brother for three weeks but you do not know that you are throwing yourself in a great damnation? This is because, if you hold your brother accountable for this, God will hold you accountable for your mistakes since your youth and up to now. And where do you leave him who said: "Do not let the sun set upon your anger" (Eph. 4: 26)? Where do you leave the word "bear your burdens to one another!" (Gal. 6: 2)? Where do you leave the letter of the Great Oldman who has given you a rule for living? Instead of thanking him, you answer him with these? Don't you know what was said: "Instead of good things, you have rewarded Me evils" (Ps. 34: 12[209])? And what your brother serves you for? Not for God and for God's love? And why do you hurt his thought? Take heed at the fact that the end is near, as you have heard and as yourself confess it. And the devils do not let you not to value on yourself; and, because of that, you cannot rest yourself[210]. Fight back the thoughts which bring you disturbance. This is for, as the good Oldman showed you, by doing that you will find help[211]. But if you try to help yourself with all sorts of craftsmanships, if you do anything, if you move yourself each time when war and temptation come upon you, that won't leave you except if you fight your evil thoughts. This is for you must unite your small efforts with the prayer of the Saints[212]. This is for "it can do much when it is worked" (Jas. 5: 16). You must tell to your thought: Today I am going to die. Keep the humbleness and you will find resting. May the Lord give His peace to you. Amen.

[209] In KJB we have: Ps. 35: 12: "They rewarded me evil for good to the spoiling of my soul."; in ROB we have: Ps. 34: 11: "They rewarded me evils for goods and they have exhausted my soul." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[210] The care for valuing yourself, the care for reckoning that you are somebody important, it won't allow you to rest, it won't allow you to be free or to be master over yourself, and it will always disturb you.

[211] He who fights, he will be strengthened, for he received help form above.

[212] There is much that the prayer can do when united with the working, with the toiling.

95. (V. 190) Question of the same brother towards the same Oldman: Father I wanted to correct my brother with the love of God and he didn't accept my correction. And I got disturbed. What should I do, therefore? And if I talked to him as you commanded me, tell me if that won't raise suspicions to somebody?

The answer of John: Because we do not understand what we say, any corrective advice that allows the disturbance entering the mean's heart, that is not an advice according to God, but it is an advice out of the work of the devil who wants to let him think that he is corrected. This is because, if you advised your neighbor according to God, why would you get disturbed? This is for the sadness according to God doesn't allow anybody to get disturbed. But even if him who has been advised towards getting corrected, he leaves and gossips him who advised him, the adviser won't get disturbed but he will bear the burdens of the gossiper. It was shown to us too that this thing was a temptation. But God has emptied this temptation of power, and He is still emptying it. May the Lord give you health to your body and to your soul in order you to understand the craftsmanships of the evil one and so you to be able to get rid of those. Prayer for me. Regarding the dialogue with the brothers, which you have told us about, when the dialogue take place in the love for God, it won't bring offense but building up.

96. (V. 181) The question of the same brother towards the same Oldman: Abba, my brother troubles me much. And if possible, I would gladly change him for another brother. This is for my thought tells me that if I was alone, there wouldn't be any occasion I to be troubled, but I would rather be saved. Tell me if this would be beneficial to me.

The brother of John: Brother, do not get troubled by thinking that you are right when saying "If I was alone, there wouldn't be any occasion I to be troubled, but I rather would get saved". This is because you disregard the Scripture that says:

"Many are the troubled of the righteous" (Ps. 33: 20[213]); and again: "Many are the whippings of the sinner" (Ps. 31: 10[214]). So, either you are righteous or you are sinner, you must endure the trouble. This is because we cannot be without any trouble. The troubles teach us the patience. In this regard, we have as best teacher the Apostle who says: "Be patient into trouble" (Rom. 12: 12). Troubles are waiting for them who will be saved. This is for our Lord said: "Into the world you will have many troubles" (Jn. 16: 33); and again: "Through many troubles you must enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Jn. 14: 22)[215]. Can you see, my brother, that you have been allowed to be troubled a little by Him Who said: "My soul is saddened to death" (Mt. 26: 38). He did that so that you can find His mercy in exchange for your patience, at that fearful time. This is because, if we want the resting in everything, we will hear: "You have taken the good

[213] In KJB we have" Ps. 34: 19: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 18: "Many are the troubles of the righteous and from all of those the Lord will deliver them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[214] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 10: "Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about."; in ROB we have: Ps. 31: 11: "Many are the beatings of the sinner; and him who hopes in the Lord, he will be surrounded by mercy." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[215] Enduring the troubles is a help for strengthening the human subject. He who endures the troubles, he won't run ways from troubles. He won't give room to weakness or to despair. He who endures the troubles he will learn how to control himself. He who perseveres in enduring, he will reach the supreme level of the human, by being a subject and not an object that is carried here and there unwillingly. And the Kingdom of Heavens is a communion of the free subjects who won't be unwillingly submitted to evil or to the tormenting impatience, it is a Kingdom of the subjects who will folly enjoy the communion with the Father, as sons of the Father of the Supreme Subject, by becoming themselves as masters over themselves like the Supreme Subject is unsubmitted to any force superior to Him. That Kingdom cannot be entered but by the who have found their freedom by enduring their troubles with strength, by enduring the unavoidable annoyances coming from the changing nature of the world and from the still non-consummate state of the fellow humans. Christ Himself gave us example in this regard. And He has given us not only example but also power, by putting in His human nature the whole power of the dispassionate self-mastering by patiently enduring the sufferings and the death. So, thus He founded the Kingdom of Heavens for people, or the Kingdom of the human subjects elevated above their slavery to the inferior passion and above the masteries of the exterior world.

Let's notice that the cutting off of the will and the obedience to them who ask for those in the name of God - Barsanuphius and John highlighted so much the importance of cutting off of the will and the importance of the obedience – are not a slavery, but they are willing deeds of the man freed of himself and freed of the passions of his narrowed egotism, so that the man can live in the broadness of his loving-of-God freedom.

things in your life" (Lk. 16: 25)[216]. Our Master endured all the sufferings for us. Won't us endure too, by remembering those, in order us to be partakers with Him? Take heed that we have received the commandment to give thanks in everything (1 Thes. 5: 18). May not be us attracted to discontent, by the hater of the good, because if that is the case we will lose everything[217].

Regarding the exchange of your brother for another one, it is not a difficult to Abba to appoint another brother to serve you[218]. This is for to him it is the same thing to appoint a brother or another to serve you. But if you will receive another brother and that one too will upset you in some regard, what are you going to do? Despite the fact that the present brother is not especially smart, he still has only a little guilt. I am not telling you this in order to impede you to ask for another brother, but I am advising you to weigh in all the aspects so that you will be able to choose what is good. This is for, as another serves you for God, you too owe to fulfill, at your turn, the law of Christ (Gal. 6: 20). Don't I want you to find resting? God know that, if I could, I would want to serve you myself for all my remining days. But what could I do for I am totally useless? Let's hate the resting of our bod, because God is disgusted by such a resting, because such a resting take us far from God. I have written you these words as to one who is of-one-soul with me. This is for I want us to be troubled a little. This is because without trouble there won't be saddening into the fear of God. Pray for me so that I will be able to set up a new beginning. This is for I am near to my last days.

97. (V. 192) The answer of the Great Oldman towards the same brother: Rejoice, brother, and have courage! Do not let the devil to trouble you through useless things. Does your love reckon that is somebody tempted and troubled without the [216] The false resting which they have been living into, and which they have allowed themselves to be allured into, it actually is a slavery to pleasures and it will bring them to the supreme state of that slavery which will unveil the whole its power within them in the "eternal non-resting".

[217] Barsanuphius and John unite the suffering of the troubles with the giving of thanks for that to Go. Through the giving of thanks our patience will get even more strengthened, and our patience will be shown as being for God. This is for in such a case we give glory to God not only for the pleasant things but also for the unpleasant things, by seeing in the unpleasant things too the wisdom and the pedagogical love of God for us.

[218] It is here about Abba Serid, the abbot of the monastery.

permission from God? No. God allows these things to happen to us for the benefit of our soul. But the devil seeing that he has turned the things against us, as he did in the beginning, by getting us out of the holy peace of the Paradise. This is because what removed us from out things? Instead of the holy peace the devil threw within is the furious anger. Instead of that hatred from God which one hated the evil ones with, the devil threw within us the evil hatred which we hate with the good ones and even God Himself. But we do not understand and we do not know that, in order to cut off from us all the shameful memories and all the evil and soul-corruptive thoughts, God told us to pray even for our enemies and to bless them who curse us and He commanded us to love our enemies (Mt. 5: 44). And if we have been commanded to love our enemies, who haven't served us either lazily or zealously, what excuse will us have if we do not love them who have done good things to us and who have been serving us, even if the devils present our servants to us as serving us lazily? If you want to be saved and if you have entrusted your soul to God and to us, you won't believe your thought. This is because the devils sow as an evil seed the evil things instead of the good things. Stop yourself, therefore, from following to devils, and you will find the way to God. This is for God Himself told: "If you want and if you obey Me, you will eat the good things of the earth" (Isa. 1: 19). So, it depends on us to eat or not to eat (the good things). And why do we defame our neighbor? Do not search for strive invoking unimportant motifs, but be pleasant to him in everything. And do not think evil about somebody, lest yourself will become evil[219]. This is because the evil one thinks at evil things and the good one thinks at good things. And thinking about some people: "lo, they are speaking against me", it is a war characteristic to the beginners. From here comes the fact that, if two are praying in a monastic cell, or if they guide on one another, somebody could say contrary things about them. And if he thinks like that, he won't be by that into truth, and in his insanity one like this one will cause perdition to himself. You must not remain in these things. This is for the brother thinks that he can find out many things through you, even if you are a little troubled because of him in order you to gain your patience. Rejoice and be glad for great is the payment for the patience! (Mt. 5: 12). This is for, even before my letter you found out from brother John that we are not allowed in troubles without the will of God, and this is being done for our benefit. So, you must not believe the devils in anything against your brother. This is because the things are not such (as they whisper to you). But they are the ones wanting to disturb you. But the Lord makes them helpless.

[219] By thinking evil about another, yourself have become evil, because that thought is yours and it will imprint you and it will make you full of venom.

And your thought which you are telling through: "I have decided to make myself servant to the people" it is not a thought of humbleness. Without any doubt, the Apostle praised on himself that he made himself everyone's servant. Do you want to say that too? But when will you reach this measure of humbleness? You do not know what you have said, brother.

Scholia: Look at the wisdom of the Oldman. Because he saw that one calling himself and reckoning himself as servant, as one who thought that he was important and that he did some feat, the Oldman laughed at him and proved him as unworthy of such a title, and he pushed him by all means towards humbleness in his deed. This is for the humbleness in word is the fruit of the pride and it is fickle and it gives birth to vain-glory as its mother.

98. (V. 193) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother.

I wonder about some people who, after spending many years in schools, they still learn the alphabet and read on syllables when they should be by now consummate teachers. And I also wonder about them who after bearing the monastic schism for a long time and now they are supposed to discern among more subtle thoughts, they still are tested by the wars of the beginners. You should guide the deceived ones to the righteous path, as consummate guides. But you, instead of bearing the burdens of the helpless, you rather burden them through the annoyance you cause them all the way to sink them up. Take heed at yourself, brother. Won't be your soul harmed by the fact that you trouble the thought of your neighbor? This is because, after the brother have fulfilled your toil for God, you cause him the thought that he worked as he wished. Is such a thing called by a consummate one of by a beginner? You must not talk to him like so, but you must advise him, and you must guide him, by fearing Him Who says: "Do not give your brother occasion for stumbling or for offense" (Rom. 14: 13). Why do you need to tell your brother a word that saddens him? But what am I telling you, for I am how I am? This is because my insanity hasn't allowed me to bear within me a word so that I said that to my brother and I troubled him. When the devil sows you evil thoughts within – because this is the devil's thing to sow some things instead of other things and he won't let the man to remember his death – why do you get disturbed for unimportant things, as you would be some beginners and untaught? Why do you forget the word: "deprived, needy, badly tormented"? (Hebr. 11: 37). Our Father chose the troubles for themselves but we are not ashamed of searching for any kind of resting. We must know, we the wicked, that all these things have been written in the books form above and we will be held accountable for those, in detail. I am writing you these things because I want to remove from you any rottenness[220]. And if I upset you, forgive me. This is for I will add nothing to bother you. Pray for me so that I can reach the knowledge of the life[221]. Regarding your death, I often told you and am I telling you now again: you won't tarry into body for a long time.

99. (V. 194) The question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman: You know, Father, that I do not dare to oppose any of your commands in any aspects. This is for everything you say it is life to me. But pray for me, because my brother troubles me much.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Rejoice, my beloved son, rejoice into the Lord! I know and I am convinced into the Lord that if I said you to live for a year into a prison, you wouldn't resist that. For I know whom I am talking to: to a together-servant and of one soul with me. But, don't you know what Job [220] The pleasures, the comfort, the hatred decompose our being as a rottenness, because we will become their helpless slaves. We will no longer be ourselves, and we will no longer be our own master upholding ourselves strongly.

[221] It is here about the knowledge of the true life, that is the life or the freedom from the slavery to passions.

says: "Isn't a temptation the house of the man on earth?" (Job 7: 1). Therefore, you must always be prepared for temptations and for troubles. And you must forger all the things from behind, as the Apostle says, and stretch yourself towards the things from ahead (Phil. 3: 13), so that you will not longer speak against your brother and you will no longer keep the evil in mind. The Lord will quickly crush satan under His feet (Rom. 16: 20). The grace of God and His peace and His love may be with you until the very end. Amen. And may the Lord give you joy, gladness, and the love that "never falls" (1 Cor. 13: 8), so that you will be able to endure on one another into the fear of God. This is for the death won't be late.

100. (V. 195) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, what the humbleness is? And pray for my road through death to be in peace.

The answer of Barsanuphius: The humbleness is to reckon on yourself as "dust and ashes" (Job 42: 6) in deeds and in words; and not only in words. Namely you to say: "Who am I?" (2 Kings[222] 7: 18). Who values me? I do not mean anything to anybody". Regarding the death, you must wait a little longer for the Lord and He will glorify your exit into much joy. Pray for me, my brother. I am embracing you into the Lord.

101. (V. 196) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Abba, my brother opposes me immediately, and he doesn't show me any compassion. What do you command me to do?

The answer of Barsanuphius: I wonder about your simplicity. Do you simply think that the devil sits peacefully, without tempting anybody? We cannot blame them who have been topple over, in foams, by the devil. Also, we cannot blame either those who are pushed by the devil to oppose and to be uncompassionate. Here the passion is working. Take heed at the said things, with understanding. This is for you too are under the work of the devil. And you do not see your things while you sharply see the things of your neighbor. Lo, you have told the things of your brother, but you haven't said your things. There are only a few days since you asked about humbleness and you hear that it consists of reckoning yourself as "dust and ashes" and not to value yourself at all. But the dust and the ashes and the non-self-cherishing, do they expect the sympathy (the compassion) from somebody? Especially from the man who is mastered by the hater of the good? And this for you are move advances than he is in age and in priesthood? But he who is more advances owes to bear the more unimportant one, and to say: "I am unworthy". And if you say it but you actually do not endure it, you will say that vainly. And who are you for you have eyes which do not see the foreign passions? You are a man whom have been preached to goods above any measure[223]. If you thought at those, you would forget to eat you bread[224]. But you haven't tasted those yet, so that those haven't become to you desires as they should. Remember Lazarus, for how long he endures while thanking God, and you must also not forget about What I have been told you for many times that here is a devilish envy. You know what it is waiting for you. And I believe in God that that won't be successful in anything.

[222] In KJB we have: 2 Samuel.

102. (V. 197) The same brother asks for the prayer of the Great Oldman" Pray for me, Father, for I have fallen into hallucinations.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother Andrew, let's shout out together with Saint Paul: "Oh, the deep of the richness and of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God! How unresearched are His judgments and how unknown are His ways!" (Rom. 11; 33). How does He stop us too from bragging ourselves without bow and form thinking that our sword will save us (Ps. 43:

[223] Have been prepared to you the immeasurable goods of the future life.

[224] He who is humble, he won't see another's passions, of his own unimportant worries, for he reckons on himself as the most unimportant among all, as nothing by himself. But in the same time, the humble one will see the overwhelming glory of God as no one else, and that's why he will no longer pay attention to the tiny soap bubbles of the human worries, he will no longer get alarmed by those. He will take care, at most, of the bearers of the worldly worries. On the other hand, when you see yourself as nothing, you have reached the supreme conscience of what you are, namely that conscience of the fact that you totally depend on God. The conscience and God are the two unseparated realities being revealed at maximum. But by that, you also open yourself totally to God, you see yourself as full of God.

4[225])? He does that with the grace of His kindness. This is for He says: "By grace we are saved" (Eph. 2: 5). He allows us to fall into hallucinations and into other passions in order us to know our helplessness and where we still are at. He allows that to happen to us for his kindness, so that our trust to be founded on God and not on us. But take heed at not reckoning that it is the will of God us to fall into hallucinations and into other passions, but God allows us to suffer those because of our carelessness; but, in His love for people God uses those evils for making to be born within us the humbleness in order us to be saved[226]. But how? Will we attribute out salvation to our passions? Not at all. But we will attribute our salvation to His non-narrowed wisdom in His skillfulness of using all sorts of means. Think at what He wakes our mind up like, in all ways, so that our mind to say: "If the Lord didn't help me, my soul would immediately dwell in hell" (Ps. 93: 17[227]).

So, by knowing that because of our helplessness and because of our carelessness we suffer these, let's do everything that depends on us not to fall into them. But it depends on His mercy to deliver us from them. He did this to Peter and to Paul, by withdrawing, a little, His power from them in order they to see that are human. And the first one fell into denial (Mt. 26: 69-75). The another was lowered in a basket (2 Cor. 11: 33). This was for both of them to know and not to trust on themselves, but they to trust the Master of all.

Therefore, you too must learn who you are and where you are[228]. And be forgetful to them who are together-servants with you and you condemn on yourself. You must truly humble yourself not only in front of God but also in front of the

[225] In KJB we have: Ps. 44: 3: "For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 43: 4: "Because not with their sword they inherited the land and their arm didn't save them," (E. l. t.'s n.)

[226] Not out of the will of God occur the evil passions within us. But God allows them to occur by respecting our freedom as wrongly understood by us, or, better said, a weaken will because of our carelessness. But God uses those too in order to make us reach the humbleness, by realizing us what slavery we have fallen into through passions, or by our will to live by ourselves, and He makes us to desire our elevation towards Him.

[227] In KJB we have: Ps. 94: 17: "Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence."; in ROB we have: Ps. 93: 17: "Because, if the Lord didn't help me, my soul would almost dwell into hell." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[228] You must learn to know what spiritual level are you on, in order you to know your "power" or helplessness.

people[229]. And "throw all your worries upon Him" (Ps. 54: 23[230]; 1 Pt. 5: 7), "Who can abundantly do much more than we ask for or we think" (Eph. 3: 20). And He will accomplish all the promised things. This is for He won't reject them who beg Him with the whole their heart: His own and honest servants; they who have been freed through Him and in Him, from their former man, and who have heard with untold joy: "Everything you will tie on earth will be tied in heavens too" and so on (Mt. 18: 18); they whom he has given all the power on heavens and on earth[231]. "Serve your Lord with fear and gladden yourself of Him with tremble" (Ps. 2: 11). And thank Him with an unstoppable mouth for He has had mercy on you, so that you are among His servants. Him to be the glory forever. Amen.

The merciful God, The One all-high and merciful, may give you the power from above in order you to be able to always think at the words written to you and you to fulfill the truly spiritual thing, namely you to always be together with those who have received the talents and they doubled those talents (Mt. 25: 16-17) and you to hear the things they heard; and in order you to endure on one another, so that your land to bring forth good fruits to God and at the right time, and those fruits to be either hundredfold, or sixtyfold, or thirtyfold (Mk. 4: 8).

[229] He who doesn't humble on himself in front of the people as well, he will preserve his pride in his being, and he will always ger in front of the people. He will believe that God has made him better, and he will justify that by invoking something from within himself, or he will think that has made himself better than others. This is no longer a sentiment of brotherhood. And if everyone does so, there will be maintained a struggle among people. Of course, other is the humbleness before God and another is the humbleness before people. You recon God as everything, while you reckon your brothers a better than you are due to their bigger efforts for fulfilling the will of God.

[230] In KJB we have: Ps. 55: 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 25: "Throw your worry towards the Lord and He will feed you; He won't ever give wobbling to the righteous." (E. l. t.'s n).

[231] He has given them all the power for tying or for untying for they are united with God in prayer and through their love for people. They know that they do not tie or untie out of their own power, but in the name of God and out of God's power. But they do everything to being the people closer to God, by showing God to the people, through their own faith and love.

This is my prayer, for you by guarding these things to be seen by me in the Kingdom of God as good friends gladdening yourself into the Lord.

104. (V. 199) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, where has come to us from, that temptation that has come upon us? And what is that coming to us for? And how could it be emptied of its power? And pray for me so I will be delivered from it.

The answer of Barsanuphius: The devil who hates the good, by knowing that is useful to our soul and that there it is no other ways for gaining the salvation except by bearing us the burdens to one another (Gal. 6: 2), he envies us and he struggles to sow within us his things. From here arises the temptation, which will be emptied of its power by the Lord. And the temptation will be emptied of its power by the fact that we bear the burdens to one another and by praying us for the man whom the temptation comes to us through[232]. But without fighting the reasoning (places in the service of the temptation) the end of the temptation won't come[233]. This is because the sowing is facilitated by ceding[234]. And this one too is a temptation because of the devil's envy, uphold by an apparent justification, in order to pluck you off from the love of the saints who pray for you and in order to deprive you of their help. Lo, I have shown you both the origin and the end of the temptation.

[232] We pray also for him whom our temptation come to us through, for he is weak and that's why he accepted to be the tool of the devil. Our prayer will strengthen him, for he will feel through us the love God has for him. This is for the love of God shown through us it makes us behave with love to him, to speak well about him to others, and he will find out about that.

[233] Answering evil to evil, searching for satisfying the need for pleasure, it gives us the impression that it strengthens our being. On this is founded the allegedly rational argumentation of the temptation. We must expose the falsehood of this argumentation by showing that we strengthen too much our body, and that we strengthen for a while that that is perishing, while we actually weaken our immortal soul and our freedom as subject. Everywhere, Barsanuphius and John saw the man's salvation by strengthening that what is imperishable in man's being. The good one is strong. Committing the good is a strengthening of the existence. The full ontological implies the ethical. Christ strengthens the man on the cross and by communicating His strength to us in order us to endure the hardships, the temptations Christ makes us being strong too, for He makes it kind.

[234] The temptation is a seed of the evil received by man by ceding, by the fact that the man doesn't fight that seed, in order that see not to be sown within him; the man receives the temptation by an act of weakness. That is a ceding to the false argumentation.

You must endure for a little while, and you will take the relief from those into Christ Jesus, our Lord.

105. (V. 200) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who got discouraged because of the temptations which were surrounding him.

Brother Andrew, the one of-one-soul with me, do not allow yourself to be discouraged. This is for God hasn't forsaken you, neither He will. But the announcement made by the Master to Adam, our common parent, it won't pass. And that is: "Into the sweat of your face you will eat your bread" (Gen. 3: 19). And as He commanded the external man, he also commanded the inward man to collaborate through ascesis, with the prayers of the saints which help the man much, in order the man not to remain fruitless. This is for, as the gold burnt into oven while being held with the tongues and stricken with the hammer, it will become good and appropriate for the imperial diadem, likewise the man upheld by the prayers of the saints[235] which can do and fulfill many things, when burnt by troubles and beaten by temptations, if the man endures and he gives thanks, he will become son of the emperor[236]. Therefore, everything is useful to you, in order you too to receive that daring from the saints and due to your efforts, whose firstfruits don't be ashamed to show[237]. So, do not cause to yourself sadness instead of spiritual joy. And trust Him Who promised that top you. Be strong, my beloved one, into the Lord!

[236] Such a man reaches to be master upon himself, and free, and together-emperor with God over all things, and insubordinate to any inferior force, but son of the Emperor and brother of the Only Begotten Son.

[237] Do not be ashamed of showing that you have gained the firstfruits of your daring against passions, against temptations, and that you have gained the full freedom from them, and you are no longer mastered by them. It is not a shame to show that you are no longer mastered by anything, that yourself are master over all things. Master of himself is him who is no longer mastered by anything. Though, you must not brag about having self-mastery, you must show that daring against passions in your deeds. You are not ashamed of showing with your deed that you are stronger than the temptations are, in order to resist them, in order not to allow yourself to be enslaved by them. And this daring gives a joy too, as it will be shown further on.

106. (V. 201) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who fell into a great discouragement.

May the loving-of-people God not allow the hater-enemy to sow sadness or discouragement within you, in order him not to bring you to despair regarding the things promised to you, my beloved one, by the blessed God and by the Holy Ghost. And may God open in order you to understand the Scriptures, as He yore open the hearts of Cleophas and of his companion (Lk. 24: 32). Why God, after the promises He made to Abrahan, He tempted Abraham again? This is for it was written that after these words – I mean the words of the promises – God allowed His friend who brought Him such a great sacrifice and who was not due to suffer anything, and whom his faith was reckon as righteous, to fall again into temptation (Gen. 22: 1; 15: 6) in order to text him and in order to leave defenseless the powers of the darkness. And this is in order to be an example to the believers who, "through many troubles will enter the Kingdom of God" (Lk. 21: 19), "thanking for everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18).

Take together with these one, within your mind, also that Job among the saints. This is for "this sincere friend of God, on the righteous and without blemish and pious and estranged from all evil things", who was not due to suffer any evil, God surrendered him to be tempted in order to be proven, until He showed his enemies and accusers ashamed and defenseless, because of being exposed by him.

Take in the spirit of the faith Christ as well, the Chieftain and the Consummator or our salvation (Hebr. 2: 10), Him Who has redeemed us form the curse which we fell in (Gen. 3: 13). Look at how he reached the time of the cross and He showed us the way of the patience as being the way of the salvation[238], by saying: "Father, if possible, let his cup pass away from me, but not as I want but as You want" (Mt. 26: 39). And He did that for us, Him Who rebuked Peter who told Him: "Be merciful to You, Lord, and not allow that to happen to You" (Mt. 16: 22), for He was ready to suffer. He prayed for us to pass that cup away, in order us too while praying not to get discouraged, despite for the present our prayer isn't listened to[239]. Therefore, let's think at the sufferings of our Savior made man and let's endure together with Him the condemnations, the nails, the disregard, the despise, the spitting over, the mockery coat, the adornment of the thorns crown, the vinegar with its sourness, the stabbing with the spear, the water and the blood; and take out of all of these the relief of your pains. This is for He won't allow your toils to be in vain (1 Cor. 15: 18). But in order you to remain non-partaker to those - while you are looking at the saints who bore at their time the fruits of their troubles and they were praised for that – he allowed you too to endure a little tiredness, in order you too to become together-partaker with them and with Jesus, by gaining daring in front of Him, together with the saints. Therefore, do not get sad, for God hasn't forgotten you, but He takes care of you as of a true son of His, and not as of an illegitimate son. And you will remain steadfast if you steadfastly take heed at yourself, so that you won't fell off the fear of God and of giving thanks to God. But you will be happy if you make yourself truly stranger and poor. This is for these ones are the inheritors of the Kingdom of God[240]. Encourage yourself and be strong into the Lord. I do not hesitate to remind you about the same goods which the Lord will bestow to you. Pray for me.

107. (V. 202) The prayer of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman asking for support for his heart and for the forgiveness of his sins since his birth.

[239] Jesus didn't pray for Himself that cup to pass ways from Him, but He prayed in order to teach us hos to pray when we are in a great suffering, and He prayed also for us to have strength to endure. Thus, neither Him received nor we are receiving by praying the removal of the suffering, of the trouble, but we receive the power for enduring that. This is for that is useful to us in order us to reach the strength of the mastery upon all things which try to enslave us, and not for getting us rid of pain. Neither Christ obtained what he asked for, nor we will obtain. But we obtain something else and more useful. Our prayer is not always listened to in what we ask for, but it is always listened to in the fact that we are given power to endure what it is allowed us to duffer.

[240] He who is intentionally and willingly stranger to and poor of everything, he will be truly strong, for he has elevated himself above all things and he can live without those things. He has discovered his endless subject that is more valuable than everything, and he is truly free and powerful when united with the Almighty Father and Supreme Subject Who is submitted to nothing. He is son by grace of the Supreme Emperor.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Mya our Lord Jesus Christ to be healing and support to your soul and body and Him to uphold your heart so that the devil won't take you under his mastery, as he hates the good and the people. Regarding the forgiveness of your sins since your birth and until now, this will be destined to you after forty days if you will be partaker to my prayers for that gift, through your short patience. Therefore, encourage yourself and be strong into the Lord. May the Lord, the Great Doctor of the souls and of the bodies, be with you. Peace to you into the Lord, brother!

108. (V. 203) The answer of John – the other Oldman – towards the same brother.

If the people think that is happy him who is rich in the worldly things, all the more I bless your love for you have enriched yourself in the godlike things, through the prayers of our blessed Father. Without any doubt, if his prayer didn't take it in advance and said you: "strengthen yourself and encourage yourself and be strong", you would be in danger to get sick because of your small carelessness and because of your little courage for persevering in patience and in long-enduring towards your thoughts and towards them who take care of you. But so you remembered the Apostle who says: "Bear your burdens to one another and so you will fulfill the law of Christ" (Eph. 6: 2). This is for God loves you and therefore He tested you mercifully, because of the prayer of His servant. Or, through this small test you too to collaborate with his prayer. And this has been counted as your work, in order to be shut up the enemy's mouth from saying: "If he was tempted towards correction, he would collapse"[241]. Therefore, you must not get sad. This is for it happens to you as you heard it from the Great Oldman. Encourage yourself, and be strong, according to his word.

[241] You have been collaborating with the prayers of Barsanuphius by enduring the temptation brought upon you. His prayer didn't spare you from being tempted, in order you too to be able to show a together-working with his prayer. But also, his prayer helped you to manifest that patience. By that the enemy's mouth has been shut up, because otherwise the enemy could say that if you were submitted to such a test you would wobble in your steadfastness in faith and in patience.

109. (V. 204) The same Oldman escaped the temptations by the prayer of the Saint Oldman and through his spiritual teaching, so that he sent him thanks.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Raise all the doxology to the God of the glory. Let's praise Him forever. Amen. This is for not to us is due the glory, but only to Him and to His Son and to the Holy Ghost. God brought your love to our helplessness in order us to receive His kelp through one another[242]. God wanted to fulfill with us what the Scripture says: "The brother helped by his brother is like a fortified and surrounded by walls stronghold" (Prov. 18: 19).

But may all of us be helped by our Big Brother, I mean Jesus. This is for he deigned to make all of us His brothers[243].

[242] God could give His help also to the isolated man. But God makes His work clear when He give His help to each one through another: God ties each man not only to Himself but also to another man. By that, God impose to each man a responsibility for another and God upholds the love among them. Thus, God shuns each man from the pride of reckoning that he doesn't need but God's help, so that he could despise other people. How much is my heart being warmed up by the interest of another in me! The another is capable too to strengthen me us, as I am capable to help him as well. The man is not annulled. But the reciprocal love aminating them it makes them capable of being elevated to the feeling of God. But not only this nobleness produced by love within them, it elevated them to the feeling of God, but they are elevated to that also by experiencing the limit of their power to help themselves without the help coming to both him and his neighbor, from above, from God Who is the source of the power.

[243] The Son of God, by making Himself our Big Brother, he confirmed the will of God for each of us to be helped through another man, through a brother of ours into humanity. He showed by that the great importance of my brother for my existence and my importance as brother in other's existence. And by that He showed our responsibility for one another, as brothers. When God did that to us, He laid down a foundation for making His Son as our Brother, or our creation as beings having their foundation in the will of God to make always His Son as our Brother, Whom us to be saved through, or to assure to us the eternal life. Jesus has placed within Himself, as Brother of ours, all the possibilities of power communication from brother to brother, and the endless resources of mercy. Jesus lives in a culminant manner His responsibility as Brother for His brothers, or the value had by His human brothers, the emotional content given to the own life my interest in my brother and the interest of my brother in me, the warmth and the meaning given to the human life by the relation between brother and brother. And in Jesus the unlimited responsibility for our brother is not intertwined with the pain for not being I able to provide my brother with the eternal life, as I want but as I am not able to give it, or actually to ensure the eternal value of my brother as felt by me. This is for in Jesus this brother responsibility can accomplish to the brothers that what He wants: making His brothers eternal. Descending from heavens in order to become our Brother, the Son of God descended His supreme nobleness that can ennoble the people thought their real reciprocal love.

And so, the angels reckon us happy. We have such a powerful Brother, in order Him to make us powerful too; strong, in order Him to share with us the spoils take from the enemy; chief-strategist (supreme armies leader), in order to crush in war the enemies who wage war against us; Doctor, in order Him to reconcile our outside man with our inward man who obeys him; nourishing, for He nourishes us with spiritual food; alive, in order Him to make us alive; merciful, in order Him to have mercy on us; lenient, in order Him to be lenient to us; Emperor, in order Him to make us emperors; God, in order Him to make us gods. Therefore, by knowing that all thigs are in Him, you pray to Him. This is for He know what you need before you ask Him for those (Mt. 6: 8). And he will fulfill the asks of your heart (Ps. 36: 4[244]), if you don't impede Him from that. Therefore, you raise your doxology to Him. For His is due the glory forever. Amen. Pray for me, brother, in order I to know my helplessness and I to humble myself.

110. (V. 205) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman about drought and about his long silence.

The answer of Barsanuphius: God does all the things at their due time. And God does all the things in the benefit of the people. If God impeded the rai, He would do that towards the corrective rebuking of the people. But God will again have mercy on people and He will send them rain. Likewise, the word was stopped for a while, in order some of the people to feel, despite they still did not feel. But God comes back again and the word will be uttered again according to need towards benefit.

111. (V. 206) The supplication of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: I beg you Father, fulfill for me your promises about the forgiving the sins.

[244] In KJB we have: Ps. 37: 4: "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 36: 4: "Delight yourself into the Lord and He will fulfill the asks of your heart." (E. l. t.'s n.)

The answer of Barsanuphius: “Blessed is God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ Who has blessed us with the whole spiritual blessing into the heavenly ones” (Eph. 1: 3). This is for if you are preparing yourself for receiving the things which you have asked from me, you will take those by your much striving and by our helplessness. This is for I reckon as mine the gains and the benefits of every man and of every soul[245]. That’s why joyfully and burning I am spending myself for you souls, as God knows well, He Who is the only knower of our souls. And I know and I am confident that we won’t lose our toils in vain. Therefore, trust the fact that your will take the promised things. But by taking those, you must guard them, for the grace to remain with you. This is because many took, but after they took, they fell because of not guarding fearfully that what they took. Therefore, you must desire the good things but you also must preserve them; you must humble disciple of Him Who humbled Himself for you; you must be well-pleasant servant of your Master, and obedient to The Obedient One[246]; you just be non-keeping the evil in mind out of the power of Him Who do not keep the evil in minds you must be long-patient out of the power of Him Who is long-patient; you must be merciful out of the power of Him Who is merciful; you must be bearing the burdens of your neighbor out of the power of Him Who bears your burdens; you must be loving everybody sincerely as He loves us too; you must be following Him in all things until He will receive you in His great resting, which “the eye hasn’t seen it and the ear hasn’t heard it and at the heart of the man it hasn’t ascended, to the things prepared by God to all [245] If I reckon as mine all the things received by somebody from God, I will also I pray for him to receive those things from God, by reckoning that I will receive those things myself. One cannot feel rich while knowing that others are poor. Only in the ambience of the general richness I am rich too. I am getting rich by receiving form others and I enjoy seeing the things had by others. I will enjoy what I have if I see that what I have is beneficial to others, fructifying in others, bringing joy to others. This refers especially to the spiritual goods.

[246] Thus, it is reconciled the fact of not having anything that enslaves you and of having God as your Master and as a Father and as a Brother, with the fact that you still obey God and you are full of humbleness. You obey Christ, but also Christ not only obeys His Father but He also listens to your needs; you humble yourself towards Him, but also Him humbled Himself and He still humbles Himself for you and towards you, more than you humble yourself, for He descends from His infinite godhead, or with His infinite godhead, all the way down to the state of being your Brother. It is a contest in humbleness and in reciprocal valuation, a contest taking place in full freedom.

of them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9). Him it is due the glory forever. Amen. Pray for me, you monk!

112. (V. 207) The same brother asked the Great Oldman for the same things.

Answer: Brother Andrew, may God give you the things said by Jesus: "Ask and you will take" (Jn. 16: 24). May Him fulfill all your asks. But you must prepare your house into the whole cleanness in order you to receive the bestowed things. This is for they must be placed in a clean house as in a treasury. And they spread their good fragrance there where is no garbage. But him who taste them he will estrange himself from the former man, by crucifying himself to the world and by crucifying the world to him (Gal. 7: 14) and by always living to the Lord. This ship won't be wrecked regardless how hard is stricken by the enemy's waves. This ship has become fearsome to the enemies because they see in it the holy seal. And as enemy this ship is to those, as friend it is to the great Emperor. Therefore, you must clean yourself, brother, consummately, in order you to love consummately. You must totally get far, in order you to be able to consummately come closer[247]. You must disgust yourself about an adoption, in order you to take another adoption[248]. You must stop to fulfill the wills (yours or of the evil one) in order you to be able to fulfill the will[249]. You must cut off [247] Only him who consummately hates the evil, only him love the good consummately. But consummately hating the evil means the total absence of the hatred. You won't be able to come consummately close to somebody in love, if you haven't firstly got consummately far from your egotism that separates you from your neighbor, if you haven't firstly removed the gate that locks you into yourself. Among the evil ones, among the devils, there is no real closeness, because of not being love among them, and also because they haven't found themselves either. They are unwillingly tied to one another, by the curse of the evil and of the hatred.

[248] While you are the son of the devil, you won't be able to become the son of God. As long as you are tied to somebody who is evil, and who urges you to evilness and to egotism, you won't be able to become intimate to a kind person, or to communicate to a kind person. This is because there is also a connection among those who are enslaved to evil. It is the connection of the slavery, a connection they do not want. Each evil person is tied in the own ling in chain tying all the evil ones together. They loathe on one another, but they cannot detach from one another either.

[249] Your wills separated from the will of God are not fully free wills. They are not your true will. This is for such a will is enslaved by pride, or bur some other passion. Such a will is multiple because of your self being torn apart by obeying now a master then another master.

yourself and you must tie up yourself[250]. You must kill yourself and so to make yourself alive[251]. You must forgive yourself in order you to know yourself[252]. And, lo, you have the deeds of the monk.

113. (V. 208) The same brother asked the same Great Oldman the same things.

Answer: Brother and all-beloved soul of mine, Andrew! If you knew as you should the gift from God, even if all the hairs of your head had been equally numerous mouths, you still couldn't have worthily extolled or thank God. But I think that you realize this. God know that there is no blink of my eye or instance, when I do not have you in my mind and in my prayer. But if I love you so, all the more God loves you for He created you. And I pray Him to guide you and to govern you according to His will. And God governs you in your benefit. And if God has long-patience with you, this will be towards the increased benefit of your soul. Therefore, you must remain as you are, while thanking God for all the things and reckoning yourself as nothing in everything, and believing that all the things said to you will be fulfilled into Christ Jesus our Lord. Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

114. (V. 209) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who asked him for the same things and for understanding from God.

You cannot have any consistency. Your free will is affirmed when affirming the will of God. Then you will be truly free and unitary, or yourself, for you will permanently do that what corresponds to your subject as eternal foundation of your happy existence in your subject's ultimate foundation.

[250] Cut yourself off from the evil one and tie yourself up to God, for through both of those you will liberate yourself.

[251] You must kill yourself in order you to truly be in communion with God and with the people. You must kill the egotistic individual who is keeping you dead, in order you to become alive as subject of the communion.

[252] You must forget about caring for yourself in order you to truly know yourself, by being your conscience waked up by your responsible self, enriched and deepened through the fundamental ties with God and with your fellow humans, ties which your self discovers.

Brother Andrew, our Lord said to Martha: "If you believe, you will see the glory of God" (Jn. 11: 40). Therefore, you must believe at your turn, and you will see Lazarus resurrected from dead and sitting at the table together with Jesus (Jn. 12: 2). And you will see Mary sitting down at His feet, and as delivered of the Martha's worries. You must believe that all the things which have been asked for, through me the unworthy, from God, they will be given to your love. God asks for nothing form you except for patience and for thankfulness, in order Him to open for you the treasuries of the wisdom and of the understanding from within Himself. I am embracing you into the Lord, into Whom I wish you to be healthy both with your soul and with your body, and pray for me.

115. (V. 210) The answer of the same Great Olsman addressed to the same brother.

Brother and beloved Andrew, listen to me! They who receive from the emperor the precious coins, if they guard those zealously and carefully, those coins will remain shiny and clean. But if they are careless, those coins not only will rust, but they will even be lost. Therefore, a certain wiseman dais: "Tie up your silver" (Sirach[253] 28: 29). And I am telling you not only you to tie up your silver with doubtless faith, but you also to seal it up with your humbleness and with the long-patience of the obedience, which everyone who endure will be saved by (Mt. 10: 22). I am telling you, by the lenience of God, a daring thing: Through me, the all-unimportant one, the Great Mediator Jesus Who is the Son of the blessed Father and Who if the bestower of the Holy Ghost, He is telling you: "Forgiven are your many sins" (Lk. 7: 47-48), since your birth and until now. Therefore, by receiving this great and untold joy, love Him with the whole your power, by showing a fruit worthy of repentance (Mt. 3: 8) and by shouting out together with Saint Paul those words as a song: "Who will separate us from the love of Christ? The trouble, or the tribulation, or the hunger, or the persecution, or the lack of clothing, or the danger, or the fear, or the sword?"; and by saying together with Him: "We are killed daily, we are reckoned as some sheep towards being slaughtered. But in all of these we are more than victorious through Him Who loved us. This is for I am entrusted that neither the death, nor the life, neither the angels, nor the principalities, neither the masteries, not the present things, neither the future things, neither the powers, nor the height, neither the darkness, nor any other creation will be able to separate us from the love of God into Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8: 35-39). You must show yourself as thinking at these not with your mouth but with your deeds. This is for he says: "Into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 19). You have become partaker to a great worthiness, and you must therefore show great and worthy deeds of patience and of worthiness. This is for through those it is waited for the consummation of which may us be found worthy in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. You must mill down these ceaselessly and by working them. And taste their sweetness in order they to give a good fragrance to your soul and the souls of those whom you meet with. Encourage yourself and be strong, you the all-well-believer!

[253] This book, called: The Book of the Wisdom of Joshua the Son or Sirach (the Ecclesiastes) it is not given in KJB, but it is given in ROB. The interested reader can find all the fourteen missing books on www.academia.edu, under the name Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

116. (V. 211) The answer of the same Great Olsman addressed to the same brother.

Brother Andrew, our Lord told us that Elijah has already come (Mt. 17: 12). And I am telling you that your spiritual Lazarus has already resurrected and he has already been untied of his ties (Jn. 11: 44), and for him it has been fulfilled the word: "You have broken off my ties" (Ps. 115: 7[254]). Therefore, you to owe to bring "the sacrifice of praise" Him Who has untied you, in order you not to fall again, because of your carelessness, in the previous ties[255], according to the word of our Savior: "Behold, you have been made whole, from now on

[254] In KJB we have: Ps. 116: 16: "O Lord, truly I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thine handmaid: thou hast loosed my bonds."; in ROB we have: Ps. 115: 7: "Oh, Lord, I am Your servant and the son of Your handmaid; you have broken off my ties." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[255] By bringing the sacrifice of praise to God, you will exist the slavery of your egotism and of your passions. By surrendering yourself, with feeling of praising, to God, you will have liberated yourself and you will have entered the wide horizon of the life into the all-loving God.

do not sin" (Jn. 5: 14). Give thanks to God, this is for God will take care of you, and God will guide you in everything, if you persevere in willing. Be healthy with your soul and with your body. And pray for me.

117. (V. 212) The same brother, by receiving such a great gift, he asked for being shown (to God) him and the ones who were living together with him.

Answer: You the servant of the All-High God, and you together servant with me, Andrew. Peace to you and to the other together-servants with us, from God the Father and from our Lord Jesus Christ. I am making known to you that before your ask I showed you to the Holy and worshipped and of-one-being and of without-beginning Trinity, in a showing which to guard you against all evil. But I am not wanting you not to know also that there is also another showing, more fearful, more unavoidable, and more desirable into the whole fear and much loved, and more honorable and more glorious. Listen to which is that showing: When will be shamed up the hater-of-good enemy, by hearing that happy and of-life-maker voice of our Savior towards us, a full of joy and of gladness voice, a voice lightened by an untold shininess, saying to us: "Come, you the blessed one of My Father and inherit that Kingdom prepared to you since the foundation of the world" (Mt. 25: 34). Then will take place the great showing in front of Him, when "Will be given the Kingdom of God and the Father" (1 Cor. 15: 24). This is the one and beside this there is no other. And what that will be done like, listen to this: Each of the saints by presenting to God his saved sons, he will say with shining voice, with much and great daring, towards the bewilderment of the angels and of all heavenly powers: "Behold I and my children given to me by God" (Hebr. 2: 13; Isa. 8: 18)[256]. And not only on them, but he will surrender himself too, to God[257]. And then God will be everything in everybody (1 Cor. 15: 28). Pray for us to reach there. Blessed is him who wats for that and who will reach there. Pray for be, my beloved ones.

[256] They who are saved through somebody, they are his spiritual sons. They have been saved through him for Christ Whom he made known to them, He worked through him upon them. But he also made himself an organ capable of the will of God: by his strong faith, by his life according to the will of Christ, by righteously guiding them. They will be his recommendation letter on the doom's day. They who show hos we have been fulfilling his responsibility for them. In himself they will be shown too, or what he has done for them (2 Cor. 3: 2). Among those who work for others, and they whom they work for, there will be produced a reciprocal

118. (V. 213) The same brother, by being bothered by hallucinations and by the temptations coming to him from the devils, and by wondering that after such a great love for people of God and after being him promised the future goods, the hallucinations and the temptations still occur to him, he asked the same Great Oldman about those: and if there still stay within him the seals of the promises[258].

The answer of Barsanuphius: "Much peace have they who love the Lord and there won't be offense to them" (Ps. 118: 165[259]). Much peace you too will have into God, all-honored brother Andrew, for you are of-same-thought with me. Let yourself not be drowsy because of the multitude of the devilish passions and hallucinations, but you must believe that their disturbances and temptations won't succeed in anything, if we carefully take heed to persevere in patience. This is for it has been written about the righteous who is saved by his faith: "If he dodges, My soul won't deign in him" (Hab. 2: 4). Let's therefore do not loose up the cord, in order us not to lose the things given to us by the loving-of-people and merciful God. This is for it is His own to give us too us to be guarded.

interiority. They will no longer be separate from one another. The parents' heart can no longer be empties of their children, neither the children's heart can be emptied of their parents.

[257] But they who will surrender themselves to God, together with them whom they have brought to salvation, they too will be surrendered to the Father by Christ Who has been working through their zeal in order to gain others. They will be surrendered for Christ Himself, by surrendering Himself to God-the Father, Christ will have all of them inscribed within Himself. Christ will surrender all the things to the Father by having all the things surrendered to Him gathered within Himself. There will be a great concentration of all thing within Christ, in our Great Brother and, together with Him into the Father, for everyone to be into Christ in the Father's bosom.

[258] The promises are imprinted like a downpayment within those who believe in them. He who will be full of love in the Kingdom of God, he has the love developing in himself, since now.

[259] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 165: "Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 165: "Much peace have they who keep Your law and they won't be offended." (E. l. t.'s n.)

And do not wonder that after the holy promises and after the gifts which God doesn't feel sorry for, there will move again towards you the dishonest passions of those ones, which aim again to steal the endless treasure, but you rather just remember about their shamelessness from after the testimony of our Master God, on him from among saints the glorious Job[260]. Remember how many temptations and plots he set in movement to tear down that tower, but he was unsuccessful in stealing the treasure of Job's illustrious faith and thanksgiving. This is for, as the meeting with the fire will make the gold shinier, the multitude of the trials makes the righteous likewise. This is for God allowed that even after His testimony about the righteous Job, His servant Job to be tested towards an even greater praise and glory of the Master[261] towards the shaming up of the enemies. You must therefore not allow yourself to become discouraged. This is for the seals of the promises stand steadfast. But you must patiently wait for the Lord. This is for "he who endures to the end, that one will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22), into Christ Jesus our Lord Who to be the glory forever. Amen.

119. (V. 214) The answer of the Great Oldman towards the same brother, whom was sown into the thought that his unrestraint to eating will impede him to reach the things promised to him.

I am not telling you to fulfill the need of your body as due, because I would disregard the restraint and the ascesis. God forbid that! But I am telling you that because, fi the inward work doesn't help the man according to God, the man's external word will be useless. That's why our Lord said: "not that what enters the man defiled the man, but the things coming out of man's mouth" (Mt. 15: 18). Actually, the inward work that is done with the pain of the heart, it will bring the true peace of the heart, and this peace will bring the humbleness; and the [260] Despite God Himself testified on the faithfulness of Job, the devils had the shamelessness to doubt the guarantee given them by God about Job's faithfulness.

[261] God received a greater glory by the fact that Job endured the trials which came upon him, both because thus the testimony of God was proven as true and also because it was shown how strong are they who believe in God.

humbleness make the man dwelling place of God[262]. And God's dwelling will cast the evil devils and their chieftain out, together with their dishonorable passions. And thus, the man will become sanctified church, illuminated and clean and belonging to God, and full of all good-fragrance and of kindness and of gladness. Then that man become bearer of God, or better said that man becomes a god, as it was said: "I said: you are gods and sons of the All-High" (Ps. 81: 6[263]).

Let's yourself, therefore, not to be troubled by that thought, or better said by the cunning one, that the bodily foods will impede you from reaching the promise. This is for these foods are holy[264] and out of what is good there cannot come something evil. But the things coming out through your mouth as being sent by your heart, those ones stop and impede the man to surely reach the promises placed in front of him. Therefore, by fulfilling the need of the body, make no differences, but make the power of the inward man to get tired and to humble the inward man's thoughts. And then God will open the eyes of your heart so that to see[265] "the true light" (Jn. 1: 9) and to say with understanding "I am saved by grace" (Eph. 2: 5) into Christ Jesus our Lord Who is due the glory forever. Amen.

[262] The humbleness totally opens the man to God. This is for the humble man no longer care about anything belonging to him, but he will aspect everything from God. But the humbleness is brought within heart by the appeasement that means the man not worrying about anything, by detaching himself from all things. Through appeasement one can reach the humbleness, to the true conscience that you are not and you have nothing by your own. The humbleness will make you reckon yourself as totally depending on God, and it makes God fully obvious to you.

[263] In KJB we have: Ps. 82: 6: "I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Highest."; in ROB we have: Ps. 81: 6: "I said: "Gods you are and all sons of the All-High." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[264] If the body is through humbleness a sanctified temple of God, and if you do not tie yourself by pl4easure on the foods you consume, but your whole thought is at God, those foods will be sanctified at their turn, by the fact that while you eat you think at God.

[265] Receiving into the body the foods while thinking that God is everything and I have nothing by myself, it will open my eyes I to see God through this need for food too, and I to see even all foods as created by God in order to correspond to the need of supporting my body and my life on earth. This is the illumination which we see God in creation through, or which we see God through as Creator of all realities. If I am nothing by myself, then there must be Somebody to give me and to everyone our existence, together with their purpose for me.

120. (V. 215) The question of the same brother towards the same Great Oldman: Because, as you know, Master, I am weak both with my soul and with my body, I beg you to pray God to give me power for patience so that I to be able to bear the things coming upon me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother Andrew, I want your love to find out that all the gifts (the charismas) are given by the coming of the Holy Ghost, for many times and in many ways. Once God gave the Ghost to the Apostles, in order they to be able to cast out devils; on another occasion they to do healings; on another occasion they to foresee; and on another occasion they to resurrect dead people. But the consummate Ghost consists of forgiving the sins and in liberating the souls form darkness and in bringing the souls to light. So, I pray God to give the Holy Ghost to you towards having patience and thankfulness; and for "your enemy to be shamed up by not having anything bad to say about us" (Tit. 2: 8). You too must collaborate a little, by fighting to gain the Holy Ghost and "God Who is rich in mercy" will give the Holy Ghost to you" (Eph. 2: 4). Pray for me, brother.

121. (V. 216) Question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman: I beg you, master, always remember me and show me how I must live with the brother who dwells near me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, it is written: "If I forget you Jerusalem, let my right hand be forgotten" (Ps. 136: 5[266]). This is about remembrance. As about how you must live with one who lives near you, he who wants to be pleasant to God let him cut off his will for the sake of his close one, and by forcing himself. This is for He said: "My Kingdom belongs to them who take it by force, and they who take it by force they kidnap it" (Mt. 11: 12). Therefore, you find out what your brother is rested by, and do that, and you will find resting from

[266] In KJB we have: Ps. 137: 5: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning."; in ROB we have: Ps. 136: 5: "If I forget you, Jerusalem, let my right hand be forgotten!" (E. l. t.'s n.)

God[267] into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

122. (V. 217) This brother who dwelled near to the ill old man commiserated with his helplessness and begged much the Great Oldman to pray for the ill old man.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, you don't leave me in peace. "If you knew the gift from God" (Jn. 4: 19), you would glorified God for God rebukes His servant Andrew, from time to time, as a merciful Father, so that to shut up the devil's filthy mouth, for the devil to have no motif against brother Andrew on judgment day, for brother Andrew have been resting in the great promises heralded him by God, through me the all-unimportant and worthless servant of His[268]. But, what do you reckon? That I do not suffer together with him, more than for any other man? I am suffering together with him. This is because, otherwise, how could be true the word that "if a limb suffers, all the limbs will suffer together with it" (1 Cor. 11: 26)?

If you truly knew the brightness of the things waiting for him, you would be singing together with Paul, thanking, and gladdening yourself up, and saying "are not worthy the sufferings of the present time of the greatness of the things which will be unveiled" (Rom. 8: 18). May God strengthen him and send him His great mercy. I embrace both of you into the Holy Ghost, and I am looking, together with God, at your advancing into Christ our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

[267] Taking the Kingdom by force means forcing yourself. This is for, by this forcing of yourself, or by powerfully taking yourself in your own mastery, you find out in your true self, or through your true self, that Kingdom that is of them who are masters upon themselves, of those who have succeeded to forcedly take themselves into own mastery. This is for in this power of yours to master yourself it is shown the power of God Who has liberated you from all things. And by mastering yourself you will no longer upset your brother and you will meet him into love or into the eternal Kingdom. So, both of you will be comforted and rested by God Whose love you have found it as the love that unites you.

[268] If those troubles did not come upon him, the devil (and not only the devil, but also the devil's envious servants) could say on the judgment day: it was easy to him not to wobble during his earthly life once he knew the promise of the great goods waiting for him and whose downpayment he rejoiced while still being him on earth, by not being upset by troubles.

123. (V. 218) The same brother wanted to serve the old man, according to his power, together with the old man's servant. But the old man, because of his right-reckoning, he didn't want to be served by that brother, due to the word of Abba Theodore from Ferme, who didn't stand to command his disciple (Paterikon, at Isaac 2). That's why he asked the other Oldman concerning that.

The answer of John: May the God of the heavens and of the earth increase your faith, of, your all-honored and all-beloved brother of mine; and may God strengthen your love into His fear in order to fulfill the good decision concerning that brother. This is for, if you toil a little, according to your power, God won't deprive you of the payment for your toil. Therefore, you rest the old man to the extent you can. This is for this is pleasant to God more than the holy religious service and more than the sacrifice. And the old man must not avoid, because of his right-reckoning, to be served by you, but he must thank God and pray for you. This is because he is ill so he doesn't owe to keep Abba Theodore's word who said about the brother: "I am not the leader of the coenobitic community to command him. If he wants to do something, let him do whatever he sees me doing". Abba Theodore said these for he was able to fulfill his needs and even to serve others. But this old man is ill. And each of us must live his life in the fear of God according to his measure and state, and always thanking to God. This is for through him others too will take their payment[269] [270]. Therefore, let him not envy him who wants to obey Him Who says: "I was ill and you served Me" (Mt. 25: 36). This is for God doesn't' ask, as I have heard for many times, from the ill one, except [269] Through the ill one, as served by others, they who serve him will take their payment from God. That's why one who is ill must not stop others from serving him. This is because of depriving those of their payment. But neither himself must lose his payment by allowing himself to be served because of his comfortableness, of because of his pride caused him by the fact of feeling himself superior because of being older, or of being more taught, or of being in a hierarchical (social) position.

[270] The Oldman John reckons, with a great gentleness, that he who stops somebody from serving him, he actually envies the servant for the payment the servant will receive from God. He reckons as submitted to the temptation of the sin if not allowing to be served. By this, he impeded the servant from advancing into consummation. Therefore, you will allow yourself to be served when you need that, not so much for yourself, but rather for him who wants to serve you. But you must humble yourself for receiving that serving, by reckoning that you take upon yourself the rick of the sin. Only the humbleness melts down the sin that can be into both accepting or rejecting to be served.

thanking and patience. This is for these two mediate, for our helplessness, in front of God[271]. So, according to the right-reckoning, let him not avoid to be served by any of the brothers who wants to toil according to God. And let him not say: "I burden him up, or I am troubling him". But let him say: "he who serves can be equal to them who are tormented by illness if God entrusted him that He will reward him for me. May the Lord save him and may the Lord not condemn me".

You keep these and live in peace, by the grace of Christ our God. "Before all, bear your burdens to one another and so you will fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6: 2). And in addition to these, let's remember that the death won't be late coming. You must serve the Lord and to your neighbor with fear, so that you will inherit through the Lord the immortal life into Christ Jeus our Lord, and by trusting Him you won't be worried about tomorrow (Mt. 6: 34). This is for the Lord takes care of you. And if we throw our worry upon Him (1 Pt. 5: 7), Himself will take care of us as he wishes. His is due the glory. Amen. I am embracing you into the Lord, asking you to pray for me, out of love.

124. (V. 60) The question of monk Theodore addressed to the Great Oldman: How can I know that thought coming from God and that thought that is from nature and that thought that comes from devils?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Son Theodore, when asking, you must understand that what you ask for, and you must prepare for working for it was said: "Do not cogitate at high things, but let yourself be carried by humble things" (Rom. 12: 16). You ask belongs to a greater measure. If you inward eye hasn't been cleaned through many medicines, it won't be possible to clean it of thorns and brambles, so that to be able to catch that grape that strengthens the heart and gladdens it. If the man doesn't reach this measure, he won't be able to discern among things, so that him to be able to realize that the devils mock him and that he is deceived by trusting them. This is for [271] The patience and the thankfulness brought to God will defend the ill one for what he hasn't been able to do positively (fasting, ascesis) for God, because of his helplessness.

the devils change the way of the things as they wish, especially to them who do not know their craftsmanships.

My beloved one, trust God and he "will fulfill the asks of your heart" (Ps. 36: 3-4[272]). And you tell Him in everything: "Be it, Lord, not as I want, but as You want" (Mt. 26: 39).

Listen son to the discernment of the thoughts that you have asked about. When the thought urges you to do something according to the will of God, and yourself rejoice of doing that but you also feel a sadness resisting what you are doing, you will know that that thought is from God. Therefore, you must struggle to endure, according to the word of the Apostle: "I bring my enslaved body and I persecute it, lest by preaching to others myself to become disapproved" (1 Cor. 9: 27). And you will fulfill the will of God.

And if there comes a thought from nature, take carefully heed and you will be able to discern it. This is for the godlike Scripture says: "For this the man will leave his father and his mother and he will attach himself to his woman and both of them will be one body" (Gen. 2: 24). But the Apostle, by knowing that the will of God is not only us to leave the things of the devils, but also the things of the nature, because "the body uses to nothing" (Jn. 7: 33), he said: "He who attach himself to woman he is body, but him who attaches himself to the Lord, he is ghost" (1 Cor. 6: 16-18). So, they who want to be spiritual, they must reject the body. This is because, that what is useless will also be damaging. And that what is damaging must be rejected. But them who want to live in the world in a piously, he told them that "the wedding is honored" and so on (Mt. 13: 4).

And the thoughts from the devils are troubled and full of sadness and they hiddenly and subtly attracts to the things from behind. The here put on some sheepskins, namely they take the countenance of some thoughts of the righteousness, "but within they are ravening wolves" (Mt. 7: 15), namely they appear to be useful, but they actually are useless and they "deceive the hearts of the simple ones" (Rom. 16: 18). This is because it was said about the snake that it is very cunning

[272] In KJB we have: Ps. 37: 3-4: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. // Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 36: 3-4: "Trust the Lord and do kindness and inhabit the earth and feed yourself with its richness. // Delight yourself into the Lord and He will fulfill the asks of your heart." (E. l. t.'s n.)

(Gen. 3: 15), you will always shun of its head lest it will find its den within you and so it will dwell within you and it will work the desolation within you.

Therefore, if you too want to become spiritual, you will eject the things of the body. This is for, the things denied by somebody he will also reject those. Listen to the Lord Himself saying: "If somebody wants to come after Me, let him reject himself and follow Me" (Mt. 16: 21). But how does the man reject himself if not by leaving the wills of his nature and following to the Lord[273]?

That's why he especially speaks about the things of the nature and not about the contrary-to-nature things. This is because, if somebody leaves only the contrary-to-nature things, he still won't leave anything of his own for God. This is because those things aren't even him[274]. But he who has left his natural things will always shout out with Saint Apostle Paul: "behold, we have left everything and we have followed You. What will be [273] We have here an explanation of the self-rejection, of the self-denial: it means not a total destruction of the own being, btu it means not fulfilling the needs of his natural life, or the will of this life, so that the man himself fulfills the wild of God with himself. This shows that the man continues existing as subject fulfilling the will of God regarding him, a will that doesn't want the man to exist everywhere but on a superior plan, by being the man filled up with the godlike will. This is the elevation of the man's being from the plan which the man's being wants to life by its own powers within the limits of its earthly needs, on the plan of the existence united with God, in an opening to the powers coming him from God. Properly-said, the man cannot live on a purely natural plan. If the man wants to remain locked up in the natural plan, the man will get haughty, namely the man becomes the slave of a passion coming from the father of the pride, that is the devil, and the man will try and develop his nature by exaggerated impulses which are equally numerous passions. Here, the teaching of the Holy Fathers is totally opposite to the catholic teaching about the possibility of existence of a man's "pure nature". But the passions moving in the horizon on the present world which all things are perishing in, they actually "desolate" the man of his life. The numerous satisfactions provided to the man by these passions will be followed by a general desolation; a desolation anticipated by a partial desolation following to satisfying each individual passion.

About the necessity to leave even the things of the nature, because of not being the things of the nature able to save the man, Barsanuphius is going to talk also in the following rows. But leaving those is an act of a greater courage, of a greater love for God, than it is forsaking the contrary to nature things. Of course, that is possible up to a place where some of the nature's needs must be kept and fulfilled. But some people keep fewer of those than others do. These ones are the monks. It is necessary, though, that both monks and laymen not to maintain the things of the nature separated from the godlike things.

[274] The contrary-to-nature things are the sinful passions. The man can live without those because they are not part of the nature. So, by leaving those for God, the man won't give something form what is necessary to him. But him who gives the things necessary to his nature, he will bring a sacrifice to God. And by that he will be elevated on a superior plan of existence, one that is above-nature. And God sanctifies the sacrifice when He receives it.

with us?" (Mt. 19: 27). And he will heart that blessed word and he will be assured about the promise of the future life. What had Peter left, in order to brag himself, being known that he was not a rich man? He left nothing else but his own natural wills. This is because, if the man doesn't die with the body in order to live with his ghost, he won't be resurrected. And as the things of the nature do not remain with the dead one at all, likewise it is in the case of him who is spiritually dead with the body[275]. So, if you died to your body, how would the natural things live within you?

And if you haven't yet reached the spiritual measure, but you are still a child with your mind, you must humble yourself before your teacher, so that he can rebuke you towards correction: "Do not do anything without asking for advice" (Sirach 35: 29[276]), even if what occurs to you it appears to be good. This is for the devils' light will finally be proven as actually being darkness.

So, everything you hear or think or see, if it troubles you heart no matter how little, it will be from the devils. Receive thins things I've written to you in a few words, by believing that if you sweated into these, God Who bestows all the things, He would destine to you too to advance in order you to be in all things with the saints towards liturgizing and rejoicing together with them and inheriting together with the saints the good things of His, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom to be the glory forever. Amen.

125. (V. 61) Because the Oldman did not dialogue with anybody except with his servant who was Abba (Serid), the same brother asked in a letter for a discussion with him, saying that Abba Moses too (Paterikon, at Arsenius 38) and the other Fathers had accepted discussions when asked. The Oldman answered [275] This is not the death of the ghost, btu it is a death of the body for cogitation, for the ghost; namely, this is not a physical death of the body, but it is a body's death into spirit or for the spirit. You must die into your spirit in order you to cross to another resurrection, to another life, like the physical body must die in order to reach the resurrection in such a body. Only they who have defeated the body's things through their ghost, only they will resurrect into happiness.

[276] This book called as The Book of the Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach it is not given in the KJB. by writing him a letter which he foretold in some things which we knew that they happened because of happening those right to us. For the Oldman told him that he followed to appear to him. Namely how and whom: for "the faithless from Judea" (Rom. 15: 31). And actually, after a while, the brother fell into the temptation of not believing that the Oldman was in his monastic cell and he said that Abba mimed the presence of the Oldman, so that the Oldman called that brother and other brothers living in that place and he showed them his legs. And I wad myself found worthy of that washing[277]. And so, the brother repented and by remembering the Oldman's answer, he confessed us his faithlessness and the foretelling of the Oldman. And all of us extolled God.

Behold the answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, "nobody knows the things of another, except the ghost within that man" (1 Cor. 2: 11). Each one knows that what he has inside his house, and that what he has earned in his bag. And according to that he also spends for supporting others. We have the commandment of our Master not to start building us a tower for us, before calculating the expenses (Lk. 14: 28). Count for me the saints who got rich (or: who enrich you) into ghost. And you are gladdening me with your knowledge and even stronger with your deeds. But I examine them and as abundant in good deeds I find them as abundant in evil deeds I find myself. And those worked daringly while I tremble without doing anything, because of his who said: "You who teach another, why don't you teach yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21). And I strive to no longer hear him how he condemns me by saying: "You hypocrite, pull out firstly the beam from your eye" and so on (Mt. 7: 5). And I am striving to get that beam out but I cannot do that. Still, I do not despair, but I trust that I will succeed in doing that. But tell me brother: if somebody told a poor man: "Some people gave alms, you too must give something despite having nothing", could do that that poor man? This is for many thirsty men when joyfully finding the water, they do not try and find the water's spring, of the source of the rain or of the river where are they coming from[278].

[277] The note in the Greek text: Maybe this was Serid, the hegumen of that monastery.

[278] Let's not try to know, theoretically, too much things regarding God Who is the source of our power, but let's use the power given to us. Do not ask a poor man like me, says Barsanuphius, for giving you the knowledge of the mysteries of God which I do not have.

And many people by rejoicing of the shininess of the sun, they do not spy the sun if it is big or small, seen or unseen. And regarding other natural phenomena they do the same. Likewise, the asked Fathers said about God: "Do not search for the Lord and do not ask where He lives" (Paterikon, Sisoes 40).

What could I tell you, because you have left the striving for examining your sins and you want to see me who I am a stinky worm and "dust and ashes" (Job 46: 6)? By I myself, as a mad man, by rejoicing about your question, I sent you an answer because of deluding myself and reckoning that I am something, and because of forgetting that "he who reckons that he is something, by being nothing, he deceived himself" (Gal. 6: 3). But I deluded myself in this and I spoke without being worthy. But you must work like good and obedient worker and do not ask me for that. But I still want to see you and I am embracing you and all the brothers, by being I driven by that love from God. But I'll do that when God will let me know. Then I will throw in person to your feet and I will kiss you, and I will beg you I to be delivered from the faithless ones from Judea. And brother, let's not spend our days in scattering, but let's gain that crying full of tears, in order us to achieve the happiness. And let's live together with the poor and gentle, so that we will become together-inheritors with them[279]. And let's all of us follow the peace, in order us to be together with the sons of God. Let's endure the condemnation and the defamation in order our payment to be multiplied in heavens. Let's strive to show Him as having good deeds, "in order the people to see our good deeds and they to extoll our Father Who is in heavens" (Mt. 5: 3-16). I haven't written you these things in order to refuse you, but because I see myself burdened by many debts. That's why I ceaselessly fall to God and beg Him to bestow me and you the forgiveness of our sins through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

126. (V. 62) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother who congratulated the Oldman for his virtue and said some words from the Scripture and he asked him if he should reject the fruits and to behave faithfully and [279] By living with the poor and gentle, we will become as they are, and so we will inherit together with them the Kingdom of Heavens.

obediently as the Fathers do; and about prayer and with the ask for being his ill eyes enlightened.

Brother, it has been fulfilled through you the Scripture that says: "My people, they who congratulate you, they delude you" (Isa. 9: 16). Such a congratulation (praise) does not allow us to see the sham of our deeds. It harms, as I reckon, even them who reached the measure and it separated them form their faith in God. This is for the lord says: "How can you believe in Me, while receiving the praise from one another?" (Jn. 5: 44). He who understand the Apostle's humbleness rather choses the insanity so that later on he will become wise (1 Cor. 3: 18)[280]. This is for he who wants to show himself as knower (gnostic) and not rather spiritual (pneumatic), I wondered if he could escape the damnation appointed to him through his nature itself[281]. And about the humble ones it is written that they will take grace (Prov. 3: 34). Anyone who praises the sweetness of God's words, but he doesn't nourish himself with that sweetness, he will make that sweetness to seem bitter. Is it bitter the word that says: "If somebody want to come after me, let him reject himself and take his cross and follow Me" (Mt. 16: 24)? And, if it is sweet, why, by wanting to fulfill our own will, we reject that? He who shows himself as knowing the path leading to the stronghold, he asks about it either out of despise, [280] He who does the deed in order him to be praised by others and he who enjoys the praises brought him by others, he will be proven as unwise in the end. On the opposite, him who doesn't aim to obtain such praises and therefore he doesn't cherish such praises at all, thought without him doing the evil, he will be proven as wise in the end, because he hasn't become weak in searching for the vain-gloriousness.

[281] The nature gets weakened within them who search for praise from others, or it will be rather proven as weak. What will he do if he is no longer praised? And certainly, the praises brought him, for he is seen as desiring praises and imposing to be praised, are not sincere and they won't last for long. Those praises won't last after him no longer having the power to impose them. Even they who willingly praise someone, they unwillingly condemn him in their thoughts while thy praise him with their mouths; and if they no longer are interested in praising him, they will openly condemn him. And the praises are searched for by him who shows himself as knower of the commandments, but he doesn't fulfill the commandments as the spiritual man does. He who fulfills the commandment he will become a servant so that he will humble himself. By this he is a spiritual man and he won't search for praise. He doesn't even want to tell you that he knows about that commandment. He who wants to show that he knows that commandment, he actually doesn't know it, but he only wants to brag himself with his knowledge. His knowledge remains at the surface of the things. Applying the knowledge it will imprint one's own being. That one will herald the fulfillment of the commandments by his life.

or because of intending to temp the inquired one and to laughs at it. And if he knows the path but he doesn't walk on it, he will be judged as one who disregards the path. Abba Arsenius had the knowledge, but he didn't show it (Paterikon, Arsenius 5), for he said: "I want to save myself but I don't know how to do that" (Paterikon, Anthony and Arsenius 5). So, if somebody shows the path to his brother but he doesn't take care of himself walking that path, we will be reckoned as guilty. And the path is this: the past things which we have thrown behind us not to be allowed to attract us again to our former things. Otherwise, we will be again in that place where we have come out from, and therefore we will be worthy to be despised as ones who toils vainly. This is for him who wants to know the road, if he doesn't walk that road together with him who knows that road consummately, he won't aver arrive to the city. Throw away your will and humble yourself for the whole your life and you will be saved.

Regarding the fruits, do not ask for them out of your own will. But if fruits are given to you, you will eat them while sighing for the condemnation brought you by such a pleasure[282]. And because you are talking about the saints, you follow their obedience and faith shown by them in their deeds. This is for the faith without deeds was proven as dead (Jas. 2: 26). And because you are talking about obedience, you must know that there is no better obedience than that shown in submission. This is for the obedience consist of submission. And somebody said: "The obedient son will live".

And regarding your eyes, almighty is Him who created them and he also can enlighten them together with your inward eyes, which we saw with, according to our Savior's words, we wouldn't need the external eyes which see the vanity of the world.

Almighty is God so that He can give us to be together with those who will be saved, towards the glory of His all-holy name. Amen.

[282] So, you can eat but cut off as much as you can the pleasure brought you by eating fruits, or wait for the condemnation for that pleasure.

127. (V. 63) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same brother whoa sked him: Who has given the devil his power and the mastery?

If you want to know what you do not need to know: who has given the devil his power and mastery, let yourself know it out of this, and do not make God, because of your nescience, the cause of the evils. Take an example from yourself. If somebody among you tends willingly to evil and he does that evil, he will be judged by God as one who did the evil willingly. But you ask: Who has given him his will? If God has given him his will, why do you judge him? I am telling you, do not show God as wanting the evil, because of the fact that the devil crooked the will. That's not so, let it not be! Even despite some of the saints told that, the meaning they told that with it is totally unknown to you. They said that God gave power and mastery to the devil because God doesn't' stop the devil from committing the evil. So must you understand that word: "I have made Pharaoh's heart callous" (Exod. 10: 1). You are asking: If it is so, why do you blame him[283]? He tells that because he hasn't punished him previously. This can be known by somebody also form the Book of Job. This is for it is said in that book that the devil destroyed the wealth and the sons of Job. But you can hear Job saying: "The Lord has given, the Lord has taken, for how the Lord reckoned He has done it. Be the name of the Lord blessed forever" (Job. 1: 21).

[283] This is the problem of the theodicean that attempt to get God out from under the guilt of the existence of the evil in the world. Leibnitz answered that this world is the best possible world. Anyway, this world can reach a height which there is no other above it. This is known to faithlessness. To faithlessness the world remains totally what the world is. Therefore, the faithlessness cannot find an explanation for the evil. According to the Christian teaching the world can be deified by grace. The people (all the conscious beings) have in themselves and in the world and in the help from God all the necessary conditions for their deification. The angels too can reach there. Even the people on earth could live in peace. The evil is caused by the wrongly-used freedom, on one hand by angels and on the other hand by the people allowing themselves to be tempted by the evil angels and by their body, by wrongly using their freedom. The evil angels can alco harm the people by the destructions caused in nature. There is a secret possibility of the spirit working upon nature. But a world without freedom would be an unbearable prison to the conscious beings. The absence of the freedom cannot be reconciled except with the absence of the conscience. But such a world would be a totally inferior world, a world unworthy of the power of God. God allows the free conscious beings to do the evil too, for He respects their conscience and freedom. But God also makes out of His freedom as well and out of those beings' struggle with the temptations, a possible spiritual strengthening of the human beings. This is for the man must grow up with his collaboration as well, towards his glory as son of God by grace.

Why, therefore, didn't job spoke about the destructor, but he spoke about Him Who is long-patient and able to impede and to stop the evil? But take heed at the fact that God didn't tell to the devil for nothing else: "Behold I am giving him into your hands" (Job 1: 12), but only because God wanted to show the cause of the confession of the righteous Job was for Job had all the blessing from God. So, God is shown as the one who gave the devil power and mastery, because of not impeding the devil (form doing the evil). This is for God entrusted the devil with a good mastery and after giving that mastery to the devil God hasn't take it back from him; but the devil, after receiving his mastery, he has become disobedient and instead of it he has put on the doing of the evil things. So, God showed Himself as not impeding the devil for He is the One Who have the devil his power. It is not written: He didn't receive the blessing and God removed it from him; but it is written: "and it will be removed from him" (Ps. 108: 17[284])[285].

Therefore, you smut not reckon God as the cause of the evils, because that will bring you damnation. But the devils himself chose to himself this power of doing the evil and God didn't impede him. This is for it is said: "And he loved the curse and it came upon him" (Ps. 108: 16[286]) it doesn't say that the Lord gave it to him. Therefore, you smut stay steadfast into the lord, in the faith that He is the Chieftain of our life and of all good things. And forgive me for I have allowed myself to be attracted in childish questions and I have left the care for my consummation. My children, may the Lord bless and increase your fruits in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.

[284] In KJB we have: Ps. 109: 18: "As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones."; in ROB we have: Ps. 108: 17: "And he has put on the curse like a coat and he entered within him like the water and like the oil it entered his bones." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[285] The Scripture doesn't say that God gave the power to devil or to any other perpetrator of the evil; but the devil is the one who doesn't use his power towards good and towards be him blessed. The Scripture says that the devil won't reach the blessing because he is using wrongly the power given to him.

[286] In KJB we have: Ps. 109: 18: "As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him: as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him."; in ROB we have" Ps. 108: 16: "And he loved the curse and the curse will come upon him; and he didn't want the blessing and the blessing will be removed from him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Scholium[287]: In these words, the bearer-of-God Father shows limpidly that he who strives for salvation must not search for the gift of the science. This is for the science makes haughty, as the Apostle says. It is appropriate you to ask about passions and about how you should lead your life. This is for this is necessary and it leads to humbleness. And the humbleness is the shortened salvation: "I humbled myself and the Lord saved me" says someone among the saints. "The humble monk won't inquire the untold realities, and the proud one will inquire the judgments[288]. To a physician who asks whether he should occupy himself more with his medicine books that with the passions, for thus we reach the consummation, by being us delivered from the slavery of the passions, the saint told him that the doctor should occupy with both of them in a due manner and with right-reckoning. And by saying: "Forgive me because I allowed myself to be attracted by childish questions", he hints at or rather he plainly shows that such questions are full of childish thinking and they are also full of much nescience. And besides that, such questions are also full of an awful pride.

128. (V. 64) The question of the same brother addressed to the other Oldman: Why should I do, Father, for I am tormented by the thought that I left my children and my wife and they remained defenseless?

The answer of John: It is written in Paterikon about a certain man that by being wronged by somebody he went to an old man and told him: "I have been wronged by somebody and I want to avenge myself". And the old man told him: "No, son, but let's leave to God the things of the avenge". But because of not convincing that brother, the old man said: "Let's make a prayer". And starting the prayer, the old man commenced by saying with a loud voice so that the brother could hear: "Lord God for we no longer need You to take care of us, because we make justice by ourselves". The brother, pricked by those words, said: "Forgive me, Abba, for I will no longer seek for avenge" (Sisoes 1).

So, lo what I am saying to you, brother: if we take care of ourselves and of our wife and of our children, God no longer will take care of them; but if we leave them, God will take care of us and of them. So, you must not reckon that you ought to take care of them, or to pray for them, lest by having them in your memory some passions to be stirred up within your soul.

129. (V. 65) The question of the same brother towards the same Oldman: What should I do because it persists within me strongly the sadness for parting with my wife?

The answer of John: It was written about man and woman that "both of them will be one body" (Gen. 2: 24). So, like certain part of the body is cut off, the remaining body suffers until the wound will heal and then the pain ceases, likewise in your case you must suffer because of the cutting off of your body.

130. (V. 66) The answer of the Great Oldman towards the same brother to the same question.

If "him who has faith everything is possible" (Mk. 9: 23), where is your faith[289]? Or, if you have chosen to yourself the way of a dead man, aske the dead man if he desires his wife, or will he be condemned because, when his wife has come, he fornicated with her? If you left the dead ones to bury their dead ones, why don't you preach the Kingdom of God (Lk. 9: 60)? For how long will you continue sleeping? Take vigil and shout out with David: "Do not lean my heart towards fornication, you the cunning one, so that I will search for justifications in sins" (Ps. 140: 4[290]). If you have understood more than all of them who [289] Why do you whine while knowing that "him who has faith everything is possible"? Where is your faith, if you reckon that you cannot overcome your sadness cause you by your separation from your wife?

[290] In KJB we have: Ps. 141: 4: "Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties."; in ROB we have: Ps. 140: 4: "Do not deviate my heart towards cunning words, so that I will justify my sins; and teach you (Ps. 118: 99[291]), the cunning demons which surround your heart they increase, with even more strength, the war of the thinking at woman[292]. But where has been hidden from you the word of the Scripture: "Faithful is God Who won't let us to be tempted" (1 Cor. 10: 13)? And if we suffer these things because of our helplessness, let one not blame the sun because of not lightening him or because of not helping him. And what do you thing that it was thinned up for, the man's soul like a spider web, after he has been punished for his iniquity (Ps. 38: 15[293]), and what do your hands become weak for, even before you starting the war? If Him Who crushes all the enemies together with is, He is powerful, why do we slander Him that he stays far from us because of our faithlessness and laziness? If nobody is stronger than He is and if you brag yourself by saying: "You are with me" (Ps. 22: 4[294]), why do you fear and tremble while having Him with you? Hosw your love and you will take a little from the heavenly fire which the Master of everyone has come to throws it on earth (Lk. 12: 43). This is for "when the tares will be sown by the enemy" (Mt. 13: 25), to be the tares burnt and consumed by fire. Burn incense on this fire so that our Lord may receive the good fragrance of your incense and to bring that good fragrance in front of His Father together with the life-giver Ghost and to come and make His dwelling place within you, without your church, which you present yourself in, to Him, as living, holy, and well-pleasant to Him with the people who perpetrate lawlessness I won't accompany myself with their chosen ones." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[291] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 99: "I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation."; in ROB we have Ps. 118: 99: "More than my teachers I have understood, for my thinking is at Your testimonies." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[292] If you have understood and if you have rejected other temptations more than other people have done, the demons will bring the stronger war of the thinking at woman. Or: as you know more than others know, who weren't married, the demons bring within you, with more strength, the war of the thinking at woman.

[293] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 11: "When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth: surely every man is vanity. Selah."; in Rob we have: Ps. 38: 15: "And You have thinned up his soul as a spider web; but vainly gets disturbed any earthling." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[294] In KJB we have: Ps. 23: 4: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me;"; in ROB we have: Ps. 22: 4: "For if I even walk in the middle of the death, I won't fear evil things; for You are with me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

sacrifice[295]. And then, by being warmed up by this fire, you will always desire to be together-traveler, together-citizen, and together-inheritor with the saints who have been victorious in these things, and who have reached the realities: "which the eye hasn't seen, the ear hasn't heard, and at the man's heart haven't ascended, which God has prepared for them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9), into Christ our lord Whom the glory is due forever. Amen.

131. (V. 67) The question of the same brother towards the other Oldman:" Why should I do, Father, for I am scared at night?

The answer of John: The inhabitants of the city fear the barbarians until the help from their Emperor arrives. But when they find out that the duke or the general has arrived within that city, they no longer fear for they know that those ones will take care of them. Even if they hear that the barbarians are coming, they will no longer worry, for they have the ones who fight for them. So, us too, if we believe in God, we won't fear the devils. This is for God sends us His help.

132. (V. 219) A certain brother having three thoughts and wanting to ask the Great Oldman about those thoughts, that brother asked him not clearly and openly but by riddles, intending to hide his thoughts from Abba. So, that brother wrote a few letters and by thinking at the things he wanted to ask about, he imprinted in his mind the thought letters as connected with those points. And those letters were: first was "i" relatedly to which he imprinted in his mind his question about the full quietude and about the consummate silence without dialoguing with anybody; the second letter was "k", related to food, as sign for the question if he should eat dry food and without wine and if he ought to sustain only himself and his servant; the third letter was "l", which he asked if he must meet somebody and if he could loosen at all the harshness of his diet.

[295] The incense represents the sacrifice of our being. But this incense must be ignited by the warmth of our love so that to ascend to God. In state of sacrifice our being spreads a feeling liberated from egotism, one that is pleasant to God as a good fragrance. But our being is ignited by the fire of the love and by the urge to bestow ourselves as sacrifice to the Father, only for this fire comes to us from Christ Who is the supreme and full of love sacrifice. By that, we are united in the state of sacrifice with Christ, or Christ in state of sacrifice takes within Himself and within His fragrance as sacrifice bestowed to the Father, also the fragrance of our sacrifice. Attracted by this state of ours, which we place ourselves in totally at the disposal and totally open to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, the Holy Trinity will dwell within us as in a temple, in which the Holy Trinity is offered the sacrifice of our being. Our being is both temple and sacrifice to God, and full of the warmth of the sacrifice of Christ and of the good fragrance of the total surrender to God as come within us and united with us. This paragraph is influenced by the writing Worshipping in Ghost and Truth belonging to Saint Cyril of Alexandria (G.P. 68).

The Oldman answered those: "Do not deviate either to the left or to the right" (Prov. 4: 27), until both of them will be done with right-reckoning[296].

133. (V. 220) The same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman another question, which he didn't told either openly or by riddles connected to letters, as he did for the first time, but only by thinking it with his mind. It was a question related to the burden of the sleep and to the soul's weakness and he also asked for help and prayer for his salvation; and he asked also what meant the saying from the previous answer he received: until both of them will be done with right-reckoning. To this the Oldman answered:

The first thing is damaging, the second thing is useful. And the more damaging the first this is, the more useful the second thing will be.

134. (V. 221) Because of this answer letting him bewildered, the brother begged to find out who what the first damaging thing is and what should he do in order to get rid of that thing. And what does it mean the answer about those two?

And he answered: All the things are right to them who understand. The nature itself teaches us. And regarding what those two are, I said that about you, the one who asks and the one who serves for the answer to be received. Regarding the sleep, it is about soul and body. This is because, if the body is not enslaved to the ghost, the body won't be able to weaken its passions. That's why I brought the thought near to one another.

135. (V. 222) Because the brother remained again bewildered by the things said about the bringing the thoughts close together, he asked: What does that mean?

And the Oldman answered him: forgive me for the Lord, for I am speaking stupidly. The Lord said to His disciples: "Now you do not understand it either?" (Mt. 15: 16). Point one and point two are the same.

136. (V. 223) When the brother heard those, he told to the Oldman: Father, I am entrusting my soul to the mercies of God and to your hands. Pray for the salvation of my humble soul.

The answer through letter: Brother, let's pay attention to ourselves with much heed. This is because of being impossible to quickly take heed at things. If the Apostle who took (the reward), said about himself that he didn't take it (Phil. 3: 12), how much more must we be humble, because of being us nothing? We accepted to receive thoughts in riddles and to answer in riddles too. This is for those give birth in the soul of the thought, especially to the beginners, a spiritual rumination. This is for by researching the riddles, we will find much benefit coming out of them. But the Apostle urged us saying: "Do not cogitate at the high things, but let yourselves be caried towards the humble things" (Rom. 12: 16). That's why do not always tell your thought in riddles. This you won't understand my meaningless answers and that will lead us to a ceaseless entanglement. Verily, it is of no use us to speak or to write to one another always in riddles, even if we have seen that we have received this gift, but let's do so only when needed[297]. Once we are limbs to one another, and once we also know that "the brother helped by the brother is like a fortified stronghold" (Prov. 18: 19), say your thoughts or write your thought plainly through the brother and so you will find the answer to them in the same manner[298]. This is for this is a humbleness sign for both of us. Tell my what do we need for, to speak in an elevated manner, while we can remain into humbleness? Do that too, but more rarely. This is for it is beneficial to the heart the crushing that accompany the thoughts. This thing made you tell me: "I entrust my soul and my body". And if somebody thinks to obey his brother for God, that supposes that he obeys God[299]. Therefore, only God can wake us up from the sleep of the thought (spiritual) drunkenness[300]. And as you asked me to pray for you, I am asking you for the same thing. It is a word from Scripture. And in the same place it is told that this one is a healing word too (Jas. 5: 16).

Therefore, because the two point were difficult to you to understand, behold I am telling them plainly: in the first letter was specifically about you and my son Serid: the second point was about soul and body, which have the same meaning as the bodily and the spiritual. This is for it is said: "If two of you will get along, anything they ask for they will get" (Mt. 18: 19). But this can be understood also about all of us. This is for, if we do [298] The speaking is for sustaining and for warming up the brotherhood among us, and that won't be achieved there where we do not understand the answer. This purpose of the speaking is comprised in the Romanian term "cuvântul" = conventus, meaning coming to one place0 in understanding. The word is not given to us in order us to brag with it to one another. If we do that, that will separate us. In order us to come to the good-understanding, we must talk to one another without pride, with humbleness, while paying attention to one another. On word depends the humbleness and the reciprocal respect. Our people are "cuviincios" (Romanian word for decent) in speaking, namely they speak so that through word to be accomplished the "coming-together" (convenientia). The Son of God Himself made Himself example of humbleness to us, by impropriating the human word. But this is for Himself is the potential bosom of the words. We depend on Him as embodied words, and we are called to unite ourselves into Him through our words. He asks us to talk to one another and to answer to one another in order us to be united with Him.

[299] Obeying somebody for God means obeying God Who asks for that. Actually, God asks us to obey to one another. This is the opposite to the pride that divides us. Obeying each of us the word of another it means obeying us to another and through him us will obey God. It means both of us obeying to God Who has given to each of us the word for another, that word which the other listens to.

[300] God, by asking me through another to take heed at another and at Him, He wakes me up to reality, out of the sleep of my pride that makes me reckoning myself as the sole existing and master over all things, and stretched with my poverty into an infinite sin, like him who is drunk and he no longer knows about anybody and about anything or even about himself. By the words of another I am wakened up to the uncrossing reality, but also a joyful reality of my debts, of my border, but also of a truly infinite reality that is richer than mine and his, and with which – by fulfilling my duties and by love – I can be imparted with.

Therefore, pray brother for us to exit in peace our few days. This is for nothing comes haphazardly. "He who attached himself to the Lord he will be one Ghost with Him" (1 Cor. 6: 17). May the Lord give us to finish the crossing of this sea unharmed, into His name. This is for Him it is due the glory forever. Amen. Achieve humbleness, and patience, and hope, and that love for God that is greater than all things.

137. (V. 68) The question of the same brother addressed to the same Great Oldman, send by a letter: Forgive me, Father. "The righteous will rebuke me mercifully and he will reproach me" says the Holy Scripture (Ps. 140: 5[301]). Like the physician, by burning or by cutting the wound, he knows that the ill one will pick up the fruit of the healing, likewise he who is ill he know when he is cut and that hurts him, that he is expected to be healed in a short time, for the Scripture says: "Base on the testimony of two, or of three witnesses, every word is proven" (The Second Law 19: 15). What I said, now I am saying that again. Behold, I am surrendering myself to God and to Your Piousness. This is for I am realizing that I haven't come here by my own. Therefore, by knowing my things, you teach me. This is because my heart is mastered by much confusion of the passions and of the thoughts. I am ready to accept, by the will of God, with the whole my heart, and joyfully, the things coming from you, with the help of your prayer done by you for me. And I will write you and talk to you as Abba commanded me.

The answer towards the same one by letter: Brother, behold I am sending you, by the lenience of God, this second letter which I beg your love by, into God, to wake up your sleepy thought (spiritual) eye which stays drowsy because of idleness, so that it won't fall asleep into death (Ps. 12: 4[302]). Take vigil so

[301] In KJB we have: Ps. 141: 5: "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities."; in ROB we have: Ps. 140: 5: "The righteous will rebuke me mercifully and he will reproach me; and may the oil of the sinners not to touch my head; and even my prayer is against their wills." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[302] In KJB we have: Ps. 13: 4: "Consider and hear me, O Lord my God: lighten mine eyes, lest that your mind to understand "to cross the good land" (Jos. 18: 8), lest your land to sprout out thorns and brambles which to chick up the crop, as it was said: "All around the ungodly walk" (Ps. 11: 8)[303]. But strong is him who can crush their yoke and their horn quickly. Amen.

137. (bis) Cogitation about the letter "e" (eta)[304]. One of the fathers having three thoughts, he asked the Great Oldman about those thoughts which he had, but not in a limpid manner, but by riddles, because he wanted to hide his thoughts from Abba Serid who served as secretary for answer. So, by writing the three letters form the alphabet, he sent them to the Great Oldman, after he imprinted in his mind the question related to each of those letters. The Great Olman answered him, also in riddles, by thoroughly understanding each one of the questions. But the Great Oldman stopped the brother from asking future questions formulated in riddles, by telling him that that is not matching the humbleness and in brings disturbance in both of them, namely both to him who asks questions and to him who answers those questions. This is because both question and answer are equally non-understood and darkened. And that stirs up bewilderment in all of them.

The same Great Oldman wrote him and to other few old men who asked him questions, some thoughts and theological teachings in an alphabetical order, by relating each letter to God. He gathered in the same place, under the explained letter, words beginning with the same letter, and then he developed in details, in diverse cogitations, a detailed explanation of each word. By choosing in this exposition a part of the thoughts about the letter "e" (eta), we are going to present them here as an example of the wonderful interpretation given by the Great Oldman to the entire alphabet, for he was asked to do that.

a) η (eta) means guide. Guide is him who guides. He guides you to light, and he doesn't search for darkness. He guides you on the straight path, he doesn't search for lie. He guides you to truth, he doesn't guide you to delusion. He guides you to peace, he doesn't search for war. He guides you to joy, he doesn't run to sadness. He guides you to humbleness, he doesn't go towards pride. He guides you to justice, he doesn't search for injustice. He guides you to endure the reproaches and the mockeries brought to you, he doesn't search for praise and vain-glory. He guides you to the death of your former man, he doesn't search for a pleasant living. He guides you to the right hand, he doesn't place you among them who are on the left hand (Mt. 25: 33). He guides you to the eternal life, not to the eternal damnation from the Gehenna of the unquenched fire (Mt. 9: 43). The sign that it is rejected what must be rejected it is the choosing of the good things and not-forsaking any of the daily or nightly prayers. Let him rejoice into the Lord, him who has reached these, he who is reaching, and he who hopes for reaching them.

b) ε (eta) means the right hand of the Father. If you are on the right hand, do not run to the left, in order you not to lose the power from around you. This is for "the right hand of the Lord raised me up, the right hand of the Lord unfolded its strength" (Ps. 117: 16[305]). The Lord is the strength of them who fight and especially of those who remain under the shelter of His right hand. There are also some ones who are awake and who always supervise themselves carefully, in order they not to lose such sheltering through the covetousness of their belly, through debauchery, through avarice, through sadness, through idleness, through anger, through wrath, through full of enmity speaking, through hatred, through vain-gloriousness, through pride, or simply through any seed thrown by Amalec in the thought land of the promises. The sign that the man is saved it is this cleanness of all of these, and the fact of singing, like the angels do, to God. Let him rejoice into the Lord him who has reached there, he who will reach, and he who hopes reaching there.

c) ε (eta) means the immortal sacrifice brought for the life of the world and anyone who eats it he will truly be brought at his turn, and he will no longer be submitted to the thought (spiritual) rottenness[306]. This is for in Him are abolished the things of the devil, and his passions and thoughts, which hide within man as some worms[307]. This is for he says about this: "in it the foxes make their burrows, namely the devils, and "the fowls of the sky make their nests", namely the powers from the sky, and "the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head down" (Mt. 8: 20). He who cogitates that he has been brought as sacrifice, let him therefore examine himself in order him to see if these worms are still within him, and if he no longer finds anything, it will be obvious that he died with Jesus and he lives with Jesus and he sits with Jesus into glory[308]. And the assurance that he sits with Jesus, he has it in the word of our Savior Who prays for they who believe in Him to be one with Him, as Himself and the Father are (Jn. 17: 20-21). The believers who have been cleaned up of their passions, they are, therefore, into the Son and in His Father, in unity. Let rejoice into the Lord him who has reached there, he who will reach there, and he who hopes reaching there.

d) ε (eta) it means the joy of the Father. And the joy of the Father is His Son; in Him the choirs of the angels rejoice. Trusting Him, the saints fight. Through Him has been elevated the curse from on earth. Through Him was erased on the cross the bill that was upon us (Col. 2: 14), so that we are no longer slaves to our enemy. So, you must escape our enemy's slavery, [306] Here too it can be felt the influence of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, that we cannot enter where the Father is, except in state of clean sacrifice, and in this state, we cannot be, except into Christ. The feeling of total surrender, namely clean of any egotism, we cannot have it but into Christ or in union with Christ.

[307] That one is chewed by worms; He is being torn apart by those while living through those his state of unperishing decomposition. Under the mask of the short live satisfactions, as some spasms, there is hidden a deep unhappiness.

[308] He who has brought himself as sacrifice, he has freed himself of his egotistic passions, and he lives in the quietude and into the freedom of son of God by grace, like Christ after His resurrection. Nothing scares him anymore, nothing worries him any longer, he is above all things, he feels himself united with the Father and with the Son and with the Holy Ghost, into the happy love. He feels himself on the plan of the absolute love and freedom. Free of egotism, he will fly in the light of the communion with everybody. To him are open the frontiers of all, especially the frontiers of the Person of the Holy Trinity.

so that us to be in the service of "Him Who has called us with holy calling" (2 Tim. 1: 9), "into the novelty of the Holy Ghost and not in the oldness of the letter: (Rom. 7: 6). This makes us saints, for Himself says: "Be holy as I am holy" (Lk. 19: 2)[309]. Liberated from curse, let's not become again slaves, but let's remain in liberty[310]. This is for it is said to you: "Behold, you have been healed, sin no longer lest something worse to happen to you" (Jn. 5: 14). And the sign of reaching this stage of consummation is the guarding of the received freedom until the last breath. Let him rejoice into the Lord, him who has reached there, he who will reach there, and he who hopes reaching there.

e) ε (eta) means Him. And He is God[311]. This is for Isaiah the Prophet said: "Emanuel" (Isa. 4: 7) and the godlike Matthew, the holy evangelist of the untold joy, explained that like this: Eman = with us; He = God. If we have got far from evils and if we have estranged ourselves from the evils' craftsman who is the devil, then God will truly be with us. If our pleasure for evil things has become bitter to us, and if our desire for good deed has got sweetened, and if we all the time have our living into heavens (Phil. 3: 20), then God will truly be with us. If we see all the people as one and if we see all the days as equal, then God will truly be with us[312]. If we love them who condemn us, who reproach us, who despise us, who harm us, and who troubles us, as we love those who love us, who praise us, who are beneficial to us, and who rest us, then God will be truly with us. And the sign that somebody has reached this measure it is that he will always have God with him. This is for, actually, God is [309] If we are sensitive to the word about Christ, which Christ Himself works in, we will feel in our conscience His calling or claim upon us, and the need for us to answer Him affirmatively. We will feel in this attractive calling the work of the Ghost of living Christ, and not a commandment known out of the letter of the Scripture, one regarded as exterior to God.

[310] God is the source of our freedom, for He is above the enslaving passions. We too become in God free of any passions and masters over ourselves. Only the living by yourself, or the living in connection with somebody who wants to enslave you, it will make a slave of you. The communion with the one who loves you, and who doesn't want to enslave you, it will make you free, as well. This is for the loved one wants and can answer his love.

[311] In the Hebrew language He means God.

[312] Seeing all the people as one means not to reckon some people as good while reckoning the others as evil, or seeing no man as evil, but it means looking at all people with the same love. If we are mastered by love, that will be a sign that God is with us. And if we are so, we will not longer change from a day to another, but on all days our being is full of love, or full of God. Then we will be free, for we are no longer mastered by our passions.

always with him. And he who is not like so, he won't have God with him, but he will have only the things of the contrary one. And they who have mind they know the consequence.

138. (V. 69) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards one who was living in quietude, and who asked him about his servant; and about receiving the thoughts; and about the bodily relatives.

Brother, I am speaking to you as to my soul. It was written: "Let your knowledge not to be offense to your weaker brothers" (1 Cor. 8: 9). Your brother who serves you is a simple man. Do not try and teach him how to be wise. This is because, otherwise, you will elicit his anger. And you must be satisfied by the fact that he accepts to attend your needs. You better not elicit him any thought about wisdom, lets you will disturb his heart.

It is characteristic to the consummate ones to allow the thought to enter their heart and then they will get that thought out. But you must not allow the fire to enter the forest, lest it will burn down that forest. You must not allow your clothes to be take away from you, lest you will must fight for taking your clothes back to you. You must not play with the disturbance, because you will not remain steadfast in that temptation. Therefore, take heed at you and pray for me.

Regarding the bodily relatives, once our Lord said: "Who is My mother and who are My brothers?" (Mt. 12: 48), you cannot transgress the commandment of God by remaining in connection with your bodily brothers. And if you think that they need clothes, why don't you think at the poor ones? "I was naked, and you clothed me up" (Mt. 25: 36)[313]. But once you have reached the toy of the devils, you will again remember them whom you left for God, and so you will break your promise. Woe to us, brother, how those ones do with us! Do you want to love them with that love you ought to have for all people? Pray for them for they to be saved too by the grace of Christ. Take heed at you lest you will be the devils' mockery.

[313] Here too we have an application of the advice to reckon all the people as one, or according to their needs. If somebody need clothes more than you brother need clothes, you must dress that one up and not your brother.

This is for, by leaving the syllables, we have turned ourselves back to alphabet[314]. Struggle for you to die, if you want to save yourself[315]. You must search for being disregarded and you must run towards what lays ahead of you. Do not allow the devil to plant within you a useless worry under the mask of some righteous thing. Do not take care of anything[316]. Either they die or they live, you must not send them anything. Remember the Lord Who says: "Let the dead to bury their dead" (Lk. 9: 60). Take heed at yourself. This is for not those will save you on that fearsome day. I have been telling you often: wake yourself up from the too heavy sleep, for you do not know the time when our Lord comes, so that you must always be prepared (Mt. 24: 42[317]).

Regarding the defilements, they bring falling to the soul. You must love Jesus with the whole your heart and you won't ever fall. Peace to you in the love of our Lord[318]. Peace to you in the holy kiss.

139. (V. 70) Someone among prices who was living in quietude (in withdrawal), he asked the same Great Oldman to pray for him.

The answer of Barsanuphius: When somebody sends an advocate to defend him in front of the emperor, he always prays for that advocate to be listened to. This is for not the advocate will be listened to, but his request he sent it to the emperor.

[314] A monk who has recently entered the monastery, he will haven't reached such a high level. But he still is on a superior level than the level of living within the world. That is a "tuning back" to that state from before Adam's sin. From this level the monk must ascend to other higher levels: to words, to speech, and not to turn back to syllables.

[315] Struggle for you to die to your former man, namely to die to the "dead" life, so that you will be able to enter the true immortal life which we will gain it out of God Who is the spring of life, when we unite ourselves with God.

[316] In this too, it is shown our freedom from being slaved to the things, or to the people, and by doing this we will be light as in the Kingdom of God.

[317] That's why our Lord doesn't unveil us the time of His coming (or the time of our death), in order us to continuously strengthen yourselves through ceaseless watchfulness, so that we continuously progress by always doing the good and by always rejecting the evil thoughts we have against others. Like the man doesn't grow up bodily by taking recesses in his growing up, likewise, the man must not take recesses in his spiritual growing up.

[318] Only in loving our neighbor we can have peace. Only in loving the Person-like God we will have rest, and that rest is not a simple non-work, but it is a joy which we will never get bored of, or which we will never get satisfied of (in the Origenistic sense).

Likewise, you too must pray for I to be listened to (by God). This is for, I obey you and I am praying together with you for the health of your body and of your soul. And if I am listened to (and God listens to everyone), I will attribute that to your own prayers[319]. And I am not even an advocate worthy of defending you, but I only reckon myself as a sent servant. So, may the Lord listen to our prayers. Pray for my wickedness.

140. (V. 71) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: How must I pray? Must I say "Our Father" as our Lord taught us (Mt. 6: 9-13)? Or must I pray as Abba Makarios from Scetis told us: "Lord, have mercy on me, as You wish", and when the war occurs: "Lord, if You wish, help me"? Wasn't "Our Father" appointed only to the consummate ones?

"Our Father" has been ordered both to the consummate and to the sinners. And this is for, the consummate ones by knowing that they have reached to be sons of God, they to strive and not fall, and the sinners, by calling with shame that Father often cursed by them, they to fearfully turn back and to come to repentance. And I reckon that it even fits rather the sinners. This is for it belongs to the sinners to say: "And forgive us our debts". This is for, what debts will still have the consummate ones once they have reached sons of the Heavenly Father? And the word: "And do not take us into temptation, but deliver us from the cunning one" has the same meaning with the words of Abba Makarius who said: "Have mercy on me and help me".

141. (V. 72) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same, who asked him for a blessing and who asked him about dispassion.

[319] In the relation between him who prays and the one whom he prays for, it won't be active only him who prays but also the one whom he prays for. The one whom he prays for, that one will pray himself for him too, so that him who prays to be listened to. Of course, he prays for his interest. But for his prayer contributes to be listened to the one who prays for him, his prayer will benefit the one who prays to, by making that one listened to by God, by attracting God's attention upon him too. Both of then benefit out of this reciprocal prayer. This is a relationship that strengthens each one's love for another. This is a current starting from each of them and directed towards each of them. They prayer is directed towards God, but in the benefit of both of them. Both of they meet into God. This is the fullest meaning of the communion.

Brother, God know what is beneficial to us. You have asked for a bread from my helplessness and there didn't enter my cemetery more than the three breads appointed for a week. But behold that now, by the oikonomia of God, the son of my pains, he who is sweeter than honey, and who hasn't done ever anything by himself, and who has all people as of-one-soul with him and who reckons what is beneficial to them as beneficial to himself, he has come bringing a bread and I couldn't refuse it. This is for it is said: "It is useful to you to cut off your own will even in this". So, I have bracken that bread and I have sent some to your love too, while condemning myself as worthless for what I've done. This is for the Lord has done to you according to your faith. And may Him not condemn me[320]. But if the word about this has reached you and the two brother who are allowed to enter your monastic cell, you will be allowed to tell them about this.

As about dispassion, it is s gift from God and He bestows it whomsoever He wants. May God give you that hand that can touch the things you are stretching you hand towards, with fear and according to His will. Amen. Pray for me, brother.

142. (V. 73) The question of the same one addressed to the other Oldman: Father, why the king Oldman called his monastic cell as cemetery?

The answer from John: He called it so because it has rested him of all things. This is for he has consummately died to the sin. And this is also for his cell, which he has buried himself alive in, as in a tomb, for the name of Jesus, it is a place of resting where either the demon is his chieftain the devil, they do not even enter. This is for his monastic cell has become a holy place, for it is the dwelling place of God. Let's all extoll God as one heart, in everything.

[320] Barsanuphius reckons that that bread given him above his ration, it has come to him for the faith of him who followed to ask for it. He was an unworthy tool of this deed of God, fulfilled through him, for the faith of that one. And because he hasn't sent him the whole that bread, he prays not to be condemned for that. This is because it was the right of that one to receive the whole his bread.

143. (V. 74) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: because it is written in the "Lives of the Father" (Hist. Laus. 20: 3), that one did one hundred prayers, another did a different number of prayers, do we owe too, when we pray, to have a measure, or not? And how must we do our prayers: prolonged? Or must we say "Our Father" and sit down to do our handwork? And when we work, what must we do? Also, what must do him who lives by himself regarding the vespers and the night religious services? And must him say the songs and the hymns?

The answer of John: The hours and the songs are churchly traditions and they are good for the together-speaking of the entire people; likewise, in monasteries, for the together-speaking of the multitude[321]. But they who live in Scetis[322] they do not have either the hours[323] or they sing hymns. But they do handwork and they mediate and they pray alone for a little while. And while you stand at prayer you must pray for being liberated of your former man, or you must say "Our Father", or you must do both of those and then after to stay and do your handwork. Regarding the prolongation of the prayer, when you stand up, if you pray incessantly, according to the Apostle (1 Thes. 5: 17), you must not start it again each time you are standing up. This is for your mind will be in prayer for the whole day. But when you sit down to do your handwork, you must say into your heart of to voice out some psalms. And at the end of each psalm, you must sit down and pray: "God, have mercy on me the sinner". And if you are harassed by thought you will add: "God, see my trouble, help me". Therefore, after you have accomplished knitting three rows to the net, you will stand up and pray. And by kneeling and by getting up, you will also say the mentioned prayer.

And at vespers, they who are in Scetis say twelve psalms and at the end of each psalm, instead of the doxology (Glory to the Father etc.), they say: Halleluiah, and then they utter a prayer. Likewise, at night they say twelve psalms, and after that they sit down and do their handwork. And as one wishes, one [321] By singing together, there will take place a unity in word, a unity in thought and in feeling of the whole people from within church, like a symphony.

[322] It is about the wilderness of the Scetis from Egypt, that was full of hermits.
[323] The hours for common religious services.

can say psalm in his heart, while another examines his thoughts or reads "The Lived of the Fathers". The last one, after reading five of eight pages, he will start doing his handwork. And him who sing of says plasms in his heart, he could do that with his lips is there is nobody close to him, and if he doesn't' want anybody to know what he is doing.

144. (Only in Codex Coislin 124 and in the Georgian version of the Letters of Barsanuphius and John, that is in the Georgian handbooks from Sinai, no. 34 and 35. According to the French translation from Greek done my L. Regnault and Ph. Lemaire, and according to the translation from Georgian done by B. Outtier): The same one, tormented by boredom, he asked the Great Oldman, insistently, to pray for him.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I know that I am nothing. And if I don't take care of myself, I won't take care of you either. And this is for I also know that, according to the Scripture: "WE are limbs to one another" (Eph. 4: 25). And if I take care of myself for the fear of God, I will take care of you too[324]. This is for it was said: "Love your brother as yourself" (Lev. 19: 18). You must do the same. This is for it was also said: "A brother helped by his brother will be like a fortified stronghold, surrounded by walls" (prov. 19: 19). Before your love told me: "Pray for me", I had the commandment of Him Who says: "Pray for one another, in order you to get healed" (Jas. 5: 16)[325]. You must do the same. And if you suffer of boredom, remember the burden experienced by Abba Euthimios, but he still went with glory to [324] There is a drowsiness that can make someone not taking care either of himself or of another. This is because either through egotism the man doesn't take care of his true life. The man takes true care of himself not only by doing that because of liking it, but also because he fears God. The man must not ruin his being given in his care by God. The man must elevate his being by making of himself as useful factor to others, but without bragging about that. We are intertwined with others in an impossible to be undone manner. When I take care of my true self, I take care of myself that helps you, that is developed by helping you. He who hates himself, he will hate others too, and vice versa. By that, the hater's being - as communion factor – will get withered. Only in the true communion there is present the water that waters the roots of the own being. Without the care for another, in the hatred towards another, you being itself will get emptied of meaning.

[325] You both will be healed of your egotism due to the communion between you. Through that both of you will be filled up with health and with true life.

our Lord[326]. You must wait for the day of your exit and you will be lightened of your boredom. He was our road companion and he went ahead of us. What a joy received him! Let's envy him[327]. Let's run to take the crown (1 Cor. 9: 24). I was written: "With the measure you measure, it will be measured to you" (Lk. 6: 38)[328]. And the Fathers say: "obedience for obedience" (Mios 1). That's why I too am telling you: Stretch you hand to the brother who is near you in trouble and you will find somebody to stretch his had to you on the moment of your trial[329]. And: "reproach, rebuke, urge" (2 Tim. 4: 2). This is for these too they bring forth spiritual fruits.

145. (Only in Codex Coislin 124). The ask of the same one towards the other Oldman: I beg you, Abba, pray for me because I am weak in my soul and in my body, for God to give me consummate patience in this holy place. The enemy and my passions take shifts in disturbing my heart in order they to drag me backwards. And not for I have done something good here, but for the enemy sees me sheltered by the prayers of the Fathers. Have mercy on me, through Jesus, and incessantly pray for me the sinner.

The answer of John: May God receive your ask as a good fragrance. This is for you have rejoiced my soul through your humbleness according to God Who doesn't make me less unimportant neither God diminishes your love. This is for the humbleness is the path of God and if we guard the humbleness, we will be saved in the name of our God. This is for, especially when we know the great strength of that power coming to unite itself with us, the power of our Master Jesus Christ Who has given us "the power to step on snakes, on scorpions, and o all enemy's power" (Lk. 10: 19).

[326] The disgust, the boredom will burden you if you do not find your purpose in taking care of another, but not only regarding the passing life but especially regarding the eternal life. This means seeing your purpose in working for your and others' eternity in God. This is because without God there won't be open to you the path to eternity, and the worry for a passing life will end into a deadly boredom.

[327] Let's envy him in order us to do the good, at our turn.

[328] You give less, you will be given less; you give more, you will be given more.

[329] It is impossible you not to be seen by others when helping somebody. And that will determine somebody to help you too in your need. But through that one you will be helped by God.

When an enemy starts harassing somebody, that enemy pushed the harassed one to ask for the help of a judge in order to find his justice. He who has been hating the people since the beginning does likewise to us, by pushing us to run to our Chieftain and Emperor Christ. Thus, the war waged us by our enemy is rather beneficial to us than damaging. Where there Christ is present, the war from our enemy is powerless.

146. (V. 75) Question of the same one towards the same Oldman, about sleeping: For how long must he sleep and for how long must he take vigil; and how many clothes should be enough for him?

The answer of John: Regarding the night sleep, you must pray for two hours in the evening, counting them from sunset. After extolling God thus, you will sleep for six hours and then wake up for vigil. And you will spend the next four hours by taking vigil. Do the same in summer, but by shortening the time and by saying fewer psalms because of the nights during fewer hours.

Regarding the clothes, the weak one must have, because of his helplessness, winter clothes and summer clothes. And him who has reached to endure, as the Apostle says, the hunger and the thirst and the nakedness (2 Cor. 11: 2), he can spend his time by wearing a sole coat. But let's not get haughty in our thought, brother, but let's be driven towards the humble things (Rom. 12: 16). And let's not speak against while having two of three vestments.

147. (V. 76) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: For you said, Father, that I must take vigil for six hours, how could I know if I took vigil for six hours?

The answer of John: If you want to find out the hours exactly, one day you will go to sleep in order you not to be defeated by your body's tiredness, and then take vigil from evening to morning, and count how many verses you will have said. And they, by dividing the verses on hours, you will find out the hours. Do the same in summer. And so, the hours will become known to you.

148. (V. 77) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Father, pray for me for I am ill; and for I to be able to bear my illness joyfully. And tell my how must I wash up my stains.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All-beloved brother. I rejoice of your words for, even before I to do that, and even without understanding what I told you, you called yourself a sinner in your questions. And the sinner is, truly, a bad servant. And know you say that you are ill. But the illness is known as a rebuking towards correction. So, you ill ness has been sent to you as to a bad servant. But, if it is difficult to you to receive the rebuking, you will have to stop being bad. And if you are bad, you will accept the rebuking. And he who is not bad, he will be loved. And "The Lord rebukes him who He loves" (Prov. 3: 12; Hebr. 12: 6). Therefore, you must really take heed at how you are and you must choose one of the said things[330]. But God know that I, by not taking care of my own salvation, I find power to help you, for I fear the commandment.

Regarding the defilements, if you want to wash them away, you must wash them away with your tears. This is for the tears cleanly wash away all defilement. Shout out to Jesus until your throat becomes hoarse: "Master, save us for we are perishing: (Lk. 8: 24). Remove the ashes from upon your heart and light up the fire which the Lord came to throw on earth (Lk. 12: 49). And that fire will burn out all your stains and it will show the gold well imprinted within you and probed like in an oven[331]. One needs much watchfulness. Forgive me.

[330] Enjoy your illness, either for it is for your correction, or for it is the proof of the love of God for you, so that God wanted to make you better. Only by enjoying your illness, your illness will be beneficial to you; in the first place by liberating yourself of sin through repentance, in the second case by advancing into repentance. But it is better not you reckon yourself as sinless.

[331] The fire of the love for God unites with the heart, and it will transform the heart in an oven unveiling the clean gold of the faith and of its kindness. But in fire there is also a suffering. That is the suffering for repenting of sin and of burning down the evil habits which become pleasant to the man, but they also defiled the man. The heart, through its feeling capable of maintaining the fire, it is like a hearth. Through it the whole man's being is like an oven which is cleaned up through fire.

149. (V. 78) The question of the same one addressed to the same Great Oldman: I beg you help me to find out where my body's drowsiness and my hearth' melting down came from? And why am I incapable of persevering in the same diet?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, I am amazed and I wonder when the people living in the world, by wanting to gain and to wage wars, they despise the wild beasts, the traps of the thieves, the dangers of the sea, and the death itself, they do not get discouraged in their soul, due to the wanted richness, even when they are not sure about gaining it. And we, the wicked and the drowsy, who have received power to step over snakes and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy (Lk. 10: 19), and who have heard: "This I Me, do not fear" (Jn. 6: 20), and who limpidly know that we do not fight by our own power but out of the power of God Who strengthen us up and Who arms us up, we lack our courage and we get drowsy. Where does this come from? This comes from the fact that our bodies haven't been pricked by God's fear (Ps. 118: 120[332]), because the voice of our sigh hasn't even made us forget about eating our bread (Ps. 101: 5-6[333]). That's why we cross from a food regime to another, because of us not fully getting the fire which God has come to throw in on earth (Lk. 12: 49), a fire that would have burnt and consumed the brambles of our thought (intelligible) field. Our drowsiness, our carelessness, and our love for our body won't allow us to breath freely.

But our Lord is witness to me that I know a man, right in this blessed monastery – let nobody tall that I am speaking about myself, lest to reckon me as something while I am actually nothing – who can remain as he is, by eating nothing, by drinking nothing, by wearing not clothes until that day which God will visit him, namely he never needs those. This is for his food and his drink and his vestment is the word of the

[332] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 120: "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments."; in ROB we have: Prick my body with Your fear, for I feared Your judgments." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[333] In KJB we have: Ps. 102: 4-5: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread. // By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin."; in ROB we have: Ps. 101: 5-6: "Wounded is my heart and it has got withered like the grass; for I have forgotten to eat my bread. // by the voice of my sigh, my bone stuck to my flesh." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Holy Ghost[334]. Therefore, if you want to be zealous, you must strive yourself, you must fear God and God will fulfill your will. This is for He said that “He will do the will of those who fear Him" (Ps. 144: 19[335]). And I, even despite I am nothing, I put in work my power[336]. This is for it is characteristic to God to uphold, to strengthen, and to lead to all good things and to guard us against any evil thing, and to save us into His Kingdom. His to be the glory forever. Amen. Pray for me and pray the Oldman to unite himself with you in prayer.

150. (V. 79) The question of the same one towards the same Great Olman: I beg you tell me Father how can one gain the humble-cogitation, or the consummate prayer? Or what one should do in order him not to seem that he wanders with his thoughts? Must he read?

About the way which one can gain the humble cogitation in, our Lord taught us, saying: “Learn from Me that I am gentle and humble in heart and you will find resting to your souls” (Mt. 11: 29)[337]. If you want to gain the consummate resting find out what He endured and endure that you too, and cut off you will in everything. This is for Himself said that He didn’t descend from heavens to make His will, “but the will of the My Father Who is in heavens” (Jn. 6: 38). Of this consists the humble-cogitation: enduring reproaches and condemnation and all the things suffered by our Teacher Jesus.

[334] In the note to the Volos edition: “I reckon that the saint tells these about himself, even if he says, out of humbleness, that he tells those about another.

[335] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 19: “He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them.”; in ROB we have: “The will of them who fear Him He will do and their prayer He will hear and He will save them.” (E. l. t.’s n.)

[336] It is being expressed here ethe mystery of the union between our will and the will of God. By working God within us as free and loving Person, He won’t chock up our will, but He places Himself on the line of our will and he helps our will too to be fulfilled. Only the impersonal forces, or only one who wants to dominate you will hinder your will. He who loves you he will promote your freedom, he will encourage you, and he will help you to work yourself. This is for he rejoices for you answer him with your free love and by working the good things, which correspond to his will as well. And the good if the love for one another, or it is the product of this love.

[337] He who is humble in heart he will also have resting within his soul and he won’t try to impose himself to others by all sorts of means, in order him to maintain an apparent superiority for himself. He is not tormented by the fear of not being noticed by others.

And te consummate prayer consists of speaking to God while non-wandering (with your thought), it consists of gathering together all your thoughts in a non-scattered manner, together with your senses. One is led to this by his will of dying to any of his fellow humans and to the wor4ld and to all the thing from within world[338]. And you ought to say God nothing but this: "Deliver me from the cunning one" (Mt. 6: 10) and "You will be dome" into me (Mt. 6: 10). You have you mind staying in front of God and talking to Him. And the true prayer is known when he who does it has been liberated from any wandering and he sees that his mind gets gladdened by being illuminated by God. And the sign that one has reached the consummate prayer it is that the man no longer gets disturbed even when tempted by the whole world. One will pray consummately if he has become dead to the world and to the resting which the world invited him to. And carefully doing you thing for the Lord, it is not scattering, but it is zeal towards God.

Regarding the reading, it is useful to read: "The Lives of the Saints", for thus the mind will get illuminated into the Lord.

151. (Only in Codex Coislin-Paris 124 and Coislin 281). The question of the same one towards the other Oldman: The Great Oldman said: "One lights up the consummate prayer by dying to the people, to the world, and to the bodily pleasures". What should I do to reach there once I am living among people? This is for I must give commands to my brother who serves me. On the other hand, because of being I ill, I cannot eat except green vegetables. But this makes me lust for other things as well. More than that, if the vegetables aren't well cooked, my thought will get disturbed by thinking as illness. This is for often that gives me a hard night. So, because of being I in these circumstances, how could I die to the people? On the other hand, if the food is good and prepared according to my illness, [338] It is necessary the death towards people and towards the passing things, meaning the death of the will to use the people and the things egotistically and for bodily pleasures, in the sense of refusing to help people, and especially in refusing to know God through them. Namely, the thoughts about people and about things must be gathered in the thought at God and at serving God and for the salvation of the people by bringing them to God. One must gather everything is God for out of God are all the things and for all the things are being consummated in God. By thinking them in connection to God, the things will be cleaned up of any egotistic and passionate attraction, they are being sanctified.

it will give born within me to pleasure. How could I then die to the body's pleasure and to the world? Nd how must I spend the Holy Week? I pray you to teach me these and pray for me.

The answer of John: Oh, you who live among people and you want to die yourself to them, do not judge or despise anybody, and do not remain stuck to your own will. This means dying to the people while living among them[339]. If it happens that in the necessary relationships somebody upsets you, you must bear sweetly towards your neighbor who owes you something, by saying to himself: "God know that what is useful. Maybe God wanted him to do such in order I not to find any pleasure for anybody, but rather a sufferance". No longer get troubled because of lacking certain food, because that could happen to come from the work of the devils in order to disturb you. And if you use some sort of food because of your illness, you must thank God, and you must reckon yourself as unworthy of that and that will be useful to you. Always remember the advice: "Give thanks for everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18) and you will have rest[340]. This is for by doing so you will no longer be the slave of the annoyance for the lack of some sorts of food which taste pleasantly, but you will be defended by God through the mediation of the thanking you bring to Him. Regarding the Holy Week, you will eat, because of your helplessness, at 11 hours, a few vegetables and if you cannot cut off the wine, you will drink as much as you will reckon as [339] This is a paradox. You are attached to people and to the world when you are attached to your own will egotistically. It seems to you that by doing so you are master over others and over things while you actually become their slave. Only by the generous rejection of the egotism which opens you to the people and to the mysteries of the world, you will have died to the people and to the world. By serving the true and eternal interests of the people, you will have died to the people, for you will have died to your will of using the people and the things egotistically. Bestow yourself to the people in order you to be able to die to the people, better said you to be able to die to your desire of taking advance of people. In this case you have died to the people and to the world in that what they have superficial, but you have discovered and you help the people in their imperishable deep. And in this deep too, the things have been illuminated to you. You have discovered an unmatched value into God. You really unite yourself with the people and with all things into God. You have resurrected for all people and for all thing into God.

[340] The discontent keeps your soul in a continuous unrest, disturbance, and agitation, which do not allow you to think at God and to meet God and to reckon that in God you have everything in each circumstance and in each gift of trouble. Your discontent separated you from Him Who manages and fill up all things. You discontent won't allow you to enjoy even that what you have. The people say rightly: "God takes the gift from the discontent one".

necessary, as for instance two cups. Do not be disquiet because of that, but do everything for the glory of God, as the Apostle says (1 Cor. 10: 34). Pray for me and forgive me with your love.

152. (V. 96) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: How comes that I want to control my belly and to reach eating less food, but I cannot do that? And even if I eat fewer food for a short while, I will again come to the first quantity. It is likewise with the drink.

The answer of John: My brother, I beg your love to remember that you have told me all the passion I have too. This is for I suffer of the same ones. And nobody can deliver himself of those until he will have reached the measure of him who said: "I have forgotten to eat my bread; by the voice of my sigh my bone stuck to my flesh" (Ps. 101: 6[341]). One like this quickly comes to the fewness of the food and of the drink. This is for his tears become brad to him. And so, he reached to nourish himself with the Holy Ghost. Believe me, brother, that I know a man known only to the Lord, who has reached such a measure: once or twice a week, or even more often than that, he is conquered by the spiritual food and its sweetness makes him forget about the material food. And when he comes to eat, he feels fed of it and disgusted of it. And if he eats, he will Comden himself, by saying: why am I not always so? And he no longer wants to eat[342]. So, where are we at, brother? Won't us leave

[342] In the Volos Edition: "I reckon that the saint says those about himself, though he claims saying those about another. He does that for his humbleness. It is being affirmed here the unknown mystery of the intimate connection between soul and body. After all, the body is a plasticized and sensitized rationality, one full of the work of the human spirit and, actually, full of the godlike Ghost. Therefore, why wouldn't this godlike Ghost sustain the body as support of the spiritual life, by an intense work of the godlike Ghost within the human soul, and therefore within body too, without resorting to new adds of matter, which to be transformed by Him into the living and animated matter of the body? Besides these, the matter is, actually, a concentrated energy. It may be that we, by the power of our spirit, we are incapable of actualizing all the energy concentrated with our body. A more intense work of the godlike Ghost can actualize, by working directly upon our body, or through our spirit, more of the deposits of energy condensed within our body. These energies are more condensed in the body's bones. They sticking to the flesh can have as consequence the filling up of the flesh with more energy, so that the flesh will be able to live for a longer period of time without adding new food to it. This seems to be what Abba John is going to tell us further on. But this also can be the consequence of focusing all our thoughts in the sole form here, won't we die? Forgive me, because while not finding my own things which I to brag myself with, I brag myself with foreign toils. And this is towards my condemnation.

153. (V. 97) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Please, Father, clarify me the meaning of the following thing: How can one reach the things said by you? This is because I do not know that. This is because each time I try to diminish my food, the drowsiness and the helplessness don't leave me until I fall again to the previous measure. And how can you say that him who has reached the measure of the one who said: "My bone stuck to my flesh" (Ps. 101: 6[343]), he will reach to be satisfied with little? And how before the diminishing of the food "the bone sticks to the flesh"?

The answer of John: Brother, I force myself to tell things which are above my measure and I fear to be condemned by describing foreign feats. It was written: "My bone stuck to my flesh" (Ps. 101: 6). This means that all the bones of the man become one; or all the man's thoughts become one thought according to God. This is for, by sticking that thought to the flesh, the flesh gets spiritualized by following to that thought that is according to God. And if the joy of the Ghost gets born within his heart, that joy nourished the soil and it fattens up the body and it strengthens both of them, so that they no longer will get drowsy and they no longer will get weakened. This is for, since now, Jesus makes Himself Mediator and He brings the man close to the gates of the place "where the pain and the sadness and the sigh have run away from" (Isa. 51: 11). And to this man it will be fulfilled the word saying: "Where your treasure is, there will be your heart too" (Mt. 6: 21). But that one that brings the man to his measure it is the consummate humbleness into Christ Jesus our Lord. To Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

thought directed towards God, and that would attract in thus concentrated thought, but also in the unified and stuck to the body bones, the power of the Holy Ghost which actualizes more energy concentrated in them.

154. (V. 98) The question of the same one addressed to the Great Oldman: I beg you, tell me how can one reach the restraint? And how can be discerned between the natural illness and that illness coming from the devils? And how much must one eat?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, you aspire, little by little, to get to know hidden things. And I, because I am insane, I still reckon that what you ask for knowing from me it cannot be known except by him who has reached that measure. Actually, the living man feel the coldness and the warmth of the things he touches. But the dead no longer feels these because he has lost his touching. And as only him reaches the knowledge of the things who has come closer to those things, and he who doesn't come closer to them and who it not in touch with those things, even if he asks and hears for thousands of times about them, he won't be able to catch their meanings, likewise it is in this case: no matter how much one speaks to somebody about these, the hearer need to try those things (experience). Regarding the illness, if the body received food on a daily basis but it still gets weakened, that illness is from the evils. If not, that is a natural illness. And restraining oneself consists of getting up from the table a little before getting satiated, as the beginner Fathers ruled out (Abba Isaiah, Recueil 4: 44; Abbaye de Bellefontaine, 1970, p. 61). But when the man reached the measure of him who said: "His thoughts are not unknown to us" (2 Cor. 2: 11), he won't be able anymore to forget how much he must eat, for he has got accustomed to that.

Behold, I am forced to unnecessarily tell you things which are above me. And it might be there anybody who can receive and understand those, except very rarely. May the God of our Fathers to bring you to that joy. This is for in this joy there is untold light. This is for that light it shines far and it is sweet. That's why he doesn't remember about food, but he looks at the things from above, and he perseveres in cogitating the things from above, there where Christ sits on the right hand of the Father. Him to be the glory forever. Amen.

155. (V. 81) The question of the same one towards the other Oldman, asking clarification about the measure of the restraint.

The answer of John: The Fathers say about the measure of the restraint that it consists of stopping yourself from eating a little before getting satiated, either from food or from drink, namely before having your stomach full. And it consists also in using the food and the wine sapiently. One doesn't drink much in winter[344]. Also, one must eat less. And not only of this it consists the measure of the restraint, but also in speaking and in sleeping and in clothing and in restraining your senses. In all of these it is shown the measure of the restraint.

156. (V. 82) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Tell me, Father, what it consists of this "less" in food, in drink, in vegetables, and in fruits?

The answer of John: Of all the wight of the bread, of the food, of the vegetables, and of the fruits, you will diminish down to an ounce (the twelfth part). And regarding the wine and the water you will drink a half of cup of each. And if you are strong and if you do not get tired, it will be good you to drink only once a day. And if you cannot do that, you will rink twice a day, but on each time you will drink less. And during the movements and during the wars from your thoughts, you must cut off a little from the usual measure, namely approximately an ounce of food and a half of cup of drink, so that youd food will be diminished by two ounces a day, and you drink will be diminished by a cup a day. Pray, brother, for me.

157. (V. 83) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: How can one know how much must he eat and drink?

[344] In the Volos Editon: "It might be that the preposition no it is temporal, and not negative. Namely during winter, when one drinks much wine, he who restraints himself mush drink less than his usual measure".

The answer of John: One can find out by examining on each day how much your body needs of bread, of foods, of vegetables, and of fruits, or how much food and drink. For instance, one drinks tree cups a day and he eats a quarter of kilogram piece of bread. If he sees that his body asks for more than three cups without a specific reason, or without too strong physical efforts, or because he ate salty foods, he must fight to restraint himself. But if there is a clear reason, that won't be a temptation. And out of three cups, if he can let him cut off a cup and a half. And out of a quarter of kilogram food, let him cut off an ounce.

158. (V. 84) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: We beg you to tell us what God asks according to the man's power, so that the man not to mix, because of his drowsiness, something from himself, and so the man to think that he does everything he can. How must we, therefore, understand what we can?

The answer of Barsanuphius: God have given the man understanding so that the man can discern among things. If somebody, because of being tired by travelling, or by other heavy works, he cannot keep the same measure as on the other days, but he looses, a little his, bodily ascesis, namely to his daily half of a quarter of kilogram of bread he usually eats, he adds one more ounce for compensating his physical efforts, he will do that out of his power by eating a little more. Or, if by waking himself up at midnight in order to take vigil, he rests himself another half of an hour because he is tired, he will do that again out of his power. So, being tired it is a sign that one can rest himself for a little longer. But then he must wake up and take his usual vigil. So, doing that what is in somebody's power means diminishing a little one's food or sleep. The Fathers appointed for sleeping a half of the night. And they ruled than one must stop eating each time he sees himself wanting a little more.

159. (V. 85 a) The question of the same one towards the other Oldman: What quantity of wine and of cooked food it is good to be kept daily by him who lives by himself? And how could the Fathers keep a very harsh diet?

The answer of John: Regarding the wine, to him who is healthy and who wants to restrain himself it will suffice a cup a day and nothing more than that. And if often weaknesses come upon him, let him drink two cups. And he must take only a plate of cooked food and then no longer take care of it. And to the question about how could the Fathers keep such a harsh diet, one must know that they have their bodies very obedient. So, they who govern themselves well and with right-reckoning, they will take in account the body and its tendency. Pray for me.

160. (V. 85 b) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: The canon of the restrain set up by you must be kept by everybody or that is according to the state of the one who asks about it?

The answer of John: Brother, the things told my me to your love about restraint, those things have been told to those who are like us and according to our measure. If we do the things from the middle, by restraint we will reach the higher things. But by putting our foot on the first step of the ladder, we must not want to immediately climb to the higher step. This is for they who have reached that measure can be, as the Apostle said, both "hungry and satiated for they have been accustomed themselves to all things" (Phil. 4: 12)[345]. And you, brother, you know your measures. If there is stirred up a war within you, you will take off one more ounce. And do the same with your drink[346].

[345] They maintain their self-control either they are hungry or they are satiated, for they have become accustomed to control themselves in both cases.

[346] If your greediness wages war to you, or if your body starts having others lusts too because of being too well feed, you will cut off another ounce.

161. (V. 86) The same brother asked the same Oldman: What does it mean eating according to lust or according to tendency?

The answer of John: Eating according to lust means lusting to eat not for the need of your body but because of the covetousness of your belly. And when you see that somebody desires more green vegetables than dry vegetables, because he tends to that, but not because he lusts for those, but for it is easier to him, that is something different. There are tendencies which receive more gladly the sweet foods, others the salty foods, and others the sour foods. And that isn't passion or lust of covetousness. But lusting for and desiring the food it is lust. And the lust is the servant of the belly's covetousness. So, if you work against your lust and you use the food only as necessary, you won't do that because of your belly's covetousness.

162. (V. 87) The question of the same one towards the same one: Why should I do, Father, when the passion doesn't occur before by it snakes in during eating? Must I stop myself from eating?

The answer of John: Do not stop, but fight against that thought, by remembering that the food becomes something stinky and we will be judges like ones who ate, while other restrained themselves consummately. And if the lust has stopped, you will continue eating, but you will condemn yourself. And if the lust persists, you will call the name of God to your help and He will rest you (from temptation). And if your lust takes you under control so that you can no longer eat orderly, you will top eating. And if there are somebody sitting to the same table with you, in order they not to notice your action, you will continue eating small pieces[347]. But, as I said, you must not stop eating immediately because of your belly's covetousness, but guard yourself not to rush to eat disorderly. Speaking about the belly's covetousness, the Fathers asked us [347] One must notice that the humbleness and the gentleness which must accompany the ascesis. He who practices the ascesis must not brag with it by showing it, neither must him rebuke other with his own example. Let him restrain himself for God and not for people, namely let him be as discrete as possible.

not to stretch out our hand to take food before somebody else (Isaiah, Recueil, 3, 11, p. 50) because of being that an indecent thing and stranger to the good order. And when the food put in front of you is of such kind that it is not divided in individual portions, but all eat in common from the same plate, it is not inappropriate somebody to take out of together with everybody. But he must do that in good order, and not to fall into his belly's covetousness and into damnation. Another sign of the belly's covetousness is that of wanting to eat before the established hour, and one must not do that except if there is a blesses cause. But one must for the held from God in everything and God will help us.

164. (V. 89) The question of the same one towards the same one: Where does it come from the impulse of the body?

The answer of John: The impulse of the body comes out of carelessness. This is for the carelessness drive you unnoticedly, to judge and to condemn. And thus, it will betray you. When Israel truly served God, God guarded Israel of their enemies. But when Israel didn't take care of truly serving God, God allowed Israel's enemies to attack them.

165. (V. 90) The question of the same one towards the same one: Must one ask the Fathers about all their thoughts occurring in their heart? And him who prays and who sings psalms must him do that with a loud voice? Must one remember all the things he did, heard, and spoke? Must one compete with the Fathers?

The answer of John: Brother, one must not ask about all the thoughts occurring to him. This is because some thoughts are passing. One must ask only about those thoughts which persevere and wage war to the man. This is because, as a man who is rebuked by many, he will despise the reproaches and he won't take care of those, but if somebody pick him and starts waging war to him, he will complain to the judge, it is similarly with this thing too. And the prayer and the singing of psalms must be done not only with the mind, but also with the lips. This is for Prophet David says: "Lord, You will open my lips and my mouth will herald Your glory" (Ps. 50: 16[348]). And the Apostle showed that it is required the work of the lips too, so that he spoke about "the fruit of the lips" (Hebr. 13: 15). Regarding the things seen by you and heard by you and did by you and thought by you, nothing cuts those off more than the prayer done in humbleness, with tiredness and with tears, that which is not only out of the man's will. And the Fathers who were victorious, they didn't win without toils and tear and cutting off of their will.

And competing with the Fathers means self-appreciation and reckoning yourself their equal. But he who asks and who trusts the answer he received from the Father, he will show humbleness and progress into the Lord. Pray for me, brother.

166. (V. 91) Another from among fathers asked the same Oldman: How can one guard his heart? And how the war wages by our enemy starts? And if one must resist him who wages him war? And about the thought of the fornication: must one close its entrance? And if it has entered, what one should do? And regarding the food, must one establish the ounce by using a scale, or to appreciate it by eye and by being careful?

The answer of John: Guarding one's mind means having his mind awake and clean when he is warred. This is for the first one sliding into careless it is his thought. And if the enemy sees his carelessness the enemy will strive to bring the war within him. And if you want to find out if a thought is enemy or friend, stop praying and ask that thought of your: are you ours of are you form the enemy? And that thought will tell you the truth. So, the surrender comes out of carelessness[349]. But you

[348] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 15: "O Lord, open thou my lips; and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.;"; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 16: "Lord You will open my lips and my mouth will herald Your praise." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[349] One could say that the heart is the feeling of the deep had by man within himself. As such, the heart is, on one hand, feeling, and on the other hand the heart is a noticing of that deep that is infinite within man, a deep that crosses beyond the man, into infinite. Through his heart the man ties himself – not by theoretical knowledge but really – both sensitively and reflexively to God, like the man ties himself through his bodily senses to the outside world, or like he lives through feeling the states of his body.

And that deep felt and noticed by man's heart it is not an impersonal infinite, but it is Person, because otherwise the heart won't feel so much in love with this deep, and so happy should not resist it, because this is what your enemy want and they won't cease (to wage war to you). But you must run to God against them, by throwing your helplessness to God. And GO not only will be able to chase them away from you, but even to take away their power of working[350].

Regarding the devil of the fornication, it is very good to lock up its entrance. But if it kidnaps you and enters, you will fight it and you will throw your helplessness in front of God and you will ask for help. And God will take that devil away from you.

for noticing and feeling Him. That deep that wakes up the love of the human person feeling that deep in his heart, it is Person at its turn. Through his heart the man also feels the indefinite of his fellow human, with love or with enmity, so that in this too it is shown that the felt and feeling human indefinite is person. If the mind is tightly united with the heart (as in the Prayer of the Heart) in highlights on the knowledge plan the noticing of God through man's heart. Therefore, in the expression the man gives it by words, there is comprised not only the godlike deep, but there is comprise also God's indefinite as Person, an indefinite lived through feeling. But, as the mind as knowledge function gets separated from the heart, it will be less able to notice through feeling the Person-like indefinite of God, and the knowledge function it takes over by rationality that, by its definite knowledge, it is rathe destined to know the finite things. This rational knowledge, by noticing the bordered and opposed aspects, it makes they who have it to obey to one another, sometimes fanatically. Only in the feeling knowledge taking place through heart, and only through the mind united with the heart, the people can unite themselves, for all of them notice the infinite, person-like, and loving whole.

At its turn, a heart left by rationality it will lose its knowledge function of feeling the indefinite deep, and the consequence is that that heart gets fanaticized by only feeling the love and the hatred for bordered things. By being covered as the noticing function of a person-like infinite that ignites the love, that heart can become callous to that what is great and good and all-comprising, and that heart can fall into perishing and narrow phantasms for bordered things. To that state is taken by the heart the thought passionate for finite things which promise some superficial and passing pleasures. But the prayer puts again the heart in connection to God, int heart's true function, and the heart finds in God the generous love for all things.

[350] By submitting yourself to their temptation, you will remain on the plan of the finite thoughts, of stirring up for them. Only by running to God you will elevate your heart above the plan of those thoughts and you will place you heart in communion with the infinite and loving deep of God. But only if God too comes to meet you, with His infinity, he will help you to detach yourself form on the plan of the finite things which promise you the finite satisfactions of a divisive egotism. God will thus get you far from the finite things, far from the divisive egotism of the demons and of the passionate thought brought by them in your conscience and God will take away their power they had upon you. Even the waken up conscience of your helplessness will open you to God's infiniteness, for you place your helplessness in comparison to His infinite power, and you even live this difference between them, you live both of them simultaneously without they being separated, and your conscience will get humbled by the momentum of God's comprising love.

Regarding the food, you must appoint to yourself that what maintains your life, with the balance of the reckoning and with guarding. And pray for me with love.

167. (V. 92) The question of the same one towards the same one: Where does it come to me from, the burdening of my heart and the oversleeping? And the fact that there is no repentance within me?

The answer of John: "These ones always come to him who appeases himself (to the recluse hesychast) in order to discourage him and him to run away from stadium (from the battle place) and him to get despaired. But let's throw our helplessness before Him Who can do much more than we ask Him to do, or than we thing (Eph. 3: 20), until Him will crush the camps of the Amorites before us. This is for God won't allow Madian and Amalec and the sons of the sunrises to destroy our fruits (Jud. 6: 3-4). Let's wait for the help from our Master God, for He is stronger than they are. And He will save us.

168. (V. 93) The question of the same one addressed to the same one: How comes that during night some face shine to me, and during the say I fight other faces? But this takes place even without faces. And it also happens that these hallucinations are sometimes accompanied by sweetness and sometimes not.

The answer of John: They who attack us during the say, the same ones attack us at night too, in order to show us that they still have us in their hands and they transform themselves in other and other faces. And the fact that this takes place here with sweetness and there without sweetness it comes, as I said, out of their transformation, in order they to throw the man in doubt and disturbance. And the night war is twofold. Sometimes it is suffered because of pleasures, some other times it is because of the devil's temptation, in order the devil to bring somebody to desperation, so that that one no longer believes that he could be saved. So, when the temptation of this war comes to you, you will do seven times seven kneelings, namely forty-nine kneelings, and each time you will say: "Lord, forgive me, for Your holy name!". And if you are ill, or if it is Sunday when the kneelings (the prostrations) are forbidden, you will say this word for forty-nine times instead of the kneelings. And the difference among temptations is this: some of them are from the devils and they come out of pride; others are from pleasures and they come out of the covetousness of the belly[351].

169. (V. 95) The question of the same one towards the same one: You told me, Father, in your answer, that among the things happening to the man during the night, some of them come because of our pride by the temptation of the devil, and others come out of pleasures because of our belly's covetousness. Can the devil stir up these temptations within man only because of his envy, without being there the pride and the love for pleasures? And how can one know when such a movement is stirred up within him during night by nature? And do the consummate ones too experience this natural movement? And must one kneel between Easter and Pentecost, or not?

The answer of John: The devil can stir that up out of his envy. But if there isn't the pride or the lust for pleasure, the evil cannot do that. Like one who wants to build up a house but he doesn't have the necessary materials so he will toil vainly, likewise will be the case of the devil. And one can know the sign of the natural movement when seeing that that movement isn't stirred up within himself either by pride, or by pleasure, either by the devil's envy. Especially when that movement isn't from the devil's envy, but it is a natural movement, one will know that when, after falling asleep in peace and after many prayers and after sealing on himself with the name of the Holy and of-One-being Trinity, he still experiences that movement. But the consummate one no longer experience either that, for they quenched even the need of their nature, and they have spiritually made on themselves, by doing that, eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heavens (Mt. 19: 12), namely they have killed (modified) their limbs (Col. 3: 5). And about kneeling between [351] When we imagine persons whom we strife with, we are dealing with the temptation brought by the devil, because of our pride, or because of our ambitions, because we remember some offenses brought to us. When we imagine persons stirring up within us our lust to debauchery, which in its drunkenness forgives about everything, we deal with some movements stirred up within us by good-gorging intertwined with our egotism. The temptations of pleasure come to us at night, while the anger tempts us during the day.

Easter and Pentecost, it was said on some other time not to kneel inside your monastic cell[352]. Pray for me, brother.

170. (V. 94) The question of the same one towards the same one: If it happens to me some hallucination at night and on the next day I was to take the Holy Impartation, what should I do?

The answer of John: Let's get closer as some wounded ones, and not as some victorious ones; as ones who need the doctor. And He Who healed that woman who suffered of bloodshed (Mt. 9: 22), He will heal us. Let's love much, so that us to be told too: "Many sins will be forgiven to you for you have been loving much" (Lk. 7: 47). Each time you want to be imparted, you must say: "Not to be me, Master, these Holy Mysteries towards judgment, or towards damnation, but towards the sanctification of the soul and of the body". Then you will come closer, fearfully, and our loving-of-people Master will do with us His mercy/ Amen.

171. (V. 99) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Abba, would that be good if a confessed to someone among my brothers the hallucinations I had, and to ask him, after prostrating myself in front of him, to pray for me?

The answer of John: It is good to be told him who can hear (who can understand) about the hallucinations had during night, but not to the younger ones. And he who confesses must prostrate before him whom he confesses and to ask to pray for him. This is for there is a word of the Scripture: "Confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, in order you to get healed" (Jas. 5: 16).

[352] In the Volos Edition, at note: "To be seen the interpretation given by the First Ecumenical Synod in which the Holy Triodon, and all the other interpreters (and also Basil the Great in the canon no. 51) they forbid the kneeling between Easter and Pentecost. That's why, also this partial permission of the saint wants to agree the general interdiction from the canon of the Ecumenical Synod and of the Church. By reconciling both of them, if some ones are bothered by the war of their body, or if they have some penance and they want to persecute their body in order to appease it, let them do more bowings down so that by doing those they to fulfill the tiredness of their knees and of the prostration to the ground."

Scholium: By telling the Father that it is good to confess to him who can hear the confession, he showed that it is not useful to confess to anybody, haphazardly.

172. (V. 100) One of the Fathers who live in quietude (lives isolated in his monastic cell), asked the same Oldman: How must he sit in his monastic cell?

The answer of John: Sitting inside the monastic cell means remembering your sins and crying and weeping for them; and taking vigil not to allow your mind to be enslaved; and if you mind is enslaved, you will bring you mind back in its place[353].

173. (V. 124) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: How could I now, Father, when I am locked up within my monastic cell, if I cut off my will? The same question, when I am with people? And what the bodily will is? And what the devils' will is when covered up under the masque of the good? And, What God's will be?

The answer of John: Cutting off your will while you are sitting into your monastic cell means despising the bodily pleasure in everything. And the will of the body consists of thanking to the body in everything; so, in order not to satisfy your body, cut off your will while sitting inside your monastic cell.

And cutting off your will when you are with the people consists of dying towards them and of being with them as you would not be there[354].

[353] You are required not to allow your mind to be taken away from under you control by some thoughts. This is because if that happens to you, you will no longer be totally free, once a part of you, namely your mind, it is take away from under your control. Bringing the mind in its guarding place in front of God means brining your mind like a soldier who guards in front of the Emperor. Then you are master over you mind and over yourself. Then are overpoured within you His gifts and His life and His generous love that is opposed to the passionate egotism.

[354] Do not be passionate of being with the people. Do not search for a pleasure when being with the people so that you will suffer when not being together with them. Wanting too exclusively to be with a certain person of with certain persons it is also an egotism.

That will according to God, according to the Apostle, it consists of cutting of your body's will (Eph. 2: 3). And the will from the devils consists of defending your justice and trusting in yourself[355]. Then you will be caught into the trap. Pray for me, my brother, and forgive me.

174. (V. 125) Question of the same one towards the same Oldman: What food must I allot to myself on each day?

The answer of John: Establishing your food for each day on the monastic cell, as you asked me, it means allowing yourself to be caught by a worry and by a need. Let yourself be guided by God's guidance. "He who walks straight, he walks trustfully" (Prov. 10: 10).

175. (V. 126) The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Is it good to persevere into the prayer: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me"? Or is it better reading from the Holy Scripture and uttering verses from the psalms?

The answer of John: There must be done both of them, a little from one and a little from another. This is for it is written: "This you must do and that you must not let aside" (Mt. 23: 330.

176. (V. 127) The question of the same one towards the same one: When I sing psalms, must I say "Our Father" after each of the psalms, or only for once and then to spend the left time in asks?

The answer of John: Saying "Our Father" once and uttering asks once, it is the same thing.

[355] That will that is coming to you from the devils, or which the devils made you reckoning it as your own will, it is the will to justify yourself in everything you do and to reckon that you cannot be wrong. It is the praise for own sins. You have rented your zeal to the demon. It is the proof of the egotistic pride defending its egotism.

177. (V. 101) The question of the same one towards the same one: It comes to me the thought that the cogitation (meditation) makes the prayer clean. Is it so?

The answer of John: Brother, do not allow the devils to mock you so that you to tell that the cogitation makes the prayer clean. This is because: hos could stay the passions within that man that has a clean prayer?[356]

178. (V. 128) The question of the same one towards the same one: Must we remember, at the end of the evening doxology or of the night doxology: the holy Churches, the Emperor, the leaders, the people, the poor, the widows, and the things alike? And he who is asked to pray for somebody, must he do that even if he is mastered by passions?

The answer of John: It is good to ask in prayer for the peace of the holy Churches and to remember the things following to that. But let's not do that as some worthless ones, who have no power towards that. This is for it is an apostolic commandment (1 Tim. 2: 1-2). And it is good us to pray for him who asks us to do so. This is for there is a word of the Gospel and of the Apostle: "Whomsoever asks for, you will give" (Mt. 5: 42); and: "Pray for one another so that you will be healed" (Jas. 5: 16). And again: "That what you want the people to do to you, you do the same to them" (Mt. 7: 12; Lk. 6: 31). And some people even prayed for the Apostles (Acts 12" 5). So, he who disregards the commandment, he will condemn himself. Behold why, being able or not, I am forcing myself towards this due to the commandment.

179. (V. 102) The question of the same one towards the same one: How reaches the thought to be prey to the wild beast?

The answer of John: The though will reach to be prey to the beast if the man does not take ahead of it and if the man doesn't despise on himself. Then the man suffers the bite of the [356] This is not a clean prayer, because of still remaining the passion within him who does it. You still remain partially locked up into egotism.

beast's teeth and he will be torn apart by its teeth[357]. Later non, the man will need a bandage, namely repentance.

180. (V. 103) The question of the same one towards the same one: Must one close his eyes when facing the plots from the enemy? And when my body uprises, what will I do?

The answer of John: The devil shows to the man diverse things either through senses or outside senses. The weak one closes his eyes in order not to see those things. And the strong one, even if he sees those things, he will despise them. This is for "the righteous dares like a lion" (Prov. 28: 1). Regarding the uprising of your body, you must run on such moments to Jesus, through prayer, and you will find rest.

181. (V. 104) The question of the same one towards the same one: Why it happens to me to condemn others immediately after I have asked?

The answer of John: You endure the temptation of condemning others immediately after you have asked them about something because of not being dead within you're the temptation of reckoning yourself just (of justifying yourself). And you make no effort to shun yourself from this passion. Condemn yourself and the condemnation will go away from you.

182. (V. 105) The same one because of being upset by thieves and by getting very scared, but by the grace of God being him defended from being harmed, he confesses his fear to the same Oldman, and he also asked for the Oldman's prayer so that him to be defended in advance.

The answer of John: God doesn't leave anyone, for He said: "I won't leave you, neither I will forsake you" (Hebr. 13: 5). But God surrenders us to our faithlessness. But by the permission of God there come also the temptations to them who have consummate trust in God. But, are there more coming thieves than were the chariots and the power of Pharaoh? And it is known that by a sole word and at a sole sign of the Lord all of those were drown (Exod. 14: 26-28). Don't you remember how those coming upon Elisha got blind? And who made them blind and why (4 Kings[358] 6: 18)? He Who knows how to deliver the right-believers from temptations, He did and does all things. How could we forget about the Scripture that says: "The Lord will defend you against all evil; the Lord will guard you're your soul" (Ps. 120: 7[359])? And who will we forget the word: "To you even the hairs of you head are counted", or the word: "No sparrow with fall into snare without your Father knowing it. Isn't the man more valuable than a sparrow" (Mt. 10: 29-31)? Oh, you fear, the daughter of the faithlessness, how deep you have lowered us! It is dreadful. It blinds the mind up. It weakens the heart. It parts the people from God. It is the sister of the hopelessness. If herds the people from the fear of God to the land of the perdition. Brother, let's run away from fear and let's wake Him up from sleep, saying: "Master, save us for we are perishing" (Lk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25). And He, by waking Himself up, He will rebuke the rushing in of the wind and He will appease it. And He will tell us: "It is Me, do not fear" (Mt. 14: 29). Let's forsake the reed staff and let's take the staff of the cross, which they who limp lean on, which the dead are rise through, which the Apostle is bragging with (Gal. 7: 19), and which we have been delivered by, by surrendering ourselves and by placing ourselves next to Him Who has been crucified for us. This is for through Him He shepherds us too, for we are His sheep, and through Him He chases away from us the lusting for blood wolves[360]. Him to be the glory forever. Amen.

[358] In KJB we are 2 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[359] In KJB we have: Ps. 121: 7: "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul."; in ROB we have: Ps. 120: 7: "The Lord will guard you against all evil; He will guard you soul." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[360] The cross is our power for exceeding ourselves; the cross is the power prepared by Christ for us. Christ endured the cross like man in order to strengthen the human nature from within Him against the egotistic sparing, and in order Him to communicate us too that power. The remembrance of the cross connected to the cross's sign brings also Christ Himself within us, Christ Who strengthened His human nature by enduring the cross and, consequently to that strengthening His human nature defeated the dead. God couldn't have resurrected with a weakened human nature by dressing it up in the wide imperishable life, that which represents a supreme strength, as on an object. The human nature itself had to come to meet its

183. (V. 106) Askes about the same thing, the Great Oldman said: My sleepy brother, examine your drowsy heart, which I wonder about because it fears the servants who stay outside and it doesn't look at the masters who are inside. The thieves known with the senses are the servants of the thieves known with the mind, namely of the devils who work within them. You owe to thank to the thieves coming upon you, for by coming them they woke up their masters, namely the thieves sleeping within you. What distance put Jesus between Him and you so that you must travel that distance in order to go to Him and beg Him for helping you? Doesn't your ear hear what your mouth sings from psalms[361]? "Close is the Lord to them who call Him into truth. He will do the will of them who fear Him, and he will listen to their asks, and He will save them" (Ps. 144: 18-19[362]). Stick yourself with Him and He will banish away from you both the masters from within you and the slaves from outside you. Him to be the glory forever. Amen.

184. (V. 107) The same one asked the other Oldman: Two are the thoughts upsetting me relatedly to the thieves. One thought condemns me, saying: "The things you have belong to the resurrection, as an act of this spiritual strength, by enduring the pains opposed to the egotism. The cross is the proof of Christ's mercy on us, and it is also the means Christ bestowed to us, in order us to get strengthened and to grow up towards the strength of that generous life that is not submitted to the egotistic narrowing. In cross we have Christ with His all-loving power, but in order us too to impropriate this power. That's why the cross if our strong staff, it is our praise, and it is our hope. Through cross we banish away the devils who submit us when we are fearful because of our egotism. Through cross we are guarded on the broad pasture of the immortal food brought us by Christ. The devil wants us to be fearful, us to surrender ourselves to him, and us to become his servants; Christ wants us to become powerful, free, His brothers, and brothers of everybody, and partakers to the power of His generosity and to His glory. The devils enslave us because themselves they are not free, because of being they the weak slaves of the passions of their pride and they by working under their pride's mastery. In this sense of absolutely free of any passion and law which would be above Him, and which could limit Him, we must understand the affirmation of the Fathers that God is dispassionate (απαθής).

[361] The ear of Christ is so close to your mouth, as your own ear is.

[362] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 18-19: "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth. // He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 144: 18-19: "Close is the Lord to them who call Him, to all of them who call Him into truth. // The will of them who fear Him He will do and their prayer He will hear and He will save them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

monastery and you will commit sin if you allow the thieves to take these things away; that why you must beat the semantron and to shout out". The other thought condemns me, saying: "The Lord said: Him who wants to take away your coat, let him take away from you your shirt too". What do you command me master, to do? This is because I hesitate. And forgive me because by letting the thieves known with the mind to enter and to get out and to rob away my heart, I am asking about those thieves known with the senses. Therefore, I beg you pray for the Lord to firstly banish these ones away.

The answer of John: If you have nothing of your own, do not despise the things which you have received, with love, from the monastery. Thus, you won't be condemned. This is for the man who is under mastery he won't be under commandment (to allow anybody to take something away from him). That's why you will beat the semantron[363] without worrying yourself[364]. And you must shout out, saying: "Bless You Who still are[365], and help me". And God will defend you. The Lord will banish away both the thieves seen with the senses and those thieves known with the mind. Encourage yourself and be strong. And pray for me.

185. (V. 108) The same one read in Paterikon (Les sentences des Pères du désert. Solesmes, 1966, no. 325, p. 332) that him who truly wants to be saved, he firstly must suffer from people: reproaches, dishonor, losses, harms, and to set his own senses free[366], and then he will be able to climb at the

[363] In the Volos Edition: "Beating doesn't mean here beating the thieves up, but it means knocking on something and making noise, in order to scare away the thieves". (We have already added the semantron in the actual text, so that the things to be clearer (E. l. t.'s n.))

[364] You are not here under the commandment to keep your silence, because of not belonging those things to you so that you must defend them.

[365] In the Volos Edition: "I think that saying still he means the companion who still was with him. It is like he would say: "You brother who are with me, you too bless and come to help me", so that the thieves would hear that there is one more brother with him and they will be afraid and they will run away.

[366] The senses are unwillingly kidnapped by the pleasant things. By that their subject himself will be kidnapped and narrowed. The senses must be set free in order the man himself to become free. And this requires much strength. And this is a non-valuing of the material things.

consummate quietude[367], as Lord Jesus Christ did too, for by enduring Him all of these, He then came to the holy cross, that is one with killing the body and the passions, and that is one with the holy and consummate resting[368] (Abee Isaie, Recueil, quote 8: 68, p. 104; 13: 2-3, p. 115-119). And he said to himself: I the wicked haven't done any of these, but by offending everybody with my helplessness, I left from among people. I wonder if I must go again among people and by the help of God to do what the Fathers said and so I could enter the quietude (the withdrawal), so that my toils not to be in vain? And he confessed these to the same Oldman.

The answer of John: The Fathers said right; and it is impossible otherwise. But that is because there are many reasons which the man thinks for that he does the good. But due to other reasons, the man will harm himself by doing so, and therefore he must firstly to convince himself that that what he does it is good. You have passed to the withdrawn living, but when you meet people, the vain glory is born within you. And maybe neither this thought that has come to you about living among people, it won't persist within you. And thus, there will be born two evils. But if you condemn yourself as one who haven't done that what you ought to in order you to climb on the cross, by saying: I have withdrawn myself because of my nescience, this self-condemnation by bringing reproaches and [367] The quietude is one with the freedom, with the self-mastery. Such a man can gather and keep, entirely and continuously, his thought at God.

[368] We have here the understanding the cross as man's resting. The total victory upon passions and upon worries will bring with itself the consummate resting. But one can defeat his passions by suffering the separation from his passion and from their egotism. At Jesus there is not a defeating of passions but of His affects and weaknesses which entered our nature concomitantly to the sin. He took our affects but He didn't take the passions which are developed by satisfying the affects, which have within them the urge to be satisfied in an exaggerated manner, or to defend the man's earthly life at all costs. Thus, Christ-the-Man reaches the total quietude, at the end of His sufferings, like we too reach the dispassion by suffering our detachment from passions. The hegumen Basil Kondikakis from Mount Athos say that him who stays stretched on the cross for his love for others, he is being rested (Eisodicon, Saint Month Athos, 1974). He is rested by the satisfaction of having done that for others, but also by the fact that he has been liberated from the agitation had by his passions within him. Within him there has remained only the clean love for other, a love brought all the way to the end, a love defeating any egotism. We must notice here that in this writing the quietude is reckoned as equal to locking oneself into his monastic cell, a locking up that is united with the renunciation to all pleasures.

dishonor, it truly can bring you to the measure of the cross into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

186. (V. 109) The same of the same one towards the Great Oldman: Pary for me, Father, for I am very troubled.

The answer of Barsanuphius: May God of the heavens and of the earth fulfill, by the prayer of His saints, to fulfill your asks which I am praying with the whole my heart for[369]. But because you want to listen to and to rejoice of what I am saying, you are the ones forcing me to speak, so that to be fulfilled with me the word: "I have become mindless, you have forced me to" (2 Cor. 12: 11). But I, even before you asked me, I felt burning within me as a flame of a powerful fire, the love of Christ Who told me: "Love you neighbor as on yourself" (Lev. 19: 18). And this burning and this boiling with the ghost makes me not to cease praying, say and night, to God, in order God to make you God-bearers and God to dwell within you and God to walk within you (2 Cor. 6: 16) and God to send you His Holy Ghost, the "Ghost of the Truth", so that the Holy Ghost to come a teach you all the things and to Him to lead you to all the truth (Jn. 16: 13; 17: 26), in order Him to make you inheritors of the heavenly goods "which the eye hasn't seen and the ear hasn't heard and at the man's heart they haven't ascended" (1 Cor. 2: 9). And I have made himself to you like a parent striving to teach his children: how to serv in the shiny army of the Emperor while worrying not of themselves. May God give you the burning of such a love. This is for the lord will assure you that he elevated to the seventh sky the people who have this [369] The asks of the Great Oldman, which were set in movement by the asks of the one who asks the Oldman to pray for him, they are in the same addressed to the Saints in order the Saints do add their prayers to his prayer and to the prayers of him who set his prayers in movement. All the things are being intertwined. Those you are lower are supported and reinforced by the ones from higher, and those from higher are set in movement by those from lower. This is a meeting for making whole, it is a communion of the completion I the prayer of everybody, in a way around him who is the lowest, though he has addressed his ask for him who is higher. There is in it an ascension from the lowest to the highest and there is also a descent from the highest to the lowest. But all of them ascend through this completing prayer towards God, or God makes them united themselves in this communion of the prayer into Him. No one will ascend towards God and into God if alone. But all the believers together. This is the Church.

love[370], as some people have already ascended and they are blessed[371], "either into body, I do not know, or outside the body, I do not know, God knows" (2 Cor. 12: 2).

And, in order you to find out the beginning of this joy, listen to me. First, there comes to the man the Holy Ghost Who teaches the man all the things and how the man must humble himself in cogitation. Then, while guided by that first burning, the man ascends to the first sky and then after to the second sky and gradually up to the seventh sky. And there the man can hear untold and fearsome things, which cannot be heard by anyone who haven't ascended to that measure, which I wish you to be found worthy of, by the Lord. There can reach they who have consummately died to the world through patience in many troubles.

Of, my beloved brother, our Lord endured the cross but you do not rejoice yourself of the troubles which once endured will take you to the Kingdom of Heavens? You were right saying that you are troubled. Don't you know that when somebody asks the Fathers to pray for him to God so that God to help him, his troubled and trials will be multiplied in order him to be tested? So, you must not ask for bodily resting if the Lord doesn't give that to you. This is because the Lord gets disgusted while looking at the body's resting. And He also said to us: "Inot the world you will have troubles" (Jn. 16: 33). May the Lord help you in everything. Forgive me for the things I said to you. This is because I have spoken like one who asks for many things but without having himself those things. But I told you the things I know about others, about the saints. Pray for me.

187. (V. 110) The same one, by thinking that the death of the Great Oldman was near, and because he got sad regarding his salvation and regarding the salvation of the entire community

[370] The consummate love liberated one of worries. This is all the more for him who loves he knows that he loves the Almighty, and he answers the love of Almighty Who is going to take care of all his things.

[371] He who is blessed by God he will also be bestowed by God with that what is said in that blessing. In the note from Volos Edition is said: "I think that the saint says these about himself. This is for him who guides others on this untold and non-comprised way of the kidnapping to God, he is proven of having walked, in the first place, on this way, through the mysterious power of the Ghost".

from that monastery, he let the Great Oldman know that, and the Great Oldman answered him:

All-beloved brother, by being you moved by the godlike love, you have uttered words of humbleness, and so you have awakened also the compassion of some merciless men on a sinful and all-unimportant man. And what could I tell you, because I lack both compassion and love? I am overwhelmed by your words and I have nothing to give you in return. If I had something, I would tell you. I will not leave you orphans either during these last years of my life or on the last day. But I will remain with you, by the commandment of God Who makes all things towards the salvation or our souls, for we are His servants. And I won't remain for me, but I will remain for you who ask me for that, in order you to bring fruits into God through me, so that I will bring your salvation as fruits to Him. You pray, therefore, in order I to be able to tell Him: "Behold I and the children You have given to me" (Isa. 8: 18; Hebr. 2: 19); You guard them into Your name (Jn. 17: 11); cover them with Your right hand, guide them to the shore of Your life and written their name into Your book (Apoc. 21: 27)[372]. Give them the downpayment of the life, gladdening them and telling them: "Do not fear, little herd, for your Father has deigned to give you the Kingdom" (Lk. 12: 32). And you also pray Him to give me to tell Him: "Father, given me that where I am there to be my children as well" (Jn. 17: 24), into the untold life. Believe me, brother, that my ghost aspires to tell to my Master Who rejoices of the ask of His servant: "Master, bring my children together with me into Your Kingdom, or erase me too from Your book" (Exod. 32: 32)[373]. By my weakness and carelessness impede me from having such a daring. Still, God's mercy is great.

[372] "To the shore that You wanted", where they are escaped from the agitation of the worries and of the passions; into the Kingdom of that resting into You, where they have everything together with You in the endless life.

[373] He who can renounce to his eternal happiness due to his love for others, he cannot lose the eternal happiness, for the eternal happiness is right in that love for other brought to the very end. So, they who do not reach this love, they won't be able to taste the whole happiness of the eternal Kingdom. On the other hand, it is impossible that they who are so much loved by him who is ready to renounce to his eternal happiness for them, they too not having caught some degree of love. "In the house of My Father there are many dwelling places" (Jn. 14: 2), it can indicate the levels of love which diverse persons will be on. And as there are not two people having the same degree of love, one could say that each human being has her/his own degree of love and according to that each human being will have her/his own dwelling place.

So, by having us such a Master, let's get comforted, by believing doubtlessly that He will have mercy on us. God wont' overlook the tiredness of the ascesis of our asleep Fathers and of those who are still alive, but God will say: "I will spare this place for Me and for those who served Me with the whole their heart in this place". This is for I believe, without doubting, that there are some fathers in this place who can gain the mercy for God for the tens of thousands of people, and they won't be refused. The Lord will answer the ask of those who beg Him for His eyes to be upon this place (3 Kings[374] 8: 29). This is for their prayers ascend to Him like some lightnings lightening like the sunrays and they gladden the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit[375].

Therefore, let's take heed, brother, only at ourselves, for God takes care of this place. This is for this place has become a resting place for His servants, and in this place is being fulfilled the word: "Voice of gladness and of salvation in the tents of the righteous" (Ps. 117: 15[376]). Therefore, it is characteristic to the right hand of the Lord to work powerfully, and to give us strength, and to destine us to walk on the traces of our Fathers "in teaching, in living, in long-patience, in love, in patience, in persecutions, in sufferings" (2 Tim. 3: 10-11), in all the things coming to them from their enemy in felt and thought manner.

This is because, if they didn't' gain something characteristic to their life, how could they be their children? This is for the Lord Himself says: "If you were the children of Abraham, you would do Abraham's things" (Jn. 8: 39). If we do not suffer together with them, according to our power, how will

But that won't impede the communication among them who are in the same "house". On the opposite, only in such a case they will rejoice of the communication among themselves, for everyone has something of his own to tell to another, or something new to hear from another. And by that all of them will eternally ascend, as the angels do. But each of them will be on another level, and they will communicate and they will receive from other their own communication contents, and by that promoting on one another in that ascension.

[374] In KJB we have: 1 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[375] In the Volos Edition, in a note: "If the saint confesses all these things about others, all the more he may confess them about himself as well. This is for he overwhelmed everybody with his virtues and charismas".

[376] In KJB we have: Ps. 118: 15: "The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous: the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly."; in ROB we have: Ps. 117: 15: "Voice of joy and of deliverance in the tents of the righteous: "The right hand of our Lord has made power," (E. l. t.'s n.)

us be extolled together with them on that hour[377]? If we do not die together with them, by cutting off our own will[378], how will us rise together with them and waiting for hearing: "Come, you the blessed ones of My Father and inherit the Kingdom prepared for you" (Mt. 25: 34). Brother, if God fulfills our asks for we have our Fathers as guides, let's take heed lest our laziness and drowsiness or carelessness or faithlessness will separate us from them. This is for he says: "And if the faithless wants to part with you, let him party" (1 Cor. 7: 15). Let's remember Him Who said that "he who will endure to the very end, he will be saved" (Mt. 5: 18). Let's pray to God ceaselessly (1 Thes. 5: 18), in order Him not to separate us from our Fathers neither in this age or in the age to come. Where could we God if we forsook Him? What could we find better than Him? Let's not forsake the light because of searching for darkness.

[377] We won't be able to reach to be strong and free, namely to the glory of the true people, and together with Christ as man, if we haven't defeated all the things which enslave us and which show us a weak people, and if we haven't been strengthened by enduring the troubles, as Christ has strengthened His humanity by enduring His sufferings.

[378] If we do not die to that life that leads us towards death or to that life that is weak because of the egotistic passions mastering it, by cutting off our own will, a will that actually is not ours and that rather enslaves us, we won't be able to be "elevated" to the powerful and immortal life, because such a life is truly free and in loving communication with Christ God Whose humanity was the first one elevated at that immortal and eternal life, through cross and resurrection, due to the godlike hypostasis Whom His life was united with.

The human nature cannot reach this freedom and immortality by itself; this would have meant an identity of the human nature to the Godhead, in a pantheistic meaning. But God is transcendent to the world and to the man. The fact that the things of the world are submitted through them to some Laws, and the man is submitted also to some temptations, it shows that the things and the man aren't the supreme and absolute free reality. But there must be such a reality that is supreme and unsubmitted to any law or to any enslaving temptation. And such a reality must be a Person, for only a Person can be absolutely free. Neither the law is free regardless how supreme the law would be. And for the absolute freedom cannot be manifested except in love, in a love that has not shortcoming, the supreme reality must be a consummate communion among persons, namely a (pluri-)Persons communion and still consummately one. Only in communion with that supreme Person the man can receive his consummate and fully-loving freedom, by which the man to overwhelm everything than can enslaved him from the part of the world or of his body which make him affirm an autonomy that he actually doesn't have. This height has been communicated by a godlike Person of a humanity that that Person has made it How own, so that through it Him to communicate that height to all the people who want that, to a humanity which He will never part with. But the people won't be able to become free, or masters on all the things which can enslave them, if they do not want to be free by dying to everybody, though they can be free only through those ones. Into Christ the absolute freedom and the immortality, though they spring out of the transcendent godhead, they have found to themselves a ring which they are communicated to the human community through.

Let's not leave the sweetness of the honey because we take the venom of the snake. Let's not envy on ourselves and let's not hate the illness and love the death. Lest we will receive curses instead of blessings. Let's not anger Christ by serving our enemy. Let's stay awake, let's take vigil, let's step nimbly, let's always be ready, and let's wake ourselves up from the too deep sleep. Let's understand that what God has bestowed to us: not to be under the feet of the saints, but to be the saints' sons and together inheritors with the saints. Blessed is that soul who has tasted these things. Blessed in that soul who was wounded by such a love. Blessed in that soul who has been conquered by these things. Blessed in that soul who cogitates at these things. Blessed in that soul who has stuck himself with these things. Blessed in that soul who is worthy fop these things. Blessed is that soul who put its faith in these things. Blessed is that soul who is consummate in these things. This is for that soul is waited for by the joy and the gladness and the rewards in the Kingdom of Heavens, in the eternal light, there where are present the angels and the archangels and all the heavenly powers, towards the glory of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Pray for me, brother.

188. (V. 129) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one and towards the brothers living together with that one, who asked for the Great Oldman's prayer's help against the enemies, and to tell them about the life of the other Oldman: Abba John.

Rejoice into the Lord, my all cherished and all-beloved children. May the Lord fulfill your asks with many goods and weaken within you the arrow of the powerful ones and you to girdle yourselves with power (1 Kings[379] 2: 4). You amaze me that you want the benefit of your souls as I want it too, and I pray God, day and night, for the salvation of your souls. I am not saying that you don't want it, but I am saying that you do not know it. This is because from here are starting to become seen the groups and the levels and the measures; and which the inheritance will be. And as a man illustrious in the world and experienced in the things of the present life and knower of the ranks and of the honors of the soldiers, he strives to make his sons to fight for power, but his sons are inexperienced and careless and they do not know anything about the honors of the great soldiers, but they want to be masters in wielding their weapons, likewise I am doing to you too. But, forgive me because I have spoken like a mindless one. This is because, my coming to my senses, I have remembered that I am "dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27), a bag full of all evilness. And I started to mourn. What have I spoke and said above? Why has the dust and the ashes praised themselves? Still, because I have reached to say that I desire your salvation and that I desire to make myself the cause of all your good, I will do, if I can, everything I will able to do[380].

And about my of-one-soul-with-me son, about the blessed and humble obedient, who has cut off all his will to the death, what can I say to you? Our Lord said: "He who has seen Me, he has seen the Father" (Jn. 14: 9). And He said about disciple that he can do everything "as his teacher" (Lk. 10: 40): "He who has ears to hear, let him hear" (Mt. 11: 15). Forgive me and pray for me.

189. (V. 130) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman, regarding the health of Abba who was ill for a long time; and about the souly passions. And if he must visit the old man living in vicinity. And where it comes from the fact that the body feels sick.

[380] Paradoxes of the humbleness and of the love: I suffer because I reckon that I brag myself by telling you that I want your salvation and that I work for your salvation, and in the same time I rejoice myself for doing that. On the other hand, you feel the need for I to assure you about those. And I myself feel driven to give you this sign of life. I cannot do much for your salvation; but I do everything I can; and this is a big deal. The man is more comforted by the thought that somebody does everything that one can for him, than by the thought of doing everything he can for himself. It is the greatest thing to exhaust to death a helpless life for others than to help them by giving the huge surplus without feeling that you will have diminished your power by doing that. Christ worked for us not by elevating us spiritually through an almighty godlike power, but by descending Himself to the weak state of a man, but capable of dying for us. This way of working had an unparallelly greater effect that if He used the work by commandment. This is the glory of the weakness that gives everything for out of love. "The glory of Your bowing down, Christ", we sing at the Lord's Burial Service. The weak power of the body taken by Him it is being exhausted for us. But in the deed of surrendering the body it is shown the much greater deed of the spirit that wants to go infinitely and into eternity, even by accepting the death for in earthly life.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Rejoice, brother, into the Lord. Regarding the health of my son, some of the saints from here could pray for him so he wouldn't be sick even for a day, as I assured him. And it would be so. But in such a case he wouldn't have the fruits of the patience. Doesn't he know what I suffered of? Sickness, fever, troubles, until I have come to this shore of the appeasement. The sick is very beneficial to him by patience and thanking.

Regarding the passions, the man must drive his body as on a slave, in deprivations and in troubles, according to the capacity of enduring.

And visiting that brother it will be a good thing, but gossiping is a dirty thing. This deed testes you. Visit that brother but shun yourself from much-speaking, but, as in the meetings of the Holy Fathers, tell him, for instance: "How are you, Abba?". And then: "Tell us a work of the life. How can we find the path to God. Pray for me for I have many sins", and other similar things. Finally, utter a prayer and leave him in peace.

The body's burden comes out of the evil mixing between your drowsiness and that heaviness coming from the devils. May the Lord strengthen you in order you to fight them according to the law and you to be crowned (2 Tim. 2: 5) into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen. Pray for me, brother.

190 (V. 131) An answer of the Great Oldman towards the same one: Brother, you told me: "I am sick in my soul and in my body". Bu why then don't you confess your sins so that you to become healthy in you will? You do not know what is beneficial to the soul and to the body. But what is beneficial to your will cannot be known better that you, even by tens of thousands of specialists. Don't you see that I am biting you continuously? If you can, endure that. This is for I am speaking like a mindless one: And because I am speaking like that you are speaking to me likewise. And by talking to you, I am showing that I do not know what is beneficial to me[381]. May the [381] The best method to heal up the egotistic will is the patience, which there is another will in. That is an experience that nobody can live it as much as does it him who practices the patience. Only him lives that effort. Barsanuphius reckoned the advices he gave through his Lord give us understanding in all things. Forgive me and pray for me.

191. (V. 132) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman, asking also for the Great Oldman's payers: I pray you, honored Father, tall me what is the good will and what is the bad will? In order I to be able to understand your holy words. And forgive me and pray for me, in order I to be delivered from devil and from the disturbance he causes me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, "all the resting of the body is disgusting to our God" (Paterikon, Pimen 38). This is for Himself said: "Narrow and full of troubles is that way that leads to life" (Mt. 7: 18). So, in choosing this narrow path it consists the good will. And him who keeps this path he chooses to himself a willing trouble in everything, according to his power. Don't you know what the Apostles says: "I torment my body and I bear it enslaved" (1 Cor. 9: 27)? Can you see that even without the body wanting that, the Apostle drives his body enslaved by his will? He who had this good will of the salvation, he must mix in everything a little trouble. For instance: I have the occasion to sleep on a wool mattress, but I choose to torment myself a little, if this can be reckoned as a torment, so that I choose to sleep on a strows mattress that is a little harder; and this is only for the helplessness of my body, being I ashamed by the fact that others sleep on the floor, or on a board, or others put under their heads a pillow of corn stalks, as the one among saints Arsenius (Paterikon, Arsenius 36), and letters as equally numerous bites and him who endures those patiently, he will heal his will as it is due. That will that doesn't accept the advice it is a weak will, a will that doesn't work towards strengthening that man and towards peace among people. But the saints take upon himself the guilt of his brother who doesn't accept patiently the advices given to him. This is for the Saint challenges that one, by his will to teach, to reach in the defense of his will. These are the impasses often appearing among people. I want to teach another to renounce to his own will, in his benefit. But maybe him sees in that, and not wrongly, my impulse to impose him my will. He who advises another, he must reach a humbleness making totally obvious the fact that he doesn't advises except when insistently asked for, and only in the benefit of him who asks for that advice, and thus he will be able to avoid a bad effect both upon him and upon his brother. But, in order somebody to insistently ask for an advice and for him to follow that advice, him too is required to having reached a peak of the humbleness. That is a road that both of them must travel, in order they to be able to use one another without any danger, in order to avoid the friction among people in the practice of advising one another.

like many others like him. Others slept by leaning their heads on brambles, choosing that torment to themselves. Have I nearby the water I use for cooking? I must choose, as a lover of tormenting myself, a water source that is farer, so that I will bring a little trouble to my body. Can I eat good and clean bread? I must choose the second-hand bread, so that I to torment myself a little, by remembering them who didn't taste anything cooked, and especially reminding our Master Jesus Who tasted the gall and the vinegar for me. This is that will according to God. And that will according to body it searches for resting in all the opposite things. Don't you understand what are we saying? Behold, I am saying to you: "Shut quickly that door, so that I won't catch a cold". Or: "Brother, you have smoked the food and I cannot eat it", and other similar things. This is the evil will. You must cut off this will and you will be saved. And if you are tormented by it, you must blame yourself and agree your neighbor[382].

You lazy brother, trust the Lord, that "my soul has got thinned like the nets of a spider" (Ps. 38: 15[383]). One gains his salvation with tiredness. And how much deceives himself him who thinks that he will be saved despite him resting in everything! If you toil a little together with me, I will pray God to fulfill your ask. And when you remember God and His saints, the devil and his disturbance will get far from you. If I said that I do not pray the Lord to strengthen you and to give you power in all the good things, I would lie. But "the Kingdom of god belongs to them who strive themselves" (Mt. 11: 12). If we do not force ourselves a little, how could we be saved[384]? Or, how [382] If you are defeated by your evil will, by your lust, and by your desire for comfort, you won't be able to liberate yourself from those without admitting that yourself are guilty and by agreeing another, namely inversely to what you are doing like when fulfilling the will of the evil one, while thinking that you would actually fulfill your own will.

[383] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 11: "When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth: surely every man is vanity. Selah."; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 15: "And You have thinned up his soul like a spider net; but vainly gets trouble any earthling." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[384] The Kingdom of God belongs to them whoa re powerful in their kindness, in their gentleness, in their humbleness, and in they consummate generosity; the Kingdom of God belongs to those who are powerful in their will of not searching for satisfying their pride and passions, and to those who have been made emperors but they have contributed too to become emperors over themselves. It is always mentioned the "strengthening" and the "power" given by God to those ones. They commit an act of power, of "force" upon themselves, in order they to get rid of their condition as rags, of slaved to their own passions and anger and could the prayer power of the saints to gain many things, if it didn't work with the deed (Jas. 5: 16)? Pray for me, brother.

192. (V. 133) The answer of the other Oldman towards the same one and towards the brother living together with that brother.

May our Lord Jesus Christ our God to bless you "with all the spiritual blessing" (Eph. 1: 3) and with the grace of the righteousness[385]. Himself is to me a testimony that I want the resting of any man, and especially yours. I am talking to you as to ones of-the-same-soul with me[386], to you who want to willingly walk on the way which we have been walking on, deprived and troubled for His name. Brother, I do not remember myself taking this path for I have found in it the consummate resting, but we have been always mixing in it a little narrowing and trouble of any sorts, because of fearing Him Who says: "You have taken the good things during your earthly life" (Lk. 16: 25) and "Through many troubles must we enter the Kingdom of God" (Acts 14: 22). And this was despite we have been having a lot of money. Himself knows that we have been living in poverty for Him Who has made Himself poor for us (2 Cor. 4: 9). It is not good for us to rest ourselves in anything. He who wants such thing he lives to himself and not to God. This is because one like this cannot cut off his will. Pray for me, brothers.

193. (V. 134-135) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, my Abba, I am suffering of thoughts since morning to almost the second hour, and I do not know where this one comes to me. And tell this too: How can the devil depict in my imagination the face of a woman or of somebody else? That image is right in the thought and they do not come to me separately, but together. And what should I do to liberate myself from those?

greediness, and they to get rid of their quality of toys to all sorts of contrary forced, of demons, and to get rid of their own delusion that by fulfilling their own will they would be powerful.

[385] With the whole grace that makes you righteous, and that fill you up with all virtues.

[386] The French translation usually renders the Greek expression ομόφυχος by "as to myself". That means: I feel you, or I live you as on myself.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, if somebody sits without working, he will be occupied with the thoughts coming to him. And if somebody works, he won't find time to receive those thoughts. Therefore, you must wake up early morning and take you mill under your mastery and mill with it your wheat for the bread of your food[387]. This is for, if your enemy takes if before you, you will mill into your mill tares instead of wheat[388].

As about the second question, brother, the painters depict faces by using colors. And if the board which those faces have been painted on, it come to it natural state, those images will disappear. Liberating yourself of those images means stopping in advance the painting of your board. Let's fight and do what it depends on our power and God will come and help us. Pray for me and forgive me into the Lord.

194. (V. 80) The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman for praying for him and of the ones living with him.

The answer of Barsanuphius: My beloved children, I am embracing you into the Lord, and I pray the Lord to guard you against all evil and to give to you patience as to Job and grace as to Josephus, and gentleness as to Moses and manhood in wars as to Joshua Navi (Sirach 46: 1[389]) and mastery upon your thoughts as to Judges and power of submission as to David and Solomon and mastery upon the land as to Israelis who have brought peace into it; may it be given to you the forgiveness of your sins together with the health of your bodies as to the many who had palsy (Mt. 9: 2-6) and may Him escape you from the storm as He did to Peter (Mt. 14: 31); may Him deliver you from troubles as He did to Paul (2 Tim. 3: 11) and to the other [387] In the Volos Edition: "The mill is the mind. If the man has within his mind good and useful thoughts, he won't be able to occupy himself with evil thoughts".

[388] The mind is continuously milling and it nourished itself with that what it mills. If the mind mills evil thoughts, it will get poisoned by those. In addition to that, the thought related to things are monotonous, because of not elevating the man in ever new areas. The thought which the man plans worldly arrangements though, they help him succeed ever better, but the man still remain within those thoughts' limited horizon.

Apostles; may Him shelter you against all evil as on His true sons and may Him fulfill the asks of your hearts towards the benefit of your soul and of your body in His name. Amen. Pray for me.

195. (V. 136) The ask and the begging of the same one addressed to the same Great Oldman to pray for being given him those goods fitting the soul.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I rejoice into the Lord and the Lord rejoices into me when good asks are made by my children to me. Namely for the salvation of the soul and for the eternal life. Therefore, you and your ghost must rejoice too, brother, for I have made you a soldier in an exquisite army, so that you to ceaselessly be in the treasury of the untold goods. And you are in that even from now. Therefore, take heed at gaining shiny vestments fitting the army's honor, so that you won't be removed from that army; a humble and wise heart and a well-composed face stranger to any angry or mirky movement. This is for such things need the servants who are in such a place: to be estranged from passions and dressed up in wedding vestments, so that they won't be removed form that place with a big disgrace.

Behold, therefore, that you have joined the army. Do not reject it. That depends on you. I have brought you into the army, you must not leave it. I have separated you from the ones from on the right hand, you must not mix yourself again with those. I have blessed you, so that you must not search for the curse. I have asked you to serve as a soldier in untold and righteous and clean treasuries, but the Ghost told me that it wasn't the time yet. But if somebody strive to make the left as the right and to make the former man as a new man, towards receiving the Holy and Worshipped Ghost, the Ghost will tec ah him all things and He will guide him in such tents where only a few people enter, due to his high obedience, gentleness, and patience[390]. Therefore, you mustn't be lazy, but you must work.

[390] The virtues are a whole (but a whole matching each man). The whole man is elevated on always a new level of knowing himself and the reality, in ever higher and more luminous areas. In those is not active only the man, but also the Holy Ghost. This is for the man is not alone in everything the man does. In evil deeds he is together with the seen and unseen evil ones, and under their influence, or imprinted by their influences. In the good deeds the man is

And you must not prepare to you that food that rots, but you must prepare to yourself that food that remains for the eternal life and that nourished the eternal life into Christ our lord into Whom you must always strengthen yourself, my blessed brother.

196. (V. 137) The same one asked the same Great Oldman to pray for him and top show him how can one become worthy of the clean and spiritual life.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All-beloved brother into the Lord, God have given us to walk without difficulty on the way of His wills that leads us to the eternal life. And I am telling you what this is and what can we gain it like, to that us to achieve the eternal goods. Our Lord Jesus Christ said: "Ask, and you will be given, search, and you will find, knock on the door and it will be open to you" (Mt. 7: 7). Therefore, pray to our good God for Him to send us His Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and the Ghost will teach us about everything. And he will unveil us all mysteries. You must ask for yourself to be guided by the Ghost. And so the Ghost won't leave within your heart any straying or disturbance; the Ghost won't leave into you thinking any sadness or sigh. The Ghost will enlighten your eyes and H will uphold your heart and He will elevate your mind. You must stick yourself with Him. You must believe Him. You must love Him. This is for the Ghost makes wise even the mindless, and He sweetens the understanding and He gives power and He teaches and He bestows the word and He gives joy and justice and long-patience and gentleness and love and peace. So, you have the strong Rock, so you must not get discouraged. This is because the winds and the rains and the rivers won't be able to tear down that house build on this Rock. You have the Great Helmsman Who rebukes the winds and the sea and He appeases them. And the ship is guarded not to sink. You have the Good Teacher Who commands you not to look behind but you to stretch towards the things ahead. Behold the impossible together with the good ones, seen and unseen, together with the people on earth and with the saints bodily moved away from us, but he is especially with the Holy Ghost as godlike Person actively penetrating the deepest and - in a way - not fully conscious intimacy of ours. And as He elevated us to the things of the good, He open within us other horizons of the infinite good comprised in Him.

to steal treasure, behold the impossible to tear down tower. What do you praise me for? This is because I couldn't reach those if I do not defeat my anger and if I do not chock up my wrath and if I do not gain that state of serenity which God rests Himself in. Therefore, let's leave the cunningness and let's impropriate the innocence. Let's dig deep and let's plan into our field that fruitful vine and let's prepare ourselves for the wine of the gladness, so that by getting us drunk with it, we to forget our troubles and our pains which want to master upon us towards our soul's perdition[391].

Brother, the will of our Master is that us to be saved. Why don't we want that? You just always pray for a long time so that the grace of the Ghost to com to us. By being the Fathers filled up with His joy, they stock themselves with the Ghost shouting out with a consummate love: "Who will separate us from the love of Christ?" (Rom. 8" 35). And they answered: "Nothing will be able to do that". Let's therefore love, in order us to be loved; let's come closer in order us to be received; let's humble us very much in order us to be elevated (Mt. 23: 12): let's cry in order us to laugh (Lk. 6: 21); let's get sad in order us to rejoice; let's weep in order us to be comforted (Mt. 5: 5). Let's pray the Ghost to come to us in order Him to guide us to the whole truth (Jn. 16: 13). This is for is not lying Him who says: "Ask and you will be given" (Jn. 16: 24). May the Lord help us in everything with His mercy, in order us to find out who we are and what we need and what we must want[392]. To Him is due the glory forever. Amen.

197. (V. 111) The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman to pray God to help him advance.

[391] That is the drunkenness brought by the Holy Ghost upon Apostles at Pentecost. That is in the same time the enthusiasm for the totally new state of happiness born out of living the understanding of some high realities, and also born out of forgetting about the grey reality usually appearing to us as an impossible to defeat narrowness.

[392] You couldn't really know on yourself if you do not know God. You need the endless light of God, in order you to see where you are, to see which target you must advance to, and you to see which path you must walk on. If you do not know your own purpose, you won't know on yourself either. If you do not know your responsibility to the supreme forum, you won't know yourself. If the light of an all-comprising horizon is not projected upon you, you won't understand on yourself.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, pray the kindness of Him Who "wants all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4), to give you that spiritual watchfulness that light up the spiritual fire which He came to cast on earth (Lk. 12: 49), He Who is the Master of the heavens of the earth. And together with you I too am praying God, according to my power, for Him Who gives everyone what they ask for with tiredness and with much desire, to destine you too this gift. And by coming Him, He will guide you into truth. This is for He lightens the eyes and He straightens the mind and He banishes away the sleep of the drowsiness and of the carelessness and He makes sparking the ascetics' weapons previously covered by the poisonous rust of the idleness, and He makes their shiny their vestments previously dirtied in the slavery of the barbarians; He makes them feel disgusted of the bringer-of-death ugliness and He makes them desire to be satiated with the spiritual sacrifice brought by our Great Hierarch Who the prophet said about that He cleans up the sins and He erased the lawlessness (Ps. 50: 3[393]). To them who cry He destines to, and them who are humble He bestows the desired things; He waits for the worthy ones to give Himself to them, in order they to inherit through Him the eternal life in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Pray for me, brother.

198. (V. 112) The same one askes the same Great Oldman to pray for him in order him to be found worthy of "bearing within himself the killing of Christ" (2 Cor. 4: 10).

The answer of Barsanuphius: I joyfully pray God to fulfill to you this good ask of yours. And I believe that God will fulfill your ask. This is for He is not a liar when saying: "Ask and you will be given" (Mt. 7: 7). May God, therefore, fulfill your asks. Amen. But you too must take care of make a little effort for that. This is for, like them who want to be given high clerk positions by the Emperor, even if they have many supporters at the Emperor, until they succeed, they will endure troubles and dangers and toils, so that you too must make a little effort in order you to be given the great mercy. This is for "much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 14). Tell to your brother that is together with you, to my beloved into the Lord: endure a little, for the Lord always rebukes you and by that He bestows you a great mercy. Do not cease rebuking on yourself. "This is for him whom the Lord love, the Lord rebukes him" (Prov. 3: 12; Hebr. 12: 6-7). I am embracing all of you into the Lord and I ask you to pray for me out of love.

[393] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 2: "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 3: "More strongly wash me up of my lawlessness and clean me up of my sin." (E. l. t.'s n.)

199. (V. 113) The same one asked the Great Oldman to pray for him in order him to get out of the former man.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Listen to me, my beloved brother, and make your heart to guard the godlike words uttered you not from a man, but from the Holy Ghost. Jesus is the Doctor of our souls and bodies. If you have any wound, I am taking you to Him and I pray Him to heal you up, if you too want that[394]. This is for He is the Giver of all good gifts. And He fulfills not only your asks but much more than you ask for. This is for Jesus is the Son of God and the light and the power Who embodies Himself from the Holy Virgin Mary, and Who showed Himself on earth and he lived with the people and "He brought on Himself living and well-pleasant to God sacrifice" (Rom. 12: 2), and our Father "to make us to himself a chosen people, aspiring to good deeds" (Tit. 2: 14), "imperial priesthood, holy nation" (1 Pt. 2: 9). He Who has endured these for us, He has left us an example of patience and He rejoices when we ask Him (for following Him)[395]. Therefore, I pray Him to enlighten your [394] The healing is given by God and the man cannot give his healing to himself; but God doesn't give the healing against man's will. Properly-said, it doesn't suffice the man not to resist God's work, but the man must receive that work by rejoicing of it. This is for the power of God doesn't disregard the man/s will, for God wants the man too to grow up spiritually; and the power of God is bestowed through God's Person-like's will, and it is not overpoured as a nature's force upon the man. The man's rejoicing of the work of God it is influenced by this work. But the man still can oppose it, so that the man opposed to reach in the situation of rejoicing himself of that power. The man's part cannot be separated from God's part. They form a whole. But in this whole of the savior work from within man there must be the man's part as well.

[395] How could Jesus not rejoice Himself when we ask Him for helping us to resemble Him? By this we become brothers of His and we together-inheritors with Him of the Father's Kingdom. That's why He made Himself man and He brought Himself as sacrifice as man, by heart. But you too must toil and sweat. This is for the Son of God says: "Come to Me all of you who are burdened and I will rest you" (Mt. 11: 28)[396]. I am getting close to Him with much dare. But if you do not come closer to Him at your turn, I will feel a great shame[397]. Jesus doesn't reject anybody. He rewarded even the workers who came on the eleventh hour (Mt. 20: 6). Stuck yourself with Him and do yourself a little effort in order you to take the reward, and that reward might be equal to anybody's else. The Son of God made Himself man for you, you too must become god for Him[398]. This is for He wants this, but totally consummately surrendering Himself to the Father, as us too to be able to do that our of His power, by renouncing us to our egotism, and by surrendering ourselves to the Father and to one another. All Barsanuphius's advices are Christocentric. The image of Christ is the target which we advance towards in our efforts of consummation, and out of Him we take the power to do that. Especially out of His power that culminated in enduring the cross, we too take power to endure.

[396] Maybe we are asked here a partaking to the toil of him who prays for us, but it might be also that we are asked to be partakers to the toil of Chrit, as one could deduce out of the things said further on. Jesus is praying even now for us to the Father, by presenting His sacrifice as ground for that, as one can see from the Epistle towards Jews (7: 24-25).

[397] He who prays for somebody who doesn't make himself something for achieving what he asks for from God, he will turn back from Christ empty handed and ashamed. This is because that one doesn't open himself in order to receive the things asked for him from Christ. So, even the care for not seeing your brother ashamed, whom you have asked to pray for you to, you must do yourself something in order him not to get ashamed. You cannot be in the pub feasting, while a friend intervenes to somebody to get you a job, guaranteeing for you. If God sees another person asking something for you but you are unworthy of that, God won't give you what that person asks for you.

[398] He descended to what you are in order Him not to leave you there where you are, but in order Him to elevate you forever there where He is. But he doesn't do this without you willing it. Do yourself something so that Him to be able to elevate you to His state, for He has given you power to do yourself something on that purpose. The Son of the Heavenly Emperor has come to you in order Him to elevate you to the dignity of son of the Emperor and equal to Himself. You must receive what you are given. You must receive the power for Him in order you too to become powerful. He offers you a great honor, you must not refuse it. And this is in order you not to make His descent, His toil, His sacrifice in vain, by laughing at those. How much gentleness is shown in this love report instituted by the Son of God with us, by making Himself man! He bestows us the happiness in order us to rejoice of it. But he shows us that by doing us so we bring joy to Him too, for He makes us happy not only for our joy but also for His joy. The happiness flows out of Him and not out of ourselves. This means that his human nature is borne by a godlike hypostasis. But He ties His joy as Man to the receiving by us of the happiness He is bringing to us. By and large, our happiness would not be complete if there wasn't somebody else to rejoice for our happiness, and if we didn't try to bring happiness to others too through our happiness. Christ will rejoice if our happiness will increase others' happiness. Egotistically tasing the happiness isn't actually a happiness. The happy one is envied by others, and the happy one who doesn't communicate his happiness to others he won't be fully happy. Christ come to consummate the mode of our happiness according to the model of thew happiness of the Holy Trinity.

you too must want it. I too am praying for you in order you to be liberated form the former man. But you too must do something for that. God have given you mind, you too must give Him your mind in order Him to elevate your mind to heavens, so that your mind will cogitate at the realities from above, there where He is. This is for I too am praying for you to reach together with everybody "who love His name" (Ps. 68: 40[399]). On this way one could be liberated from his former man.

Jesus told His apostles: "You are the salt of the earth" (Mt. 5: 13). He called earth the body. This is for it is said: "Duts you are and into dust you will return" (Gen. 3: 19). Yourself must become salt, by salting and by drying the rottenness from within you, and by killing the worms, namely the good thoughts form within yourself. And if you do this, I will toil together with you to salt they together with you, in order they not to spread their stench, by increasing some through others. God, our Savior, He wants us to be saved. But it is our duty to ceaselessly shout out: "Save me, Lord!"[400]. And He will save you. This is for some ones shouted out and they reached "the shore of His will" (Ps. 106: 30[401])[402]. I hope you too will enter there, if you give me your hand according to your power[403]. This is for, by doing so, you too will reach there, according to him who said: "So you must run that you to grab: (1 Cor. 9: 24). Pray for me, in order I not to be condemned as one who talks but who he doesn't do what he talks about.

[399] In KB we have: Ps. 69: 36: "The seed also of his servants shall inherit it: and they that love his name shall dwell therein."; in ROB we have: Ps. 68: 40: "And the nation of His believers will master it and they who love His name will inhabit it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[400] In the conscience of our helplessness of existing and of saving ourselves by out power, there is the conscience that God has created us and He upholds us and He saves us. BY this we open ourselves to His power. Of our humbleness consists the possibility of our openness to God so that God to fill us up with power.

[401] In KJB we have: Ps. 107: 30: "Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven."; in ROB we have: Ps. 106: 30: "And they got gladdened, for the waves got appeased and thew Lord guided them to the desires shore." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[402] He who enters the God's will, or inside the things wanted by God, he will enter the quietude, for he will have entered that area where the live I not menaced by death.

[403] I am holding you by hand, but you too must hold me by hand as tight and you can. This matches also the union between the power given you by God and the power produced within us by His power. His power holds us up, but only if we want to be held up by it, and only if we too make efforts to hold ourselves on it. We must use all the power we have, or all the power wakened up by Him within us in order us to desire that power and us to open ourselves to it.

200. (V. 114) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman about the diverse thoughts and about the true path to God.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All the things you have been writing me for I to ask God for them through my fewness, my non-worker brother, all those asks of your keep piling up: to liberate yourself of the former man and to reach the holiness of your soul and of your body and you to be saved with all the saints into the Kingdom of God. This is actually that measure that I showed it to you: you to deliver yourself and you to clean yourself of your former man. And I, mastered by my love, I will pray God to give you much more than you have asked for (Eph. 3: 20). And if you do not impede God through your drowsiness and through your carelessness[404], and you will wonder and you will extoll God for the way he will move you from inexistence to existence[405]. May God forgive you for the sins you have committed and may Him prepare forgiveness for you, for the things you have done after those.

Regarding the night-hallucinations, they are from the devil who tempts you because he envies you. The devil wants to mock you because you repent to God. The devil wants to show you that the repentance has no power. But yourself too must not bend down. This is for you have a great help in the prayers of the saints. When you are kidnapped by word or by deed to do [404] We impede God to do His cleaning work upon us and to endow us with His gifts, not only by resisting Him directly and willingly, but also by remaining drowsy and careless and by not wanting to become powerful us too. This is for God wants us too to become powerful subjects, by using us His power. Not doing this is another stubbornness of ours opposing God. God lets Himself to be impeded by our drowsiness, for He doesn't want to lower us to the inferior level of some objects forcedly "saved". If we do not want ourselves too to be strong, and if we do not make efforts on this purpose, God cannot make us strong without us willing it. The lazy one doesn't oppose but he neither collaborates. One falls under the level of the human being by laziness as well.

[405] Being drowsy, not wanting to progress as itself your nature asks you to, it means letting yourself mastered and carries away like you would be an object. Bu by being a man you cannot be reduced though, by idleness, to the total state as object, but you will become the slave of your passions. Being drowsy means letting yourself be locked un in the prison of the helplessness and of the boring monotony, it means falling off the fulness of the existence in an apparent existence, in a nightmare, which you will no longer be able to make any liberation gesture, but there will be done with you – though it will seem to you that you are the one committing those – there will be done things which won't actually be done by yourself. This is the souly death on earth and then, as a peak of this death, it comes the eternal death.

wrong to somebody, you must force yourself to bow down before that one and God, by seeing that, He will cover you up against your enemies.

Regarding the foods, let's not take too much care of our body. This is because sometimes happened this to be a war from the devils, in order they to throw us into worries and, by persevering us into worries us to forsake the goods placed in front of us.

And about the true way towards God, I must not talk now to you about it for bringing you to despair. But you must believe that God will save you as a gift, through the prayers of the saints. This is for the prayer of the saints can make God lenient. Pray for me, brother.

201. (V. 115) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman about idleness and about other thoughts.

The answer of Barsanuphius: God Who is the only One without sin, and "Who saves them who believe in Him" (Dan. 13: 60), may Him strengthen your love in order you to serve Him with holiness and with righteousness on all the days of your life (Lk. 1: 75) on the altar of the inward man, there where one brings to God thought sacrifices: gold, incense, and myrrh, and there where is being sacrificed the fattened calf and there where it is sprayed with the honored blood of the unblemished Lamb, there where one hears the voices full of harmony of the holy angels[406]. "Then they will put calves on Your altar" (Ps. 50:

[406] This inward altar of the man, which Mark the Ascetic also (About Baptism / The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 282) and Kallistos the Patriarch (Heads about Prayer / The Romanian Philokalia, volume VIII, p. 328) - both of them - spoke about, it is not separated from the heavenly altar. That mind that is open to God it will communicate with the heavens where Christ is the Supreme Hierarch Who bring the supreme sacrifice to the Father, on the altar of the human heart, there where Christ stays in the consummate love of His Father for Him as man, and therefore also for us; that is the glorious sacrifice for the untold love manifested in it for us, by all the angelic groups. That man who feels this in his union with Christ, that man is himself penetrated by hat state of the Lamb who sacrifices Himself, and that man too will become gentler in this state of sacrifice. "The Kingdom of Heavens is within you". Together with Christ the Lamb, the man himself as a lamb brings sacrifice to God on the altar of his heart all his thoughts and feelings as some calves. The man is united at that spiritual height with the Father and also with all the saints and with all the people who are doing the same thing. The first one embraces him, and the last ones will be embraced by Him, spiritually, with love.

20[407]). "Then" ... when?! Then when our Lord comes, the Great Hierarch Who brings the bloodless sacrifice and he received it[408], then when in His name it is heard - by the ears of the man with palsy who stays at the beautiful gate of the temple – the joyful voice: "Stand up and walk" (Acts 3: 6)[409]. Then "He enters the temple, walking and jumping and praising God" (Acts 3: 8). Then ends the sleep of the idleness and of the nescience. Then the five wise virgins light up their candles and they enter, singing, together with the Bridegroom, the holy chamber of wedding (Mt. 25: 6, 10). Then the wise virgins urge on one another signing without disturbance: "Taste and see for the Lord is good. Blessed in the man who hopes in Him" (Ps. 33: 8[410])[411]. Then the wars and the defilements and the (passionate) impulses cease, and the holy peace of the quietude of the Holy Trinity becomes master[412]. And the treasure[413] is sealed and it will remain unrobbed. Pray yourself in order you to understand, to reach it and to rejoice of it into Christ Jesus our Lord. Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

[407] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 19: "Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt offering and whole burnt offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 20: "Then You will accept the sacrifice of the righteousness, the offerings, and the total burnings; then they will put calves on Your altar." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[408] God brings Himself sacrifice as man and He receives Himself as God.

[409] The man with palsy in this case is that one who stays next to him whose house has become temple where our Lord has come and brings sacrifices. Christ raised him up from the palsy keeping him helpless in the slavery of his passions. He is being filled up now with power, he becomes healthy, so that he can use the resources of his nature. He can walk in good thoughts and deeds, united with Him whom Christ is within.

[410] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 8: "O taste and see that the Lord is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.": in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 8: "Taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man who hopes in Him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[411] The whole liturgy is a song of joy raised by the believer to God, in their communion with one another, for they are imparted with the All-Good One, and for they have been imparted with Him. The wise virgins are, during their earthly life, those souls who allow themselves to be influenced by Christ, souls who spread the light of Him Who is within them as in a temple.

[412] Into the Holy Trinity the love is peace, for there is the supreme unity in love among Trinity's Persons, for in this love They have everything. He who by fighting the wars which tempt him, wars coming him from thoughts and from worries related to the world, he will advance in quietude, he will advance into the peace of the Holy Trinity.

[413] The treasure of the goods and of the gifts from the Holy Trinity, which are given to that man who have been elevated to quietude by defeating his temptations by restraint, by patience, by humbleness, and by love. The treasure of these goods have become steadfast within such a man, and it is sealed within him by the long fighting for it.

202. (V. 116) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman about the hidden temptation and about advancing.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I wonder about your love, brother, because you do not know the plots of the devils. As God confessed to Job the devils got man against Job. And when the devils found out that the child was about to be cleaned, the devils shook him (Mk. 9: 26). Likewise, when I see someone progressing, the devils tempt him because they envy him. But they do not tempt him who progresses by deed, because this one defeated the devils. But the devils tempt, with the lenience of God, on him who has started to advance by the grace of the prayers of the saints, so that he will know his weakness and he won't get proud for this gift. And there are numerous armies ordered ones above others, likewise there are many dwelling places at the Father of the lights placed ones above others. Because, if there weren't so, why would they be numerous?[414] May God strengthen you in His fear. Pray for me.

203. (V. 117) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman about the progress of the soul and about him advising a brother and about the trust in him who is their common Father.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Believe me, my all-beloved one, that due to God you are not staying outside the gates of the Kingdom of Heavens. But you must carefully take heed at yourself in order you not to be removed from there. This is for it belong to God to bring inside that man whom the saints pray for, but it depends on that man to remain there and not to be removed from there[415]. And by the will of God, I am gradually lead you towards the peaks. So, you must have courage into the [414] The fear of God strengthens the man, and it doesn't annul the man. This is for the fear of God makes the man fighting everything that enslaves him, in order the man to be free out of God and for God, in order the man to receive within himself the high riches of God. God likes receiving the love from the man who is strong in his freedom, and not from a slave.

[415] The prayers of others for us take us into the Kingdom od God, but only our own deeds will stabilize us there, by giving our person stability in good.

Lord and you must walk zealously on His path, and you will be helped by Him in His name.

As about that brother, you must behave to him with a humble heart and you will speak to him if God sends something within your heart in order you to tell it to that brother. Think at the fact that, because it was necessary, God opened even the mouth of the donkey (Num. 22: 28). And if everything is from God, you will attribute to God the benefit coming to your brother through you. And if God sees your humbleness, He will place on your account the payment for that advice, despite being Him the One Who gave that word to your mouth[416]. Thus, he will be fulfilled to you what was written: "A brother helped by a brother are like a fortified stronghold surrounded by walls" (Prov. 18: 19). Our Lord Jesus Christ will help us to do every good thing. Regarding the most-unimportant servant among all, if God has bestowed you the trust in that one, God is Him Who gives the increase and the guarding[417]. This is for the all-unimportant one cannot unveil mysteries to people, but "God makes all things in everybody" (1 Cor. 15: 28). Forgive me, brother, and pray for me.

204. (V. 118) The question of the same brother towards the other Oldman: What should do him who wants to appease himself in withdrawal for the name given to you. This is because of fearing that such a name above his actual condition will cause him losses, as the Fathers said: "Woe to that man whose name is above his work" (Paterikon, Silvan 10). And if he must talk to some people or to nobody at all.

The answer of John: The name of the glory which are above work had by somebody do not harm him who doesn't enjoy the said things or who doesn't approve those, as neither him who is accused of committing a homicide won't be found guilty if he hasn't committed that crime. One like this must [416] God sand the man reciprocally attribute the good advice. Only the man's humbleness, who attributed everything he receives to God, it truly can give good advices. God, at His turn, he attributed to the man's humbleness the serving brought by the man to God as humble tool of the advices given by God Himself.

[417] This all-unimportant servant if Barsanuphius himself. He humbly speaks about himself at the third person. He answers the affirmation of the brother about trusting him, by telling him that the brother must trust God Who has given him power.

think that: "They have this opinion about me because of not knowing who I really am".

And talking to some people but not to other people, or rejecting some people while welcoming others, it will make that one to make differences among people. But him who totally reject this worry – I am talking according to my stupidity – he does right, by knowing his helplessness[418].

205. (V. 119) the question of the same one towards the same Oldman: I pray you, honored Father, descend to my helplessness, and if somebody among the fathers wants to come and enter my monastic cell in order to do me a prayer, allow me to receive him. This is for I see myself as burdened by idleness. Allow me to do that until God will strengthen my soul through your prayers.

The answer of John: I pray your love, my brother, not to throw me upwards, for I am mindless and I will get proud. And I must realize that I am low. When you tall me "descend", it means that I would sit into height. But don't you know that I am required (by God) to be lower than any man? He who is beneath he will have not place where to descend lower.

You have the advice of the Holy Apostle: "Examining all the things, you will keep the good" (1 Thes. 5: 21). Everything a man does out of his fear for God, it will be beneficial to his soul. So, if you benefit out of meeting another, I do not impede you from this beneficial thing. But among those coming to you in order to pray for you and to be beneficial to you, I reckon myself useless. Besides, either you meet other or not, may God to strengthen your true love. Why am I counted among the people useful to others, while I am searching that for myself? My joy it is your gain[419]. So, by meeting and by benefitting of those [418] He who avoid talking to all people he will no longer be worried about choosing whom to talk.

[419] I am not praying only for your benefit – says John – but for myself as well. This is for by making you benefit out of my prayers I too gain out of the love which I am doing those prayer with. And thus, what is a gain to you it will be beneficial to me as well, and therefore I must rejoice of that too, especially if I ascertain that my prayer has been listened too. But as one can see out of the following phrase, the author of the letter reckoned that he gained out of the benefit brought to the addressee by them who visit the addressee, for he asked those to pray for himself. Of this intertwining of everybody in prayer it consists the benefit of all.

meetings with the saints who come to visit you, ask them to pray for me as well, out of love. That's why I reckon that meeting people in the name of God it is a good thing; while also avoiding to meet people for the name of God it is a good thing[420]. May God keep you healthy.

206. (V. 138) The same one, after he cut off the meetings with many, he tries to meet a certain one. So, he asked the same Oldman: Because I like somebody and that one wants to meet me, should I meet you or not?

The answer of John: If you live somebody, what do you have against others? Why don't you meet all of them" Is there any reason for that? Take heed at what soul you are in, and if you want, you could meet that one, but while rebuking on yourself. Pray for me.

207. (V. 120) Of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Asking the Great Oldman to pray for him and asking about the consummate quietude (withdrawal).

The answer of Barsanuphius: Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the blessed and highest God, may give you power and may strengthen you for receiving His Holy Ghost, so that through His good dwelling Him to teach you about all things and Him to enlighten your hearts and Him to guide you into truth (Jn. 16: 13) in order I to see you flourishing as the palm trees in the Paradise of God and you to be like some olive trees full of fruits (Ps. 51: 7[421]) in the middle of the saints and "as a true whole fruiting vine" (Jer. 2: 21) in the godlike place. Mey the Lord make you worthy of drinking out of thy "wisdom spring" (Prov. 18: 4). This is for, as man as have drunk out of it, they have forgotten about themselves, by exiting whole out of [420] When you meet other people inn order you to ask them to pray for you and for the people who are absent, or in order you to pray together with them, that is a good thing. But if you do not meet them, in order you to be able to pray to God in quietude, that is a good thing too.

[421] In KJB we have: Ps. 52: 8: "But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God: I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever."; in ROB we have: ps. 51: 7: "But I, as a fruiting olive tree in the house of God, I have hoped for the mercy of God, ever and forever and ever." (E. l. t.'s n.)

their former man[422]. And from the spring of the wisdom, they have been guided to another spring, that spring of the love that never falls (1 Cor. 13: 8). And elevated on this level they have achieved the non-strayed and unscattered measure, and reached to be whole in their mind and in their eyes and wholly alive and wholly luminous, and wholly consummate, and wholly gods[423]. Did the saints toil? Now they have been extolled, they have been glorified, they have been filled up with shininess. They have reached to life because they have died. They are gladdened and they gladden themselves[424]. They are gladdened in the unseparated Trinity and they gladden the powers from height[425]. You must wish to reach their level, you must ascend together with them, you must aspire to their faith, you must gain their humbleness, you must achieve their patience in all things, so that you will receive their inheritance. Keep their love unfallen, in order you to find in the untold goods "the things the [422] That former man of the sins, he thinks too much at himself in egotistic sense. He who drinks out of the godlike spring of the true wisdom, he will forget about thinking at himself in this egotistic meaning, but he will discover his true self and the dependence of his self on God, so that he will place the accent not on his self but on God and all the other people loved by God. In this sense, such a man goes out of himself.

[423] The whole their being is understanding, the whole their being sees beyond the realities perceived with their senses, or they see through the realities perceived with their senses; the whole their being is alive, generous, joyful, not having anything dead in it; the whole their being is enlightened and it spreads around the light of the joy, for it is elevated on the level of the godhead according to grace.

They have removed through death the walls which separated them from the true life in communion with God and with their fellow humans. They have killed the dead life from within them in order to fill themselves up with the true life. The word from the text is taken from Paterikon (Abba Bessarion 11).

[424] They are gladdened by Christ and they gladden Christ, for they have reached the gladness through Christ. They are gladdened by Christ and they gladden other people. Out of the glad one is being spread gladness. And they who are dispassionate, who are elevated in the love too, they rejoice of the gladness of those ones, and that means that the gladness of those ones will pass to them too. You have to totally die to yourself in order you to be able to truly live out of God's life and out of others' lives which will be communicated to you after you have torn down the walls of your egotism. Your death out of generosity means exiting the prison of your egotism. We bear within us the death because of our egotism, right out of the seed of our parents whom we are born to. But we can transform that death in a death out of generosity. And that will pass us to life. In both cases we are born to die: us to die the willing death of the love for others, or us to die a death out of our egotism.

[425] The powers from height are not envious on the gladness reached by the saints. On the contrary, the powers from height rejoice themselves too of the saints' gladness, for having new companions in knowing the untold love of God and they increase that knowledge in communication. The glad singing of each one strengthens the common choir.

eye has never seen and the ear has never heard" and the followings (1 Cor. 2: 9).

As about quietude (withdrawal), you must live in ascesis for a little longer, and God will have mercy on you.

May God enlighten your heart in order you to understand these words. This is for these words are difficult to understand to them who haven't reached their measure. Forgive me and pray for me so that I won't remain below this height, as an unworthy who I am.

208. (V. 121) The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman, if the Great Oldman allows him or not to consummately withdraw himself into quietude.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I told you love, my beloved brother, about the quietude (withdrawal), that you must wait for now, and not because I wouldn't want you to enter the state of this measure, by any means! But by wanting I that and by praying God to bestow you that state in a great abundance. This is for my great joy is your progress, of all of you. And the gifts (the charismas) are given by God at the right times and He calls us and He helps us and He guards us. This is for it was said: "Not him who praises on himself he is also proven, but him who praises the Lord" (2 Cor. 10: 12). So, if you want to build up your house, you must prepare, before all, the necessary materials. Only after that the craftsman can come and build your house. And the material needed for such a building are: the strong faith in order to build up the walls, luminous windows able to let the sunlight enter that house and enlighten it, so that there won't be any darkened corner in that house. And the windows are the five senses upheld by the honored wooden cross of Christ, which bring the light of the thought (spiritual) sun of the righteousness, and they don't want to be within that house any darkness from the enemy who hates the good. Then you will need also a roof that to cover the house, "so that, during the day, the sun won't born you, neither the moon during the night" (Ps. 120: 6[426]). And the roof is the love for God, that love that "never falls" (1 Cor. 13: 8), and the roof cover the house and it doesn't allow the "sun to set over our anger" (Eph. 4: 26), so that we won't be blamed us on the day of the judgment and the Gehenna's fire won't burn us; neither the moon will testify about our idleness and carelessness from during night. Finally, that house must have a door allowing the man to enter it, and that door guards him who live inside that house. And by saying door, brother, I understand the spiritual door, or the Son of God Who said: "I am the door" (Jn. 10: 9). After you have prepared to yourself that house, so that there won't be anything unpleasant to Christ, the Son will come together with His blessed Father and with the Holy Ghost and They will make to Themselves and dwelling place within you (Jn. 14: 13) and They will teach you what the quietude in withdrawal is and your heart will enlighten within you with an untold joy. Amen.

209. (V. 122) Asking for prayer and to teaching, by the same one, form the same Great Oldman.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Our God Jesus Christ to enlighten the eyes of your heart, my beloves and all-desired son, to that to shine within them the light of the Holy and only-Mastering and of-One-Being and worshipped Trinity, in order you to be guided to understand His holy mysteries and you to rejoice eternally; in order you to exit Egypt, and you to separate the sea with your staff, and you to escape from the hands of the barbarian Pharaoh, and you to celebrate by bringing sacrifices to God[427]; so that you will be able to eat the Passover into holiness[428], and your lips to flourish like a palm tree through [427] In any religion the celebration is united with the sacrifice. But in Christendom it is brought the highest sacrifice: the willing sacrifice of the Son of God as man, and united with Him the sacrifice of our own being as sign of obedience to God and of consummate love for God. This is the celebration of the praise brought to God for He bestowed us all the things and, above all, our existence; and it is the celebration of our elevation from the death maintains within us by our egotism, to that consummate life coming to us from the unimpeded – by our egotism – union with God into love.

[428] Our Passover, or our Paschal Lamb, the Lam Whom we cross from death to life through, He is Christ. BY eating Him, He will become our being that does this crossing, or the Passover, and this is for throughs sacrifice we will be sanctified, we will exist the egotism of our sins. This is our crossing or our Passover.

the holy and honored blood[429]; so that by girding up your girdle and by keeping the staff with clean hands, and by wearing footwear in your feet, you to unimpededly advance, and you to feed yourself with the mana from heavens mediated by the clouds with are together-servants with you[430]; so that your coat won't get worn out anymore (The Second Law 8: 4), neither the hairs of your head to grow anymore[431]; in order your heart to be cleaned up for receiving the law of its Lord and you to smash into pieces the cast calf from the middle of your people and the earth will swallow your enemies who resist you; in order you to defeat the emperors of the Amorites and God to consume the seven peoples from in front of you; so that you to inherit their land forever[432]; and you to cross River Jordan with the power of the godlike working of wonders (The Second Law 11: 31); and then you to conquer the stronghold of the palm trees (The Second Law 34: 3)[433]; and you to save Rahab, the prostitute who believed in God (Joshua 6: 23-25); and you to sow and to plant and to eat and to get satiated and to glorify God Who has given you this land; and there not to be within you another god. Finally, you to be saint to God and your country no longer be stormed by other nations, for you will be fearsome to them. And you to kill Goliath so that you will reign together with David and you will exist the former things by finding the new life. And you to believe Christ in order you to be crucified together with Him and you to die together with Him and you to be buried together with Him, so that you to rise full of shininess together with Him, and you to be elevated together with Him and you to [429] After we eat Christ, our Passover, our lips will flourish like some palm trees, as a sign that we have crossed from death to life. We have received the blood of a new life, an imperishable life. This fact was imagined by Israelites after they ate their paschal lamb and after they had crossed to a free life through the sea split by Moses, and they reached an oasis where there were palm trees.

[430] The clouds are the ones mediating the light coming from Christ.

[431] The vestments of the cleanness no longer get worn out and they no longer bring you to death, as the vestments of the sin do. The hairs of the head will no longer grow up continuously so that they won't need to be cut. Everything is a sing of imperishable youth. The life of God and the live of the man into God doesn't get old, for it doesn't get closer to death, btu it is eternally young and it is ceaselessly in the fulness of the vigor.

[432] The land of the Kingdom of Heavens destined to all the angels, it has been passed from the fallen angels, by God, into the inheritance of the people who cross to the true life into God.

[433] The stronghold of the palm trees is the image of the city where there won't ever be death or oldening.

eternally live to ether with Him (Rom. 6: 6-8; Col. 2: 12)[434]. Therefore, you soften the wax, and the wax will become more pleasant to touch. This is for, when you will have softened the wax, you will find out in it's the meanings of the eternal life, int Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

Regarding the brother living together with you, bear him according to your power. This is for the healthy one must endure the ill one, until God will do what is useful. "Rejoice into the Lord" (Phil. 3: 1).

210. (V. 123) The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Holy Fathers, bless me with a spiritual blessing and sanctify the monastic hat and the monastic robe which I have sent to you, in order I to have then as cover into Christ Jesus our Lord, against all evil.

The answer of Barsanuphius: My beloved brother, if our Master Christ Who can do anything, the Lord of the heavens and of earth, He told him who got close to Him: "Be it to you according to your faith" (Mt. 9: 29), what could I tell you, because I am poor and deprived of everything? God of the blessing may bless you with the whole spiritual blessing, and with the whole grace of the righteousness; and to make you partaker to the shininess of the saints, and inheritor of the Kingdom, and liberated from the dishonorable passions[435] through the prayers and through the mediations of the saints. Amen. Regarding the things you are asking for, for you trust me, I will wear them for three days and I will send them back to you, when they will be sanctified by my encounter with God, through the prayers of the saints. I ask you to pray for me as well, when I will be in such an encounter[436].

[434] The savior work of Christ it received through faith and it is that power which we too will be elevated by, together with Him, by bearing our cross and by resurrecting us together with Him. Our salvation isn't an exterior fact, but it is an internal growth. Our consummation is Christological.

[435] The Emperor is Master and not a servant. The slave of the passions cannot be inheritor of the supreme Kingdom. And the freedom from passion gives shininess, while the egotism makes you darkened.

[436] A subtle and delicate play of nuances: they will be sanctified in their encounter with God, but that will take place through the prayers of the saints. But also, him who asks for that blessing, he too is asked to pray.

211. (V. 139) A certain presbyter among the Fathers, after living in ascesis for a long time, in deserts, and then wanting to appease himself in a withdrawal in the monastery, he once asked the other Oldman how must him start his appeasement?

The answer of John: Joh the Baptist told to our Master Jesus Christ: "I need to be baptized by You, and You come to me?" (Mt. 3: 14). Still, your love has done good for teaching us through humbleness to get ashamed and to confess our passions. This is for doubtlessly: "the smaller one takes blessing from eth greater one" (Hebr. 7: 7). So, you are the one to heal me. For you are a presbyter, a spiritual priest of God, who is called to anoint with oil those who are ill and to heal them of their bodily illness, by uniting the anointing the forgiveness of their sins (Jas. 5: 14-15). So, I cannot advice the one who is superior to me, because I haven't been called to priesthood because of my unworthiness, I whose white flower of his hairs hasn't stopped my senses from my youth? If that man who asked me was like me, my impulse to much-speaking wouldn't let me stay peacefully and not to answer him. This is for I have an uncontrollable tongue. And I would tell him that a child advances from the small teachings to the big teachings. Shouldn't him answer that: "yes, it is so"? And everything I reckoned that I had to tell him, I would tell him. So, you too, stay withdrawn (appease yourself) for five days and meet others for two days. And if your sitting (withdrawal) is according to God, namely if you reach to know that what you search for by your sitting, you won't fall in the hands of the devil of the vain-glory. This is for he who knows what he has intended to do by coming into city, his heart will desire that and he won't deviate to other things. This is for he who searches will fall differently. Forgive me, Abba, for I do not have more to you to you. And pray for me, for the Lord. For I do not have either deeds or word.

212. (V. 140). The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: When I loose my body more that it needs, it won't feel well in its serving. But again, if I loose it less that it needs, I fear not to get my body tired too quickly. What should I do regarding this? And regarding the Holy Impartation, for I want to be imparted daily, it is a burden if I ask for the Holy Impartation to be brought to me, the sinner, or must I descend to be imparted? But in this case, how could I not lose the appeasement of the state of withdrawal?[437]

The answer of John: I told you before, Abba, the words of John towards the Savior. But you have written me again, me who I am stupid and mindless. But if John didn't resist to the very end, who am I, for I am nothing, to reject your ask? So, I am telling you the truth that I and nothing and I do not nothing, but in order to obey you, I am going to tell you what I have within my heart. I cannot assure you that is so, but I am going to tell you what I can[438].

God doesn't ask the ill man for a bodily serving, but for a spiritual serving, namely for the prayer. This is for he says: "Pray incessantly" (1 Thes. 5: 17).

Regarding the body's diet, if the body cannot serve when taking more food, and when not taking you fear the helplessness, you will keep the middle: neither up, nor down. And thus, it will the Scripture be fulfilled, that says: "Do not deviate either to the right or to the left" Num. 20: 18). But give your body a little less than it needs, for this is the way of the Fathers: not to be either loaded or weakened in living.

And regarding the bringing of the Holy Impartation to you, when this is not contempt, but it is because of illness, it won't be towards damnation. This is for the chieftain of the doctors come Himself to them who are very tired and ill, as our Lord Jesus Christ came before to us who were sinners and feeling sick. Forgive me, Father, for by obeying you I have spoken I the worthless.

[437] He who asked doubted about asking to be brought the Holy Impartation to his monastic cell. It seemed to him that asking to be brought up to him (or maybe his monastic cell was on a hill?), he would reckon himself superior to it. That's why he asks if he ought to leave his monastic cell and go to be given the Holy Impartation, or better said climbing to it, and thus to interrupt his withdrawal (appeasement).

[438] Another paradox: if I answer you ask for giving you and advice, I will be in danger to get haughty. On the other hand, I do not have the right to remain silent and so to disobey you because of being against in the danger of getting haughty. So, I prefer the risk of being tempted by pride by answering your ask that to reject it. And I will fight, by answering your ask, not to be overcome by pride. That's why, lo, I am telling you from the beginning, even before giving you the required advice, that I am nothing and I know nothing. But I am not assuring you that it is good that what I am going to tell you. But I am telling you what I have in my mind.

213. (V. 141) The question of the same one towards the same one: Because a widow whom injustice has been done to, she asked me to write to the governor, I have two thoughts related to that: one thought tells me that I have come here in order I to die to the world and, if I wrote I would transgress my obligation assumed by me to die to the world; the other thought tells me that if I didn't write, I would transgress the commandment telling us to help them in need. My beloved Father, tell me what should I do?

The answer of John: If you had been dead, would have any widow come to you for asking you to help her[439]? And if you helped that one and there came another one, if you overlooked the last one you would transgress the commandment. The dead doesn't take care of such things. Even if they speak against you, you won't let that bring any disturbance to you.

214. (V. 142) A brother living into monastery and serving an ill old man, he asked the Great Oldman about his thoughts.

The answer of Barsanuphius: You are mindless, and that's why your thoughts master upon you and especially your impulse of justifying yourself. The Lord wants you to have any man superior to you. So, show obedience to the old man in everything and do whatever he tells you to do, either regarding the food or the drink, or anything else. You will obey him even if that is a difficult thing to do, as Abba for advice, and anything he tells you to do you will do so[440]. Regarding the singing of psalms and regarding the taking of vigil, you will do what he tells you to do and that will be to you towards the salvation of your soul. And if he upsets you, you will endure that. This is for "he who endures to the very end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). Give thanks to God for everything. This is for "the giving of [439] John seemed to know that him who sent him this question had helped before that another widow. Why wouldn't him help this time too, that widow asking for his help?

[440] It is about asking Serid for advice, for he was the abbot of that monastery; or it may be the old man whom he served to.

thanks mediated to God for helplessness"[441] (Les Sentences the Pères de désert, Nouvel Recueil, Solesmes, 1970, p. 151). Condemn yourself in all things as one who has committed sin and who has wronged and God won't judge you. Humble yourself in all things and you will find grace from God. If you learn these things, God will help you to find power. This is for this is the will of God, that "every man to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4).

215. (V. 143) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one: Brother, do not rush yourself to discern among the thoughts coming to you, because this doesn't belong to your measure. And that's why they will disturb you as on somebody who doesn't know their craftsmanships. And when they trouble you, you must tell them: "I do not know who you are, God Who know that won't let you deceive me". And so, you throw your helplessness before God, saying: "Lord, I am in your hands, help me and escape me form them". And that thought tarrying within you and waging war to you, you must confess that to your Abba. And Abba will heal you through God.

Regarding the manual labor, do what you are told to do and you will be saved.

Regarding the psalms, do not stop leaning them. This is for you can do that. And strive to utter them. For they are much useful. And what exceeds your power, do not try to hear it. This is that, for now, you have teachings matching your measure.

216. (V. 144 a.) The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one: Do not allow to be yourself mocked as a mindless one. Do not trust your enemies. This is because, if you sit carelessly and indolently, they will come again upon you. Take heed that the Lord said to the snake: It will guard your head and you will guard his heel" (Gen. 3: 15). Let the man not to sit carelessly to the very last of his breath. Guard yourself, brother, against anger, against vain-gloriousness, against sleeping, and against all the other passions, by knowing that the enemy doesn't sleep nor gets lazy.

[441] Giving thanks to God justifies you for your helplessness of doing more important deeds asked you by God. You must remain tied to God at least by thanking Him.

217. (V. 144 b) The answer of the same one towards the same one: Brother, if you want to be saved, you must earn humbleness and willing obedience. When you hear something from your old man, regardless what that would be, tell him humbly: pray for me, Father, for God to give me understanding and watchfulness in order I not to bother you again. Keep this and you will be saved.

218. (V. 145) The same brother falling ill, and suspecting that he is going to die, he humbly asked the same Great Oldman to pray for his sins to be forgiven and for him to have patience in illness to the end.

And the Oldman answered him this: Do not be sad, brother. This is for the sinless death is not an actual death, but it is a move from trouble to resting, form darkness to untold light and to eternal life. And God the Great Emperor will tell you: "Forgiven are your sins" (Lk. 7: 47-48), in the first place for the prayers and for the asks of the saints and for your faith in Him. And may Him give patience to you to the end.

219. (V. 146) The same one towards the same Great Oldman: Master and Father of mine, I am in God's hand and in your hands. Have mercy on me to the end and hurry up and untie me, and present me to my Master Christ, by leading me with your prayers and by accompanying me through the skies and on that path which I do not know.

The answer of Barsanuphius: I present you, brother, to God Who found us worthy to die for us, to the Master of the heavens and to the Master of everything that breaths, in order Him to quench your fear of dying and to make unimpeded the ascension of your soul and you to bow down daringly to the Holy Trinity, namely liberated, but with fear and with tremble as the holy angels do[442]; and Him to rest you with His saints[443]. Go then, and pray for me[444].

220. (V. 147) Another brother by falling ill of pulmonary tuberculosis and by being in bid dangers, he asked the same Great Oldman to pray for him and to ask for the forgiveness of his sins.

The answer of the Great Oldman: Have no fear, brother, but your soul should rather rejoice and be glad into the Lord. And truly believe me that, lo, God has forgiven all your sins, as you have asked for, since your childhood until now. Blessed is God for He deigned to forgive all your sins. So, do not be sad. This is for you have not sin left within you. You still have a pain, but it will stop.

221. (V. 148) That one because of being even more burdened by his illness, some of his brothers asked the other

[442] You are liberated from the inferior impulse from within you and from the temptations of the evil ghosts, but you are fearful and shaken by the great glory of the Holy Trinity. Actually, these two feeling are one. Only by being shaken by the glory of the endless love of the Holy Trinity for you, you can be free and able to answer that with your love. The unlimited love shows to you it makes you tremble, but it also makes you free and it gives you the power you to answer with love at your turn. This fear is not only of death. In the love shown to you, you are free and trembling; that love fills you up with daring, but in the same time it makes you bow down with fear and tremble. One cannot show a true love, even for a man, except in freedom, and in the love exercised by somebody else upon you, you won't feel any pressure. But that love overwhelms you, in the same time.

And he who is united with God in such a love, and in the same time he is united with you too, he will bring you, through his love, to God. He has this force. He doesn't forsake you for he doesn't forsake either God Who gives him this power. This is shown in his prayer to God, but this is for you. He is together with you in front of God. He introduces you, and he recommends you to God.

[443] You are resting yourself into the love from God of all the troubles and worries about yourself. But you are being rested also by the love of the saints who are united with God and with you. Thus, one reaches the full communion of the love and of the resting produced by that love. In God you will no longer pricked by somebody's envy, you will no longer be upset by somebody's will to master you, to take it in front of you.

[444] Barsanuphius as the one praying to God, he presents to God him whom Barsanuphius prays for, but that one too, when brought in front of God is asked to present Barsanuphius to God, at his turn, for the fact that Barsanuphius did him such a great good of bringing him in front of God. Barsanuphius doesn't want to reckon himself superior to him whom he prays for.

Oldman for explaining them the answer of Barsanuphius: did he spoke about life or about death?

The answer of John: It is about death. But the Great Oldman can ask life for that brother, if God will let him know about that.

222. (V. 149) By hearing that, the brothers asked the Great Oldman to ask God for giving life to that ill brother.

The answer of Barsanuphius: My kind and merciful God may fill you up again and again with the joy of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Regarding your brother, it suffices him what he has been found worthy of receiving. This is for he has suddenly become rich out of poor and free man out of slave. Blessed is God Who has wanted to receive my ask. But you must tell nothing to the brother, in order you to avoid saddening him up, but keep your silence upon this mystery. This is for that what is coming to him it won't be death but it will be moving from death to eternal life and from torment to resting.

223. (V. 150) Being very hard to that brother and suffering him great pains, the brothers asked the same Great Oldman to pray God to have mercy on that brother more quickly[445].

The answer of the Great Oldman: He has remained into pain for the prayer done for him not to remain by itself[446]. God [445] In the Volos Edition: "This brother seems to be that simple brother and all-tried worker of the obedience, called Dositheos, whom Abba Dorotheos write about in his first Word. This is for Dorotheos had that brother as helper in the monastery's infirmary, there where Barsanuphius was living too, being at that time doctor of the infirmary. This is because Dositheos too got ill with pulmonary tuberculosis, as Dorotheos wrote". It is about Dositheos also in the following three letters and two footnotes.

[446] The prayer done for another must not remain by itself. The fire becomes stronger when fueled with many coals. The prayer is stronger when belonging to many. The congregationalism or the communion gives power to prayer. The common prayer strengthens the congregationalism or the communion. He who prays increases in himself when knowing that his prayer is accompanied by the prayers of many. The flight towards God is nimbler when done by many, like the bords raise higher into flight when flying into a flock. In the warmth communicated to one another by them who pray, it is more strongly felt the presence of God. Their borders are being removed, but the warmth of the communion doesn't abolish have been doing to him and God is going to him that what is useful to him, by the prayers of the saints[447]. Amen. And after this answer, that brother dies peacefully.

224. Somebody asked Abba John about something. And by receiving an answer, he sent a question to Abba Barsanuphius on the same subject, but without confessing that he has already asked the other Oldman on the same subject.

And the Great Oldman answered him: "Do that what brother John told you to do". And after a while the same brother did the same thing. And Barsanuphius answered him: "It is enough to you know. Barsanuphius's God and John's God is One". And that brother stopped asking both of them upon the same subjects, being satisfied with the answer of one of them[448].

225. A brother asked the Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, what should I do because of the disturbance I suffer from the thoughts of my heart? Must I totally cut off the wine? Must I sleep in a sitting position? And, pray for the illness of my eye. Must I show it to the doctor? And I pray you to ask God for giving me a little progress. And pray God for I no longer part with your holy traces.

Answer: Brother, you are asking my fewness for hearing the things regarding your thoughts. Haven't you been satisfied with the things heard by you from brother John? You suffer these disturbances because you have a frivolous heart. And, according to Lord's word: "All things are possible to him who believes" (Mk. 9: 23). So, where is your faith at? Regarding the wine, you must not cut it off totally, but you must use less of it. And the sleeping in a sited position will finally lead to them as persons, but each of them if being filled up with the common warmth. The more somebody is in pain, the more he prays for himself.

[447] In the Volos Edition, the footnote: "Abba Dorotheos in his first word adds that the Great Barsanuphius told towards Abba Dositheos these things too: "God in peace, my child, show yourself to the Holy Trinity and mediate for us".

[448] Barsanuphius does not deny that in the first answer there was also the advice of Abba John. This is for the brother himself asked for an answer from both of them.

humbleness. But surrender yourself to God, into His fear. Regarding your eye, do not fear. For you have God Who enlightens you. If it happens that you find somebody skillful and you show him your eyer, you won't commit sin. This is for this too is humbleness.

These things have been dictated by me, but they have been written by my son Serid. And if you do not fight to make useless these words of mine, uttered through God, I will pray God to bring you to a bigger progress and not to separate you from us either in this age or in the age to come. Get wise regarding the devils which teach you offensive things, and so you will always attract your soul and your thoughts towards good. Do not agree any covenant with the devils, because they are dreadful and of a foreign nation. And so, you will inherit the land of the Israelites into our Lord Jesus Christ. Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

226. The question of the same one towards the same one: I pray you, Father, tell me if the first answer was from you. I ask you this because my thought tells me that it could be Abba who answered on behalf of you. And tell me how can be healed the passions? Give ne commandment regarding the salvation of my soul. And ask for me the forgiveness of my sins. And if it is good, as my thought tells me, let me be appointed to the kitchen definitively.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Listen to me, Son! To every passion there is a medicine and to every sin there is a repentance. If you are totally faithless, as you said, and if you want the be healed of your faithlessness, the medicine for that it will be the faith. You must believe, without doubting yourself at all, into the Good One[449]. And if you persevere to stay into faith, you will have to take heed at not falling off that happiness which it was told about: "Blessed are them who haven't seen [449] "το αγαπώ" can also be translated as: into the Good One, or in good. Besides, the good is not outside the person. Only the person can be good. And the good by excellence cannot be but a supreme Person or God. He who believes in good, he actually believes in a supreme Person as support of the good. And he who believes in good, he strives to progress himself in good. And this means to give joy to other Persons. Into the consummate good which we want to enter, let's believe that in it is implied our eternal existence for we advance into God.

but they believed" (Jn. 20: 29). This is for it was written: "Believe into light so that you be sons of the light" (Jn. 12: 36).

Lo, I have sent you the second answer, because of you not believing the first one. If you welcomed a prophet in name of prophet (as prophet) you would take a prophet payment (Mt. 20: 41), namely, even if the fist answer was not from me but you received it as from me, you would take that answer according to your faith. This is for believer is him who says: "May him give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 5[450]). Your saying: "I want to get strengthened form you and form Abba, it has brought you the first answer[451]. Why than have you got closer to the who tempted the Lord by telling Him: "Show us a sign" and who were rejected by the Lord as tempters, for He said: "They won't be given a sign" (Mt. 12: 38-39)? And why haven't you got closer to Ahaz, who after being ordered to ask for a sign, he didn't want to do that, but he said: "I won't ask for a sign, neither will I tempt the Lord" (Isa. 7: 12)?

If you, by hearing, you simply believed, you would benefit much. But because of you not fighting again against your faithlessness[452], I have asked Abba to stay at your door and to read with a loud voice the words I have written to you, in order the devil to get ashamed. This is for, if Abba reads this while shouting out, how will be the devil able any longer to wage war to you so that you to say: "I cannot hear that"? And if you hear those words, but somebody else wrote those as you wanted, how could I not expose that one[453]? If you reckoned me foreseer and knower of the things which are done according to God's

[450] In KJB we have: Ps. 20: 5: "We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the Lord fulfil all thy petitions."; in ROB we have: Ps. 19: 5: "We will rejoice of your salvation and for the name of our God we will be glorified. May the Lord fulfill all your asks." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[451] Here it seems that Barsanuphius - who were saddened because of not being the brother satisfied with the answer he received form Abba John – tells to that brother: "Believe Abba John, who is good", so "believe to the good man". The good man doesn't want to disappoint you, but the good man takes you on the path of his kindness, towards God Who is All-Good.

[452] He didn't fight his faithlessness when he willingly started to ask questions to both of them, because of not being him satisfied with the answer of only one of them.

[453] Because the brother doubted about the fact that the words from the first letter had been sent you by Barsanuphius, Barsanuphius made Abba Serid, whom he dictated the answer for that brother, to read that word with loud voice at the door of that brother's monastic cell, so that that brother by hearing those words he still hadn't admitted that those words were from Barsanuphius himself, the brother could have told that publicly; and in case that brother hadn't said anything, that would have been the public admission that those words belonged to Barsanuphius and that brother no longer be warred by devils to doubt that.

will, you must reckon that nobody dares to change my word without me knowing it. But I have been hiddenly diminished by the enemy in front of you, by presenting me to your eyes as I am knowing anything from before.

Therefore, if you want from me any commandment towards your salvation and life, you must achieve consummate humbleness and obedience in all things. This is for these ones are those which uproot all the passions and they plant all the goods (virtues). And do not hesitate in listening the Abbas' teachings. This is because of being this the seed of the enemy. And if you put in work the whole your power in receiving and keeping those teachings, I hope through Christ Who has embodied Himself and Who was crucified for saving the sinners, that you won't be late to bring beautiful and good fruits.

Regarding the sines which you tell me about that you have committed those, if you keep your commandments into Christ Jesus, you will doubtlessly believe that the Lord has forgiven your sins and that you are like a newborn out of God, through repentance.

And regarding the passions, you don't need me to write about each of the passions. This is for, by a sole word, I have shown you the medicine against your passions. This is for the Lord says: "I will dwell within the humble ones" (2 Cor. 6: 16). Do you reckon that, by any means, it can be live something out of the enemy's evilness there where it sees the lord dwelling? You must understand that the lawless one cannot show himself in the palaces of the governors.

Regarding the kitchen, you must not desire to keep that position permanently. This is because that will cause increasingly more envy. But when you are ordered to, you must not hesitate or oppose, but you must do with the whole your heart whatever you are asked to do. This is for, out of that you will gain grace.

And about those two passions, namely the forgetfulness and the carelessness, ask zealously, brother, and work even more zealously, and do not do what you have done in the case of the previous questions, which you have given to the forgetfulness and to its sister the carelessness, not renew your spiritual questions through the grace of the Holy Trinity[454]. And warm up your heart into the fear of God[455], and so your heart will be wakened up from the spiritual sleep of the two mentioned passions. This is for, by being your heart warmed up, you heart will be kindled for desiring the future goods. Let your cogitation move around these ones. And this care will banish away from you're your bodily sleep too. Then you will say like David: "In my cogitation there will be kindled a fire" (Ps. 38: 4[456])[457]. So, you have asked about two passions and you have heard, briefly, about all the passions. The passions are like some twigs which are burnt by the spiritual fire. This is for, in order I to speak about the spiritual living, if the watchfulness of the leading mind is unable to, the man vainly cogitates. Love the ascesis and cogitate at these and you will find the imperial path and you will walk fearlessly into the Lord.

I have asked you to do these and, believe me when I am telling you, that if I see your zeal into God, I will ceaselessly pray God in order Him to save you from death and God to bestow you the eternal life into Christ Jesus our Lord Who to be the glory forever. Amen.

227. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Abba, I am terrified at the thought telling me: "You ask, but you do not do. Won't you be cursed by the Oldman?" Therefore, pray for me so that God to bestow me to understand the things written to me by you, and I to accomplish those things.

[454] The questions show, at their turn, a discontent of the man with the state which he is in, and therefore a will for crossing over that state, of getting out of that state. It is a worrying about life, and not a resignation to the sinful insensitiveness.

[455] Th fear of God produces the warmth of the zeal for fulfill God's will, in order you no longer to allow yourself to be mastered by your passionate habits. So, the fear of God brings a strength.

[456] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 3: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 4: "My heart has got hot within men and into my thought there will be kindled a fire." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[457] That cogitation which the man is preoccupied though, with his straightening, that is not a cold cogitation. That is a cogitation which the man puts within the care for himself, the care for not losing but for gaining the eternal life. Besides, no cogitation preoccupied with gaining and maintaining another's attention upon you, it won't be a cold cogitation. A cold cogitation means that cogitation occupying itself with things which do not touch the life of own person. Any other cogitation is an existential cogitation.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Son, if somebody listens to something and he does that something, he does hat for himself and he is the one to benefit of that. But because you have said that you are terrified at the thought lest I could curse you, I am asking you: how can him who fears God, to curse somebody, while the Lord says: "Bless and do not curse" (Rom. 12: 14). But brother, take heed at the fact that the demons want to draw your attention upon useless things: sleeping in a sited position, not to use a pillow, or which are the dill or the mint or the cumin (Mt. 23" 23), so that you to forsake the important things of the law consisting of: quenching out your anger, withering out your wrath, and of being you obedient in all things. And these ones are sown within you by the enemy so that to weaken down your body and you to reach the passion and so you to wants soft mattresses and diverse foods. But be you satisfied with a sole pillow and stretch yourself on your ben with the fear of God[458]. And in order you to understand the things told you by me, pray God and God will give you understanding. This is for God is the Giver of any good thing. Trust the fact that if you put all your power in doing the things which you have heard form me, I will multiply my power within you, so that you to receive help from God. Fill up your plate with spiritual foods[459], which are: the faith, the hope, and the love. This is for him who has these ones he is being feasting with the Kingdom. To God belongs the glory forever. Amen.

228. The question of the same one towards the same one: Please, Father, because I read in Greek and I cannot understand what they say, please pray God to give me understanding in reading. And tell me if I must learn the psalms in Greek[460].

The answer of Barsanuphius: Regarding the reading in Greek, if we search by the help of God and with humbleness the things beneficial to our soul, God will give us understanding.

[458] Barsanuphius is in favor of a moderate bodily ascesis. To him is important the cleaning of the souly passions and the achieving of the virtues: the humbleness, the kindness, the patience in reproaches, and the prayer.

[459] In the Volos Edition, at footnote: "Can you see the wisdom of the saint? – because this brother was a cook of the monastery, he gives him an example of those of the kitchen".

[460] One can clearly see that in Gaza the Fathers were using the Scripture of the Old Testament in the Greek translation of the Septuagint, as everywhere else in the Byzantine Empire.

And if this is a gift from God, it will obviously be towards the salvation of our soul. This is for most of the books are written in Greek. And if you make effort to learn the psalms in Greek, that will be helpful to you at readings in Grek. But either you read or you learn the psalms by heart, you must ceaselessly remember God Who says: "Learn from Me that I am gentle and humble in MY heart and you will find resting to your souls" (Mt. 11: 29). Understand what I am saying to you, and if you make efforts you ascesis will find grace towards the eternal life into Christ Jesus our Lord Who to be the glory forever. Amen.

229. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I pray you, Father, forgive me for the Lord, because the thought of the blasphemy has taken me into mastery. And, pray for me in order I to be corrected.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If I could cover this in tears and so to send it to you who are tormenting on yourself, it would be useful to you. But what can I do to that man who hasn't prepared the soil of his heart in order to receive the words sown by me through my written answers, in order that man's soul to be brought back from his oldened state to the renewal of the eternal life? This is for, if you received my words with assertiveness, you would taste out of them that's sweetness that sweetens the soul and that banishes away the awful bitterness sown within you by the devils[461]. But the devil of the defamation has been waging war to you for a long time, him who destroys the souls who welcome him. Examine and see that, even without finding any motif worthy to be taken in account, that devil has caught you in his bringer-of-death trap[462]. But may my God not to give him the power to fulfill his [461] The temptations sown by the devils urge us to sins which seem sweet in the beginning, but then they leave a bitterness that becomes insupportable by being developed in passions. The good man has a sweetness within himself and he spread that sweetness around him too. On the opposite, in the passionate man there is a settled a slag of bitterness that is being spread around him by his darkened face. The good man sweetens all people around on the measure of his kindness. The evil man bitters up and agitates all people around him. Both the kindness and the evilness have a radiating force. From here we can see that when somebody has become evil without being submitted to an evil influence matching his evilness, he ought to have received this influence form unseen evil beings.

[462] Somebody can be seen defaming without motif the things told him about God. There is the demon doing that through than man because that man doesn't resist the demon. That man's wish with you. This is because, if we lose our hope, God will always be close to us to receive our repentance. But if we lose our trust in ourselves[463], we will be condemned and having the blood upon our heads[464].

Therefore, wake yourself up from the straying that blinds you up and take again under control your senses which have been enslaved by the enemy[465], pulling him away from the teachings given you by Christ through me, which ordered you in the first place you to quench the anger and the wrath from within you, because of knowing that those take the man towards perdition by defamation. Then achieve the humbleness, which the devils are burnt in; the obedience that brings the Son of God to dwell within man[466]; the faith that saves the man; the hope that doesn't shame up; the love that doesn't allow the man self has surrendered himself to the demon. The demon is the defamer, but the ones whom the demon defames thought is guilty too, because of surrendering his self to the demon. Or, the self of that man has been filled up with the demon's self, and that man thinks he is the one working. Still, that man's self is partaker to the demon's work.

[463] If we do not lose our hope and if we seriously want us to be escaped from the devil's trap, God will help us. Only when we resign ourselves thinking that we no longer can seriously want to escape, then God won't be ablet to help as either.

[464] The Son of God made Himself man in order to become our Brother and therefore to makes us too, together with Himself, sons of the Heavenly Father. But this adoption is not a simple juridical fact. In order us to become together-sons, with the Son, of the heavenly Father, we must impropriate His obedient love of Son of the Heavenly Father. And we can achieve this feeling only by Him dwelling within us with His feeling as Son. This too is a replacement, or better said a reciprocal interiorization of selves. If him whom the devil dwell within, he impropriates the blasphemy of the devil against God, by getting demonized, him whom the Son of the Father dwells in, he will impropriate the filial feeling of the Son. We impropriate the feeling of the Son by loving obedience. We impropriate the blasphemy of the devil by full of hatred and of despise rebellion.

[465] As the enemy has become master upon your will, he also has become master upon your senses. Your senses are no longer used by your own self but they are used by the enemy's self that is placed within your own self, though your own self too is partaker to the works of the enemy's self which are done through your senses. It is a partial replacement of selves that is, in the same time, an accompanying between them, thought, on occasion, you realize that another self is working within you. It is about some sort of schizophrenia.

[466] The Son of God made Himself man in order Him to make Himself Brother to us and so, Him to make us together with Him sons of the Heavenly Father. But this adoption isn't a mere juridical fact. In order us to become together-sons with the Son of the Heavenly Father, we must impropriate too Christ's obedient love as Son for the Heavenly Father. And we can achieve this feeling only by dwelling Him within us, with His love as Son. This too is a replacement, or better said a reciprocal interiority of selves. While him whom the devils dwells within, he impropriates the devil's blasphemy against God, by demonization, him whom the Son of God dwell within, he will impropriate the filial feeling. WE impropriate the feeling of the Son through loving obedience, while we impropriate the blasphemy of the devil through the full of hatred rebellion, or by contempt.

to fall from God. This is because you, instead of taking care of these ones, you have rather chosen to you the opposite ones: the anger and the wrath, and the total perdition that is the blasphemy. And if you, by hearing these things from me, you will do everything you can in order to detach yourself from these passions and to gain those goods (virtues), I too will do for you tenfold that I can, so that you will no longer shame up my grey hair. Therefore, for the sake of God's kindness, so that you to find out how good He is, strive for correcting yourself. And because we have the commandment to forgive (Lk. 6: 31, 37)[467], may your past sins be forgiven. Repent for forty days for your past sins[468], by making three prostrations (daily) and saying: "Forgive me, for I have blasphemed against You my God", and you will confess to Him in your blasphemer body, for three times a day, saying: "Glory to You, my God, blessed are You forever. Amen". And to not fall again into these "let something even worse to happen to you" (Jn. 5: 19). This is for, form the callousness of your heart you have come to me, and from your anger you have come to willingly retaining yourself from receiving the Holy Impartation. And once you have been totally taken away by this impulse, you have fallen into the precipice of the blasphemy[469]. And if the hand of the loving-of-people God and the prayers of the saints didn't take it ahead, your soul [467] He who doesn't forgive, he preserves within himself a pride that petrifies. He won't become humanized, he won't achieve the communication from him to the ones who has to be forgiven, and outside that he will lose his condition as man. So, he who doesn't forgive, he won't enter the Kingdom of Love of that humanity that has got rid of rigidity. That's why in this writing the authors ask us so much to forgive, and they place at the end of each of his "Letter" the ask for the addressees to forgive them. When you ask somebody for forgiveness, you soften him up as much as you got softened by forgiving him. You help that one to get out of his rigidity as yourself do too. By forgiving him, you help him to ascend, together with you, into the Kingdom of God. This is for, when the people meet by forgiving one another, there will be God too, for God is the spring of the forgiveness, for God is the spring of the love that wants to comprise everyone in it, and God is the source of our power for humanizing ourselves. There you will feel Him too as forgiver. This truly is God's almightiness.

[468] This number represents the endless perseverance in making yourself kinder, it represents the power of creating your habituation into good.

[469] This is an exact presentation of the stages of the falling from faith, and implicitly from the authentic humane that admits his smallness but he also desires to stay in communion with God as source of the endless loving power: a) the callousness, or some sort of habituation to indifference, to insensitiveness, that still not is an impulse for resistance; b) the anger towards what you are required in the relations with others; c) the willing retainment from receiving the Holy Impartation, and therefore from the communion with the others into faith; d) the justification of your sinful attitude through the blasphemy expressed against God and against the faith in God.

would be thrown into the perdition of the desperation. Now, God tell you through me who am the all-unimportant one: "You have sinned, do not sin anymore" (Sirach 21: 1[470]). But you too must pray for your previous sins, for merciful if God and, if we too want, God will forgive our sins[471]. IN this, you must remember that "much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16). If you like (what I am telling you), do it. If not, forgive me for everything[472].

230. The same brother, asking for forgiveness, the Great Oldman answered him immediately:

Our death and our life are in our hands. If we no longer commit the previous sins, that will be a sign that we will have received from God the forgiveness for those sins, due to the fact that we no longer wobble[473]. Therefore, my brother, you must stand steadfastly, in order not to be fulfilled concerning you too, the word: "Lo, you have been made whole, since now do not commit sin lest something worse will happen to you" (Jn. 5: 14). Run aways form disobedience, remove your faithlessness from yourself, estrange yourself from despair and attach yourself to

[470] In KJB this book The Wisdom of Joshua, the Son of Sirach is not given. The interested reader can download it for free, from www.academia.edu, together with the other thirteen books, grouped under the title: Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[471] If we want, namely if we ask God to forgive us, God will forgive us. Asking for forgiveness means getting humble, means getting your heart softened. That is not a commanding will maintain the callousness, but there will be a praying will that is softening us by humbleness, and that brings us in state of communion and therefore a state of forsaking the egotism manifested through pride.

[472] This is a last attempt to soften the soul of the addressee who still could remain callous by not wanting to accomplish the things recommended to him. But the saint asks him for forgiveness in the negative case too, and by doing so the saint attempted again to soften the sinner. And in the following letter we are going to see that the saint succeeded in doing that, and the sinner too asked for forgiveness. Even if the saints didn't do anything wrong to that one, by asking for forgiveness the saints gave him an example of humbleness, one that could soften the pride of the sinner. And by praying to him who could stubbornly remained into pride, himself the saints increased in humbleness.

[473] The forgiveness from God comes like a power that helps us to no longer commit sins. And by no longer committing sins we will show that we will have surpassed the state of sinfulness. The sin buds out of sin, the good buds out of good. When we no longer work contrary to God that means that somehow, we have got united with God, so that we feel the sweetness of the communion with God, and that sweetness has taken us out from hesitation in what regards fulfilling God's will.

God, by loving, by believing, by hoping. And you will have eternal live into Him. Amen.

231. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Father, pray for me, in order I to be defended against the night hallucinations. And if possible, make me worthy to come and bow down before you and listen to your holy voice. I am asking for that because I believe that, if I was granted that, I would be given much defense out of that.

Answer: The Scripture says that "he who is faithful in little, he is faithful in much too" (Lk. 16: 10). If you believed my word, you would believe me as I am present[474]. That's why the Lord blessed them who didn't see by they believed (Jn. 20: 29). And I have written you foe many times about disobedience and anger and callousness. But I am seeing that you haven't at all taken my words into account. But, because I owe you to give you everything I have, according to the Scripture that says: "Give to anybody who asks" (Mt. 5: 42), I am telling you too: achieve humbleness, and obedience, and hope, and I will defend you to God against your sins. But you must find out also that, that if you do not humble yourself, you won't obey; and if you do not obey, you won't love. And if you don't love, you won't believe and you won't hope for[475]. So, if you strive yourself to have these, I will reckon all your sins as mine. And if you reckon yourself as a lepper, I believe that you too will hear form [474] Namely, if you do not believe my words written to you by me, you won't believe me even I will have met you.

[475] The order of the virtues can start with a virtue or with another: first the faith, then the hope, and then the love, but also inversely: first the love, then the faith and then the hope. Actually, in each virtue are present all the other virtues. You cannot believe in the Christian God without loving Him. This is for you believe after finding out His love-deeds for you. But this wakes up your love too. And once loving Him, you will believe that He will give you all the things which He promised us and which He proved about that He wants to accomplish them for us. Especially on the higher stages of the knowledge about God there is, on the first plan, the love. And you are convinced or you believe that out of the love of God all the untold goods will come to you. But, together with the love, there is the humbleness and the obedience. You love for you obey and believe, but you also obey and believe for you love too. Between obedience and love there is no contradiction when it comes about the relation of God with the loving subject. You will joyfully obey and believe him whom you love and who loves you. You are happy to obey him. That is not an obedience born out of fear, but that is an obedience full of love. It is an internal impulse, a free one, an energetic one, an impulse to obey and to believe.

our Savior the word: "I want, you be clean" (Mt. 8: 3). And if you reckon yourself as a sinner, you will hear: "Forgiven are your many sins" (Lk. 7: 47-48). And if you reckon yourself as blind, you will find your sight according to your faith (Mt. 9: 29). I wrote you these things before too. But you were asleep. Guar your mouth not to fall again into the dreadful blasphemy. This is because, when your soul reached to blasphemy, I was sweating to make God merciful to you, so that you to escape from it. And if you take heed at guarding what I have told you, with the whole your soul, my sayings will guard you not only against the night-hallucinations but also against all the plots of the enemy, through Christ Who helps you. Amen.

232. Of the same towards the same one: Have mercy on me, Master, and tell me how can I be saved during this time because the thought of the fear has ascended into my heart[476]. What do you command me to do?

Answer: The man will be saved at any time by the grace of God, if the man can cut off his will in all things, and if the man can have a humble heart and if the man has always hid death before his eyes. In this case, wherever the man is, the fear won't take him into mastery. This is for a man kike this he has forgotten the things from behind and he is stretching himself towards the things from ahead him (Phil. 3: 13)[477]. You too do this and be worriless; for you will be saved.

233. A younger brother, having faith in the same brother, he visited him invoking a souly benefit reason. And that younger brother gradually started to fulfill his needs like a servant. And the brother, because of not understanding what was happening, he didn't ask the Great Oldman about that. But the Great [476] The "thought" (λογισμος), in all the spiritual writings of the Fathers, as also in the Holy Scripture, it has not theoretical meaning here, but it is a thought full of feeling, an existential thought. On the plan of the relation with God, but also on the plan of the concrete relation with the people, are not moving within us either purely theoretical meanings or feelings having no meanings. The fear is a sentiment too, but it is also a thought.

[477] That one is no longer mastered by fear, for he no longer thinks at his sinful past. He is always preoccupied with the good which he wants to do it even more, and that stays ahead him.

Oldman, by knowing by the gift of God, as a foreseer, what it was happening, he wrote the following things to that brother:

The advice from Barsanuphius: Brother, God through the mediation of the saints and of your Abba, He forgave your first sins committed with the lenience of God (Rom. 3: 26), in order the fruits of the righteousness to be shown, so that in your case the Scripture to be fulfilled, that says: "There where the sin was multiplied, there the grace was abundant" (Rom. 5: 20)[478].

Why, therefore, you are again urging the fire to come into your forest? This is because the devils do not allow you to see that until they will have taken you in their hands and until they will have done their will with you. But in order you to see that this thing is not beneficial to you, but it is dangerous to you, take heed at the fact that by this I am rightly asking you to understand the advice of the Apostle who says: "You who teach another, why don't you teach on yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21)[479].

Listen to me, brother! Are you paralyzed to that you want to be helped by another? Don't you realize that that is towards condemnation, especially for a young man who can serve somebody else? Believe me that I, until I haven't received annunciation from God to appease myself into withdrawal, I was helping myself even in time of illness, by preparing a little food to myself and by starting up a fire. Stop doing that what you are doing, or you will die sinfully. And if you need something, do not speak about that more than necessary. This is because, he who hasn't built up his monastic cell, how will be him able to build up the monastic cell of another? Don't you know that the Lor said: "The Son of man hasn't come to be served, but to serve" (Mt. 20: 28)? Do not allow to be yourself deviated form these, of else "your blood will be upon you" (3 Kings[480] 2: 38)[481]. Tell humbly the truth them who ask you [478] The purpose of the demons is that of destroying you by temptations and sins. But God brings His work which He bring you through to the good target aimed by Him, by overwhelming the evil work of those ones.

[479] God allows the believers to be tempted by demons not only for their freedom, but also in order they to taste the bitterness coming out of the desolation of their egotistic and isolated life, they to turn themselves back to God, and by being them forgiven by God and filled up with His kindness, to be shown how superior is the life into God in comparison to the void lived while estranged from God.

[480] In KJB we have: 1 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[481] Yourself will be guilty of your death. The Jew told Pilate: "His blood upon us", and so they took the guilt for Jesus's death upon themselves. It will be held accountable for something: "Forgive me, for I am straying". I have asked and I have found out that a young man won't beneficial to another young man even if watering him with the knowledge of the entire Scripture. So, if you put in work the whole your power, I too will put a word for you to God, for you won't be erased from my heart. But I am using my power praying God to get you out from the scary darkness to the untold light, and from the straying of the devils to the knowledge of Christ, and from the second death caused by sin[482] to the eternal life. If you want to be saved, you won't despise what I have told you. Be it I to see you toiling into the vineyard of our Master Jesus Christ: thirty, sixty, one hundred, towards the glory of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

234. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Forgive me, Father, for the Lord, because unknowingly I have been mocked. And pray for me so that I will be able to set a new beginning.

The answer of Barsanuphius: We know, brother, that when some people drew near to Master Christ into true repentance, they received the forgiveness of their sins. He told so to the sinner: "Your sins be forgiven" (Lk. 7: 47-48). Therefore, I too am telling you that if you do, according to your power, the things said to you by me, you too will be given the mercy of Him Who had mercy on David and Who forgave the sinner. And by saying: "I want to set a beginning", you have made me too to rejoice. But the beginning is the humbleness and the fear of God. This is "for the fear of God is the beginning of the wisdom" (Ps. 110: 10[483]). But what is the beginning of the wisdom if not the stopping from all the things unpleasant to God. And who can one stop himself from doing those, if not by somebody's death that one whom the blood of his victim will be seen upon. The shed blood of the victim will burden the killer. The death of the victim will be projected like a shadow over the killer, for it is present as a reproach in his conscience. And, likewise is guilty that one who kills himself.

[482] The first death is a consequence of the sin from before Baptism, or from before knowing Christ; the second death is a consequence of the sins form after Baptism.

[483] In KJB we have: Ps. 111: 10: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth for ever."; in ROB we have: Ps. 110: 10: "The beginning of the wisdom is the fear of the Lord; a good understanding it is to them who do it. His praise remains forever and ever." (E. l. t.'s n.)

avoiding to do anything without asking about it and without being advised about it, or by stopping himself from speaking about any undue things? And then to reckon himself as crazy and stupid and being nothing. I am not telling you these, brother, as one who would be righteous. God know this. But if you believe, the Lord will do according to your will. This is for it was written: "Much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16). So, you do according to your power so that you to put into your purse those one hundred dinars, and I will put in there my ten thousand talents (Mt. 18: 24-28)[484]. And do not overlook these, lest otherwise a great grief to some upon you. But you will always think at them and guard them. And I believe that your toil won't be in vain (1 Thes. 3: 5). If you guard the pearl, you will get rich through into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

235. Of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I am troubled by the fact that Abba respects other brothers more, and I am offended by that so much that I am warred by the temptation to hate him. Pray for me and show me what I should do.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, you tempt on yourself. Don't you know that "each one is tempted by his lust as by a witchcraft" (Jas. 1: 14)[485]? Take heed at the fact that the devil hurries up to shake you form the advice given you by me. May God not give him room. This is for God told peter: "Behold, [484] Barsanuphius tells to the addressee: Pay me that one hundred dinars you owe me, or fulfill the few advices I am giving to you, and I will pay to the Lord the ten thousand talents I owe Him for you. The more one is conscious, the more he will be more responsible for others. This is because that one who owed to the Master in the Gospel ten thousand talents, he owed those as one who was responsible for the work of his subordinates. This is a high understanding the responsibility. The differences among people are not being simplistically annulled. But God Who has given to some people bigger talents, God has given them also bigger responsibilities than to others, and therefore they have a more acute conscience. God hasn't given them greater talents in order they to exploit by their skillfulness the people who are less endowed. The talents must not be used egotistically. This is because they are from God.

[485] The lust for being more than he is, it depicts to somebody a great image of himself, and that image will master him as a witchcraft and it will make him angry if not shown to him an honor on the measure of that image. That witchcraft makes him imagine that he is above his real condition.

the devil asked to sift you like a wheat. And I prayer My Father for your faith not to fall" (Lk. 21: 31). Brother, do not look at another, but look at you. Do not spy another's things, for that won't be useful to you at all. And nothing disturbs your heart more than this does[486]. Take heed at not making vain my prayer for you to the Lord[487]. And, I'm letting you know that even if you hadn't come with your request, I would still show you these. Have you sinned? Appease yourself (from the disturbance of the sin). And do not take in account the evil things but the good things (Mt. 12: 35). Mey the Lord forgive you. Rise again upheld by the hand of God and do not trust your thoughts. This is for the devils show the things as they want. Assure yourself against them. This is because they are awful and full of anger against you. May the Lord quickly banish them away from you, brother.

236. The same brother, tormented by the same thoughts, he sent again to the Great Oldman the ask for a word of life. And the Great Oldman sent him in writing the followings:

Brother, you are badly troubled by your thoughts and by the devils with their plotting against your Abba, so that they to make you hate him who loves you and who wants to protect you according to your soul, so that to be fulfilled with you what was written: "Instead of loving me, they slandered me and they paid me the evil ones and they rewarded my love with hatred" (Ps. 108: 3-4)[488]. This is because for many times he convinces you [486] Do not examine, full of curiosity, the shadows from somebody else's life, but examine yours. This is because, by doing the first thing you will be continuously troubled by the temptation of condemning him, while forgiving about your own sins. And by that you will increase your sins.

[487] The prayer in isolation wont' have a full effect. If I pray for me by myself, and if I don't want to ask other for praying for me, I prove myself being proud and God stays against the proud ones. And if I do not pray for others, I will again prove myself as being egotistic. But if the prayer for another isn't accompanied by his prayer too, that prayer done for him will remain without result. This is in case that that one asked me I to pray for him but he doesn't accompany my prayer with his prayer. But when I pray for another who still is in the waves of the faithlessness, my prayer can have effect upon him. But he must somehow find out that I pray for him and so he will be transposed even for a little in sensitiveness, by my love for him. The prayer has also s purpose of uniting the persons, a purpose of extending and of supporting the Church as a communion of love into God.

[488] In KJB we have: Ps. 109: 4-5: "For my love they are my adversaries: but I give myself unto prayer. // And they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love."; in ROB we have: Ps. 108: 3-4: "Instead of loving me, they slandered me, and I was praying. // They that he loves you and you still won't believe him, because of the envy of the devil making blind your heart, in order you to cogitate the evil thing instead of the good things and the bitter things instead of the sweet things, so that you will be condemned together with him "who calls the good as evil and the sweet as bitter, and with him who reckons the light as darkness and the darkness as light" (Isa. 5: 20)[489]. The devil steals you, because of you being mindless and hesitating with your heart, and you do not understand that he wants to drive you to the perdition of your soul, by making you to hide into yourself and to overlook my words and you to crumble yourself down[490]. Those are useless to you… those are useless to you. If you heart doesn't let you know that the things are so, then you are devil and not man[491]. This is because you have stuck yourself into faithlessness and disobedience. And the disobedient become devils as the devil is. Don't you understand what you are doing, my brother, by bringing your Abba to sadness and by making him to endure the heaviness caused him by you? This is for Abba advises you as on a true and beloved son, as he truly reckons you, and for an instance your heart gets softened, but then you are removed from the good put agaisnt me evil things instead of good things and hatred in the place of my love." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[489] This is the lie. And the lie not only that impedes one to know the reality, but the lie also drives the life of him who sustains the lie, and of those who are deluded by him, on a false road, on the road of their non-accomplishment, of the crooking of their being, of uniting their being with the inexistence. By taking the darkness as luminous light, the whole their being will sink into darkness, and they will no longer see any meaning to the existence; the whole existence sinks to them into meaninglessness.

[490] By keeping my words far from you, from your conscience, by twisting my words and by finding in them all sorts of untrue contradictions, you won't touch but their surface, and not their deep meanings which, because of your perverse will, they will remain hidden to you.

[491] If your heart doesn't become known to you, it your heart doesn't let you know that you exist in your fullness, if your heart doesn't assure you that it is satisfied, you are not man but devil. This is because of the devil not searching for any satisfaction in doing good to other and in living of their loving feeling. And the heart is the spiritual organ that connects the human beings. But this is not truly real except by having as foundation the connection between man and God. The devil always works to the individualistic breakage, to the as complete as possible isolation among people. But as there is no human creature non-preoccupied with others, once that human creature has been in connection with others, the devil is preoccupied with others, but only in order do to them evil for promoting the individualistic crumbling of the creation.

and you got changed as the moon (Sirach[492] 27: 12). A have assurance form my Master God that I do not tell you anything without God, and towards the salvation of your soul. And for many times I try to send you word about your thoughts and movements, and I have been having a long-patience with you until today, and I have been waiting for you to understand that what is useful to you. Yes, my sons, suffer me for I am all - unimportant, and get yourself far from your evil thoughts, and you take the good thoughts: innocence, love, long-patience, and humbleness that empties the whole bad of arrows of the devils, and that raised the head of those who achieve the humbleness and it attracts the souls to the grace of God[493]. Wake yourself up, take vigil, be courageous, find comfort in these, and wish your salvation. You must hate the envy[494], the spite, the strife, and things alike. And you must be an innocent sheep in the flock of Jesus, and you must be a honest limb of the community from the monastery, and a sanctified vessel, and a son of the kingdom, and an inheritor of the glory; this is in order you, by living according to the commandments of Christ, to be found worthy of the eternal life and of the glorious resurrection. This is for God is witness to me that I am praying for your soul. May God give me your salvation and your coming to the knowledge of the truth (1 Tim. 2: 4)[495]. If you ceaselessly cogitated at my words, you wouldn't commit mistakes, neither would you get strayed, but you would walk on that full of troubles path wanted by God (Mt. 7: 14), that path that leads to that eternal life into Christ Jesus our Lord. May God make you wise, brother, in the things of His will.

[492] In KJB this book The Wisdom of Joshua, the Son of Sirach is not given. The interested reader can download it for free, from www.academia.edu, together with the other thirteen books, grouped under the title: Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[493] The humbleness, the love, and the other virtues, they are not mere feelings, but they are also steadfast thoughts and real connection among people. The humbleness makes the devil to use one after another his tempting arrows upon humbleness, but without effect.

[494] Hating the envy, hating the hatred, remaining undisturbed, serene, and strong opposing the temptation to hate and to envy.

[495] Barsanuphius often assured the addressee about the fact that he wanted his salvation. But as that one wants to continuously progress in the good things, likewise he wishes him to progress in desiring the salvation for others. The continuous advance into God is unseparated from the continuous advance in the love for others and in all the virtues which make the man evermore alike God and by that evermore loving of people.

237. The question of the same one towards the same one: Forgive me, Abba, for the Lord. I remember that the Fathers tell us to enter our monastic cell and to remember our sins (Paterikon, Pimen 162). But when I remember my sins, I do not feel pain for them. I often want to repent, but I do not succeed in doing that. Tell me what impeded the repentance from coming?

Answer: Brother, you are joking by telling me that you want that, because you actually do not want that. This is because entering you the monastic cell means entering your soul and examining your soul and gathering your thought form any other man. And then we will get pained and we will repent ourselves[496]. If the man doesn't cut off his will, his heart won't get pained. And the faithlessness is born out of the man's will of enjoying the glory from people[497]. The Lord said: "How can you believe, while you receive the glory from people and you do not search for that glory form the unique God (Isa. 5: 44)? For many times you impede the water to descend into your stomach because you sip the water through your nostrils. And you are driven to that by your awful thirst to highlight your justice. That descends the man in hell[498]. That's why the demons mock you are they make the easy things seem difficult to you[499]. So, if you ask me, I will that you that you must either stop your will and you desire for impose your justice and to be pleasant to [496] Thinking at another man it makes you forget about yourself. You will no longer think at yourself in an egotistic manner, but you will think at him. You will think at you only in order you to become more loving to others, by understanding that on that it depends your salvation. In this sense, you will think at your sins and you will increasingly unveil your sins. And that will cause you pain and pricking, or repentance. But the sins are equally numerous cases of weakening of the love for God and of the love for the neighbor. Therefore, you must repent for your sins, you must strengthen your love for God and for your neighbor. Thinking at another man won't remain on a theoretical plan, but it is united with a judgment usually favorable to your neighbor, a judgment united with the weakening of your egotism. Thus, the thinking at yourself won't either remain on a theoretical plan, but it will be a thought that unveils your sins to yourself, it will be a thought united with a discontent, with an emotional state.

[497] When the importance of the glory from the people starts getting big proportions at somebody, he will no longer see the importance of God in his life. The importance of God in his life can decrease insomuch that itself the existence of God will no longer count to him.

[498] Sometimes you avoid the occasions of directly quenching your thirst for being directly praised. But you still attempt to obtain praises by showing your merits on an indirect way, by justifying your sins, or by bragging yourself with your good deeds.

[499] The deeds from the monastery, which can ease up your salvation, they will make it difficult to you if you try to show those deeds of yours to others.

people, or I will cease (answering to you). This is because, if you do not toil painfully to cut off your will, even if you heart doesn't want that[500], what benefic will you obtain by asking me questions? I have told you: you give the hundred dinars and behold your former sins will be forgiven; but you are striving through the backdoor of highlighting your justice, to fall into something worse. Stop, brother, because of not being good this way. This is for Amma Sarah said (Amma is mother in the Semitic languages): "If I want to be pleasant to all people, I will be forced to repent at everyone's gates" (Paterikon, Sarah 5)[501]. And the Apostle says: "If I was pleasant to people, I wouldn't be the servant of Christ" (Gal. 1: 10). If you truly want to cry for your sins, you will take heed at yourself and you will be dead towards any man[502]. This is, brother, because the salvation of the man is done with great efforts. You must cut off these three: you will, your desire for showing your justice, and your desire for being pleasant to people. And then your repentance will truly come to you[503]. And God will shelter you against any evil. Brother, I am testifying to you: take heed at yourself, rejoice when hit and reproached and cursed and rebuked, and remove [500] The heart is given here an evil meaning. Even if the urge of your heart doesn't want you to cut off your will, you will still cut your will off. There are several sorts of will within man. You must cut off that will that leads you to evil, by using for that cutting your superior will that chooses your true good and that leads you to accomplishing your true being. But this means strengthening your love for God and for people.

[501] I must show everybody that I am nothing, but I'll do that due to my faith int God. And by doing so, I will show also to God that I understand my mistake of searching for the praises of everybody.

[502] Let yourself not be moved by anything coming from people, except their urge to faith and to be a good example.

[503] You must cut off your own will which you want to affirm yourself to others through, or through which you want to satisfy your pleasures through them, or your thirst for demonstrating that you were right in that what you did or you wanted to do, or you must cut off your desire for being pleasant to people for obtaining their praise. Sometimes you go ahead your deed with your affirmation, sometimes you brag yourself with your good deed and you will defend it if you see it criticized, and again, some on other times you want to leave the impression that you do not want to affirm on yourself but you actually want to serve others, but your final goal is actually to affirm on yourself on this indirect way. In all of these you search for satisfaction in yourself, in people, and partially in material things too, so that you won't need God. By doing so you won't be able to repent yourself. The repentance as discontent of yourself, it is contrary to your content with yourself. Until it seems to you that you quench your thirst with the stall water of the mirky puddle from within you, or from within people, you won't search for the clean water spring and always flowing, that is God. Until you are locked up in the preoccupation with yourself, and with the preoccupation with the people's opinion on you, you won't become transparent to God.

from you're the cunningness of the devil and not the wisdom[504]. Earn for yourself the innocence of the dove (Mt. 10: 16) united with the wisdom. If you like it, you will guard it and God will give His hand to you. And if you do not want that, you will see. This is for everyone who wants he wants to have self-mastery. But if you surrender this, you will be worriless for somebody else will take care of you. Chise that what you want.

238. The question of the same one towards the same one: What is the cunningness and what is the wisdom? And what is the innocence united with the wisdom?

Answer: I have spoken to you about the cunningness of the snake, for I respected your wisdom. This is because the devil's cunningness brings within man all his evil thoughts. And if the man remains in those evil thoughts, he will stretch his cunningness against God. And all the things belonging to cunningness are towards the soul's perdition. "This is because any bad tree brings fort bad fruits" (Mt. 7: 17; 12: 33). And the wisdom leads the man to the right-reckoning (to discerning the thoughts). I have told you, brother, keep the innocence of the dove united with the wisdom. This is for its thoughts are good and useful. "This is for any good tree brings fort good fruits" (Mt. 7: 17). And the innocence united with the wisdom leads the man to the resting of his thought, to the appeasement of his soul and of his body and to the eternal life[505]. You must strive yourself to earn these and the Lord will help you. This is for this is His will: all people to be saved.

239. The question of the same tone towards the same one: I pray you, master, because my thought tells me that without appeasement (withdrawal) one cannot repent. So, if possible,

[504] Let's banish away from us the snake's cunningness, but not the wisdom; let's not confound the cunningness to wisdom. The medicine against pride – the pride accompanies, as a shadow, any good that we want to do – it is to say as Jesus advised us: "After you have done all of these, you must say: we are worthless servants, and we have done what we owed to do" (Lk. 17: 10)

[505] The resting form the Kingdom of Heavens is a resting or a souly peace. This resting must start from here.

please grant me a few days of appeasement (withdrawal). And please pray for me so that I will be able to keep that.

Brother, I have accepted your plan, or better said God too accepted you plan, for He can work together with you on everything that is beneficial to you and according to His will nd not according to your will. So taught us our Lord Jesus Christ not to do our will but His as Himself did the will of His Father[506] (Jn. 6: 38). After Him I too I have been stretching my wings over you until today[507]. And I am bearing the burdens of your mistakes and of your overlooking of my words written to you, and of your indifference. And by looking at those, I have been covering them up, as God too looks at and covers up our sins, while waiting for your repentance[508]. And you have become like a man who sat under a tree that overshadowed him and then that man get out in the sun and that's why that man was burnt and brought to perdition. But despite all of these, I haven't forsaken you. This is for alive is our Lord and you must not wonder about that. This is for "the Lord took an oath on Himself that He doesn't' want the death of the sinner but the sinner to turn back and to be alive" (Exod. 18: 23). If the sinner doesn't turn back, he will remain in state of perdition. But you, my son, you have asked me for sour and sweet things; by the sour things I understand your will and by the that things that is [506] When somebody does the will of God, he makes the will of God as his. But he does that willingly, or he puts his will at God's disposition. This is for the man, by doing the will of God, there will be active too the will of God in man's will. The two wills are united in man and also in God. But not the will of God puts itself to man's disposition, but the man's will it is at God's disposition. The two will reach to be a unit, but without being confounded to one another.

[507] After Christ, or due to Christ, Barsanuphius too was able to stretch his protective wings over his spiritual sons. This is because without the power and the love received by him from Christ, he wouldn't have been able to do that. But without those neither him would have reached the full love for people as wanted by Christ.

[508] Barsanuphius bears and covers the mistakes of his spiritual sons. But he does that only because he is united with Christ, namely only for the power of Christ is within him too, and not because that Barsanuphius would have done that by his own power. He bears those mistakes despite those meaning also a despise manifested to the advices given by him, a thing that could have been interpreted as a personal offence. This is for the love defeats the tendency to feel offended. Christ present within the believer ad spiritually advance man, He is present as One Who continues to suffer for the sinner. So, him who is spiritually advance, he is united with Christ and that's why he suffers together with Christ for the sinners, by impropriating Christ's power and love and by working to turn the sinners back to repentance. Sometimes, the sinners are stubbornly committing even greater sins. But not even then the sinners will be forsaken by Christ and by their spiritual Fathers.

sweet like honey I understand your repentance. By saying: "Grant me a few days of appeasement into withdrawal, for I know what is usually beneficial", you have proven pride. You should have said: "guide me on the path of God". May God enlighten the eyes of your heart so that you to be able to know how much I am toiling for you, sparing you from being lost. But it is needed also a little work from you, in the name of God. Lo, I am giving you a commandment towards salvation, which if you keep it, I will take upon myself that bill that is against you (Col. 2: 14)[509]. And I won't leave you either in the present age or in the age to come, by the grace of Christ.

Do not allow yourself to be deluded by the satiation of your belly. Neither sweeten yourself up by eating and drinking more than your body needs. And guard yourself not to judge anybody. Be obedient and you will reach the humbleness; and your passions will be burnt down within you. Do not speak-against, because of reckoning that the commandment is difficult. This is because of not being possible to be save anybody without tiredness and without keeping the commandment. Lo, I have taken from you your heaviness and your burden and your debt and you have become young and non-burdened by responsibility (innocent) and clean. You must remain from now on in cleanness[510]. By hearing our Savior saying: "Lo, you have been made whole, you must no longer [509] Like Christ took upon Himself the bill existing against us, and he emptied it on the cross, by suffering in His body for our sins which we should have suffered for, and He defeated the death we owed for those sins by the cleanness He received the death, likewise Barsanuphius in union with Christ defeated the bill that stood upon his spiritual sons, and he was decided to suffer for them. He who united himself with Christ by surpassing any egotism, he will unite himself together with Christ also with them who are under the guilt of their sins. But these too they need to tear down the border of their egotism, in order the guilt for their sin to actually pass upon Christ and upon them who love them and so their sins and their death as punishment for their sins, to lose their power upon them. This passing of the committed sins upon their spiritual Fathers it is founded on the tight union in feeling of the last ones with the first ones. The last ones pour within themselves the guilt they took form their spiritual sons, through their feeling due to their cleanness, or better said due to their cleanness united with the cleanness of Christ, so that Christ's union with us to be accomplished and to be shown also in our union among ourselves.

[510] The sins of the spiritual son had been taken away from him by his spiritual Father. The son was no longer responsible for his sins, he was clean of those, he was rejuvenated, he was like a man who hadn't committed any sin. But he must remain thus. There were united within him innocence with his gratitude for him who unburdened him of his sins and of his bitter experience with his sins, and he wanted in continuation to shun himself of committing sins. Combining those had helped him to no longer commit sins.

commit sins lest something worse to happen to you" (Jn. 5: 14). But you must not reckon that you can be saved effortlessly, because you need tears and ascesis and forcing. Do not allow your body to become drowsy, because that will bring you down[511]. This is because surely could be brought down even the great ones if they do not take heed. Encourage yourself, therefore, my brother, and keep my commandments, better said Lord's commandments, and you will rejoice. And the Lord will guard you against the cunning one, and He will gladden you in His Kingdom. You must always cogitate at these. You must desire to be saved and the Lord will save you, Who the glory is due forever. Amen.

240. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Forgive me, Master Abba, for the Lord. Your holiness told me: "Behold, your sins have been forgiven". But Abba Isaiah says that "until the man feels the pleasure for his sins, his sins haven't been forgiven" (Recueil ascétique de L'Abbe Isaïe, Abbaye de Bellefontaine 1790, p. 100). But behold that I feel pleasure for them[512]. Please clarify me, for the lord, because I am tormented by the thought that tells me: "By bring so, you shouldn't have accepted the ordination. This is for this thing is intertwined with the vain-gloriousness and with difficulty". That's why I doubt about my deaconship. I also pray you to tell me what is about that thought that tells me that I have been forsaken by God. This is because I have been very upset during the last week by the thought of fornication.

Answer: Of, will of the cunning devils! Oh, deceit of their chieftain, of the devil that hates the good and the people from the beginning to the very end! This is because, as he parted himself from God, he wants to destroy all the people[513]. Brother, [511] The drowsiness of the body it is the drowsiness of the soul too. An idle and pretentious body it has gone out of control. The soul no longer had power over that body. It is not about a body that is ill and therefore won't have so many debts, but it is about a body ceding easily to any temptation and that it doesn't want and therefore neither it can to strain itself easily in an effort, in a resistance.

[512] In the Volos Edition, at note no. 1: "Namely I still have the baith and the memory of the pleasure, brought to me by the devil; in my imagination". In the French translation the letters no. 226-250 are addressed to a deacon.

[513] The devils aim at disorganizing the entire creation of God, he wants to bring in derision this masterpiece of God in its wholeness, so that the people themselves to criticize and to

I told you that your previous sins have been forgiven, but their wars haven't stopped. This is because the man keeps battling. Even if you haven't committed sins, the devil will have brought their pleasure to you. But because you have committed sins, the more the devil will bring their pleasure to you. And that what Abba Isaiah says it concerns the mode of the pleasures had by them who surrender themselves to pleasures. Actually, it is something else that somebody remembers the sweetness of the honey and it is something else accepting to taste the honey when remembering about it[514]. He who remembers the pleasure of his sins but he doesn't commit the things of the pleasure, but he resists those and he fights them away, he has been forgiven his previous sins.

But these are the craftsmanships of the enemy and opposant of ours, who always wants to swallow alive the people in order to bring them to discouragement regarding their salvation and to despair relatedly to the eternal life, on them who do not lean themselves against the hard rock of the faith, of which each one received his measure. Therefore, you must guard yourself against those, lest you will fall totally in the hands of the devil, and the Lord will have mercy on you, for He is forever alive.

Regarding the ordination, who dares to say about himself that he is worthy of it, except that one who has gone totally mock its Author. But the people themselves reach by that to be the object of the demons' mockery. Being deceived by their apparent independence from God, the people declare themselves as the product of an unconscious nature and they despise one another, and they kill and they exploit on one another mercilessly. Believing that they mock God, they actually mock on themselves and they lose any respect for one another and the lie to one another shamelessly. Believing that they mock God, the people actually mock on themselves and they lose any respect for one another and they blunt up their capacity of perceiving the untold mystery of the humanity and of the creation. The people seem carried away by an endless thirst for destroying the humanity and the creation. But the people actually cannot destroy those. This is for God's mystery is above people's power. But the people make their existence to be increasingly tormenting, they grind down themselves, but they cannot bring their existence to inexistence. They use their existence towards hatred and enmity, they reduce it to a superficial understanding, and they lose any meaning of their existence, by stubbornly refusing the obvious and eternal values.

[514] In the Volos Edition at note: "By tasting the saints understands here, as I reckon, the accompanying or the consenting to the pleasure of the previously done by man. So, to this man who accompanies by will and who tends to and who consents the pleasure of the sins committed before, by that what he has taken the habit of the sin, his sins haven't been forgiven, according to this saint. But to shim who doesn't accompany and who doesn't consent to the pleasure of his previous sins, but he resists that pleasure and he fight it, due to the hatred impropriated by him against sinning, his sins has been forgiven."

crazy and who has totally forgotten about himself? So, you must liturgize to God on the level granted to you, while condemning yourself and waiting for the mercy and for the help of the Lord. And during the Liturgy, take heed and say: "Serve the Lord while fearing Him and get glad of Him with tremble" (Ps. 2: 11[515]); and: "He Who makes His angels ghosts and His servants (who liturgize) flames of fire" (Ps. 103: 5[516]). Do not fear, you haven't been forsaken by God. This is for, if we do not forsake Him, neither Him will forsake us[517]. This is for it is His will us to turn back and to be saved.

And your annoyance from the part of the devil of the fornication it comes to you because of your thoughts against your neighbor and because you judge him. But that also comes to you because of the daring familiarity with those whom I have told you not to have that familiarity with. And, if they who want to get rich worldly, they often endanger themselves at sea and by travelling and they endure that, how much more must we do that for we are waiting for the Kingdom of Heavens and for we want to be called as sons of God? We, who hear that our fight is not against the blood and the body, but against the principalities and the masteries (Eph. 6: 12)? Have you been resisting the sin all the way to the blood, or have you been exhausted by the ghost of the sadness and of the idleness? What have you suffered? What have you endured? What temptations of many sorts have you endured gladly? Of, you sleepy monk. You must show to the devil that you are living to God; you must run to God. You must surrender to God your hands and your feet when you swim through the thoughts waves which surround you and which elevate you up to heavens and which lower you into the bottomless precipices (Ps. 106: 26[518]). I testify to you in front of God that my heart has been stretched with you, as God Who has built it up knows, and for God has placed within my heart the covenant of His

[515] In KJB we have: Ps. 2: 11: "Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling."; in ROB we have: Ps. 2: 11: "Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice of Him with tremble" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[516] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 4: "Who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 5: "You Who make Your angels ghosts and Your servants flame of fire."

[517] If we do not lock up ourselves against Him, He will enter within us.

[518] In KJB we have: Ps. 107: 26: "They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble."; in ROB we have: Ps. 106: 26: "The went up to the skies and they went down in the deeps, and they soul was petrified into dangers." (E. l. t.'s n.)

holy commandments kept by my heart, in order to get you out of darkness by the power of God to the true light, and out of the condemnation to death to the life of the righteousness[519]. Take heed, brother. Because without tiredness and humbleness it is impossible one to be saved.

241. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: For your holiness commanded to me that I must liturgize, show me, please, what should I think or cogitate while standing in the alter with the priest and sharing the Holy Bread and giving the Holy Chalice towards drinking, of when taking the Holy Impartation to somebody? And, should I put one a certain vestment appointed for the service of the Liturgy, or should I cover my body all the way down to my heels?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, all the things done symbolically have spiritual meanings, but you cogitate them bodily. He who serves as deacon, he must be like the cherubs are, wholly eye, whole in his mind, cogitating and looking at the ones from above and extolling them with fear and tremble. This is for the bear the body and the blood of the immortal emperor. He takes also the image of the seraphs by singing the doxology and by swinging their holy wings over the hidden Mysteries, showing through their wings the easement of the earthly and material thing and ceaselessly shouting out with the mind, within the church of the inward man, the victory song consecrated to the glory of great appropriateness of our God: "Holy, Holy, Holy is Lord Sabaoth. Full are the sky and the earth of His glory". The devils will run away, shaking, from the enslaved soul, by the utterance of this fearsome heralding, and so they leave that soul free from their slavery. That soul will see that the true light has dawned to him[520]. And by taking heed, [519] The heart of the spiritual father is stretching itself through all the waves of the temptations and of the hardships fought by his spiritual son, in order him to give to his spiritual son power to overcome those, and in order to bring his spiritual son to light. His love makes him overcoming the space in order him to be everywhere with his spiritual son, as the mother's heart is everywhere with her son, participating to the son's joys and troubles and communicating to the son, in any situation, a power corresponding to the state the son is in.

[520] That what happens on the unsee plan, it is prolonged also in the feeling of the soul. This man no longer feels himself mastered by any passions, but he is totally free and light and he

he sees the great beauty of the immortal Lamb and he wants to satiate himself with His body and blood. And then he hears David shouting out and saying with a loud voice: "Taste and see that good if the Lord"[521] (Ps. 33: 9). And by getting close with his fear, he will become partaker to His body and to His blood, and their taste will become indelible within him, and they will guard him against any passion[522].

These things you most cogitate, either you stand in front of the Holies, or you share them to be eaten and drunk, or you bring the Holy Impartation to somebody, either you gather the Mysteries, or you simply perform your serving to alter.

Regarding the vestment, you must earn your spiritual coat that is pleasant to God. And the coat long to your heels, it means the killing of your limbs. This is for, tell me brother, if the man wears a whole purple coat but he is debauched, will his vestment clean him up of his fornication or of his passions? So, what would they do, they who are worthy of the Holy Mysteries but who have no vestments? God commanded us to have a sole coat: that of the virtues. May God make all of us worthy of that coat, forever. Amen.

242. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman. Forgive me, master, and pray for me through the Lord, so that my senses to be sanctified. This is for your holiness told me about deacon that he must be like the cherubs and the seraphs. But I am defiling myself through my senses. What flies like a seraph in a spiritual sky from around the all-loving of everybody emperor who is, in the same time, that light that fills all realities up with meaning: the meaning of the eternal love among all realities, out of the spring of the eternal love of the Holy Trinity.

[521] In the light of all the meaning which are in the eternal love among all realities, the soul sees it concretized in the Lamb being in state of imperishable sacrifice and ready to give His body and blood to be eaten and drunk by people, as full and simply giving of immortal life. In order Him top be able to give us all the richness of His godlike gifts, He has taken a human body accessible to us, and He placed His body in state of generous sacrifice of us, as expression of His love for us to the very end, and He bestows us by this mediation the whole treasure of His goods, for the Lord is good, He is sweet, and He makes us good and sweet to one another. Meeting us one another into Christ, in gentleness, in kindness, in the fullness of the endless life, in the eternal understanding of the reciprocal value, one rooted into God. What an ocean of meanings is unveiled to us into Christ Who is the Light of the eternal Father and Who has come near to us forever, through body!

[522] Being us filled up and deeply and forever imbued with the gentle and loving sweetness of the Lamb sacrificed for us, not rude and perishable passion will attract us anymore. This is for any passions will seem to him who is on this level, as a coarse and pitiful trivialization.

should I do in order my deaconship not to be towards my condemnation? This is because I am worthless and I cannot restrain myself. Help me for God, in order I not to totally lose my soul.

Answer: Force yourself, your deaconship, to always bear in your mind how the deacon must be and how you are. Think at death and at how you will have to answer to God and, by ceaselessly condemning on yourself, your heart will get pricked in order to receive the repentance. He Who says through the prophet: "You first tell your sins in order you to be corrected" (Isa. 43: 26), He will make you righteous, and He will get your rid of all tiredness. This is for he says: "God is Him Who justifies, so who will condemn us?" (Rom. 8: 33). As I have been showing you for several times, obey and you will be saved. And do not say, by resisting it: "Why is this and why is that?". But make yourself obedient especially to your Abba, he who is second to God in taking care of you and whom your soul has been entrusted to[523]. And if you force yourself to keep these, I will make my power more than abundant. May the Lord guard you and cover you against the coning one. Amen.

243. Of the same tone towards the same one: Tell me, Father, what do you advise me to do in the small liturgical service that I have? This is because, even if I am not mocked by devils, as in most of the remaining time, even only for a coat, it is not easy to me to restrain myself. I am going to do, since now on, everything you command me, so that I can receive mercy. This is for God know what disorder and what passions I am in. Pary for the through the Lord, in order I not to be separated from your bosom at least in the present age. This is because I feel shame for asking that for the age to come too, because of my passions.

[523] The humbleness and the obedience have a decisive importance for salvation, for they mean the killing of any egotism in you, because the egotism separates not only the man from people, but also the man from God, as a separation wall (Eph. 2: 14). Where there are the humbleness and the obedience, God will enter unimpeded. This is foy you will feel a supreme authority in front of which you feel humbled and which you obey to. In free and joyful humbleness and in obedience you will live your getting rid of all oppressions, and you will live your free relationship with the absolutely free God, and God rejoices of being freely and lovingly recognized by You. In humbleness you see and you freely accept your infinite smallness and, implicitly, you will be upheld by the infinite power and loving-generosity of God.

Answer: Brother, "striving in everything" (Paterikon, French Edition, Les sentences des Pères du désert, Solesmes, 1966, p. 362, no. 16) and the humbleness bring the man to progress. This is for the Apostle says: "Suffering trouble into all things, but not narrowed" (2 Cor. 4: 8). By throwing all our material need upon Abba and by not keeping anything with our hands, God know and He is our witness that we do not reckon that Abba must thank us, but we are the ones who must thank him for taking our burden upon himself and so he has liberated us from worries. This is for Apostle Peter says too: "Obey any human being, for the Lord" (1 Pt. 2: 13). And James said that "anybody who keeps the whole law, but he commits sin towards only one point of the law, he has become guilty towards all the law's points (Jas. 2: 10). That's why it is required one not to do his will, but him to reproach on himself in all things, and so he will find the mercy form God. But if the devil mocks him, by making him to cogitate something big about himself, or that he worked well, he will lose all the things done by him. So, by doing what you are doing, humble yourself by saying: "Forgive me, Lord, for I have burdened Abba by throwing upon him my burden". And may Lord Jesus save you. Amen.

244. Another brother deacon no longer wanted to serve in the altar, because of thinking at his previous sins. And he asked the same Great Oldman concerning his bodily illness. And The Great Oldman answered him those:

Brother, the Scripture taught us that "they who want to live with the right faith according to Christ, they will be persecuted" (2 Cor. 3: 12). How can be us persecute in the present time? Through those demons who chase us away from the fear of God and from serving God. And the repentance for sin consists of no longer committing that sin; and the deliverance from evil deeds consists of stopping ourselves from doing those evil deeds. Do not allow yourself to be saddened by your previous sins, and do not stop yourself from serving as deacon, but you must consecrate your serving to God with fear and tremble. And take heed that your serving as deacon brings holiness to your soul[524]. And if you believe so, you will always tremble not to commit sin and not to fall off holiness. Bear your sufferings and your troubles, for they are a corrective rebuking from God. And God will have mercy of you and they will be towards the salvation of your soul[525].

245. Another brother askes the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, if there is a wrath according to nature and a wrath contrary to nature?

Answer: Brother, there is a wrath according to nature and a wrath contrary to nature. That one according to nature fights not to be fulfilled the lusts of the nature. This wrath doesn't need medicines for it is a healing wrath. That wrath contrary to nature fights when are impeded the wills of the lust to be fulfilled. This is for superior to the soldier is him who gives power to the soldier. And if that one is weakened, the soldier will no longer have power[526].

246. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Where have the passions come from within man?

Answer: God created both the soul and the body without passions. But they fall into passions through disobedience.

[524] Refusing to serve in altar because of your past sins it means allowing yourself to be chased away from this serving, by the devils. Barsanuphius repeats that itself the refraining from sinning mean being delivered from sins. This is for the refraining from committing sins, it brings in the strength manifested by it, also a transformation into your being, given that the refraining means a continuous fear of God, some sort of living His power within yourself. This is one with a serving that is appropriate to the full-of-tremble serving to altar, and that serving too will increase this sanctification.

[525] Enduring the illness and the troubles with the sentiment that they are a rebuking from God towards our correction, that at its turn will produce a gradual mutation within your being, a mutation accompanied by refraining from sinning. The sin and the virtue are total states of the human being, which are modified by man's freedom. There where the sin and the virtue are negated, are also denied the freedom and the possibility to change in good or in evil, of the human nature through freedom, the man being reckoned as a piece of nature whom the nature's laws are fulfilled without his consent.

[526] The lust is the one giving power to the wrath as to a soldier of its.

247. Another brother asked the same Great Oldman: I am troubled by the passions of my soul. Tell me, for God, what should I do to liberate myself from them? And pray for me.

Answer: Brother, he who wants to be saved and who desires to be children of God, let him earn humbleness, submission, and obedience; and non-daring[527]. Take heed at the fact that you have asked me: "What should I do?". And lo, I have told you what you should do. And I guarantee you that you won't be mastered either by the enemy of by the passions. This is for they are burnt by humbleness as by a fire, and you heart will become serene and enlightened by Christ[528]. His to be the glory forever. Amen.

248. The same brother, after receiving from Abba the order him to live together with an old man and to him to serve that old man, he asked the other Oldman: How can I know, Father, if it is according to God so sit (inside the monastic cell), or that I won't be harmed by not being together with the brothers form the monastery, but alone, a state which the passions trouble me in? Regarding the passions, what do you command me to do? Likewise, about the sleep? For I fear the sleep's mastery/ Likewise, about forgetfulness. And because I am troubled by the ugly passion, what is the sign of my agreeance to it?

The answer of John: If you want to know whether it harms you of it benefits you to sit (inside the monastic cell), you will have this sign: If you sit due to the fact that you obey the commandment, you will know that that is beneficial to you; this [527] There is a good and a bad daring. The good daring is that one that trusts the mercy of God. The bad daring is that that defies the commandments of God, that doesn't get humble, that doesn't obey them who are appointed to the businesses of the community, that daring crossing over the rules of the good manners among people. This daring is united with the shamelessness. This daring seems to be an act of freedom but it isn't so. The true freedom consists of humbleness, for the humbleness is nourished out of the love from God and for God, between the humble one and God being a relationship of love in freedom. The naughty, the shameless, on the contrary, he is pushed by his daring by a passion undermined by debauchery or by pride.

[528] Maybe this is one of the meanings of the world which Christ was seen as fulfilling the hearts of the hesychasts in, who were practicing starting with the XII-XIV Centuries, the ceaseless prayer. The humbleness and the obedience bring quietude for the man has found on himself, at his ease, into the love for God into Christ.

is for he says: "The obedience is superior to sacrifice" (1 Kings[529] 15: 22). But if you resist in word, you will be harmed. This is because resisting by word is out of an evil impulse. Then, you won't separate yourself form your brothers. May that not be! And God appointed you so, for, given your body's weakness, you to have an alleviation through that old man.

Regarding your passions, they will be moved against the man in order the man to be proven. This is because "the non-tempted man is untested" (Agrapha no. 90). And because you said: "I sit alone", you must not cogitate that because of hurting you. This is for you aren't alone, if you believe, for you have God[530] Whom the Great Oldman has surrendered you to, as you also have the prayer that works together with you. You must only show obedience and nothing else and you will be saved[531]. So, do not fear, for you won't be harmed.

And regarding the psalms, you can do what the brothers do, by singing three psalms and by doing kneelings. And the sleep won't defeat you. You must to so during night, except in case of illness.

The forgetfulness is the perdition of the soul, there where it comes out of despising and carelessness[532].

And the shameful and ugly passion needs the exhaustion of the heart and of the body in order it to be uprooted: of the heart by ceaselessly praying to God, of the body by persecuting your body and by bringing your body to submission with the whole your power.

And the sign of the agreeance consists of being that thing pleasant to the man and of getting his heart sweetened and of cogitating him at that thing with pleasure. And when somebody resists that thought and he fight not to accept it, he shows that

[529] In the KJB we have: 1 Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[530] He who believe in God, he has God next to him and within him. The faith and the prayer are the signs of the work of God within man. When you think at somebody, you are in a communication with him. All the more you are in a communication with God when you think at God with trust in Him and when you address your asks for help to God.

[531] In the unhesitating obedience you have liberated of yourself and you have fully surrendered yourself to God. This is for in God's name you obey him whom has been given you to obey to.

[532] The forgetfulness is negligence. The forgetfulness has the tendency to repeat itself and to become a habit. By forgetfulness you will forget about your duties, and then even about yourself. But by that you will forget about God too. As such, the forgetfulness is the death of the soul, for it is the death of your sensitiveness to the reality of God, to the imperishable deep of your life, and so you will look only at the biological plan of your existence.

he chooses the war. And this brings to the man testing and progress. May our Lord Jesus Christ to clean you up of your sins and to strengthen you with His kindness in your weakness. Amen.

249. The question of the same one towards the same one: What the obedience is? And what should I ask in prayer? And if somebody tells me: "Pray for me", what should I do? Must I remember him always?

Answer: The obedience cuts off one's will. But without striving nobody can achieve the obedience[533]. And if you sit (inside your monastic cell) by obeying the commandment and not in order to rest your body, by doing so you won't fulfill your will, neither will you sit together with the passion, but you will do that rather to be pleasant to God. But if you sit and sweeten yourself with the resting, you won't be pleasant to God.

Regarding the prayer, you will say: "Lord, deliver me from my sins and from my reproachable passions". And if somebody tells you: "Pray for me", you will say within your heart: "May [533] The obedience is a cutting off of your surface will, through another will that is deeper. It is a cutting off of that will that is pleasant to egotism, through the will of mastering your egotism of the pleasures, that one that keeps you in the narrowness of the biological and individualistic horizon, and it is that will of raising into the broadness of the godlike and altruistic horizon. There is more straining of the will in obeying than in disobeying. The egotistic life is a frivolous caprice, it is a pampering. That's why one can tell that one cannot cut off the disobedient will without an exhaustion of the heart and of the body. It is called that will that we must cut it off, as "own will", because through is the man serves only on himself egotistically, or in he serves himself firstly. But that will that somebody cuts off this "own will" it is that will that has the man as its subject, but as a subject putting his will in the service of God and of his fellow humans. And by this he puts his will in the service of his self that is destined to a superior and imperishable life. Such a man somewhat does the will of others, and not his egotistic will, but that will that serves others' good that is identical to the own good. In the same time, he does the will of God Who aims at his good and at the good of his fellow humans. This is for, as Saint Maximos the Confessor says (Opuscula theological et polemica), God wants that what promotes the true nature of the man, namely that what is according to the true will of the man. In this way, in deep, the man's will (or the will of all people) and the will of God coincide, though the subjects differ. Still, for the will of God stays at the basis of the man's being and will, though the last one is not from himself, one can talk about two wills. Likewise, one can talk about two wills in Christ, but also about a consummate unity between those two wills in Christ, especially for within Him there is also a unique Subject of those wills. In the Kingdom go God there will be a consummate union between the will of all people and the will of God, according to the example of the two will within Christ.

God have mercy on us" and that will suffice. And to always remember him it is not given to you, but to the consummate ones who can ceaselessly pray for others[534].

250. The question of the same one towards the same one: I pray you, Father, tell me how can I know that I am into obedience and I have left my own will? And what should I do in order I to be equal to the brothers? This is for I hear from the Fathers that he who is into obedience and he doesn't do his own will, but he is equal to the brothers in all things, he will advance very quickly. And I examine my heart to see if I live the life into monastery as the brother do, but I do not receive any assurance, because I untie (the fasting) before they do it and I eat before they eat and I eat alone. I would want to test myself whether I could eat later, but I fear to do that because of my illness.

Answer: You will be able to find out if you live a monastic life if you ascertain that you do nothing by your own will, neither you eat alone, nor together with the brothers, but in order you to do the things commanded to you without hesitation. You reckon yourself as one among the ill ones. But are the ill ones outside monastery because of eating alone? Let that not be! But they do that because of their illness, at the commandment of Abba. So, God has given you as reason to serve the old man, in order the inexperienced ones not to be offended by seeing you eating earlier. So, it is not your decision to eat later with those who are not ill. And if you are ill, you must take care of yourself and that gives birth within you to sadness. So, lo that you have been given a motif not to cause offense to somebody else, not to be you tormented by thinking that you eat alone. Thus, the live from monastery and the equality of the brothers from monastery consist of doing all things at the command of the Abba and not according to your own will. Can's you remember that you resisted Aba and you didn't want to fulfill his commandment? How dared you to mumble into your stupidity? Did you fight for eating? Didn't you fight for fulfilling your own will? If you want to benefit and to remain into the monastic life, you must cut off your own will in all things and you must obey equally much as the brothers do, and lo that you are together-inhabitant with them into the monastery's community, towards the benefit of your soul[535], guided by your Fathers, by the Great Oldman, and by the others. You must follow their advices by the grace of Christ. This is for they know, brother, better than you do, that what is beneficial to your soul.

[534] He who prays for another, he too will gain. This is for he commits an act of love and he progresses in love, ascending to a superior state. Ad he prays for himself too. This is for by the fact that he prays he places himself in connection with God from Whom comes kindness and power. So, by continuously praying yourself for another, you will continuously pray for yourself too. But how many can do that? And then, who can always bear in mind all the people and continuously? But the consummate one can have them in this thought virtually. Anyway, somebody's prayer for another unites him with that one in his thought. Thus, the prayer is a means of union among people.

251. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Being asked by the old man whom he was serving to, and that man was a cleric, and the brother was not a cleric, to utter the prayer and to bless the food, or being him appointed to other things like this one, he asked if he must obey the old man regarding that.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Hun yourself from rejoicing of the honor given to you, but manifest the obedience which banishes away the resistance that is hated by God and by them who love God. You must keep the obedience that elevates one to heavens and that makes them who have it alike the Son of God[536]. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

[535] Not in the uniformity of the accomplished things consists the unity of the life into monastery of, but it consists of the uniformity of obeying the Fathers from the monastery, who give each monk to accomplish a thing that matches his benefit. Everyone must obey in an absolute manner, as to God, but in order to be each one led towards consummation on a line fitting him, according to his own talents (the Biblical talents / the money (E. l. t.'s n.)) which must be developed, but also according to the weaknesses which must be taken in account. Apostle Peter goes on his line, John goes on his line, but each of them manifested the same total self-giving to God. God hasn't made the people uniformly, neither God wants to uniformize the people.

[536] The obedience being one with the humbleness, it elevates him who has it, to heavens, according to the word of our Savior: "he who humbles himself, he will be elevated" (Mt. 23: 12; Pt. 5: 5). This is for, through humbleness, the Son of God too, He ascended to heavens as man, in total humbleness and obedience, which the man has been elevated through, above himself; through humbleness and obedience the man find God and he totally opens himself to God. Until the man is preoccupied with himself in an egotistical mode, he won't be able to experience God and he won't be able to receive God. In humbleness the man can unite himself with God and with all the people, and he can comprise God and all the people.

252. Another brother (in the French Edition: Dositheos) asked the other Oldman: Because I have some money (some goods) and I want to give a part of those to the monastery and the other part to the poor, tell me Father how should I share those through Abba?[537]

The answer of John: Brother, my first answers sent to you, I formulated them as towards one who still needs milk (Hebr. 5: 12). But now when you want consummate obedience, you too must do what was written: "Open your mouth and I fill it up" (Ps. 80: 9[538]). Brother, you need not to learn from me, because I am the most unimportant one, what you should do, but you must learn from the Acts of the Apostles, about those who were selling their belonging and they put the piece at the feet of the Apostles, so that "they shared to everyone according to their need" (Acts 4: 35), and no by themselves but through the Apostles. And thus, they were delivered form the worry for their money and from their vain-gloriousness. If you want to reach this measure, and if you want to enjoy the carelessness, and fi you want to occupy yourself with the care for God[539], you will do alike. Brother, the present things are very few in comparison to what some ones gave to Abba Isaiah. This is for "some people gave him thousands of coins, by telling him: "Use them as you wish". They did not tell him when and how he should have used those coins. Those ones did a consummate thing and they liberated themselves from worries. And you, [537] The French translation gives the letters from no. 259 to no. 338 as addressed to Dositheos, whose "teachings" have been given by us in the Romanian translation in the volume IX of The Romanian Philokalia, pp. 463-645.

[538] In the KJB we have: Ps. 81: 10: "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."; in ROB we have: Ps. 80: 9: "For I am Lord you God Who got you out of the land of Egypt. Open your mouth and I will ill it up." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[539] There is worry and worry. There is the worry for ourselves and for the things of the world, which we are satisfying our needs through, and there is the care for God, a care that is no longer in the service of the egotism. Through the last one we throw upon God the care for ourselves, and God will take care of us (1 Cor. 5: 7). This actually is the care of not worrying about ourselves, the care of being free from ourselves, for God in Whom, since now, there is the whole our present and future life, the whole our spiritual breathing, the whole our self-certitude. Taking care of God means thinking at God always, and thinking at fulfilling His commandments, which we advance into living with Him and in the care for our fellow humans, and by that we will fulfill the true care for ourselves.

once it has been the will of God for you to come to this joy, you owe God thanks and you must show your thankfulness to him who bear your burden. Let the sower of the evil things to sow within you the thought that he who has received your money he should thank you. May God make with you that what is useful to your soul's salvation.

253. The same one asked the Great Oldman if he should share his money (his goods) through Abbam and how he should share those and whom?

Answer: May the Lord bless you, my son. You want to be worriless but you do not want actually, because of being you impeded by your will. You must only tell what do you want to let to the community and to them who are in need, and then be worriless. This is the obedience, namely not having master upon yourself[540]. What is more valuable than you soul, which the Lord said about that is more precious than the whole world (Mt. 16: 26)? And if you have surrendered your soul to God and to your spiritual Fathers, why will you continue hesitating to entrust them the less important things? Can you see how are you warred, without you realizing it, by vain-gloriousness and by faithlessness? And because of you are so, that means that you haven't truly entrusted them your soul and, therefore, how can you expect to find mercy through them? You must liberate yourself of worries, if you want to occupy yourself with God while liberated from all things. And I will take care of being fulfilled that what you decided. You must only occupy yourself, in a worriless manner, with God. And forgive me for the sake of the love[541].

[540] Not being you unwillingly mastered by anything, that is one stage. But not allowing yourself to be mastered in the name of God invoking the reason that you want to command to yourself, it also can mean that you are mastered by all caprices. Saint Apostle Paul says: "Live as free men, but not as having your freedom as cover to your evilness, but as servants of God" (1 Pt. 2: 16). Only into God you can be free of yourself, namely of all the inferior things. Only by obeying God you will strongly feel God's glory and love, which make you free of all limited things, and which lead you to the truly unlimited life. On the other hand, obeying God means allowing God to be Master with His will and with His love upon you, and it means you not wanting to be master upon yourself while closed to God's love. This is because this one is another slavery.

[541] Why did he finished all his letters by asking the addresses for forgiveness, though he didn't do anything wrong to them? He couldn't be happy into God if he knew that somebody

254. the question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, hos can one reach to cut his own will off, and how can one reach that state that he will be able to say in: "Lo, I have left everything for You and I have followed You" (Mt. 19: 27)? This is for I have kept for me a small plot of land for my subsistence, because I am ill.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Leaving the own will is one with shedding your blood, namely it is equal to somebody reaching in that fight for cutting off his will to death[542]. And the word: "Behold, I have left everything and I have followed you", it tells us about consummation and not about small plots of land and a small money. That word tells us also about thoughts and wills. But you haven't reached that consummation yet. If you have come closer to it, you will hear that what you ought to do. For now, you must keep only this: be worriless towards all things and worries. And keep that small plot of land, for now, for your subsistence. May Lord Jesus Christ bring you at the untold joy. This is for He is the eternal light[543]. Amen.

255. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Pray the Lord for me and tell me what should I do remained outside, because of being troubled by having something against him. He must continuously fight for making serene the soul of any man whom he had a connection with, here on earth. That's why, one who doesn't forgive or who doesn't ask for forgiveness, he won't be able to enter the Kingdom of Love. Then, who can tall that he has done everything for another? There still might one be troubled. There can be even a jealousy on them who are very faithful and kind, so that some people do not feel well by seeing those. That's why the good ones need to humble themselves to the maximum, in order not to give the envious one the feeling that they reckon themselves and superior to the envious. If they, though, cannot make them to accept their communion in the Kingdom of Heavens, they will remain, on one hand, with a compassion for those, but on the other hand they can do nothing. In a way, those ones feel "better" outside their company. It is more supportable to them the torment coming to them out of despising the joy for better of the good ones, than to live with disgust in their company.

[542] Namely to the death asked from him and towards which he feels himself driven to endure it for the good of another or for that one's escape.

[543] Christ is the untold joy, for He has within Himself the untold love for us. But this joy, or love, it comprises within it also the supreme meaning, or all the things of the existence. The evil ones are darkened and they are in darkness because of not having any full and durable joy, or any true understanding of the existence's meaning.

because I am very warred by fornication and I am endangered of falling into despair and I neither can refrain myself (from food) because of the weakness of my body.

Answer: Brother, the devil, because of envying you, he has started war against you. Therefore, you must guard your eyes and you mustn't eat until you get satiated. And drink a little wine for the weakness which you have told me about. But you must earn your humbleness, for by humbleness all the traps of the enemy will be broken (Paterikon, Saint Anthony 7). And I, the too unimportant one, I will put all my power to pray God to defend you against all temptations and to guard you against all evils. Do not bow down brother, neither surrender yourself to despair, because that is the great joy of the devil. But by ceaselessly praying yourself, say: "Lord Jesus Christ, save me of the reproachable passions". And you will find the mercy from God. And so, you will receive power through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

256. The same brother, because of being warred by the same passion of the fornication, he asked the same Great Oldman to pray for him and to tell him how could one know whether he is tempted by his lust or by the enemy?

Answer: Brother, without tiredness and without the crushing of the heart, no one can be saved of passions and no one can be pleasant to God. So, when somebody is tempted by his lust, that is a sign that he hasn't taken care of himself, and he allowed his heart to the things committed by him previously. And so, he brings through himself the anger upon himself, because of his own lust. And the mind, by gradually getting blind, it reaches, because of its nescience, to take heed at him whom the mind lusts for and the mind will search motifs for talking to him and to sit together with him, and it will come on all ways to satisfy its lust. Thus, letting your thought into these ones, it means increasing the war leading to falling, if not with the body at least with the ghost, by consents. And so, the man reaches to ignite within himself the fire like in a matter. On the contrary, the awake and wise man who wants to be saved, by seeing where his harm is coming from, he will guard on himself with the whole care against any evil memory, in order him not to tarry with his thought at passions, as he will also guard himself against looking and against meetings and against any contrived motif, because of fearing not to ignite that fire into himself. Behold, the war caused by lust, or by the own will. And the temptation coming from the devil is this: The heart of him who wants to be saved fears to receive the seed[544], and by that he guards on himself, with watchfulness, against the evil memory and against occupying his thought with the passions, as also he avoids looking or meeting. And if the need for something requires him to meet somebody, he will rather miss that thing than to lose his soul. Take vigil, brother, for you are mortal and temporary. Do not agree to lose your eternal life for the short duration pleasure. What other benefit will bring you the stench and the uncleanness of the sin except shame and condemnation? And the restraint brings the victory, the crown and the praise. Bridle up your horse in the bridle of the knowledge, lest by looking here and there to get mad for women, or better said for men, and on you, its reader, it to throw you down[545]. Pray God Him "to turn your eyes so that your eye not to see the rottenness" (Ps. 118: 37[546]). And if you have achieved a manly heart, the wars will be easily banished away from you. Make yourself stinging as the wine is to the wound, and you won't allow the stench and the uncleanness to pile up. Achieve the crying, in order the crying to estrange you from the daring the unravels the souls of those who have achieved it[547]. Do not throw away that toll which the fertile land it cannot be worked without. And this tool is the humbleness crafted for us by the Great God, which all the weeds are uprooted by from God's field and which causes grace to those [544] In the Volos Edition, at note: "Or the attack, or the bait from the enemy".

[545] The horse is something else than the rider. The body's lust and the will for sinning risen by this lust, they are something else than the will of the subject who is the true master over all the things which the man is constituted by, though the will of the subject can cede and he can place himself, to some extent, in the service of the lust and of the sin. To some extent, the subject is unwilling dragged, or with the half of his will, into the things which he, on one hand, he feels contrary to him, and so he can be brought, by repetition, to the death of his soul, so that the man almost becomes some sort of automate, or an object carried away, here and there, by his repressed impulses.

[546] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 37: "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 37: "Turn my eyes away so not to see the vanity; in my way, make me alive." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[547] It is about the naughty and insensitive daring that makes the soul blunt and able to laugh at all gentle sentiments, at all respect for the superior values.

who work that field with the tool of the humbleness[548]. The humbleness wont' fall, but the humbleness rises from their falling them who have humbleness.

You must embrace the crying with the whole your heart, for the crying is the companion of the good work. Force yourself to cut off you will in all things, for this is reckoned as a sacrifice of the man. This is that what they told about: "For you we give ourselves to death all day long; we have been reckoned as stabbing sheep"[549] (Ps. 43: 24[550]). Do not allow yourself to become drowsy at meetings and discussions, because those ones won't let you advance towards God. You must torment your senses much: your sight, your hearing, your tasting, your touching, and you will advance by the grace of Christ. This is because one cannot reach to be martyr (witness) without torments. This is for the Lord too said: "into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 19). And the Apostle says: "into much patience, into troubles" (2 Cor. 6: 4). Take heed at not showing to Chaldeans the treasures of your house, because otherwise they will take you prisoner for Nebuchadnezzar the Emperor of the Babylonians (4 Kings[551] 25). Trample on your passions, by always thinking at this answer, in order you not to be powerfully trampled and tormented by your passions[552]. Run [548] The humbleness maintains a gentle sensitiveness within man even towards his own being, even towards his own body, by knowing that his body is a full of mysteries organ given by God to the man in order the man's body to be the man's environment for manifesting clean sentiment and for doing good deeds. This is for the humbleness is the opposite to the rude naughtiness that defiles everything, that one that respects nothing because of understanding nothing form reality, and because of not seeing the presence of God in anything.

[549] Cutting off your will means stopping to live for yourself, it means sacrificing yourself. But the ego whom you live your egotistic passions through, it is a surface self, it is a self whom you do not live your deep through in your fullness and authenticity. This superficial ego must be killed in order your true subject to come out and enter the communion with God and with your fellow humans.

[550] In KJB we have: Ps. 44: 22: "Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter."; in ROB we have: Ps. 43: 24: "For You we are killed all day long, we have been like some sheep for stabbing." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[552] You either are trampled by passions, or you stand and keep your passions under your heel, and finally you will abolish your passions. The dispassionate man is the free eye, the strong man, the unbent men, the man that moves according to his true will. He stands even in front of God, for God doesn't enslave him but God loves him. The man bows down before God out of his love for God, and out of his gratitude for everything God has given and continues giving him. The man is servant of God not because of fearing God, and the man is in the same time a son that loves God in freedom. That slavery is the slavery of the son totally bestowed himself to the loving Father for his love.

aways from your passions as a stage runs aways from the nets, or your passions will tear you apart like on a lamb. But you fear them not, because they have no power. Our Lord Jesus Christ has weakened them down[553], and He has made them powerless. But you must not sleep. This is for, even though they are half-dead, they do not sleep. And do not get lazy because they do not get lazy either. Stretch your hand, for a little while, to your Fathers who want to pluck you out of the stinky mud[554]. Remember that "much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16).

Do not judge anybody (Mt. 7: 1); do not despise and do not offend anybody. Do not think about somebody things which you haven't seen at him. This is because these are towards the losing of your soul. Take heed and wait for your death to come. Tell to yourself the word of the blessed Arsenius: "Arsenius, why have you exit (the world)?" (Paterikon, Arsenius 40). Learn what have you come to search here for? Run towards Jesus so you to grab Him. If you want to be saved, you must quick up your pace, in order you to be in this good annunciation together with the Holy Fathers. If you want to advance, you must work. Crave for being together with the saints, glorified in the untold glory, and not together with the devils in the untold punishment. You must desire to be in the Kingdom of Heavens and not in the Gehenna of the fire. You must desire to hear: "Come, you the blessed of My Father" (Mt. 25: 35) and: "Well done, you good and faithful servant" (Mt. 25: 31), and you not to hear: "Go away from Me you cursed and lazy servant" (Mt. 25: 26, 41). Of the Lord is the glory forever. Amen.

257. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Having many sins, I wish to repent myself. But because of the helplessness of my body, I cannot impropriate the ascesis [553] Our Lord Jesus Christ has weakened down the demons, and He strengthened the human nature from within Him, and thus He communicates this strength us too, on the ground of the communion of nature and of His love for us.

[554] The man has hands. The man is not like his animal or like his object that is take and handed over without shaking hands. Through hand it is shown the will for receiving help, for answering the helping love. Through hand it is shown the man's will for collaborating with him who wants to help him, to elevate him from the lower state which the man is in. The man cannot elevate himself from his inferior state, and ne neither can really be elevated unwillingly, for if that was the case the man wouldn't actually be souly elevated. of the Fathers. Please tell me how can I set up a beginning? Command me, and tell me what does it mean that what you have told in another answer: "Do not show to Babylonians the treasures of your house, or you will be taken to slavery into Babylon".

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, there are some poor people blessed by our Lord (Mt. 5: 3). They are those who rejected their richesses, namely all their passions, and they have emptied themselves of those for the name of the Lord. These ones are the true poor and they have their happiness. And there are many poor who haven't achieved any good. These ones have been menaced by the Lord Who said: "Go away from me, you the cursed ones" (Mt. 25: 41). He who has such richesses and who is burdened by them, let him reject them and he will get rid of worries. So, if you want to set up a beginning, you must repent yourself. Learn what the debauched woman did, for she washed up with her tears the feet of the Master (Lk. 7: 38). The crying washes up the man of all his sins[555]. But the crying doesn't come to the man except through effort, by much occupying yourself with God, through patience, and by thinking at the fearful judgment and at the eternal shame[556]; and through self-rejection. This is for the Lord said: "He who wants to come to Me, let him reject himself and take his cross and follow Me" (Mt. 16: 24). And self-rejection means taking your own cross and cutting you will in all things and accepting to be disregarded by others.

And because you have told me that you suffer of your body's weakness and that you cannot do anything regarding that, I am advising you to cut off a little bread and a little wine, according to your power. This is for God received the two pennies of the widow and He rejoiced for that more than for all the other gifts (Mt. 12: 4). Learn the non-daring and you will be [555] He who cries because he feels painfully sorry for his sins, he will soften his being, he will enter as true man the communication with God and with his fellow humans, and he will have existed the rigid and egotistic state of the sin, so that he will be like a new man. He has been washed up, and he has been removed from on himself the rust that has been keeping him callous and that has been covering his true face of true and communicative man. He has become a sensitive man who no longer can continues his insensitive life into sin.

[556] He who will be sent in hell at the final judgment, and his shameful deeds will be unveiled in front of everybody, and those deeds will no longer be covered by any sophisticated reasoning. The hell will also be the place of cynical ones who openly admit the ugly character of their deeds. Theya re resigned in a state of disgust admitted by all of them reciprocally.

saved. Keep the content of my previous answers, and this one, as the apple of your eye, and though the word: "Do not show you treasures to the Babylonians", I meant the devils, while you reckoned that I meant the people. This is because the devils see and they get mad against you and they wage war to you through your vain-gloriousness, and they wage war to the simple ones by offense. And you will be held responsible for both of those. But to them who can hear and keep these answers, these answers will be towards joy and benefit, but you must hide any good thing you do. This is for, if you do so, it will be beneficial to you[557]. May the Lord make you wise through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

258. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Pary for me, Father, because of being I much tormented by the thought of the fornication, of the fear, and of the drowsiness (of the boredom). When I see my brother whom I am being warred by, my thought tells me to have a word with him, lest, by not doing so, he will suspect something. And I feel how the devils disturb me and I fear that very much.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, the devils cause you thoughts of fear, of drowsiness, and of fornication, because you are not experienced in the wars from the enemy. You must stand strong with your heart before them. This is because the athletes won't be crowned if they do not fight; if they do not prove themselves as experienced in the wars for the emperor, they won't be glorified as it happened to David. I wonder, don't you sing from psalms: "Examine me, Lord, and test me. Ignite my entrails and my heart: (Ps. 25: 2[558]). And, again, don't you say: "If a war was started against me, I would still hope" (Ps. 26: 5-6[559])? And about fear he says: "Even if I walk in the middle of [557] If you want to show your good deeds, you will humiliate others and you won't prove that Him Who has given you the power to do those deeds has been God. That's why, the Lord said: "When you will have been done all of these, say: We are worthless servants, for we have done what we owed to do".

[558] In KJB we have: Ps. 26: 2: "Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart."; in ROB we have" Ps. 25: 2: "Examine me, Lord, and test me; ignite my entrails and my heart." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[559] In KJB we have: Ps. 27: 3: "Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."; in ROB we have: Ps. 26:

the shadow of death, I won't fear evil, for Youa re with me" (Ps. 22: 4[560]). And about drowsiness he says: "If the ghost that masters, comes upon you, you won't leave your place" (Eccl. 10: 4)[561]. Don't you want to be proven? "Because the unaccustomed (non-tempted) man is inexperienced" (Agrapha no. 90). The wars make the man proven[562].

This is the work of the monk: to endure the wars and to resist with the manhood of his heart[563]. But you must know that God doesn't allow the war and the temptation coming upon your more than you can endure them. This is what the Apostle teaches you by saying: "Faithful is God Who won't allow you to be tempted over your power" (1 Cor. 10: 13). I have been awfully tempted, brother, for many times, in my youth, by the devil of the fornication. But I tired myself fighting my thoughts and resisting them and toiling against them; this is for I put in front of my eyes the eternal torments. And by doing I this on every day for seven years, God alleviated me of them. This temptation is stopped by the ceaseless prayer accompanied by crying. And the disturbance is caused to you by the devils because of their envy. And if they could, they would banish you away even out of [561] The devil attempts to take the man under his mastery, through all sins and passions. The man is called to fight in order to escape from any form of being mastered, in order the man – be removing any cover of the relatives things which can master upon him – the man to find the freedom of the full love, in unmediated communion with the absolute God, for God by being love He won't enslave the man, He won't actually master the man; when the man reaches to be under a mastery he will be separated from God, because of letting himself to be dominated by inferior forces which interrupt the man's connection with God.

[562] The proven man is a strong man. He will become strong if he resists his temptations. This is meaning of being proven. The Kingdom of Heavens belong to the strong men, to the proven men, who have reached to be unshakable by temptations of pleasure and of pain, and who do not let themselves be taken under mastery by anything, but they persevere in the communion of their free will with God.

[563] That man who has spiritually progressed, he is in the same time strong and sensitive; he as a heart full of manhood but also full of gentleness. He is strong or firm in his gentleness, in his kindness, and in his cleanness. He no longer has anything rude or trivial. And he is steadfast in this state. Of this consists his power and his gentleness, and his firm sensitiveness for everything that is good. "The love never falls", despite its gentleness, or on the measure of its gentleness. But this parados has one more meaning: the man who is spiritually advanced, he will be harsh on himself and gentle with others.

your monastic cell. But God doesn't allow them to take you into their mastery. That's why too they do not have power. God could quickly alleviate you, but if that was the case, you could not resist any other passion. So, do not allow yourself to be weakened by demons so that you to look at that face which you are tempted by, or to talk to that one, even if you met him unwillingly, you will look away fearfully and decidedly, and you won't surrender your hearing to his voice. And if that brother will start a discussion at his initiative, or if he sat next to you without knowing (that he actually temps you). You will skillfully leave him, decently, and without hurry. And you will tell to your thought: remember the fearful judgment of God, and remember that shame that will be suffered by them who do the ugly things. And you will fight against your thought. And you will find help in the prayer of the saints and God will have mercy of you. Do not be child in your mind, but "be child in evilness, and at mind be consummate" (1 Cor. 14: 20). Take heed, brother, at yourself, how will you answer to God.

259. The same one prayed the Gret Oldman, saying: Pray for me, Father, because I am miserable in all things, and I need much benevolence. This is because of being sown, within me, thoughts which tell me: "Go in a foreign place and there you will be saved. May God, for your prayers, not to allow them to take me into their mastery.

Answer: Brother, cursed is him who has sown such thoughts within your heart, so that you to transgress the commandments by leaving this place. This is the devil. This is because he does that in order to make you to show that you are right. And by doing that, he laughs at you, and he make you offence to many. That's why you must endure the judgment of these ones. And you suffer these things because of your laziness, and because of your vain-gloriousness. This is for you say: I leave for a foreign place I endure the reproach. But how comes that after you hearing a sole brother saying something against you, your heart gets troubled and you do not want somebody to find out that you have mistaken? The devils give birth within you together with your idleness also your vain-gloriousness, in order they to lose your soul. Be convinced, into the Lord, that fi there wasn't the hand of God and the prayer of

His true servants from here, you wouldn't be able to stay in this monastery even for a whole year. But because of you being bling, you can see this. You cannot see the benefaction done you by God, and that God does it through the prayers of the saints and of the blessed Abraham who told you and to you brother: "If you will persevere in this place, you will have me praying for you". My son, take heed at yourself with the whole your care and fight your thoughts, in order you not to become lazy, neither you to fall into vain-gloriousness, nor your will to make you stubborn in doing something. And do not receive the thoughts sown within you together with the urge of justifying yourself, because through that you will fall with a bid fall. Be convinced that wheresoever you leave for, you won't benefit as much as here. This is for the prayer of the Fathers from here it is to you as an anchor to a ship. Earn strength and banish away from you that daring that leads bring all evils withing man; and stop worrying about anything. And then you will be free for God. And you must die to anyone. This is the estrangement[564]. You must cherish being disregarded by others, and so you won't have your thought disturbed[565]. Do not reckon yourself as having done something good and so your payment will remain untouched[566]. And above all of these, you must remember that you won't tarry for long into your body. Strive for you to be able to say at that time: "I am ready and I am not [564] Preferring a place instead of another, it means valuing the things form this world, it means reckoning that your salvation depends of a place or on a man from within world. God is everywhere. He who is intensely preoccupied with God, he won't need to change the places or the people, for he doesn't put passions in those. And you must ask God to die towards people in the meaning of not making yourself your happiness and your salvation dependent on them, neither you to look at their sins, or at the pleasures provided you by them or by what you can exploit in them. But this means, in the same time, you not to offend them, but you to good to them when appropriate, or you to be interested in their salvation; it means you not to be worldly interested in yourself.

[565] You won't be troubled by the thought of being disregarded. You will remain calm and you will be able to think at God instead of being agitated for yourself. You will have been elevated above your superficial self, and you will have found your true self.

[566] Do not seek for payment from people and you will have payment, namely do not seek for payment egotistically, and so you will have payment into the joy of your altruism, of your self-giving to God from Who it comes all the power of your altruism, into the joy of being yourself in communion with the ocean of the godlike joy that overflows in to all those who are open to God.

troubled" (Ps. 118: 60[567]). Brother, without effort there is no possibility to reach the life. And without fighting no one will be crowned. Fight, so that by fighting you to be saved, and God will help you, for He "wants all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4). May God have mercy on you, so that you to zealously surrender yourself to His work. This is for God's I the mercy, the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

260. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Father, what does it mean that what you said, that I wouldn't be able to remain into monastery even for one year? And pray for me to the Lord. This is because, immediately after I go to bed, the demon comes upon me and he chocks me up. I need the love for people.

The answer of Barsanuphius: That what I told you, that if there weren't the prayer of the Fathers you wouldn't remain into monastery even for one year, I told you as generally about monks. This is because not all the people from monastery are monks, but only him who does the things of a monk. This is for it was said: "Not everyone who tells Me Lord, Lord, will enter the Kingdom of Heavens, but him who does the will of My Fathers Who is in heavens" (Mt. 7: 21). Why are you mocking yourself, my miserable brother? This is because you ask but you do not persevere. But after asking, you tell others what you have found out from me, because you are searching for vain-gloriousness, by trying to be pleasant to people. And by that you are impeded from any progress. This is why, when you go to bed, you are tempted and the demon comes upon you and chokes you up. Because of this God allows you to be punished by removal, in order you to rebuke on yourself as monk. But you do not understand that, brother. This is the time given us in order us to examine our passions and to weep. When you sit in your monastic cell and you are submitted to temptations, you must rebuke on yourself in everything and you must throw your helplessness in front of God. And God will help you and he will give you power in order you to advance into Him.

261. The question of the same one and the ask for prayer addressed to the other Oldman: For the name of the Lord, pray for me, in order I to be delivered from the reproachable passions and from the vain-glory, because they defile me in anything done by me and reckoned by me as good. And I pray you to tell me: what the purpose is for one to make the remembrance of the saints? And how can one remove the evil had by him in himself?

The answer of John: If you want yourself to be delivered of the reproachable passions, you will have to cut off from yourself all your daring towards any man; and especially towards those ones whom you see your heart inclining towards, because of your lust. By that you will also be freed of your vain-gloriousness. This is for the vain-glory is the companion of your desire for being pleasant to people. And the desire of being pleasant to people is the companion of the daring. And the daring is the seal of all those passions[568]. And him who does the remembrance of the saints without vain-glory, by reckoning that he does that at the urge from God and f not form himself, he will become partaker with the saints and he will take payment from their Master[569].

And that what helps somebody to get out the evil he has within himself, it is his care for the salvation of his soul and his love for God and his sincere repentance.

Listen, my son, and out of the shown things you must understand the unshown things. When you have certain suffering into your body, you restrain yourself form the things which harm you; why then, you don't fight to restrain yourself form the things which harm your soul? In that case too, it is [568] The daring is contrary to shyness and to the respect for the man's mystery. The daring crosses over the man in a rude manner as over an object. The daring tempts the weak one, and it plays him shamelessly, and it deluded him, and it exploits him.

[569] He takes the payment form the Lord of the saints for he remembers those who are loved by Him. This is for, by doing that, he who does it enters the communion with them, he enters the union with them, and he will be imparted at his turn with the love for people had by God for His saints. If God loves the people while they still are sinners, and that's why God wants to save them, all the more God will love them who do His will out of obedience to and out of love for Him.

required much suffering and pain, as the Apostle says: "I oppress my body and I drove it like on a slave" (1 Cor. 9: 27). You use your power and God will help you by the prayers of the saints[570]. This is for God is thirsty for seeing our salvation, for He sworn on Himself that He "doesn't want the death of the sinner but him to turn back and to be alive" (Ezek. 18: 23).

Much power ascends from this place due to the prayers of the true servants of God, for all of us; this is for I am convinced that God doesn't shame them up. You too must add you two pennies and you will rejoice Him as that widow did. And tie your small boat to the Father's ship, and they will stir you towards Jesus[571] Who can grant humbleness, power[572], understanding, crown, and gladness. Amen.

262. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Because I am younger and mindless and a responsibility was appointed to me, please, Father, ask on my behalf, firstly, for understanding, in order I to be able to do that job as I should, and I not to say any word and to keep my silence at the right time and I to call for God and for your prayers in the things I doubt about, in order I to be helped not to get strayed.

The answer of Barsanuphius: It is a great joy when somebody asks for a thing in the fear of God. This one will dare [570] God and the prayers of the saints actively collaborate to the man's striving.

[571] From a monastery there ascend intertwined, and continuously, the prayers of the inhabitants towards God. This makes each of them present in the general prayer in a special manner. This prayer of everyone unites all of them together and with God. Here the catholicity (in the Romanian language is: sobornicitate; in our view it essentially means the characteristic of functioning like a community or people in communion; we haven't been able to find any other traductological solution to this word originating from Slavonic (E. l. t.'s n.)) of the Church is accomplished in an especially accentuated manner. And in it there doesn't take place only a union of the monastery's inhabitants, but that union take place also with the saints and with the people living in the world, who are remembered in their prayers. A similar place is also any church where the believers perform often prayers in common and where are remembered the saints, the dead, the kinships, and the acquaintances of those who are attend the religious service. Your prayer, by entering this powerful ascending current of the common prayer, it will be brought as well to God by that common current.

[572] The power given us by Christ it will become our power, and that implies also an effort of ours. One cannot separate the power of Christ from our effort, or the gifts from Chris from our virtues.

(to think) that his ask will be fulfilled[573]. But listen to me, brother! If you ask for see for your field, you must cultivate your field and prepare it for receiving the seed. This is for the all-good and cultivated field it is said that it gave "a hundred" fruits for one seed (Mk. 4: 8). Regarding the duty of not impeding my power so that I could do as much as I can, I won't impede it for the commandment of God, but I confess my weakness of not being able to bestow as much as it is required. That's why I am a worthless. But if you believe so, you will take by your faith not only that much as I am able to bestow you according to my measure, but you will take as much as you need[574]. This is for God knows what you need even before you ask for that (Mt. 6: 8)[575]. So, you must not doubt, and I believe that God will give you not for me but for your faith. Before all, you must humble yourself before God. This is "For to the humble He gives grace" (Prov. 3: 34) into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

263. The same one asked the other Oldman: How should I use the meaning of this answer from the Great Oldman?

If you want to find out how you should use the meaning of this answer of the Great Oldman, this is the following: When you want to speak or to do something, you should remember [573] This daring towards God is something else than the daring towards people. This kind of daring doesn't mean the conscience of your superiority, or superficiality, because who could reckon himself, if he cogitates at himself in a serious manner, as superior to God, and who could remain in such superficiality? This king of daring is the trust of the son in the love of his father; this kind of daring is the trust of the spiritual man that God will escape him from the surrounding trouble. This kind of daring is a daring accompanied by fear, or accompanied by the admission of the endless power and love of God, power and love which must not be despised.

[574] God asks from us only that much as we can give. But we do not bestow even that much as we could, because of our drowsiness caused by our will. Actually, we do not want to give as much as we can. Even if I gave as much as I could, even that would be much less than I need for being cleaned of my sins, or for my salvation. But the mercy of God fulfills not only that what I cannot actually give, but also that what it misses from what I actually can give. One is only asked to believe in God's generosity. This is the daring of the faith. And God will give us, due to our faith, not only on the measure of our faith but as much as we need.

[575] God gives us even more than we ask Him for, because we do not even know what we need. The father gives to his child more than the child suspects in his unskilled ask. This is for the father knows better what the child needs. God is satisfied with us manifesting our conscience that all the things come from Him.

the name of the Great Oldman and God will sow within your heart that what you should do or speak. But do that with humbleness, so that you won't lose this gift[576].

264. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: You have had mercy, Father, on my weakness and you have given me the advice that in everything I will say or I will do, I to call upon the name of God and for your prayers. By following I this advice, behold that I am being filled up with good and I am forcing myself to work and to speak according to His will. But sometimes, because of my laziness, it happens to me to forget about this. That's why, I pray you to ask me watchfulness from God, and Him not to allow me to go astray according to my will. I also pray you for, because after I call upon the name of God and for your prayers, I still hesitate about how should I work or not work, tell me what should I do in the end? And again, if it happens to me I to be asked about something before I am able to call upon God, or before I can think at what I should say, because I am asked for a quick answer, what should I do in such cases? And I am also asking you to pray for me so that I would be able to control my eyes, for they often wander all around.

Answer: If somebody receives a commandment or an answer form the Fathers regarding something, and because of his forgetfulness of laziness he doesn't fulfill that commandment of that advice, if he realized that he has mistaken, he must repent and God will forgive him. But why have you written me, brother, only about watchfulness? I am praying for all the good gift to be bestowed to you and for all gifts to remain with you forever. And if it happens to you to do a thing after you have called upon God and after you have asked for the prayer of the saints but you have still remained in doubt, you should do that thing, for that is the will of God, and I will pray to God for that thing. And if, by being asked, you are required to answer immediately, due to the fact that nothing moves so quickly as the mind does, you will send your mind to [576] You should think at the Great Oldman and that will make you realize how he would work or how he would think and you should force yourself, by the power of God, to do the same as the Great Oldman would do.

God and God will give you what you should answer without worrying[577].

That what guards the eyes from wandering and the whole man from any evil, it is the humbleness. The humbleness is one of the great gifts which I told you about that I am asking for you, if you add your power too. Take heed at yourself and God Himself will give you His hand and He will have mercy on you[578].

265. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I pray you, all-merciful Father, take heed at the blindness of my soul. And I pray you again for you to ask for me for the light within my heart, in order I to be able to discern between the right-reckoning and the judgment that is hiddenly twisted; for I fear to trust it[579]. This is for I often see myself not realizing that I am passionately presenting something to somebody. And I have examined my thought in order I to see if my thought likes do present a thing in that manner, through another, without admitting that I myself presented that thing in that manner to somebody and he didn't like that. It also happens to me that when I start doing of telling something, I do not do that passionately, but meanwhile, my thought get sweetened by that thing. What should I do, me the wicked? But the work of this passion upsets me in another way too, or better said my loving of glory heart. This is because it happens to me that some brother talks to me about something and before that thing being done by [577] God Whom your mind can immediately connect with, He will make you to answer in a balanced and full of responsibility manner, the question you are asked.

[578] If you do not take heed at yourself, if you are scattered in all sorts of things, you won't be able to meet God and you cannot catch the help He gives you, in order you to progress spiritually. Such a man has no humbleness, because he doesn't meet the greatness of the power of God within the mystery of his being.

[579] The Greek term λογισμοσ has both the meanings as thought and as reasoning, both of them imply also a preference for good or for evil. That's why there can be also a twisted judgment, one hiddenly meandering, but having at surface an appearance of justice and of logics. Even him who formulates it, he partially realizes that his judgment, apparently right, it is hiddenly cunning, deceiving, and twisted. The spiritual Fathers of the East were very preoccupied with the means which one can discern with between these twisted judgments and the right judgments.

other, my thought united with those and it gets sweetened as being understood with my mind[580].

The answer of Barsanuphius: Without the tiredness of the heart, one cannot reach to discern among thoughts[581]. So, I am praying to God for Him to give that to you. Let your heart get a little tired and God will give you that what you are asking for. And it is the same regarding all of these. When God will bestow you this gift, you will discern by his Ghost, and with the prayers of the saints, and with the painful tiredness of your heart, your thoughts from one another. And when you see a thing that brings you a thought, you will keep your silence, as you have heard from my true son into God[582], whom you must obey to, regarding any of your thoughts. This is for he doesn't speak to you from himself, but that what God bestows him towards the benefit of each of you. May God cover you and may God give you power to be silent in all things and may God give you grace for you to know when you must speak passionlessly. This is because of your heart not consummately knowing that these things defile the man. This is because, otherwise, your heart won't allow you to get sweetened by them.

266. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: The great mercy that you have for me the sinner, it makes me again daring to disturb you. Enlighten me on how should my heart toil in order the gif of the discernment to come within my heart. Explain me, Father, regarding the ceaseless remembrance of God, if you reckon me as worthy; and give me power for it. This is because my thought causes me fear by telling me that I won't be able to maintain that. Because of that, I pray [580] It is in these phrases about the passion of the vain-glory. he who prays to be advised, he expressed the fact that when he tells something or when the does something, he feels that he connects the fulfilling of that thing to his pride of telling or doing that. Then he mentions that he sees others doing the same, by mixing their pride in what they say and do, while he doesn't admit that he does the same. Finally, we can notice how, by showing that he understands what another tells him, and in that too he manifests his pride.

[581] Once a crooked judgment or a crooked thought cannot be discerned by a right judgment or by a right thought, but only by theoretical grounds and by the love for evil hiddenly tied to the crooked judgment or to the crooked thought, the Lord can reckon these ones as right only by the fight of detaching the heart from its hidden connection to the evil, and only thus the crooked judgment of thought can be exposed.

you, Master, show me whether this thing is beneficial to me. This is for I believe that, immediately the word comes out of your mouth, it will give birth to power within my heart.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Tiring your heart means that you always pray to God for Him not to let you wandering, or waling according to your own wills. By that you will come to discerning among your thoughts (to the right-reckoning). Regarding the ceaseless remembrance of God, or about occupying yourself with God, you must set only the beginning and do not fear, for God will strengthen you and He will give you power. You only must sow trustingly, so that you will reap without getting weak. Blessed Is God Who blesses you to put the beginning and He will give power in order you to persevere according to your measure.

267. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: For on other occasions too, it has come to me a little warmth for a few days, and then it has stopped, and I have kept the memory of that warmth for an hour with pleasure and for another hour forcedly, I am afraid by mu thought lest, as before, that little warmth not to leave me and I to lose my soul totally, I pray you, you kind Father, do not forsake me and show me what is that that banishes this memory and the warmth away from me. Aks for me also the guarding of my senses, because of many times being I enslaved by them, and especially when my heart searches for an occasion for that. This is because of this one, when carries by a certain purpose, it springs out of itself passionate or insane thoughts, or thoughts which are inappropriate at that time. That's why I am praying you, you powerful Father into the Lord, bestow me, to your servant, watchfulness, in order I to understand the thoughts entering my heart, so that I will know what to do with those thoughts, in order those thoughts not to separate me form your blessing. Clarify me also this aspect: if I do or it I tell some word which I am into, as it seems to me, shunned from sin by God, must I, after I have finished that, to give thanks to God? And does that lead me to the love for God? Or I must not receive, by any means, the thoughts that I have avoided the sin, but I rather must search for my mistake in what I've said and in what I've done, and consequently to ask for forgiveness for that?

The answer of Barsanuphius: You must toil into the pain of your heart to earn these and God will give them to you ceaselessly, I mean the warmth and the prayer. This is because of being the forgetfulness the one banishing them away from you. And the forgetfulness is born out of carelessness. Regarding the guarding of your senses, you must know that every gift is given through the tiredness of your heart. And the gift of the watchfulness doesn't allow the thought to enter your mind. And even if they enter, your watchfulness wont' allow them to hurt you. May God give you your watchfulness and your vigil[583]. This is for, there is a commandment that tells us: "give thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18); but especially in that what you have showed to me. But is it also useful to examine your thoughts and you to ask for forgiveness.

268. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I pray you, holy Father, ask for me power from God, because that what I command to myself when alone, when I meet the brothers I reject that, and I am afraid lest by getting habituated to sin and by remaining only to the sorrow but without correcting myself, I will persists in my sins and I will die. I know that are beneficial to me the troubles intertwined with the passions, for they crush the callousness of my soul; and may that not be to me, the mindless, I to desire alleviation from those. But I pray you, Father, help me with your prayers, for, it that [583] The watchfulness and the vigil are the ceaseless attention paid by you to yourself, so that no thoughts which is doubtful regarding it quality won't enter your mind. But those are also a continuous conscience about God, one united with the prayer. This is because the man cannot ceaselessly remain in this watchfulness only by his own power. The watchfulness is not only an attention having a negative purpose: namely that of not accepting the inappropriate thoughts, but it is also a positive work: a ceaseless hanging of the thought on God. And this too, it cannot be sustained only by our own power, but it has as its basis a sentiment of responsibility, which is not imposed to us by ourselves, btu it is upheld within us especially by God. And in that sentiment of our responsibility, we also live the just relation between us and God, we live our true position, or we are aware of what we actually are. You cannot know himself if you do not position yourself exactly where you actually are, as in case of those who do not know about God. This is for, to know what you are it means knowing your relationships with the supreme source of your existence.

could be beneficial to me, I not to ceaselessly be defeated[584] and my heart not to constantly suffer because of that.

Answer: Let no one to tell someone: "Don't worry, I am taking care of you". This is because he will transgress his promise. Also, he who is tied with that burden must add a little perseverance, and he must do everything he can in order him to guard with watchfulness the commandments of his Fathers. And if he falls once, he will get up again. And I trust God that, even if a brother has been kidnapped once, if that brother strives himself again, he won't fall into habituation or into indifference. But God will bring him again into the group of those who strive and God won't let his soul until God will elevate his soul to the high measure, to the consummate man (Eph. 4: 13). So, do not get yourself drowsy, but you must work as long you still have time ahead. Be obedient, obey, and God will come to your help, God Who "to the humble ones He gives them grace, and to the proud ones He stays against them" (Prov. 3: 20). You must say ceaselessly: "Jesus help me", and He will help you. May God liberate your soul from the reproachable passions, my son.

269. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I bow down before you, you merciful Father and doctor of my ill soul. Woe to me, for what you have showed me and for what target you are dragging me towards; and woe to me because of where I am tied to, by my bad habit. Even if I am untied for a little while, I will again turn back towards spreading and towards receiving[585]. And if I wasn't ashamed by God's [584] He who asks realizes that the temptation through passions and the torment of fighting those passions, it means a continuous menace; still, he prays not for his struggle to come to an end, and so him not to be defeated by passions through the temptations the passions stir up, so that he not to fall into the callousness caused by passions. He better remains into the torment of the fight. The man can have his soul always conscious of the danger which he is in, when fighting the passions, or when he reached to be totally above passions. But to this state doe not reach except those consummated in a long fight. They no longer fight. No light comes out of their self, or they self is not shown. They are totally buried. They who are not totally buried by passions but they fight on each time when tempted in order they not to fall under their power, they defend their self against the total burial, or they gain the power to keep their self still uncovered by continuously fighting the temptations of the passions.

[585] To spread the evil to others and to receive the evil from others and from demons, it means not being liberated form them, or it means being liberated only a little and from time to time.

kindness and by your mercy, because I know through hos much toils you have brought me to your feet, I would end in despair. This is for, while I am covered through your prayers, I am walking in peace. But when I unwrap myself a little[586], in order my will to be shown, I am immediately defeated. When sitting in the morning in my monastic cell, it comes to me the thought to bring an answer to somebody, and so I go out. And after fulfilling that task, I no longer want to turn back, but motives occur to me, according to which it could be untied even without me, until I get hurt. And so, I tune back to my monastic cell only in the evening, with disgust and with darkening and with souly discontent, not knowing what I should do. That's why, forgive me holy Father, before your heart that sees all the things. Be with me, according to your will, as you want to and as you know to. This is because I do not know what to tell you, except: forgive me for God.

Answer: Brother, it is inappropriate you to lose your hope because of these things, as the helmsman of a ship hit by waves doesn't lose the hope for his salvation, but he rather stirs the ship until he brings it to a shore. You too, by being you enslaved and troubled by something, you must thing at the beginning of the trip, saying with the prophet: "And I said, I am starting now" (Ps. 76: 11[587]). Examine if the things can be done by brothers or by you[588]. And lo, you are again on the road. This is for, taking care of yourself while thinking at God, it is a spiritual work committed according to the soul's salvation. And you must work according to your power, lest some unimportant things to get you out of your monastic cell, at an inappropriate time. This is because of being this a devilish plot. Take heed at yourself wisely, and God will help you through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

270. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman, asking him to bear his sins.

[586] It will be good to me if I do not unwrap myself from the care for me of a spiritual father and from the help from God.

[587] In KJB we have: Ps. 77: 11: "I will remember the works of the Lord: surely I will remember thy wonders of old."; in ROB we have: Ps. 76: 11: "I have remembered the things of the lord and I will remember your wonders, from the beginning." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[588] Examine if you need the help form the brothers in order you to get rid of temptations.

Answer: Brother, despite you are asking me something that is above my powers, I am still going to show you the measures of the love that it forces itself to ascend above his own measures[589]. I am amazed of your person (of your ask) and I accept bearing it[590]. But I'll do this with the condition that you too bear and guard my words and my commandments. This is for those are savior and, by guarding them, you will live uncovered by shame[591].

271. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman about the commandments told him by the Great Oldman; and the ask for him to be empowered to keep those commandments[592].

Answer: He Who empowered our Fathers, may Him empower you too, brother, and you love, and may Him give you understanding in order you to understand all the things. But you must guard your tongue against speaking vainly, and you must guard your belly from pleasure, and you must guard your neighbor against your anger. You must earn the non-daring, the self-non-appreciation, the love for everything, and the keeping of God within your mind, by thinking that you will once appear in front of God. You must have these things within you, and your field will bring hundredfold fruits to God Whose to be the glory forever. Amen.

[589] The man's love, on one hand it has a measure, but on the other hand it strives to ascend above its measure, by sipping up out of immeasurable love of God.

[590] The person of the man having in his face his concentrated expression, it is a mystery which, despite all its bluntness, it still amazes him who has been elevated out of the blunt state of the passionate man. That's why, despite all his sins, the person of the brother urges the Great Oldman to take his person upon himself, to fight for his person, to suffer for his person, in order the Great Oldman to get the brother's person too out of the destructive bluntness which he is in.

[591] The spiritual man takes upon himself him who still is weak, but the spiritual man doesn't take the weak man as an object, or the spiritual man doesn't bring the weak man to salvation as on an object, or to that state liberated from passions of a fully accomplished person. But the spiritual man does that while helped by him who be bears upon himself, the borne one must do everything he can for liberating himself from the slavery of his passions and for reaching the state of a true man, or an accomplished and free person.

[592] This is a continuous exchange of asks. No one reckons himself able to fulfill anything without the another and without God Who is the ultimate source of power.

272. Question: What does it mean, Father, the self-non-appreciation?

Brother, the self-non-appreciation means one not reckoning himself equal to somebody and not saying about some good thing: "I did that"[593].

273. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman, to help him in his repentance for transgressing the commandments given to him. And a question: how must he repent? And if transgressed, would the testament be abolished?

Answer: In the name of God, regarding your request, may it be as you asked it. Guard yourself from now on, in order you not to cogitate great things about yourself, lest you will lose everything[594]. And when you transgress a commandment, you run to repentance. And you must not despise that as you would have a bandage for your wound, lest you will end into even heavier states[595]. By uniting your hand with my hand, my testament on your behalf will remain assured. If not, how will God have mercy on you so that you to obey and to guard my advices into Christ? Amen.

274. The same one towards the same Great Oldman: The ask for prayer, for not to be separated from the protection of the Great Oldman either in the future age.

[593] The self-non-appreciation is a detachment from one's self, it is a non-preoccupation with one's won value, and accepting such an attitude towards you also from others. The self-non-appreciation has meaning only in the acute conscience of your relationship with God. This is for only in relationship with God you reckon that everything that you are and do, you actually ow that to God, and that God knows what He does for you and how much zeal you have put into that gift bestowed to you by God. That gives you a continuous peace, a non-disturbance, consequently to the fact that your value is not recognized by others. You are free both of you and of others' opinion. You reckon only God as a right judge.

[594] When you imagine yourself as a great thing, you cannot see the truly great reality, that great and rich reality that is God, and you no longer are in communication with God's reality. You narrow yourself to your limits.

[595] Get out of the self-perdition, out of your superficiality, by repenting yourself, lest you will sink even more in the void.

Answer: If you understood my sayings, son, you could find out that I have given you a downpayment for your soul's salvation. So, you must not reckon that I am wrong, neither that I want to separate you from my true sons who will be saved, or from God. But you too must strive not yourself to part with such a life. This is for neither the Apostle separated somebody, but he said: "And if the unbeliever separates himself, let him separate" (1 Cor. 7: 15). But may this not to be in case of yourself, but you have been told, towards assurance, you to take heed at yourself and you to strive not to fall off the waiting from this or to fall off the hope, so that you must strengthen yourself into the Lord Who told His disciples to take power from above (Lk. 24: 40).

275. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: When somebody reckons himself as beneath all creation, but his living doesn't match that, what can one say about that?

Answer: When the living of somebody matched his reckoning about himself, neither that would be true, but it would a deceit from the devils.

276. Of the same one towards the same one: Father, when I not only reckon myself beneath all creation but, by examining my conscience I am compelled by my conscience too to reckon myself as beneath all creation, then too are the devils mocking me?

Answer: Now, brother, you have started to walk a little straight. This is for the truth consists of this conscience. But, may God bring you to the consummate measure of reckoning yourself actually beneath all creation[596]. Be strong into the Lord!

[596] It is not about the man reckoning himself as less valuable than all the mineral, vegetal, and animal creation, but less valuable than the whole mankind. And to reckon himself beneath the power that has created and that upholds the world. But there is within world too, a power and an order that exceeds immeasurably my power of producing it.

277. The question of the same one towards the same one: What is the savior path: that one through toils, or that one through humbleness? And about forgetfulness.

The answer of John: Brother, the true toil is not without humbleness. This is because, the toil in itself, it is vain[597]. This is for he says: "See my humbleness and my toil and forgive all my sins" (Ps. 24: 18[598]). Therefore, he who has both of those he will reach quickly. And he who has his humbleness united with his self-non-appreciation, he will achieve the same result. This is for the self-non-appreciation keeps the place for toils. And him who has only the humbleness, he will enter too, but with tardiness. So, he who wants to keep the true humbleness let him not appreciate himself in anything. This is the true humbleness.

He who receives the fire which God has come to throw it on earth, he doesn't know about forgetfulness or about being taken into slavery, for he is always sensing that fire[599]. Take, for instance, the material fire. If a man is dying but the fire is brought close to him, that man will immediately feel the pain. And in anything, if the man forgets about himself but he is touched with a piece of lit charcoal, he won't remain even for an instant in that self-forgetfulness. The fire, brother, it wouldn't get quenched, because if it was so that wouldn't be fire. If you want to be yourself delivered from forgetfulness and for being taken into slavery, you won't be able to do it except by gaining the spiritual fire. This fire will melt away those ones. And this fire can be gained by somebody by longing for God. Brother, if your heart doesn't painfully toil to search for the Lord, you won't be able to progress. But if you occupy yourself with these ones, you will reach there. This is for he says: "Occupy yourself and know" (Ps. 45: 10[600]). May the Lord give you to understand these ones and may Him give you to toil with them.

[597] A toil without humbleness will make the man to attribute to himself, as last source, the power of having fulfilled his deeds, namely to deny his deeds' provenance from God. In humbleness is the conscience of the man having everything from God, namely his power too that he has shown into his toils. If there was not this conscience, there wouldn't be also humbleness, or the humbleness would be purposeless. Why would I get humble in front of a world which I am one with, in a pantheistic meaning? I cannot get myself humble except in front of a conscience endowed with the power of creating all the realities, consequently me too, and whom I know that I am depending on in everything. Where there is the gentleness of the humbleness, there is also the conscience about God. Otherwise, there would be justified any rude arrogance, with all the conflicts such an arrogance would bring.

[598] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 18: "Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 19: "See my humbleness and my toil and forgive me all my sins." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[599] The forgetfulness is like being taking prisoner by the passions of by the unseen ghosts who ignite those passions. This is because him who forgets about himself, he will be taken by passions there where he doesn't want to. The true freedom is tightly united with the self-consciousness, and the self-consciousness is one with the conscience of the man's absolute dependency on the Person-like God, so that the self-consciousness is one with the humbleness, with the conscience of the man's true position within reality. And the conscience of man's dependency on God is like a continuous fire keeping the man awake, it is like a continuous spiritual burning.

278. The question of the same one towards the same one:" Father, what the humbleness is? And what the self-non-appreciation is? And what the crushing of the heart is? Can one gain the humbleness by despising on himself within his heart? Or, are there necessary also the condemnations from outside, those coming from people? And must him who is humble to talk humbly and to do humble things?

Answer: The humbleness is the self-non-appreciation in all the deeds and it is the cutting off of the own will in all the things. But the humbleness is also receiving the things coming from outside while remaining untroubled[601]. This is the true humbleness which the vain-glory doesn't find any room into. But he who is humble in thought he must not search for a humble way of speaking. But it suffices him to say: "Forgive me, or Pray for me". Neither he must run by himself after humble deeds. This is for both of those cause the vain-gloriousness and they do not allow somebody to progress[602]. But the progress consists of accepting to be commanded without resisting. And the despising is of two kinds: one coming out of your heat, and one coming from the condemnations brought to you from outside. But it is superior that one coming to you from outside.

[600] In KJB we have: Ps. 46: 10: "Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 45: 10: "Stop and know that I am God, I will extoll Myself on earth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[601] All the egotistic twitching, all the inferior impulses, all the trials coming from outside and wanting top dominate you, all of them are defeated by humbleness. The humbleness is the consummate freedom through the communion with God. The humble one doesn't know except about God, but he intensely feel God and a partner of communion in freedom.

[602] Searching for having a humble way of speaking, it means risking to be admired by others for that way of speaking. It is likewise in case of running for humble things or deeds.

This is because that one coming out of your heart doesn't require you so much effort in enduring it, while that one coming form other people causes a bigger pain to your heart. And the crushing of your heart means guarding your heart[603].

279. The questions of the same one towards the same one: If somebody is praised by somebody else, it will he do good is he doesn't answer that?

Answer: Keeping one's silence when he is praise it is more beneficial. This is because, if he answered, he would accept that praising. And that what is shown as modesty in the answer, it will actually be vain-gloriousness[604]. This is for the things said by the praised one about himself, if those things were said by somebody else, he wouldn't endure them[605].

280. The question of the same one towards the same one: But it could happen that that one imagines, because of my silence, that I accepted his praises, and so he would get offended. What should I do, therefore?

The answer of John: He who lives in ascesis must allow God to be the One Who makes the unseen things known him who hears. This is for, where that one who is praised could know that him who praises him wouldn't learn more out of his silence, a silence like the silence of one who doesn't accept the [603] Guarding the heart against all the feelings and against all the superficially-pleasant things, which are always ready to steal your heart on any moment, it is a continuous pain imposed by yourself to your heart. But enduring that pain is, in the same time, a higher joy.

[604] Answering with modesty, you want or you risk, also, to attract the admiration for the modesty you display.

[605] When answering a praise with the words: "I am not quite so", or "I haven't done such a big thing", if those words were said by somebody else but in that case, you couldn't stand them, but by being said by yourself you can stand them, it means that you do not tell those words by really believing them, but you actually say those expecting to be contradicted. Only then you refuse the praises with a real modesty, when you are able to not get offended by hearing somebody talking about you contrary things. Namely, when it is equal to you whether one speaks positively or negatively about you. In such a case you would be in total objectivity regarding yourself. But by seeing yourself as somebody else sees you, it is easier to be objective with yourself than with another. And only your objectivity regarding yourself will show you totally free even from yourself.

praises, and that the one who praises would be offended? And if he explained that to him who praises him, let him explain that with humble cogitation, by saying: "Forgive me, brother, because I do not see any good in me and that's why I didn't find anything to answer you. But pray for me, for the Lord".

281. Of the same one towards the same one: But it happens that someone who is sinner to tell the truth out of humble cogitation and not because of his vain-gloriousness. Mustn't this one too give any answer"?

The answer of John: neither this one must answer, even if for the moment he would answer due to his humble cogitation. This is because of him who hear him could reckon him as humble, and that would bring him burden. This is for the Lord, by saying: "Woe, to you, when the people will speak good of you" (Lk. 6: 26). He says that about the sinners who are praised, and who didn't do the deed which they are praised for[606].

282. The question of the same one towards the same one: But how comes that we find out that some of the saints after they were praised, they answered with modesty?

Answer: The Fathers reached that measure which the Lord told about: "When you will have done all these things, you will say that worthless servants you are" (Lk. 17: 10). And by truly reckoning on themselves as being so, the answer how they actually reckon on themselves. This is for, even if they hear these from another, they won't get upset, but they bless that one for telling the truth[607].

[606] Not even a sinner who didn't do or who doesn't' have the quality which he is praised for, he must not answer and he must refuse to accept an unjust praise, even if he would accept that praise because of humble cogitation. This is for he could be admired for his humbleness and that would be a new temptation to him, by determining him to think about himself as being humble in all circumstances. This is because, even if he was humble on that moment, he must not reckon himself as having the humbleness as a permanent quality.

[607] The measure of the true humbleness is that of reaching such an objectivity towards yourself, so that you could see on yourself as others see you, even though those do not see you correctly, and even than you not to hiddenly defend on yourself.

283. The question of the same one towards the same one: If somebody sharing some benefactions to somebody, the beneficiary thanks him for the benefactions he received, in such a case won't the benefactor answer him either?

Answer: The silence is goof in all things. But in order him not to seem that he rejects the thanks, he must say humbly: "Forgive me, Abba, and pray for me for the Lord", and he must cogitate in his heart as he hasn't done anything. This is for Him Who does any good to everyone is the Lord. And he must pray God not to condemn him for the said things.

284. Of the same one towards the same one: Pray for me, Father, in order I to be delivered from my tongue, for my daring, and form my belly.

Answer: Regarding your tongue, your belly, and your daring, as you asked me to pray for, you too must do everything you can in order to restraint yourself. This is because without effort, without watchfulness, and without the crying with the whole heart, those ones cannot be restraint. Remember that "much can the prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16). But all the passion are mastered through humbleness. And one achieves humbleness by effort. May God give you, brother, power united with the gift of the discernment and with the fear of God.

285. The question of the same one towards the same one: "If these ones, as you said, can be achieved through crying, how can I guard the crying while going out and meeting people and taking care of fulfilling tasks and serving? And it is there a crying without tears?

The answer of John: Not the crying comes through tears but the tears come through crying[608]. And the crying will be

[608] The tears are the exteriorization of the sadness, or of the inward pain. But there can be also tears without so much pain, as there also can be a great interior pain without tears. Not the tears are the ones changing the man but the pain for his previous mistakes can change him. But in tears one starts feeling also the mercy from God. The tears also show an emotion produced by the mercy from God. That's why the tear bring also an alleviation; the tears are achieved also by somebody living among people, if he cuts his will and if he doesn't take heed at somebody else's mistakes. This is for by doing so, he will gather his thoughts together. And by getting his thought gathered together, they will give birth to that sadness according to God and that sadness will bring him tears[609].

284. The question of the same one towards the same one: When I unveil my thought to Abba, I feel that some brothers get upset because of that. What should I do? Am I not complaining while sitting (inside), and doesn't mock me that thought urging me to that in order I to take heed at myself? And then, even if by the fact that you cover me, I am pursuing this purpose, will I be able to bring this thing to an end since, because I am weak, I hate my passions? Because of this, I pray you, if you think that that would be good, please not to mix me in businesses from outside the infirmary[610], let because of this people to end envying me and so I to be shaken. But if I am useful by that, my soul will be in your hands. Show me, Father, what do you command me?[611]

Answer: If you spoke out of a clean heart and for benefit and without passion and without vain-glory, you should not take heed at the people's words. You must fight, with the help form the prayers of the saints, until you will reach to do anything without being harmed. And trying to mix into the people's businesses passionlessly, it is good. This is for not all like a rain downloading the dark cloud and scattering the darkness. That's why the eyes which cried will become serene, clean, while the eyes of him who is focused on his inward pain reflect the "darkness" of his pain, or maybe of his turning to evil. But one can reach the second state only by crossing through the first state. But one must reach the second state.

[609] The gathering of one's thoughts it means directing the cogitation towards the own self, it means exiting the scattering towards the external things. By gathering his thought towards himself, the man reaches to discover himself, to unveil to himself his committed mistakes, and he will see his conscience burdened by those mistakes. Form here it starts the sadness and the interior crying.

[610] Dorotheos who asked the question, he was appointed to the leading of the infirmary from the monastery. (See The Romanian Philokalia¸ volume 9, Introduction to the Teachings of Abba Dorotheos).

[611] The Oldman is asked by Dorotheos if Dorotheos should talk to Abba (to hegumen Serid) about the problems of other inhabitants of that monastery; lest that thing to stir up others to envy him. Would it be good if he mixed in others' businesses, due to the influence he had on Abba?

of them can speak directly to Abba, neither such a thing would be good. So, if you speak out of God, you won't speak from yourself. But good is in all things and the good from God won't elicit envy, and even if such an envy will occur for a short while, it will disappear quickly. The souls of all of us are in the hands of God. And God is The One Who covers us and Who strengthens us to do what is beneficial.

285. Of the same one towards the same one: I wonder if I reckon that it would be useful to some people, must I speak even without being asked to? And if it is about somebody having a greater rank, or about a cleric, must I tall to Abba, or must I keep my silence? And if I am asked, what will I tell? And, it is beneficial I too to speak, how should I speak, in order I to have the countenance of one who speaks humbly, and not as one teaching with authority?

Answer: The Fathers said that "it is good to speak for God and it is good to keep your silence for God" (Paterikon, Pimen 147). And this word of the Fathers means: He who speaks, as I said, without passion, he does good for he speaks for God; and he who think that he is going to speak with passion and he keeps his silence, he does good, for he remained silence for God. If you must speak for God, do not worry about what you are going to speak, because otherwise you will transgress the commandment (Mt. 10: 19). But you must let the thing in the care of God and He will put in your mouth what you will speak usefully. This is for God know how to girdle with power on us the weak ones, and He will strengthen you too, brother.

286. The question of the same one towards the same one: I wonder if we should cut off our will, at the order of Abba, equally in the good things and in the medium things as also in those which seemingly transgress the commandment of God? And if I am given a commandment that exceeds my power, should I be exempted, in order that not to make me sad and not to cause me disturbance? And then: if somebody needing something from Abba asks me to help him and I accept that, won't that bring me an honor making me to reckon myself as worthy of respect?

Answer: Brother, he who want to be a monk, he should not have by any means his will in anything. This was what the Lord taught us, saying: "I have come into the world not to do My will" (Jn. 6: 38). This is because, he who was to do that but he wants not to do the another, either he shows himself as able to a superior discernment of the things (of more right-reckoning) than he who commands, or he is mocked by devils. So, you must obey in everything even if the commanded thing seems to you as a sin. This is for Abba, the one who commands you, he has taken upon himself your judgment, as one who will be held accountable for you. And if it seems difficult to you that what you are asked to do, tell him that and let that thing on behalf of his right-reckoning[612]. And if they who commanded you are brothers, and you notice that the commanded thing is harmful, or that it is above your power, you go and ask Abba and do whatever he tells you to do. And if you want to discern yourself among things, you will attract troubles upon you. Let everything on behalf of Abba and do according to his reckoning (discernment). This is for he knows what he ought to do and how he must take care of your soul. And rest yourself by believing than anything Abba would tell you it is according to God, and that what is according to the grace won't bring you sadness. "This is for any good tree brings forth good fruits" (Mt. 7: 17). And the ask from another in order you to mediate for [612] There are people who received from God a responsibility for other people as for themselves. Those are: the abbot of a monastery, the fathers, the confessor, and the priest. But this means that they should prepare themselves in order they to lead on the right path the people entrusted to their leadership. If they give wrong advices, they will suffer for the mistakes of those ones, as it were their own mistakes. And him who has been entrusted by God to a spiritual guide, he must make – at his turn – the will of that one as his own will. Through him the will of his spiritual guide will be fulfilled. But if the spiritual guide willed something wrong, he would pay for that. The father, the confessor, he cannot be disinterested in the life of him who is entrusted him, by invoking the excuse of the freedom had by his spiritual son. The man needs also to be taught in order him to know what he should do with his freedom. And some people are more advanced than others in knowing what they should do with their freedom. The responsibility of ones for others it intertwines our destinies insomuch than we rejoice or we suffer together for the consequences of a certain living, one that is not accomplished through only one. We are not saved alone, in am ambitious and egotistic mode; and we do not destroy ourselves alone. But we are saved through them whom we have been having a responsibility for, and together with them whom we have been obeying to; and we will be lost together with them whom we haven't been exercised our responsibility for. No man bears or should bear his burden alone, but he must also bear the burden of others too. But let's not advice out of our pride, so that we will offend them even more, but let's serve them humbly. And our advice must be united with the example of our life in order us not to lose either them whom we advise or ourselves.

them to Abba, if needed, you would fulfill that, in order you to fulfill a commandment heard by you. This is for, if Abba placed you at the gate telling you: announce me about every coming man, will you decide by yourself what to do, instead of fulfilling the commandment of him who has commanded you? If Abba command you to tell him and you not to tell him, that thing will no longer depend on you.

287. The question of the same one towards the same one: If a brother asks me about some word or about a certain thing, and I do not know the answer, should I answer him or not? And if I am not asked but I see a thing done wrongly, will I draw the attention of the one doing that thing, or not?

All these questions need a sole answer: guard yourself against speaking out of vain-glory, but you must speak humbly and in the fear of God. And regarding all the thing you have asked me about, you must speak as much as needed and draw the attention. But do that within your community and not somewhere else, in order you not to be like a teacher. This if for them form monastery are like a sole body[613]. And if you are elsewhere, you will say nothing starting from you. But, if you are asked, you will speak humbly. May God make you sapient, brother.

288. Of the same one towards the same one: You told me that if I was asked about something, of if I saw (that something was being done wrong), I should speak humbly. But what does it mean: humbly? And if I am seeing my heart being sweetened by the vain-glory while I am speaking, even if I am not getting sweetened right then but I foresee that that thing will happen to me later, will I keep my silence or not?

Answer: Telling something humbly, it means saying that not as one who teaches, btu as one who has heard what he says from Abba or from the Fathers. And if it is beneficial to tell that thing to the brother, but you are being warred by your vain-glory by getting you sweetened by it, take heed at the fact that should not impede you to be beneficial to the brother. You must rebuke you vain-glory and you must despise it. And after you has spoken, you will repent yourself in front of God and tell Him: "Forgive me, because I have spoken out of my vain-glory". And you will do the same if you feel that later on[614].

289. Of the same one towards the same one: Father, why did you command me to speak even before I am asked to, when I see a thing (that is wrong), while the Fathers tell us not to speak without being asked to (Paterikon, Euripus 9; Pimen 45), and Abba Nisterus amazed everybody because, while living into monastery, he was saying: "I and the donkey are one" (Paterikon, Nisterus 2). And tell me, Father, what does it mean taking heed at thoughts? And if I should do that at an appointed time and how?

The answer of John: Brother, the Fathers speak according to the measure of the people. So, there is a time when the man can serve and then he must show deeds of serving. And there will be a time when the same one will be served, and when his measures will be different. The consummate things were told to the consummate ones, and the other things were told to them who still are under the law, because these ones still are guided by the pedagogue (Gal. 3: 23-24). When you will have died to the world, as Abba Nisterus did, you will be able to say: "I am a donkey". Do not get haughty in your thought, because that will [614] One must continuously pluck of that weed that sprouts out next to the wheat ear, in order the weed not to chock up the wheat. He who reached the good that is clean in itself, he has completely surpassed on himself, and he remains conscious of the fact that other too will surpass on themselves when they have truly accomplished on themselves, so that they too will no longer have within themselves except the good. That one lives the encounter with the transcendent God, God Who is beyond this world and beyond our existence which the good and the evil are mixed within, and which the moments of freedom alternate in with moments of enslavement. This is not the way of arguing the existence of God by using the argument of the existence of the good, in other word a speculative way, but this is the way of encountering God. In this way the one who is completely humble he lives his connection with God, as one who has totally surpassed on himself in that connection with Him Whom he depends on in an absolute manner. By living on himself as one who do not owe his existence to himself, in anything, but still existing, he will live the fact itself of his existence as being totally due to God.

harm you. The Fathers appointed moments for taking heed at thoughts. We must say to yourselves in the morning: "analyze how you have spent your night"; and in the evening: "analyze how you have spent your day" (Nisterus 5). But you must take heed also at the time from between those, when your thought gets burdened[615].

The Scholium from Volos Edition: By that, the bearer of God Father shows that not haphazardly said somebody: "I am a donkey", but he did that in order to humble himself and to diminish himself. And that that is not a dishonorable thing to say: "I am a donkey", but that is the greatest honor. That's why the Father says: "Do not get haughty in your thought". This is for, when somebody reaches the measures of the donkey by allowing himself to be hit and reproached and burdened and driven, and tied, and enduring everything, as the donkey used to endure, and not only without resisting and without remembering the evil and without doing any contrary movement in heart like that one does, but as one who doesn't feel those, and that means the required twofold killing, or even the threefold killing, then he ca dare to say to himself: "I am a donkey". And he must do this with much humbleness, by knowing the height of that stage. But I reckon that one shouldn't do that even then. But, rather, by seeing himself even then as lower than this state, he will reckon as a daring to say: "I am a donkey", or even to think at that, because of knowing that this means getting haughty with the thought that is one with the soul's falling and that truly is a total destruction.

290. Of the same one towards the same one: If somebody among the Fathers who are superior to me, he asked me about something, should I answer him what I reckon as useful?

The answer of John: You have nothing to say to him. This is because you do not know the will of God, in order you to know what is beneficial. So, if somebody among them asked you [615] The thought means here conscience; ask your conscience in the morning: how have you spent your night; and in the evening, ask your conscience about how you have spent your day. But the conscience often gets burdened, so that will not longer pay attention to itself.

something, you would tell him, humbly: “forgive me, for I do not know”.

291. Of the same one towards the same one: If a brother did a neutral thing (neither good or bad), and because of my will I got upset with him, what should I do? Should I keep my silence and not to appease my heart, or should I tell him with love and so I wouldn’t remain disturbed? And if that thing troubled others and not me, should I tell him for others? Wouldn’t be thig a deed of vain-glory?

The answer of John: If a brother did something neither good nor bad, and you would still tell him in order you to appease your heart, you would do a mistake. This is because you cannot suffer him because of your weakness. That’s why you should rebuke on yourself and keep your silence. And if that thing upsets others, you would tell that to your Abba. And Abba either would tell that brother or he will tell you what you have to do, and so you will get rid of worry.

292. The question of the same one: If I told that to Abba for others, but I supposed that that upset the brother, what should I do? And if that thing upset both others and me, should I tell that to Abba on my behalf, or should I keep my silence in order not to provide me pleasure? And if I supposed that the brother wasn’t upset, should I tell that for myself or should I force myself to remain silent?

The answer of John: Do not worry about troubling the brother by you talking to Abba. But if you needed to tell to Abba for others and you were worried about that, you should tell that on behalf of them. But if it was about telling to Abba only on your behalf, you should force yourself not to tell him anything.

293. The question of the same one: But my thought tells me that if the brother got troubled against me, he would become my enemy, because of reckoning that I talked to Abba against him.

The answer of John: This is a cunning thought wanting to impede you from correcting that brother[616]. So, do not stop yourself from telling that to Abba. But do that, of course, according to God. Of course, that the ill patients shout out against their physicians when the physicians take care of them. But the physicians do not care about that, for they know that later on the patients will thank them.

294. The question of the same one: When my thought tells me that I didn't want to say that for the benefit of my brother but in order to slander him, should I tell of should I keep my silence?

The answer of John: Urge your thought to speak according to God, and not with passion. But if you were defeated by your desire for slander, you would tell to Abba in that case too, but you should also confess Abba your thought of slander, so that both of you to be healed: that brother of his mistake and you of your slandering.

295. The question of the same one: If my thought didn't allow me to confess to Abba that the purpose of my speaking is that of gossiping my brother, what should I do? Should I talk to Abba, or not?

Answer: Do not tell him anything, and the Lord will take care of everything. This is because you won't need to tell something to Abba if the price is the harming of your soul. And God will take care, as He knows, of the healing of that brother.

296. The question of the same one towards the same one: It happens to me to do something, as I reckon, with judgment. But then somebody corrects that. And everything I invoke in my defense I tell out of my vain-glory. What should I do?

[616] It is about a brother who committed a neutral thing. That brother couldn't get upset if somebody told Abba about that. This is because Abba wouldn't condemn a neutral thing.

Answer: If there was no need for defense, you would keep your silence. But if it was useful for the brother, you should heal him, but you also should resist your vain-glory[617].

297. The question of the same one towards the same one: When I do something neither good or bad, and if we know that if a brother sees me doing that, he will be offended by me, I am tempted by my vain-glory to hide that. This is for I will feel shame if he saw that. So, should I not hide that in order I not to fall into vain-gloriousness, or should I hide that in order not to offend my brother? I do not know surely that he will be offended, but I suppose that. What should I do?

The answer of John: If your heart knows that your brother gets offended, you will protect him and you won't give him such a thought. But if you do not know that surely, but if you only supposed that to be so, you won't worry yourself about that.

298. The ask of the same one towards the same one: If I told somebody a word that pricked him, but he didn't understand that word, should I ask him for forgiveness or should I keep my silence and not give him reason to get troubled?

The answer of John: If the brother doesn't not understand that you have pricked him, you will keep your silence and you won't disturb him. But you will force on yourself to repent for that in front of God.

299. The question of the same one towards the same one: If somebody saw his brother committing mistakes and he told to Abba, what should feel him against whom that thing was said, for him who told that thing against him?

[617] It could be that a brother got offended by hearing that you did a thing which he didn't expect from you. In that was the case, you should show him that you didn't do that, in order him not to get offended; but you should avoid doing that out of your vain-glory, in order you not offend him by exemplifying him your passion. And neither you should fall into that. We shun ourselves form passion not only for ourselves, but also for others. The passions are contagious diseases. We must shun them also due to our responsibility for others.

The answer of John: If he is a believer and if he lives according to God, even if him who spoke against him did that because of enmity, he should thing: "That brother told that wanting I to benefit of that". And it will be fulfilled with him the saying: "The good man out of his treasury brings out the good thing" (Lk. 6: 45). And by thinking so, he will benefit more by living that one than by hating him. And by behaving such, he will progress into God.

302. The question of the same one towards the same one: Because I felt, due to my vain-glory, that when I bowed down in front of somebody I blushed a little, should I seek to bow down in front of some people intentionally, or should I do that only when the need for that occurs?[618]

The answer of John: You should not intentionally seek for bowing done in front of some people, but you do it only when needed.

303. Should I bow down even in front of ones who are inferior to me? Or should I comfort them with a word, in order not to occur within men, out of the contrary deed, the vain-gloriousness?

The answer of John: As there are great and honorable people who are in debt with the unimportant and all-inferior people, but they still owe to pay their debt once they are debtors, you will do similarly when you owe to bow down in front of a brother who is inferior to you, and you will let aside the vain-glory once you owe to do that to your brother.

304. The question of the same one towards the same one: If a passionate thought entered my heart, which would be the means for rejecting that thought"? Should I do that resisting it by words, or by rebuking, or by getting angry against that thought?

[618] Namely, should I intentionally seek for occasions to defeat my vain-glory, by bowing down in front of people even unnecessarily, or should I do that only when needed?

Or should I run to God and throw my helplessness in front of God?

The answer of John: Brother, the passions are troubles and the lord didn't protect us against them, but He told us: "on the day of your trouble, you call Me and I will deliver you and you will extoll Me" (Ps. 90: 15[619]). So, in any passions, there's nothing more useful than calling upon the name of God. Regarding the resistance by word, that is possible only to some people, especially to the powerful ones, whom the devils obey to. This is because, if one of the helpless ones wanted to resist them, the devils would laugh at him as at one who wanted to resist them while he still were under their mastery[620]. Rebuking them is possible only to the great ones, who have power. Whom among the saints you see rebuking a devil, as Saint Michael did, for he had power? (Jude 9-10). To us, for we are the weak ones, it is not given except us to run to the name of Jesus. This is because, according to the Scripture, and the passions are devils, and the devils are cast out in the name of Jesus (Acts 8: 7; 16: 18). And what do you want more than that? May God strengthen you and give you power into His fear[621].

305. The ask of the same one towards the same one: I ask you, Father, to give me your word that you are praying for me, as the Holy Oldman too gave it to me. This is because, immediately after I have been defeated in something my thought will tell me: "Because you have pride, God wont' help you to master your

[619] In KJB we have: Ps. 91: 15: "He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 90: 15: "he will shout out towards Me and I will hear him; I am with him into trouble and I will get him out and I will glorify him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[620] Only after the passion have been weakened by much prayer, the man will be able to stop himself the passion's movement.

[621] The fear of God provides power. The fear of God doesn't weaken. The bigger fear one has of God, the more present God will be in him with His power coming out of Him. That's why one who is fill of fear of God he will be full of God's power as well, for in this fear is the living of the overwhelming presence of God. Th fear of God provides you with the power of not fearing anything else. The fear of God helps you against your passions, it mobilizes and strengthens in that fear all the resources you have for fight. God is lives as the One Who cannot be defined: mysterium tremendum. Existentially and apophatically. That fear is the fear opening to you the horizon from beyond the world, that it attracts you in the same time, and that makes you repent for your sins and to pursuit the good, by feeling God as the upholder of the good.

passions, in order you not to fall into vain-glory by mastering them; or this happens to you because by easily receiving the help, you will lose it easily too, or in order you, for wanting to receive the help, to often run to God; or because of some other reason". Or can that happen to me rather because of my drowsiness? What should I do?

The answer of John: If all of us are one, as I dare to say, namely also the Oldman into God and I together with him, if he gave you his word, I too would give you my word through him. I know that I am weak and all-unimportant. But I cannot part myself with the Oldman. This is for he has mercy on me so that we both to be one[622]. But take heed at yourself, brother. Strive yourself to toil for keeping the commandments. And if you were defeated, you wouldn't get drowsy, neither would you despair, but you would stand up again and God will help you. This is because you could suffer that because of the first things mentioned by you. But that can happen to you also because of your drowsiness. But you can get liberate from both of them, by throwing on yourself, crying, in front of god's kindness, so that Him to liberate you from those and from other passions of yours, by the prayers of the saints[623]. Amen.

306. Of the same one towards the same one: Ask for help for fulfilling the things commanded by the Great Oldman.

[622] It is here about the "reciprocal interiority" which the love produced between two persons. I am within another and he is within me, but without us to be confounded to one another. By working in a certain manner, I show my subject, and another does that too. But we cannot truly be one within another except by being into a subject who is our common support. Such are the children in their mother. But in a culminant manner we are one within another for we are both of us within a subject that is much superior in His comprising power and love which unite both of us. His love unites both of us, either we feel that in a more or less accentuated manner.

[623] The prayers of ones for others spring out of the unity among those who are united into God, as we have said in the previous footnote. If I feel the another within me, it will be impossible I not to feel also his tribulations and his troubled which he suffers of, and that not to push me to pray God for him, but, once we feel comprised within God's love. But this reciprocal interiority we live it also with those who passed away from this life. So, we cannot by pray also for those whom we know about that they left burdened by weaknesses, and we cannot but also think that they too who left with great power and spiritual love for us they are praying for us, especially because they feel in a more accentuated manner the full of love presence of God. Then, they couldn't truly be united with those who truly believe into Church, if they weren't praying ones for others.

The answer of John: Brother, the Great Oldman hasn't left anything unanswered in his "Answers" towards you. This is for, after he told you: "Guard my words and the testament I have given to you will be guarded", what else do you want? Do everything you can for his testament to be guarded on your behalf. This is for, of this consists the inheritance of the Kingdom with the Paradise of its delectation: "The things which the eye hasn't seen and the ear hasn't heard and to the man's heart they haven't ascended, which God has prepared for them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9). But you must add to that, thought, your power and you striving. And the mercy and the bestowing of the power belong to God. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

307. The question of the same one: What should I do, for I fear to be ashamed and despised. This is because, when I fall into some discussion with some people, I am so attracted and enslaved by that discussion than I am amazed by myself. And when I remember about myself, I feel shame and I leave them whom I am speaking to.

The answer of John: In order the weak one not to fall in these things and in the love for glory, he must immediately run away from much-speaking and to cut off the discussion, by invoking as motif the fact that Abba has given him something urgent to do and he is hurrying up. And the fact that you cannot stand to be despised it comes out of your faithlessness. Brother, Jesus made Himself man and He was despised. Are you superior to Jesus? This means faithlessness and deceit from devils. He who wants the humbleness, he vainly says: "I want it"; if he doesn't endure dishonors, he won't achieve it. Do not disregard that what you have heard, because otherwise you will be despised through your deed itself[624].

308. The question of the same one: When some people come to monastery, either laymen or fathers, my thought tells me that I should ask them for something useful to my soul, or for some other thing. What do you reckon?

[624] That monk that despises the advice not to tarry to discussions, in order not to be despised by others, he will attract contempt upon himself right by tarrying into discussions.

The answer of John: Brother, he who truly is the disciple of Christ, he doesn't have even the smallest freedom to do something by himself[625]. Even if it seems to him that he benefits out of the discussions with the visitors, he will deviate from the commandment that tell us: "Do all things with advice" (Prov. 24: 32). What do you want to hear more than the Fathers said: "If there are present some people who speak the word of God, you will ask you Abba, humbly: Abba, do you want me to stay and listen, oy should I live?" (Abbe Isaïe, Recueil, 3: 33, p. 51-52). And that what he tells you, that you will do quietly. And if because of some need you want to ask somebody for that, either a monk or a layman, tell that before to Abba. And if he tells you: "go ahead and ask", you will ask[626].

309. But if I do not want to ask myself, but it happen to meet some of them, or somebody asks me about something, what do you command me to do?

The answer of Barsanuphius: When you meet somebody, let you word to stop after the salute. And more than that, you can say: "Pray for me, for I am going to fulfill a task". And then you leave. And if that one asks you about something and you know about that, you will answer him and then you will continue walking, and if you do not know about that what he asked you, you will tell him: "I do not know" and you will keep walking.

310. Question: If I am sitting or also working, and somebody sits next to me and invited me to have a dialogue, what should I do?

The answer of John: If somebody finds you sitting and he draws near to you, you will accept his blessing and you will [625] This is not freedom, but it is slavery to the vain-glory. That man who truly is free of passions, he lives, free, into Christ.

[626] So will the man be liberated from his will, better said from the slavery to the vain-glory.

bless him too. And tell him: "Pray for me". And if he holds you near with his hands, you will tell him: "Forgive me, because I have commandment not to speak to somebody without Abba's permission. I am going to ask him and that what he tells me I am going to do". And if somebody sits down next to you while you are working, you will invoke the fact of having a task to fulfill and get up and leave.

311. The question of the same one: And what does it mean that what Abba Isaiah says: "After you have saluted the stranger, ask him: "How are you" and then keep your silence, while sitting next to him (Recueil 3: 46, p. 53)?

Answer: You have written that Abba Isaiah told us to receive the stranger and after saluting him and asking him: "How are you?", we should sit next to him in silence. But this was told to an old man who was spiritually advanced. The serious disciple who wants to become a monk he will guard himself against such meetings. This is for out of such meetings will be born the contempt, the drowsiness, the disobedience, and an awful daring. That's why they somewhere about John that he didn't lose time with such meetings (Paterikon, John Colovos 30).

312. The question of the same one: My thought tells me: Cut off the discussions suddenly, and you will be saved. And my thought also tells me: Cut off the discussions gradually, in order those who know you not to wonder about that. Tell me which one of these two sorts of behavior would be the best?

The answer of John: regarding the sudden or the gradual cutting off of your discussions in order them who know you not to wonder about you, cut those discussions off suddenly and you will get rid of worry. Otherwise, you will give them reasons and thoughts. Reasons for they to say: "For he has spoken to me first, I am going to speak him too". Thoughts: "Does this brother have something against me, because previously he was talking to me, but not he no longer talks to me?". But you must want this thing and God will help you to succeed.

313. But sometimes it happens that ill people come to monastery asking me for something from infirmary and Abba commanded me to give them what they ask for. And this forces me to talk to them. I wonder, do I do this in order to fulfill my will? Tell me, Father, and pray for me so that I could find peace in this regard.

The answer of John: Regarding the ill people coming and asking for something from infirmary, if you give to all of them equally, you won't have to worry. This is for that you have been commanded to do. But you must pay much attention, lets to use that as motif to tarry to discussions with somebody, or you to talk more than needed, and ask him only if you need to know a necessary thing. But even in these ones, you must restrict yourself only to what is needed, by taking heed at the fact that the evil will not to find any reason to prolong the discussion. Guard these ones and you will find resting.

314. Question: My thought tells me that the quietude is more necessary than anything and that it is beneficial to me. Does my thought tell me right?

The answer of John: What the quietude is? The quietude consists of somebody gathering his heart in itself, and stopping his heart from giving and form taking and form the desire for being pleasant to people and form the other things. When our Lord shamed the scribe by telling him the parable of the man fell among thieves, and our Lord asked him: "Who was his neighbor?", the scribe answered: "Him who had mercy on him" (Lk. 10: 37). But also, our Lord said: Mercy I want, and not sacrifice" (Mt. 9: 13). So, if you know that the mercy id greater than the sacrifice, lean your heart towards mercy. This is because under the masque of the quietude one can reach to pride, until the man hasn't' gained on himself, namely until he hasn't reached to be without blemish[627]. This is because only

[627] Here is being done the difference between that quietude that becomes indifferent, through withdrawal from others, and that quietude that is full of mercy on others, going even to cross for them, and this quietude doesn't need withdrawal. A quietude that is indifferent to the then the quietude is born within man: when the man borne the cross. So, when you suffer together with another, you will find help. But whether you reckon on yourself as one who has surpassed the measure, you should find from me that even that what you have had, you actually have lost. So, you must not walk either inside or outside, but you must start form the middle, by understanding what the will of God is, "because the days are bad" (Gal. 5: 16)[628].

315. Question of the same one: Master, how should I understand: neither inside, nor outside, but in the thing from the middle? Explain me: should one appoint different days for quietude and for taking care of thing?

The answer of John: Not trusting either the quietude or showing contempt for occupations, but begin both humble and proud in quietude and awake in occupations, this is the middle path that never falls[629]. And in the work of gathering the others' pain, it is a locking up into pride. But he who hasn't reached that state which is no longer tempted by sins in, he won't be able to be, in the same time, full of mercy for others and peaceful. Uniting the quietude with the mercy on others it is characteristic to them who have reached a state of righteousness. Such a man has discovered his clean heart, or his inside. But within heart he finds his mercy on others. Or, the "more heart" he has, the more he will be united with others in pain. The heart is unseparated from others. The people meet one another through the mediation of the heart. The heart is in the middle, between a man and another. The inside is united, in an unmediated manner, with them who are outside. Or, the people form outside has become an inward part of his. Barsanuphius and John do not recommend an individualistic withdrawal, but they recommend a preoccupation with others. And not in your own interest, but in the interest of others. The withdrawal from the relationships with others it is recommended only to him how is not spiritually advances, so that such relationships tempt him.

[628] The man must struggle for gaining on himself, for knowing on himself, and for continuously having his true self. But you will gain on yourself if you sacrifice yourself for another.

[629] Another unmediated union between the realities from outside and the realities from inside, or the middle between those, it is the paradoxical union as inwards state and the mercy on the people from outside, or between looking at them who are outside and the paying of attention to oneself. This union humanizes the orientation towards interior and it gives cleanness to the orientation towards the realities from outside, and it humanizes that one too. The mercy isn't either a locking up within yourself or scattering outside, but the mercy united both of those. You humanize the interior by being compassionate on others. Barsanuphius and John do not search for a salvation through isolation from others, but he reckoned as superior to everything else the care for the salvation of others. In order one to reach this equilibrium, he needs humbleness and quietude and watchfulness in occupations.

thought, there is not a border which to discerns among hours; all the lest among days[630]. But the man must endure with thankfulness the things coming upon him. And he must suffer together with all the people living in his community. By that it will be fulfilled the Apostle's commandment (2 Cor. 12: 26), namely, when a limb suffers, let all the other limbs suffer with that limb, in order they to strengthen and to comfort that limb. This is the compassion. And suffering together with the ill ones and helping them to get healed it is a good thing to do. This is for, if the doctor taking care of the ill one, he will have his payment, all the more him who suffers in everything together with his neighbor, according to his power, he will have his reward too. This is because, if one doesn't suffer in all things with another, even in the few things he suffers together with that one he will show that he actually will be fulfilling his own will[631].

316. Question of the same one: You have commanded me to persevere in the middle. But it happens to me that when I am not occupied and I have the occasion to sit down a little within my monastic cell, there come friends, monks and laymen, who usually visit me, and they disturb me. And if I tell them that, I will get disturbed; but if I do not tell them that, I must remain with them and so the businesses of the infirmary will remain unfulfilled. Don't you order me that, when the brothers are present, I to tell to someone else to go and take care of infirmary's businesses? Or should I go? I think these like a man. But if in this thought there is some will of justifying myself, may the will of God be done and not mine. This is for my will won't last forever, but it will come to an end, by perishing.

[630] Because at any moment one must united the taking heed at himself with the mercy on others, there cannot be days totally dedicated only to paying attention to oneself, and then days totally dedicated only to exterior occupations.

[631] He who hasn't yet rejected his egotism in all things, his egotism wills till be present in some of the thing, to a certain extent; even in those things which he seemingly has rejected his egotism in. Who knows what interest he has in suffering only for certain things? He might think at the fact that he too will suffer of that that that (😅) one suffers of too. In his merciful suffering for another there is a palpitant self-surpassing. Ona passes against his own border, the border which we are locked up within, and so ne reaches into the transcendent God Who is not locked up within Himself, but He is full of an endless love for His creatures. Such a man will no longer be held back by any egotism, or by any limit.

The answer of John: When the man descends into humbleness, he progresses. Remaining inside your monastic cell will make you unworking, because you are shunned from troubles. And by finding you worriless before time, the enemy prepares to you more disturbance than resting, in order him to bring you to the state that you to say: "It would have been better to me if I hadn't been born". As about being disturbed by people, the Fathers said: "Is there any man moaning for death and who still takes heed at the friendships of this world" (Paterikon, Pimen 123)? So, you too shouldn't give them anything and receive nothing from them, and they will leave. And regarding the fact of being you served by a brother, if you do what you need by yourself, you will help on yourself. But if you do that through another, that what exceeds your toil and your prayer will be taken by that one[632]. I told your before about the together-suffering with another. You must strive for that, if you believe the Apostle who says: "Who is sick and I won't be sick too? Who is offended and I won't burn too?" (2 Cor. 11: 29). "Endure evil with them who endure evil, as ones who are bodies too" (Hebr. 13: 3).

317. How could I, Father, to give gladly give somebody a thing that he asks for, if I doubted that that one asks for that thing because he needed it? This is because, by giving that thing forcedly, my soul will remain harsh and cold?

The answer of John: If you find out that he who asks for something he asks for that because he needs that, you will give that to him joyfully, as by giving him out of the things belonging to God. This is the gladness. But if you find out that he doesn't actually need that, you won't give that to him, but you will tell him: "I have commandment from Abba not to give him who doesn't actually need what he asks for". And this is not harshness. May the Lord make you sapient, brother.

318. Question: I have red in "The Ascetic Rules" written by Saint Basil and I have found out that anybody who has something and he gives that something to somebody else, he rather will give that to himself than to another, according to the Lord's commandments (Acts 20: 35). How can one keep this?

[632] How much it has been added to you through another's toil, and not through your own toil, that will be given to another.

Answer: This thing has been written for him who lives alone and he can organize himself with right-reckoning. But he who lives in monastery and who obeys a Father, he hasn't been given such a commandment[633], neither has he the freedom to fulfill his will.

319. Question: I have found out also this thing in "The Ascetic Rules" of Saint Basil: that he who is addicted to something from among the present things, or if he attaches himself to something among the things attracting him, or if he deviates even the least form God's commandment, he won't be able to reach to be disciple of the Lord (Régules morale 2: 3; pg. 31: 705 B). But my relatives owe me a small part of wealth and I 3woudl want to give that to the poor, but my relatives do not quite want to give me that. Whas should I do?[634]

If you do not cut off your bodily thought and if you do not achieve a little indifference according to God, you will fell into the desire for being pleasant to people. May God give you power for you to make His will in everything. Amen.

320. The question of the same one: What does it mean that non-being-silent which the Fathers speak about? And how could I fulfill that?

Answer: As I reckon, we must not keep our silence about our thoughts. This is because if one doesn't confess openly his thoughts, he will remain unhealed[635]. But we must ask the [633] One cannot fulfill only a commandment, independently.

---

[634] Dorotheos felt himself attached to that small wealth owed to him by his relatives. But he wanted to share that to the poor. He asked: would that be a sin if he felt himself attached to that wealth?

[635] There is necessary a communication of thoughts for the man's souly health. The man is not healthy when he locks up within himself. This shows the interpersonal character of the man. But I need to confess my thoughts not in order to search for supporting them but in order I to reject them. Namely, one must reject his thoughts which uphold his egotism, and he won't be spiritual Fathers about the non-silence on those thoughts of ours. I have told you, brother, that what I am thinking. But if you understand those things better, may the Lord give us that wisdom from Him, both to you, and to me the all-unimportant servant of yours.

321. Question: What does it mean, Father, that what you have told me: that on him who takes vigil the sleep won't harm him?

The answer of John: From him who guards his herd as Jacob did, the sleep will stay away. And when the sleep kidnaps him for a lithe while, his sleep is like the vigil of another. This is for the fire burning his heart won't allow him to sink into sleep. He sings psalms together wit David: "Enlighten my eyes so that I won't sleep towards death" (Ps. 12: 4[636]). He who has reached this measure and he tastes its sweetness[637], he will understand the said things. This is for such a man won't get drunk with the bodily sleep, but he only needs the sleep of the nature[638].

322. The question of the same one: If somebody asks me to enter his monastic cell to make a prayer together, or if I ask him able to do that except by communicating those egotistic thoughts of his, to somebody else. You must disapprove your own egotistic thoughts in front of another. He whom you confess your thoughts to, he must become a companion of yours into communion. I won't be able to offload my egotism if I do not enter the communion with another. Only another conscience can offload me, if I show that I leave my egotism.

[636] In KJB we have: Ps. 13: 3: "Consider and hear me, O Lord my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;"; in ROB we have: Ps. 12: 4: "Look at me, hear me, Lord, my God, enlighten my eyes, lest I will fall asleep into death," (E. l. t.'s n.)

[637] Regardless what spiritual height the man reaches, the still remain a man and his measure move on the line of the mankind. The man doesn't exit beyond any measure, as God is, neither will the man cross into the string of the angelic measures. And the higher the reached measure is, the more the man will be sweetened by a richer and more pleasant knowledge and communion.

[638] The bodily sleep has its sweetness too. This is for there is also a sleep of the integral nature of the man, which the soul will be rested too, and not only the body. Then he is kidnapped on the godlike plan, and he rests on that plan, a plan that is superior to the souly plan, a plan that remains active while the body sleeps. Only this sleep gets the man drunk, by being shown to him during that sleep "the things which the eye hasn't seen" etc. (1 Cor. 2: 9). Then will cease also the soul's movements of perceiving, of feeling, of imagining, but the soul's perceiving power still remains active.

to enter my monastic cell, or if I want to help somebody to do something, how far should I go in rejecting his ask, or in insisting in my ask? Without any doubt, it is about the case when no commandment would be transgressed.

Answer: If you enter the monastic cell of some brother, or if he enters your monastic cell and tall you "Pray", you will answer him up to three time: "Forgive me". And if he still insists after the third time, you will pray with humbleness. And you must do the same: as him for three times. And if he doesn't want that, you will leave him alone. This is because strife is not good. And for anything, either if it is about to suffer something from somebody, or if you stretch your hand out to him, ask up to the third time. And if that one doesn't accept to do what you ask him, you will peacefully leave him alone and you won't bother him. This is the true path of God, which you must take heed at working yourself unhypocritically, with a clean heart5. This is for, in such a case God give you His hand and He will help you by His grace. Amen.

323. The question of the same one: If one has prepared a feast and they give me my share but I don't need to take that, do you command me to accept that in order I not to seem like refusing that because of my restraining and so I could share it to them who need that in infirmary? Or should I not take it?

The answer of John: If you need something form that feast, take it, brother, and if not, leave it there. This is because, otherwise, there will be born within you the vain-glory.

324. The question of the same one: It happened sometimes that after I prepared an agape for the brothers, I felt some vain-gloriousness; should I better secretly prepare the agape through Abba rather than through myself? This is for in this way I will fight the vain-gloriousness. And could somebody get rid of this vain-gloriousness? This is for the vain-gloriousness is sown within man through both on the left and of the right things.

Answer: You must take heed at both sorts. Because both of them can be occasion for vain-gloriousness[639]. But such an occasion will be smaller when preparing the agape through Abba, because the heart will have occasion for vain-glory only within itself. But if doing it by yourself, you will have a twofold war, namely not only from your heart but also from people. But getting freed from the love for vain-glory can be reached only by them who have totally existed the former man. May the Lord bestow you this freedom into Christ Jesus[640]. Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

325. Question: When I close my eyes during the religious services, I can gather my thoughts together. Is that good? Doesn't that seem to the brothers from around me as something inappropriate, so that they could get offended?

The answer of John: If each time when you close your eyes during the religious services your thoughts are gathered to God, you should not take heed at others, even though you could seem to the brothers around you as doing something inappropriate.

326. The question of the same one: I have my own books and my thought tells me to donate them to the monastery so that I could get rid of caring for them, since the common books are given to each one to read them. I think alike about the clothes too. Tell me, Father, should I do that? And what clothes should I keep for the weakness of my body?

The answer of John: If you want to get rid of those, it will be good you to do as you said and donate them to the monastery. This is for everything that belongs to the monastery it belongs to God. Regarding the clothes, keep for winter two [639] He can feel satisfactions also when preparing the agape secretly, through Abba, by seeing that he has defeated on himself by preparing that feast secretly.

[640] Only the feeling of the presence of Him Who is free of any chain of any passions, of Him Who is all-free, only that can bestow us too, the power and the happiness of that freedom. Then we will have been elevated form the fabric of the relative things up into the spiritual ambience of Him Who is above any relativeness, above any dependence; of this state of His consists te3h true glory that doesn't' dominate him who has it.

thick sleeveless coats and a blouse, and for summer two thin coats and a blouse. And for winter keep also a waistcoat for your chest, for the time when it is very cold. And for the time when it is not cold, keep the monastic robe and two long clothes with sleeves, one for winter and another for summer. And also, two covers: one thick and one thin. Keep a mattress and a pillow. This is for you need those. And if you receive a coat and you need it, you will keep that too, and the old one you will give it to Abba. And if you do not need that one given to you, you will give that too to Abba. May the Lord give you power to obey and to fulfill these things. This is that progress and that straightening according to God.

327. The question of the same one towards the Great Oldman: Because you have appointed me in the service of this infirmary, please show me, Father, if I should read some medicine books and to use such books, or should I not to take care of such thing because they will scatter my mind, So that I should shun from those, lest there will be born within my the vain-gloriousness? Should I use only the things I know by being sufficient to me to use the oil, the cauterizations, the unguents, and simply all the things used by them who do not read books?[641] So, what should I do? This is for my heart trembles in this job, lest I will make mistakes and I will add sins too to my passions.

The answer of the Great Oldman: Because we haven't yet reached the consummation so that us to be delivered from the slavery of the passions, it is rather a help to us using the medicine writings than to let ourselves in the care of the passions[642]. But we must not hope in them, but we must trust God Who gives the death and the life[643], according to the [641] At that time the medical science was not so advanced in comparison to the empirical treatments inherited from a long tradition.

[642] This is because, if we trusted our skillfulness, we would to that with pride and so we would be wrong.

[643] God brings death too, in the meaning that He withdraws His power that upholds the people's life, after God allowed them for awhile to grow up spiritually, consequently to the ancestral sin. But God withdraws it concretely, from each one, when He reckons as good. For to them who have used well the time allotted to them God will give them a superior life after their death, and because to those who haven't used the time of their lives well, and they won't use it even in the future, God reckons that there is no longer a point in letting the saying: "I Beat and I heal" (The Second Law 32: 39). So, by reading these books or by asking some people about them, do not forgive that nobody is healed without God. So, he who uses such books he must use them in the name of God and God will help him. The medicinal craftsmanship doesn't impede somebody from piousness, but you must reckon the medicinal care as the brothers' hand labor. Do that what you do in the fear of God and you will be guarded with the prayers of the saints. Amen.

328. The question of the same one towards the same one: You told me on other occasion that one cuts off his will also by not insisting to impose his will. And it happens, Father, that I impose something useful to a patient, but that harms him and I am troubled because I imposed my will in that. And I also seem myself as scattered for the whole day, so that I almost fail in remembering God. Then I am upset by the covetousness of my belly. Tell me, therefore, what should I do, for I believe that out of what you will tell me it will come my salvation.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If you imposed your opinion by reckoning that that thing would help the patients, and out of this occurred a harm, God would take heed at your heart and He wouldn't condemn you. This is for God know that you have harmed that patient while wanting to help him. But if an experienced man talks to you and you disregard him, that means that you will impose your own will out of pride.

communication of the life from Himself. So, they have been preparing their own death by breaking their connection from God.

But the death often has a positive meaning. By and large, by receiving his existence, the man receives also a responsibility for strengthening his being for the eternal life. This responsibility has many occasions and ways of manifestation. To this responsibility belongs also the development of the man's existence in dignity, in honor, and in courage, for the great cause of the good connected to God. Sometimes, this dignity must be paid with the death. So, the man must be ready to receive the death too; one must prepare his eternal life by such a death. Thus, even though the death is intertwined with the sufferance and it is a passive thing, by being received with a supreme dignity after a preparation in this sense, it will contribute at its turn to prolonging the man's existence on the plan of a corresponding eternal existence. This death and such a preparation are preferred by God too, instead of a life in cowardice, in lie, or in debauchery. Thus, one can say in many ways that God gives the death too. God give the death through the separation from the sinner, and God accepts the death of him who received his death with dignity, in order God to cross him to the superior life as a reward for his clean, but perishable, life.

Many people hear constantly about a certain city but then they happen to enter that city they do not know that that's the actual city they have been hearing of. Brother, are you thinking at God for the whole day and you don't know that? This is for knowing about a commandment of God and occupying yourself with fulfilling it, it means obeying God and thinking at Him[644]. And John said you rightly: "You must firstly give the leaves, and, at the command of God, you will also bring forth the fruits". So, if you do not know what is useful, you will follow them who know it; of this consists the humbleness and through it you will find the grace of God.

And that what you have said that "out of this it will come my salvation", you have said that rightly. This is for without God your coming wouldn't have happened, but God guided you. Strengthen yourself into the Lord, for you bring not only a few benefits out of the scattering which you are talking about. And regarding the covetousness of your belly, you must fight it as strong and you can, and the Lord will help you to understand and to fulfill what is useful to you. Encourage yourself and be strong into the Lord (The Second Law 31: 6)[645].

329. The question of the same one towards the same one: For you have told me that obeying and remembering God consist of having a commandment and fulfilling it, I pray you, make me know if it is possible in such a scattering to serve according to God, and if it is possible I to have this ceaseless remembrance while among people. And if possible ask for me, Father, that [644] Even if you do not mention the name of God, by fulfilling the commandment that you know about that it comes to God, you actually remember God. he who works in the courtyard of a master, even though he doesn't' constantly think at his master, he still will serve his master.

[645] The man cannot be stronger than God is. When the man is by himself, he is weak. In the faithful man one can no longer discern between what belong to the man and what belongs to God. The man feels that everything he does it is actually done by God. But the man employs so much zeal as everything would depend on him. God won't work without man's zeal. But the man's zeal has its warmth from God. The man will be held accountable if he doesn't work as God wants, or the man will be rewarded if he does it. But the man would be unable to work as God wants if he didn't have the strengthening from God. And the man will be condemned because of not working so, for he hasn't received the help from God.

what is beneficial to me. This is for all things are possible to you and to God (Mk. 10: 27; 14: 36)[646].

Regarding the ceaseless remembrance of God, each man can do that according to his measure. But you must only be humble. This is for I know better that you know what is useful to you, and I will ask God for that, on your behalf, this is for all the things are possible to God[647].

330. The question of the same one towards the same one: I am again falling down before you, you merciful Father, and I do not cease bothering you until you will strengthen me. This is because, when God gives me, through your prayers, a little sadness for my mistakes, I gradually lose it because of the scattering form outside. I pray you, Father, strengthen me, and that5 strengthening to be wholly form God and from you and nothing of it from me. This is because I won't be able to do anything if I do not receive power through your prayers. Regarding the administration of the infirmary, I fear, Father, that because I ought to show authority that will lead me to vain-gloriousness and to daring. And because I often handle foods, I will be burdened by the covetousness of my belly. So, if you deign it, I will want to progress through a humbler serving and, if I got a little eased, I would take again the present duties. You know, Father, that I ask for this not because I am disgusted by the present appointment of mine. This is for, how could I do that, the needy of me. But I fear, Father, lest by sitting inside, the mentioned passions to get infuriated either because of me or by the work of the devils, as I reckon. I do not know. But you, Father, please show me the will of God and get me out of my thoughts which bother me, by your prayers, and please strengthen me to do that what you will tell me to do, and forgive me.

[646] Everything you ask for God will fulfill it. And God can fulfill everything. But the spiritual man knows what he should ask for. He asks for the things which are beneficial to him and to others, or he asks for those things which are according to their measure, or to their capacity of understanding, or receiving, and of using the received things.

[647] There are diverse ways of ceaselessly remember God: some of them are more superficial, while others are deeper: by fulfilling one or more of God's commandments; by placing every done thing in connection with God.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Listel to me, brother, and be convinced into the Lord, that since I have commanded you to take this job, out hand and our heart are with you. And there is also with you the hand of God, for we have been praying to Him for the salvation of your soul, and for getting you strengthened for this job, and for your good honor and covering into this job. And you cannot be saved except thus. Therefore, you must not get disgusted of it, and if you fall you must rise again; if you have mistaken, you will rebuke on yourself until God will have mercy on you and He will do to you what you desire. You must only not to get lazy to it. You must dare, for the Lord Himself Who appointed you to this job, He will help you. And we take care together with you, in order the devil not to deceive you with the desire of getting rid of this job. This is because it was said: "By their nice and flattering words, they deceive the hearts of the innocent" (Rom. 16: 18). He Who has appointed you to this job, he is the One Who told His disciples: "Behold, I am sending you" (Mt. 10: 16). And again: "Behold, I am with you" (Mt. 28: 20). Do not fear and do not cogitate at the fact that the businesses of the infirmary depend on you. Do not allow yourself to be burdened by the worry about your weakness. If you understand the things written by me to you, it won't be difficult to you. You must only take heed at yourself according to your power, and God will help you. Be strong into the Lord, and be strengthened into Him.

331. The question of the same one towards the other Oldman: How could I correct the brothers who are together with me, without causing disturbance, if they mistake?

The answer of John: If you firstly will imprint in an exemplary way the will of God within your heart, you won't get disturbed[648], but you will become accustomed to work as the [648] It is a great thing for somebody to know what is useful to him: and to ask for that. It is in this not only the feeling of all the things possible to God, but also knowing what is useful to a man or to another. It is a great penetration into the ocean of the powers and of the richesses of God and into the diverse measures of the people, who can receive out of those richesses that what is useful to them on that moment. But into humbleness there are received the greatest goods. This is for no wall of the pride stops those goods from being received. God "gives grace to the humble". In humbleness there is the self-freedom, there is the total openness to Fathers do. And if you do not take heed at yourself and you get kidnapped[649], you will tell to God your repentance: "Forgive me, Master, and have mercy on me". But you will also tell to those who are together with you: "Take heed, brothers, at the fact that because of this we are condemned and we lose our souls"[650]. Do not shout out too loudly, but only as loud as they could hear you. And if you restrain yourself into these things, there will come to you that peace according to God.

God Who doesn't show that what is characteristic to Him in a power that crushes, but He shows that in the kindness free of any narrowing passion.

[649] There is a good kidnapping into ecstasy, when you forget about the worry for yourself; and there is also a bad kidnapping, when you are carried away by a passion of yours and you forget about your true self. Then you no longer do your will but you will fulfill a passionate impulse. The leader of the community tells then, out of the rage that kidnapped him, heavy words to the brothers, and so the brothers are bothered.

[650] In case of the passionate rebuking, both the leader and the brothers will be lost. This for they get mad on one another. The scourge spreads. The sin which the people from the newer times laugh at it, as at a business that is scrupulously particular, it actually has a social dimension, as the virtue does too. The effect doesn't limit within the being of him who commits the sin, but the effect will have social repercussions. The bad apple makes bad the apples around. The responsibility of the man for himself it is, in the same time, a responsibility for others. But the whole responsibility is not only a connection among people, but also between people and God. They who do not feel themselves accountable in front of God, they do not feel accountable either to one another. Where from could come the absolute force of the responsibility if not from a superior forum who sown it within us? And why should I be so responsible for the being of my fellow human if that being was perishable? In this unconditional force of the responsibility for my fellow human it is implied his eternal value. I have bee created in order I to unconditionally answer for others (and by that, for me too). Who has made me thus? Who has placed me in this absolute dependence but which I can manifest my freedom into? Who has created me so that I made dependent on me the fate of others and of mine? A superior forum has made me dependent on Him, but in freedom, for I can answer in a way or another that accountability in front of Him, responsibility which He has sown it within me; of course, I will assume grave risks if I do not answer that responsibility or if I answer it wrongly. He has created me as a being whom my fate and the father of others depend on. The responsibility is a prime mode which God ties us through, to one another and to Him, but in freedom. On the other hand, the reciprocal dependence among us we should exert it with maximum gentleness, while reciprocally respecting our freedom, and by promoting the growth of the sensitiveness and of the gentleness in reciprocity.

An external nature, one lacking a conscience and lacking the gentleness, in addition to the fact that it would be more inexplicable in its existence than a supreme person-like forum, it couldn't explain the human freedom and responsibility, which constitute the sole noblesse of the man. Besides, why would I speak and what meaning would have a freedom of theirs? How could be the man responsible of his freedom? And why the man would be preoccupied with his responsibility?

332. The question of the same one; I pray you, Father, tell me how must be the way of correction? And when should I play dumb and overlook the happening things? And if I am unsuccessful, will I decide a punishment to myself?

The answer of John: You must always work according to the people. If you see that one is understanding and he received your advice, you will tell him: "Brother, if we do the thing of God lazily (Jer. 31: 10), that will bring us the perdition of our soul. Was that you have done, a good thing? Be zealous from now on". And if the brother in more unexperienced, you will tell him: "Brother, do you need to be corrected for the fact that you are getting lazy? If I told this to Abba, he would rebuke you as it is due". And if you play dumb, you will do that according to the mistake. If that mistake is a small mistake, you will play dumb. But if that mistake is a big mistake, you won't play dumb. And you won't punish yourself because of not succeeding in that, but neither you will disregard your unsuccess. When you reach to such things, you will pray God for forgiveness. Otherwise, there will be born the indifference.

333. The question of the same one: If somebody among the brothers makes a mistake, or even among patients, and I want to correct him, and I tell him an upsetting word, will I bow down before him? And if he gets angry and leaves the infirmary, will if bow down in front of him? This is for my pride and my will to self-justification darken my mind. And if I bow down before him there will also occur my vain-gloriousness.

The answer of John: After getting upset you won't say anything more. This is for the evil doesn't give birth to good. But you must prolong your patience until will cease the thought which has caused the upset. And then you will speak peacefully. And if that one will be convinced, behold it is good. And if not, you tell him: "If you want me to, I will tell to Abba and he will decide what we should do". And so, you will get appeased. And if that brother will leave you, wondering about what you have said to him, you will tell Abba about that and Abba will rebuke him. But do not bow down before him, because by doing so you will make him suspecting you of being wrong and you will suffer an even harsher war. Towards other people, thought, you will behave attentively, according to the mistake known to you. If your mistake is big, you will bow down before them; if you mistake is small one, you will express your heart's sorrow only by mouth, telling him: "Forgive me, brother". But shun yourself from pride and from the will of self-justification. This is for these two impede the repentance. This is for it happens one to bow down before somebody out of vain-gloriousness too. You must despise these three ones. So, you will bow down, there where you should to, in the fear of God and with right-reckoning (with discernment)[651]. And you must put in this the whole your determination. And God will help you by the prayers of the saints.

334. Question: If while I am helping the patients there comes the hour for reading the psalms, of for reading the holy Proskomide, or some other needs, and the brothers working together with me they know what they should give to any patient, do you command me to leave or just this is my duty? And if I want to sit in my monastic cell when there is not need for me at the infirmary, do you allow me that, Father?

If the brothers know, there is not a duty for you to leave, neither to sit within your monastic cell, but you most only examine the patients.

335. Question: If by giving to somebody, sometime, according to his needs, I notice that my avarice stopes me, so [651] The humbleness is sustained by the fear of God. The humbleness opposes to pride, to vain-gloriousness, and to the man's will of self-justification, which all of them make the man's sensitiveness blunt. He who self-justifies, he won't admit that he has committed any sin. He doesn't want to repent, so that he doesn't use the possibility of correcting himself, of changing in good the course of his life. This is another sort of pride. Or, this is another way of manifestation of the pride and of the responsibility's bluntness. These ones lock the man up in his narrowness, out of which he will no longer be able to see the light that is above himself, and that is above all realities, namely the light of God. Bowing down in front of somebody else, as admission of the own mistake, one must do it not only with that humbleness sustained by the fear of God, but he must do that also with discernment or with the right-reckoning, lest he will deceivingly make him whom he addresses himself to think that him who bows down has really mistaken. This bowing down before another it is the getting out of the one's superficial self, it is the self-placing into the admitted and respected mystery of another, but also in the open-into-indefinite mystery of God.

that I give him less, should I bestow him more than needed, or should I force myself to not give him less than he needs[652] [653]? And, if out of the shame coming to me out of my desire for being pleasant to people, or out of my vain-gloriousness, my thought urges me to give him more, should I give him less, in order to reject this passion, or should I give him only as much he needs, for the commandment?

The answer of John: If your avarice stopes you from giving to your brother according to his need, you will do according to the case. If you have much, you will give him a little more than he needs. If you have less, you will give him exactly as much as he needs. If, because of your vain-gloriousness, of because of your desire to be pleasant to people, you want to give him more than he needs, you won't do that, but, in this case too, you will give him exactly as much as he needs. May God make your heart wise, brother.

336. Question: If I receive a thing and I need that thing to infirmary, but I see that I am getting attached to that thing, will the desire to keep it for myself be a passion?

The answer of John: If you need a thing and you are warred by the thought of having that thing, you will tell to your thought: "I need it, why should I take it lustily?". And if the passion ceases, you will take that thing. And if your passion doesn't cease, if possible, you will use another thing in order to satisfy your need, and so you will defeat your passion. And if you cannot do otherwise, take that thing while condemning yourself and saying: "I wouldn't take it if I did not need it, for I am defeated by my lust".

337. Question: Somebody bestowed me a coat, and I have received it joyfully, not refusing it. But by examining myself I have ascertained that I received that coat without needing it, but [652] (this number is unidentified in the text) Reading the psalms is that what has been developed for Matins. As we can see, that preceded or accompanied the Proskomide even back then. So, this too existed at the beginning of the Century VI.

[653] Does it suffice not to be another given less than he should be?

rather because of my greediness. So, my thought tells me: "Give that coat back". What do you command me to do?

Answer: let's praise him who has bestowed that coat with the whole his heart and let's reproach to ourselves for accepting that coat with the whole our souls, and let's wear nit with humbleness, while condemning on ourselves. And let's further on guard ourselves against greediness.

338. The question of the same one: If it happens that somebody wants to bestow me a thing and I need that thing, but I see my heart wanting to accept that thing because of my passion, what will I do: will I take that thing due to my need, or will I reject that thing because of my passion?

The answer of John: It happens in this case as in the case of the food. You know that we need food on every day, but we have not the right of eating it with pleasure. But if we eat it, we give thanks to God Who gives us that food, and we rebuke on ourselves as being unworthy of receiving that food. God makes out of that food a holy thing and a blessing. Likewise, when you need a thing and that thing is given to you, you will thank God Who has given that thing to you, while you are reckoning on yourself as unworthy. And God will banish away your passion from yourself[654]. This is for "at God everything is possible and [654] The things too are given to us for in the relationships we have with them us to grow up spiritually. By using the things, we must remember God with thankfulness, for He has given the things to us for our needs, and by that the things place us in connection with God Who thinks at us. But the things also can be to us towards our temptation and towards our enslavement when we do not use them with restraint. And by using the things with restraint, we will strengthen ourselves towards them, and we will give others too, the possibility of using the things. So, our position towards things is not reduced to the position of masters, or of some indifferent and greedy consumers of those things. If we did so, we would rather become the slaves of the things. So, it depends on us to get sanctified through material things, or to advance into passions through the material things. It depends on us to actualize the quality of the material things as means for our sanctification, as signs of God's blessing, or us to defile the material things by the filth from within us. It depends on us to see the material things as transparent to the godlike sanctifier Ghost, or as the ultimate opaque reality means only to satisfy the covetousness of our body. God shows us His love for us through the things He has given to us, in two ways: by giving us what we need for our earthly life, and by leading us to consummation. There are words having a twofold or a threefold purpose, which express something of the richness of thoughts of God. Those words can place us in connection with God, of they can lock us up within their opaqueness.

nothing is impossible" (Job 42: 2). For His is the glory forever. Amen.

339. Another brother asked the same Oldman: There is a commandment of the Lord that I must love my neighbor as on myself (Lev. 18: 19), and I to get sad and I to rejoice together with him, as for my limb (1 Cor. 12: 16). So, if I see my neighbor in poverty and I overlook him, I will disregard the love even though I myself don't' have but the things I strictly need, and I don't have enough in order to give him too that what he needs. Tell me, therefore, Father, how can I show my lose in such a case?

The answer of John: The love for the neighbor can be shown in many ways, not only by giving him something. For instance: when you go somewhere together with your neighbor and you find within yourself the thought that you enjoy more honor than he received, but you do not want him to enjoy the same honor as yourself, you won't reckon him as yourself. This is because the Apostle said: "in honor giving you primacy to one another" (Rom. 12: 10). If you have something to eat, and if you see your thoughts urging you to eat alone according to your lust, and contrary to your need, you won't reckon your neighbor as yourself[655]. But if we want to fulfill only in this way the word

We are getting sanctified through the material things when we see them and when we make them milieus of the energies of God, and when we exercise ourselves in dominating our immeasurable lusts for the material things, and when we maintain our awareness about the material things being gifts form God for all people, and when we show that by consecrating some of the material things to God, and when we place on some material things the sign of God (as churches, as objects imprinted with the sign of the cross, as offerings sanctified in the church). When we do the sign of the cross on the material things before using them, we remember God in Trinity Who has given those things to us in order us to use them with restraint. But when we consummate material things without raising out thought at God, and without making upon them the sign of the cross, we look at the material things as independent from God and we no longer impose to ourselves any brake in gathering and using them. In such a case we are worse than animals, for the animals do not gather more than they need for quenching their hunger on a given moment. When we see the material things as gifts from God bestowed to everybody, we allow others to use them too, or we help others to benefit of them, or we even process the material things by using our labor in order to make them accessible to other people who are weaker, or we us the material things in common in case we cannot divide them in distinct shares for each human being (the air, the water etc.). In such a case the material things are used also for developing the friendship among people and for developing the reciprocal gratitude.

[655] Loving another as on yourself means placing yourself in a position of total objectivity towards yourself, by reckoning another as your equal. Only God is in this position of

of the Scripture, that won't uphold us into this. This is for we haven't been told that only for a certain man, but for all the people presented as our neighbors. But how could you fulfill this with all the people by not having what to give to everyone?

But loving your neighbor as on yourself it also means this: If some misfortune hits the community and you see your thought rejoicing of the fact that another got more loss than you, in that you will show that you do not love him as on yourself. And again, if you see another being praised and you don't' rejoice together with him, because of not being yourself praised, and you do not say "the praise brought to my brother it extends upon myself too, for he is my limb", neither in such a case you will prove that you love your neighbor as on yourself[656]. And likewise in the similar cases.

objectivity towards all people, and only by advancing towards this position of His we will advance towards our supreme level of aspiration towards objectivity. But hit subjectivity of God isn't an indifferent one, so that neither our must be an indifferent objectivity. God's position is one of deep love for everyone. So, our positions to must reach to be the same: full of love for all people, but also for our own person. Let's love on one another and on ourselves as God loves us, and let's want to reach as He wants us to be. In this love of everybody for everyone, in this universal loving objectivity, we get united with God. It is appropriate I to love on myself as I love others and as we all are loved by God: as wonderful mysteries. For making things clearer, we owe to also answer the following question: Doesn't the full love make somebody to forgive about himself and even to give his live for the beloved one? The mother, whose love is a role model, won't she give her life for her child? How can be this reconciled with the commandment: love another as on yourself (namely, only as much as you love on yourself)? The answer seemingly reconciling these two is: He who is able to give his life for another, he has reached the state of his full accomplishment, that state that provides him his citizenship in the eternal kingdom of the consummate love. Now he must take care of another so that that one too to reach the same supreme stage. So, he is able to give his life for that one because he actually won't lose his life by doing that, but he will have his life on a superior plan and he will help the another to reach that superior plan as well. Or, he just must give his life in order to show that he has reached the supreme accomplishment of his, and in order to make the another too to ascend to that state by the example of supreme love shown to him. The capacity of somebody to bestow on himself for another, it shows us that there is somewhere this plan of existence which the people can be accomplished on, in a superior degree, an existence plan which the most authentic essence of ours aspires to.

[656] The love for another equal to the love for your own person has at its basis the fact that we actually aren't separated, and everything that enriches somebody will be communicated to me too, and everything which causes loss to somebody will do the same to me. But, on the other hand, this unity will be actualized only in love. Where there is not love, this unity will get torn apart. Thus, I love another for I am united with him, but I won't be able to actualize this unity and I won't be able to live it, if I do not use my love. So, I must have the courage for loving another while being us convinced that we actually are united, even if I am not yet feeling that, and by trusting I the fact that by love I will be able to actualize that unity and to fully discover that unity. The unity among us isn't only a given (Gabe) but it is also a duty (Aufgabe). In love one fore-feels the unity, but the unity will be accomplished also through love, of course

Loving your brother as on yourself it also means this: If you have found out from the Fathers the path to God and your brother asks you about that, you won't enviously deny him that knowledge, for you know that he is your brother, and therefore you will tell him that what you will have found out, in the fear of God; but you won't reckon yourself as a teacher. This is because of not being that beneficial to you.

340. The question of the same one: Is it good you to have a friendship with somebody of the same age?

Answer: It is good not to have a too intense friendship with somebody of the same age with you. This is for such a soul state wont' allow you to reach the crying. But you smut not make friends with somebody that deprives you of your crying, regardless what age he would be[657]. This won't be beneficial to you, but it will rather be damaging to you. This is for nobody can earn something good without mush effort, so that you must restrain your eyes not to take heed at somebody, and so you won't fill your heart up with the awful daring that leads to perdition all the fruits of the monk.

341. The question of the same one: If I hear about somebody that he is in a big war, or that he is sick, and I compassionate together with him, tell me, in the first place, if this compassion won't be from devils and aiming to make me forget about my sins? And the, will it be useful if I remember him in my prayers? And how will I be able to help him, if I am in a bigger danger and in graver sins? But what will I do if the brother asks me for that? And if he asks me for that, will I tall about that to somebody among the Fathers? Or, will it the prayer for the neighbor accustom the passionate one to love too? What do you reckon, Father?

because it exists there as a bud that must be developed. The ontological on our created plan cannot be fully accomplished except through ethical. God has given us the seeds, but He let us the duty to make these seeds grow through our efforts. God has called us to be His collaborators: "be (become) that what I have given you the possibility to be (to become)".

[657] The friendship gladdens, it upholds within man a state of good mood, it makes the man to find in another a satisfaction of life. But the monk must rather cry for his sins.

The answer of John: The Fathers told to the younger one that nobody should leave his own dead and go to cry for another dead (Paterikon, Moses 18). This is because it is appropriate only to the consummate ones to suffer together with their neighbor. But if a young man compassionates with another, that will be the mockery from the devils. This is for the young man stupidly judges the another, as one who is in a bad state and in danger. While he reckons himself as working well. That's why to a young man will be more beneficial if he doesn't take care of another. And if the memory of that one comes within his heart, of if the hears from somebody else about that one, let him say: "may God have mercy both on me and on him"[658].

And you must not tell by yourself to somebody among Fathers to pray for someone, because that will mean that that thing starts from you[659]. If you want to run away from this, you will only remember to the Father that certain brother suffers. And by hearing that, the Father will pray himself for that brother who is sick in his ghost. And if somebody asks you to tell the Father to pray for him, you will fulfill this request for you have been ordered to, by telling to the Father: "Pray, Father, for him". And if that one tells you:" "Pray for me", you will tell him likewise, as by fulfilling a commandment: "Lord please forgive us", or: "May God help us", or: "Shelter us, Lord, in this thing"[660]. And you won't reckon that you do that as starting from yourself, for you have been asked to tell that, and you have obeyed that request. But commiserating with somebody out of love, you haven't proven yet that you have reached such a measure of consummation. And if this thought [658] You won't be able to heal another of the evilness of his passions, if you haven't healed yourself in the first place. You will vainly commiserate for another, if in that you let to be understood your superiority. So, here is not recommended the indifference, but it is recommended the way of the true help granted to another. One must quench the fire firstly within himself so that not to fuel up the fire into another too.

[659] Do not present to the Oldman as having yourself the initiative for escaping the another. You must humble yourself, by letting him to have the initiative or the impression. Otherwise, you will leave the impression that you are better that him who suffers of some passion, or of some illness, and that his help starts from you. In this case too, your help is problematic, because it might not be accepted.

[660] Do not pray only for the another, as you would be in a superior position and you won't need prayer at your turn, but you will pray for him and for yourself by reckon yourself together-sinner with him. This is not an egotistic care for yourself, but it is a liberation from your vain-gloriousness.

will still disturb you, you must ask and you will hear what you should do. May God have mercy on you, brother!

342. The question of the same one: tell me, Father, how far must go the love of a brother for another brother?

The answer of John: Brother, something else is the love of the parents for their children, and something else is the love of the brothers to their brothers. The measure of the spiritual Fathers for their spiritual sons doesn't have anything harmful nor bodily in itself. This is for they are assured through their spiritual thought. And either in words or in deeds, they always strive to be beneficial to the young ones, in all things. And thus, because of loving them, they won't keep their silence regarding their mistakes, but they often reproach them and rebuke them as their sons. This is for it was said: "Reproach, rebuke, advise" (2 Tim. 4: 2). This is being done to you also by your Abba and you do not get offended by his reproaches, and rebuke, and urges. And in the fact that out of love he doesn't overlook your mistakes it is shown that his love for you is a spiritual love.

Each one loves his neighbor according to his measure. And the measure of the consummate love is that as after the love one has for God, him to love his neighbor too as on himself (Lev. 19: 18). But the youth must guard itself in all things. This is because of the devil quickly toppling over the young people. Firstly, they start speaking when they meet together as for the benefit of their souls. Ot maybe without this reason as well. And then they cross to other feelings: to lust, to daring, to laughter, to slander, and to many other evils. Sot is if fulfilled in their case the saying: "starting from ghost, you are finishing now into body. You have suffered all these things vainly" (Gal. 3: 3). This is because the young people reach to fall in this way: from starting to love on one another without judgment, and from sitting together. Let the measure of their reciprocal love to be this: not to slander on one another, not to hate on one another, not to despise on one another, not to pursuit their own goals, not to love on one another for the beauty of their bodies, neither for a certain bodily work, not to sit together without a certain need, and not to fall into daring[661] that destroys all the fruits of the monk (Paterikon, Agathon 1) and it leaves the monk as a dry tree. Until here there is the measure of the love for the young ones. If they spare themselves by restraining their daring and their vain-speaking, they will spare their brothers as well, by avoiding to sit together needlessly, in order they not to be caught in these snares, neither they to catch their brothers, by fearing Him Who said: "Woe to him who waters his neighbor with mirky water" (Hab. 2: 15); and again; "The ad words corrupt the good habits" (1 Cor. 15: 33). Take heed at yourself, brother!

343. The question of the same one: What should I do for I am troubled by dirty thoughts and if I feel that others have such thoughts I will always say: "Behold, other think too the evil things as I do". And then the crying doesn't come to me, neither the repentance, and my thought tells me that as long as I am among people I won't be able to achieve those. Have mercy on my helplessness, and tell me, Father, how can I be saved from those?

The answer of John: If you have dirty thoughts and if you feel or hear that somebody else is in this state too, and if you say: "Behold that, others too, they cogitate the evil things as I do", you will give your thoughts to anathema, and you will say about your brother: He is better than I am". And that thought will leave you alone. Regarding your crying, if you do not fight towards the people whom you are among, and if you do not strive not to reach the daring with somebody among them, your crying, and your repentance won't come to you[662]. And if your [661] The daring tears down the border between person and person, by the fact that one no longer sees the mystery of another, but only his bodily surface. This doesn't mean a communication of their deeps into God, in which they preserve their self-awareness, but they conscience disappears by being chocked up by their bodily lust that confounds them superficially.

[662] It is a fight towards people not out of hatred, but on the purpose of not reaching a sinful familiarness. This is because this one will make you to trivialize your thought at your sins, and your sadness and your crying for your sins. The society maintains a superficialness, that "Man" of Heidegger, which you will impropriate to yourself through, the way of speaking generally and superficially; in society they talk even about death while laughing: "we are going to die", but no one seriously thinks at that what he says. Only when you are alone, you give a serious meaning to your words and you really see your sins. Or, even when you are desire for correcting yourself it makes you running away from your brothers, take heed at the fact that by doing so you will run away from the battle and from the stadium. So, you must fight so that when you are among people, you to defeat your own daring (familiarness) towards them[663]. This is for the Apostle says: "If somebody fights, he won't be crowned if he doesn't fight according to the law" (2 Tim. 2: 5). Set your power in work, brother, and God will help you in all the things. Do not forget to guard your humbleness your obedience, and your submission. And you will be saved[664] into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom is due the glory forever. Amen.

344. Another brother asked: Abba, I want to be saved but I do not know the path to salvation. A though tell me: "Why do you sit here in monastery, doing nothing? Go elsewhere!" Why should I do?

The answer of John: Brother, God showed us the path to salvation through the godlike Scriptures. But also, the Fathers advised us, saying: "ask your Father and he will teach you; ask your old men and they will tell you" (The Second Law 32: 7; Paterikon, Anthony 37). So, if you want not to be deluded by together with others, you can direct your thought upon yourself. Only then you live your "existential".

[663] The monk should not run away from monastery, namely form the people living into monastery, by invoking as reason that the example and the advice from others would tempt him to justifications. But the monk must not renounce to repent for his sins. So, the monk must combine both of them: to learn from people their good things, but not to allow himself mixed in superficial discussions with people. Neither must the monk fall into deeds of daring with the others. On one hand, he can gain from his fellow humans, by learning out of their advices, and out of their example, but on the other hand he can be tempted to evil or to bragging himself. But in this sentiment of responsibility, it is united the duty of being together with others, with the possibility to progress in the good things. The responsibility is a means of purifying the relationships with the fellow humans, and it is a means of spiritual inward growth. On the other hand, we must thing at the fact that there is a Subject Who willingly lives the responsibility for all of us, at the peak, which we too must tend towards, without being us able to ever reach that; in Christ the godlike responsibility has been made us known concretely. Christ went all the way to His death for us. And He continues his savior work of responsibility after His resurrection as well. Out of His responsibility work we too sip strength for the sentiment of an unconditional responsibility.

[664] When you reach to fell that by yourself you are nothing, but you still exist, then you will that you exist through God Who is the only one Who cannot feel that He is nothing. And by feeling that you are what you are through God, you will fully live God's power. And this will make your salvation possible.

leaving, you will keep the humbleness that will be beneficial and you will do nothing without asking the spiritual Fathers about it. And, by the grace of God, you won't go astray. This is for "God wants all the people to be saved and they to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4).

345. The question of the same one: My thought tells me that if I go somewhere and if I live in withdrawal, I will reach the consummate quietude. This is because I am burdened by the debts of many sins and I want to liberate myself from those. What should I do, Father?

The answer of John: Brother, the debtor, until he pays his debt, wherever he goes, either in the city, or in a village, and wherever he settles down, he still remains a debtor and he has not the freedom of sitting into quietude. But if he pays his debt because of being forced and shamed up by the reproaches of the people, and so he liberates himself of hid debt, he will be able to show himself to the world and he will be able to sit wherever he will want, with courage and with much daring. So, if the man endures with the whole his power the reproaches and the condemnations and the dishonor and the losses caused by his sins, he will get accustomed to humbleness and to toil. And so, his sins will be forgiven to him, as it was written: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive me all my sins" (Ps. 24: 18[665]). Think at how many reproaches and condemnations endured our Master Christ before cross and that He only after those came to the cross (Abbe Isaïe, Recueil, 868; p. 104; 13, 23; p. 115, 117). Thus, nobody will be able to reach with fruits to consummation and to the holy resting of the consummation, if he doesn't suffer, firstly, together with Christ, and if he doesn't suffer Christ's sufferings, by remembering the word of the Apostle: "If we suffer together, we will be glorified together" (Rom. 8: 17)[666].

[665] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 18: "Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 19: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive me all my sins." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[666] One will not be able to get the evil out of the nature without straining the nature. The sin, the passions, they represent a weakening of the nature. Not simply the sufferance strengthens and delivers the nature from evil, but the enduring of the sufferance, which presents a straining, a using of all the power reserves, accompanied by the asking, with trust, for the help

So, you must not delude yourself, because of not existing any other path except this one. May the Lord come to your help, according to His will, for, as it is said in the Gospel, you to found your building on the hard rock, that is Himself (Mt. 7: 2; 1 Cor. 10: 14).

346. A brother asked the Great Oldman, saying: Pray for me so that God will have mercy on me, for I am wicked.

The answer of Barsanuphius: He who wants to find mercy, let him keep the commandment of not eating out of the tree, and by doing so he won't fall into disobedience. And he who doesn't fall into disobedience, he will find mercy and he will be saved through the grace of Christ our God. This is for he will tell to his thought: "I and God are alone in the world" (Paterikon, Alonius 1), and if I do not do His will I won't be found as belonging to Him, but as belonging to the foreign from God, that represents at its turn, a straining of the power. And the restraint from the pleasures which tempt us, it is also a straining, a suffering of the temptation without the bending that cedes. But the name of patience, it is more properly used against the temptation of running away from pain, against the tendency of getting out from under the pain. The glory of the nature is that state which the nature no longer feels in either the superficial attraction towards pleasure of the body's pain, when the ghost has overwhelmed the body's life. But on the ghost depends the will too. Without getting experienced in the effort of the will the ghost won't be able to become strong, in order to overwhelm the body's pleasure and pain. This was the purpose of the sufferance of Christ and of the cross He bore. His human nature had to go to the supreme degree of the endurance, that is the suffering of the death, in order to fully get strengthened. A last moment ceding would have been a slipping away from everything He had achieved through His previous sufferings. You have to give your life in order to gain your life, through the supreme strength of your life, on that plan that is superior to any weakness. This doesn't exclude the fact that Christ suffered out of compassion for us too, or also in order Him to show us His love. Properly-said, these ones stay at the basis of His sufferance, which He defeated the weakness from within our nature through, that weakness consequent to the ancestral sin, a weakness that was going by ceding under pleasure and under pain, until it was defeated through death. There had to happen this strengthening and liberation in the first fruit of our nature assumed by Christ, in order to pass to us too the power for defeating the pleasure and the pain related top passions. So, it was not about Christ paying for an offence brought o God's honor, because if that was the case, we shouldn't "suffer" together with Christ at out turn. But it is about ourselves getting strengthened by enduring the pain. Christ suffered for us in the sense that only Him could have been the first to really strengthen our nature through Hiss cross, and out of the communication with Him we too receive the power for strengthening our nature and so to liberate our nature from weakness. His patience is the spring of our patience, and His patience strengthens us too.

one"[667]. He who tells that, he will wait on each day for his end and for meeting God[668]. And he will immediately start walking of the path of the salvation.

347. A brother, after falling to a temptation, he asked for the prayer of the same Great Oldman and after he was relieved from that temptation, he announced the Great Oldman about that and he thanked the Great Oldman. In the same time, that brother asked the Great Oldman to pray for his headache that came to him and for his heart to be enlightened.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, let's take heed at ourselves, with the fear of God. And if God, with His love for people He removes the war from us, we will have not become careless either. This is because many after getting relieved, they no longer took care of themselves, and they fell on their head. But after we have got alleviated, let's give thanks to God for He has delivered us, and let's remain praying in order us not to fall into the same passions or in other passions. If one ate a food and he got harmed to his liver of to his spleen, and by the care and by the craftsmanship of the doctor he got cured, he would no longer be careless of himself, lest something even worse to happen to him, but he would always remember the previous danger, as the Lord told also to the one healed by Him: "See, you are now healthy, do not sin from now on, lest something worse will happen to you" (Jn. 5: 15).

Brother, the good soldiers exercise also in time of peace, and always, in order they to learn the craftsmanship of the war. This is for it is inappropriate to the soldier to quickly inquire the things of war in time of war. This is for it was written: "I have prepared myself and I haven't got troubled" (Ps. 118: 60[669]). Do not be indifferent towards the passion which you have been [667] I must behave myself like there are nobody else in the world except God and me. Therefore, I can do either my will or God's will. But if I do my will, I won't be reckoned as belonging to God, but as belonging to myself, and as stranger to God, or as belonging to the enemy whose will I do. By doing my will, I prove myself to be the slave of my pride or of him who instilled me my pride.

[668] He who is searching for fulfilling his own will, he won't fear his death because he deludes on himself that he won't die soon and so he still has plenty of time to satisfy his lusts.

[669] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 60: "I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 60: "I was ready and I didn't get troubled for keeping your commandments." (E. l. t.'s n.)

tempted by, neither towards any other passion. This is because the Fathers told about this indifference that it loses the monk's fruits (Paterikon, Agathon 1). The man must be careful regarding the war to the last of his breaths, in order him not to fall into the trap set by the all-cunning enemy, whom may the Lord banish him away from us with the Ghost of His mouth. Remember that an old man said: "If the man had created a new sky and earth, he still wouldn't have been worriless" (Paterikon, Poemen 48)[670].

As about the headaches, the man must fight not to get drowsy, and he will be helped. This is because, by finding His disciples drowsy, the Lord told them: "Take vigil and pray, in order you not to enter the temptation" (Mt. 26: 41).

Son, may Him Who has enlightened the eyes of the blind enlighten also the eyes of your heart, in order you to know that is good and useful. And the God of the powers, Who said: "Him who believes all the things will be possible" (Mt. 9: 22), may Him give you power and support you in the consummate faith. And may I see you together with the saved ones, by the grace of the Leader of our souls Who is Jesus Christ Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

347 bis. (The French Edition: only in the manuscripts: Vatopedi no. 2, Sinai 410, Cromwell 18, and in G.) A brother who locked his door for a while, he was tormented by thoughts and by secret dreams. ON the other hand, he wanted to stop drinking wine. He opened himself to the Great Oldman.

Answer: Brother, if you truly want to be saved ad to get rid of the devils of the pride, you will have to endure a little humbleness, for that is like slapping him in the face. And do not search for being served by somebody, by take care of [670] If the man had made his being "a new sky and a new earth", namely a new mind united with the sky and a new earth which the new mind luminates over, and which are crossed through and overwhelmed by the new mind, that mind that is full of Christ's mind, the man still wouldn't have been able to be worriless in this life before the general resurrection. This is for the affects tied to his being, despite they can be controlled, they still can escape the control and they will make the man slide into sin if the man id careless. This confirms Heidegger's saying that the man is characterized by worry. But the care for salvation is more profound than the worldly worries and it concentrates the man into himself. On the contrary, the worldly worries are superficial and they make the man not to seriously think at himself, but they make the man think only at his body's needs.

yourself by your own. This is for Jesus Who said about Himself that he is "gentle and humble in heart" (Mt. 11: 29), He told us: "The Son of Man hasn't come to be served, but to serve" (Mt. 20: 28). Therefore, you must not lock up a wooden door, but you must lock up the door of your heart (Paterikon, Poemen 58). And you must not stop yourself completely from drinking wine, but you smut stop yourself form pride that makes drunk the mindless man. And do not take my example, for I am telling you these while I have been for a long time served by somebody else, so that you could get offended. But there are many people teaching that what they do not do it. These ones are them whom the Lord told about: "Obey them and do what they say you to do, but do not follow their deeds" (Mt. 23: 3). You always leave your monastic cell for your needs which are impossible to replace, but when not needed you won't exist that door. Live orderly and not carelessly. Avoid getting upset on him who rebukes you. And you should rather enjoy that. Regarding your dreams, do not take heed at them, because of being them devilish and liar. And after doing all these things, you won't believe that you have done any wonder. This is for, after fulfilling all the commandments, we have been told to say: "We are worthless servants" (Lk. 17: 10). Still, we will be the ones who will reap that what you have sown into our field, and then we will trade your wheat on your behalf[671]. Make the Lord give us the joy of finding your field bringing forth fruits, for a seed a hundred, for another seed sixty, and for another seed thirty (Mt. 13: 8; Mk. 8: 8) into the glory of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

[671] Do not reckon that you have done a big deal by fulfilling the commandments. This is for the road of the consummation is endless, and everything you do you do with the help from God. But your spiritual father can value your progress. The individual must not value his own victories. This is because this is the temptation towards pride. But his spiritual father can value his victories especially for he has been guiding him into the good things. And the spiritual father too, he will reap the harvest of this efforts of sowing, a result shown in the toil of the spiritual son of having fruits brought forth. And the spiritual father will be able to praise the fruits brought forth by his spiritual son, but in front of God. So, the spiritual father will be able to insists for his spiritual son to receive the best possible rewards or valuation. This is for, by doing so, he won't rick to fall into self-praise. This is for, even if the spiritual father sees within the fruits of his spiritual son the seed sown there by the spiritual father, he actually will praise the efforts of the spiritual son for making that seed bringing forth fruits, and the spiritual father won't praise his own work of sowing those seeds.

348. A layman brother of the same Great Oldman, being himself old too, he sent to the Great Oldman a request for having a discussion. And the Great Oldman answered him the followings: "I have Jesus as my brother. If you despise the world and if you become a monk, you will by my brother too". After hearing that, the layman brother left very saddened. After a while, that layman brother rejected the world, and he came to the monastery, but he fell ill and because of suffering of dropsy, so that he let the Great Oldman now about his illness.

The Great Oldman answered him the followings: This illness came to you only in order you not to leave for God without fruits. So, if you endure it and if you thank for it, and it will be counted for you as ascesis, because of not living you for a long time into the monastic schism. And, partially, this trouble has come to you because you have valued me who I am nothing, as you too. On me, as somebody important, and on you as the brother of such a man[672]. And you have forgotten that we are the sons "of Adam's disobedience" (Rom. 5: 14). This is for we are "dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27). So, give thanks to God for He has brought you into this state. If we had the humbleness of Christ, we would say: "Who is My Mother and who are My brothers?" and the followings (Mt. 12: 48)[673].

349. A brother who heard from another brother the war which that brother was suffering of, he advised that warred brother as he could the best, but without himself having reached such a measure. And the war immediately started upon himself. And when he saw hismefl burdened and he knew that he had to endure that because of not confessing his own weakness to his brother, and that he rather should have asked the Fathers for advices, he announced that to the other Oldman.

[672] The man can get proud not only for what himself is, but also for what his father or for what his brother are, because of wanting to draw upon himself the honor of which those ones enjoy. Let aside the profit they want to get out of their connection with those ones, by intervening in favor of somebody (asking for favors for somebody). That's why, the praised one must reject not only the praise brought to him but also the praise brought to his relatives due to him, on one hand in order him to not enjoy an increased honor produced by the extension of his honor upon his relatives too, and on the other hand in order him not to be guilty because of extending the corruption due to his honor.

[673] It is noticeable the explanation given to this word of Jesus as coming out of His humbleness. Jesus doesn't say: "Make room for My Mother comes", or "for My brothers come. For you know Who I Am". But He says: "As I do not ask for a special honor for Myself, I won't ask that for them either. As I want to serve others, likewise I want them to serve others".

The answer of John: Brother, there is no other way but the man should despise on himself for the things he said. And God will forgive him. And that brother was immediately alleviated and he thanked God.

350. The question of the same one: If there occur two things harmful to the soul and one must choose one, what should him do?

The answer of John: By weighing in the two harmful things, one must choose the less harmful of the two. This is for it was written by the Fathers that somebody came to borrow money from another and that one didn't lend him the asked money, by telling him: "I have no money". And being him asked later why he didn't lend money to be borrower, he said: "If I lend him money, that would be harmful to his soul. That's why I chose to transgress another commandment, in order his soul not to be totally lost" (Paterikon, John the Persian 2).

351. A brother who was progressing into virtue according to God, he asked the Great Oldman, telling him: Tell me, Aba, a word, because I am sad.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Saint Apostle Paul, who received the power of endurance, he wrote, saying: "You need patience for, by doing the will of God you to earn the promises" (Hebr. 10: 36). So, he who wants to climb the cross together with Christ, he must be partaker to all the sufferings of Christ and him must always have the peace[674]. And I am telling you:

[674] About the purpose of the together-suffering one can see in detail in the footnote 502. (This footnote has in the Romanian translation the no. 509; because of having us to give the cites places from the Psalms due to the existing differences, the footnotes' numbers no longer correspond to the Romanian original. We kindly ask the reader to count five previous footnotes and so to find the footnote mentioned by Saint Dumitru the Restorer of the Christian theology (E. l. t.'s n.)). But that peace that is connected to the suffering it won't come only

"Fight for gaining the thankfulness sin all the things[675]. And the power of the Highest will overshadow you" (Lk. 1: 11). And then you will find your resting.

352. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: What should I do with the mud I have, with my impulse of justifying myself, and with my forgetfulness which torment me awfully?

The answer of Barsanuphius: he who has the mud within himself, he actually can get rid of it whenever he wants. But he who is sunk into mud, he will be plucked out of it only with great efforts. So, it is worse to be sunk into mud than to have the mud within you. Regarding your impulse (to justify yourself), the evil won't ever be able to abolish the evil[676]. And regarding the forgetfulness, take heed that there are two sorts of forgetfulness, and one of them opposes the another[677]. Therefore, you must think that his will of self-justification won't get the man far from his evil and it won't rest him[678]. He who reaches to forget about eating his bread, because of the after enduring, but even during the enduring. Abbot Basil from the Holy Mountain Athos says: "He who stays stretched on the cross's wood out of love for another, he rests himself" (Eisodicon). This resting doesn't come only out of the fact that you do everything for another and you won't let him in either his present suffering or in the eternal suffering, but also out of the fact that you defeat the egotistic passionate impulses of yours, which, after short satisfactions, they will torment you forever.

[675] The thankfulness itself is producer of gladness. So, if you paradoxically tie the thankfulness to the pain, you will more easily endure the pain. Besides, the thankfulness is born when you suffer, for you have discovered in thankfulness a positive meaning of your suffering. You see that your suffering has been given to you in order to, by suffering, you to elevate your nature from that weakness that gives birth to sin. But if this amazing power of enduring occurs within you during the pain, there must be working within you also that power from above everything, of God.

[676] If you want to show that the evil done by you isn't actually evil, by doing so you won't abolish the evil done by you, or you won't become good from bad, but you will add another evil to your done evil, because you have become ever more evil, by adding to evil our lie and your pride which you want to cover the evil dome by you with, or you will strengthen even more that evil done by you, by defending it.

[677] Justifying the evil done by you, you won't appease your conscience, neither will you stop the evil done by yourself. And that will further maintain withing you the disturbance and it will increase it, or it will make you even more callous into your insensitiveness.

[678] There are: the forgetfulness about your interests, and the forgetfulness about your duties. The first one is the good one; the second one is the bad one.

moaning of his sigh, he won't be taken into master by that forgetfulness caused by the enemy.

353. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Add mercy and get me out of the belly of the lion, for the lion has swallowed me. And have mercy on my soul as God from height has. For you have received power for that. This is for "anything you will untie o earth it will be untied in heavens too" (Mt. 18: 48). And do not allow my soul stay in Gehenna and to die in sin. And tell me word according to my understanding (according to my power), so that I could become partaker to your toils.

The answer of Barsanuphius: "May God of Peace Himself sanctify you consummately, and may your ghost and your soul and your body be guarded entirely unblemished, into the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thes. 5: 23). What more comforting word could I send you that this word of the Apostle? Strive to achieve the things written you by me. This is for I toil more than you do, praying God, day and night (2 Tim. 1: 3), until you will reach those. Find out, brother, this: that, as you know, I joyfully put my soul for you and my prayer for you is ceaseless (1 Thes. 5: 17)[679].

[679] The urge of Saint Apostle Paul: "Pray ceaselessly" (1 Thes. 5: 17) it is given after the urge" Always follow the good things towards one another and towards all" (1 Thes. 5: 15). So, the ceaseless prayer must include the attention paid to others. You cannot egotistically separate yourself, in prayer, from the care for others, as all the virtues connect us with others; and in another way the sins do that too, and we must fight and detach ourselves form sins, by increasing in our love for others. Even when I say: "Lord, have mercy on me", at singular, I think at my sins which haven't been committed in an individualistic isolation, but towards other people, and my sins have been influencing others too to commit sins, or we have committed our sins in connection with other people. So, I am praying more or less implicitly for those too, when I pray for my forgiveness. God won't receive me at Him if I lack my love for others, namely if I do not pray for others as well. The prayer for others is one of the forms which our responsibility for one another it is being manifested thought, and this meaning can be seen also in the Great Oldman's word: "I gladly put my soul for you". But this word can also mean: "I will guarantee for you in front of God". He can give this guarantee trusting that his prayer for that one will be heard by God, and also by trusting tat his good influence will be exercised also upon him whom he prays to God for. God, as a spring of love for all people, he rejoices when seeing that out of His love we unite with one another into love, by helping on one another.

354. The question of another. A brother was sent somewhere in order to fulfill a task given him by the monastery. He asked the other Oldman: if he was invited by some friends, could him sit at the table together with women?

The Oldman told him not to sit at the table with women, by any means. Then the brother asked him: where could I know that, when invited by somebody, there will come some woman to eat together with us, so that I wouldn't go?

Father John answered him: Ask him who invites you, if there will be any woman. And if he tells you yes, then you will refuse him, saying: "forgive me, for I have commandment not to sit at the table with any woman".

354 bis. And the brother said: It is happened to be to go by forgetting to ask (or if I was forcedly taken there before I could ask), and I saw a woman come, what should I do?

The Oldman answered him: Call aside him who has invited you and tell him: "Forgive me, because I have forgotten to tell you that I have commandment not to eat together with any woman. So, please let me leave. And if that woman left, you could stay. And if not, you should withdraw yourself, and do not transgress the commandment, lest the death will come to you out of your disobedience. And to not fear. That won't be towards your shame, but towards your building.

355. The question of the same one: If I am sent to fulfill some task, and I haven't received permission to eat, and somebody asks me to eat together with him, and I tell him that I cannot do that because of not having commandment from Abba, but that one insists and forces me, what will I do?

The answer of John: For the noise doesn't give birth to anything good, if you reckon that that thing doesn't harm your soul, you will accept it; and when you come back you announce Abba and you ask him for forgiveness for that mistake. But if you reckon that that is intertwines with some harm, even if that man insists for tens of thousands of times, you won't accept it. This is because that is obviously a thing of the devil.

356. The question of the same one: I was sent with a task to the holy city (Jerusalem) and I descended to Jordan to pray, without I previously asking Abba for permission for that. Did I do good or bad?

The answer of John: You must not go anywhere without permission. This is because the things one does out of an own thought, even seemingly good, those are not pleasant to God. And keeping Abba's commandment, who sent you, it is a prayer and a serving brought to God Who said: "I haven't come to do my will, but the will of Him Who has sent Me" ((Jn. 6: 38)[680].

357. The question of the same one: If, by leaving for a far destination, I forget to ask Abba about all the things I should do, what will I do?

The answer of John: You must take heed at the happening things and you must do everything according to the benefit of the soul. But you will do that as transgressing the commandment and not as doing something good, because you dare to do something without having a specific commandment for that. And by announcing Abba about that, he will forgive you[681].

358. The question of the same one: If Abba especially command me to do something and, because I am defeated by weakness I will transgress his commandment, what should I do?

[680] When you do the will of God, God does His will through you, or God works through you.

[681] By surrendering your being as an active tool to the will of him who asks you what you have to fulfill, for he is appointed to that by God, you will live the total surrender to the absolute God. This is for God isn't a blind nature, but God is an absolute will Who asks from you that what is good for you. And God does that through another concrete will. By this you show your absolute trust in God. You will no longer interposes between you and God. If your will no longer closes up the entrance towards the interior of your being, then you will feel God in His sovereignty, which you absolutely depend on and you admit that dependency.

The answer of John: Repent before God and before Abba and, for now on, strive to correct yourself. And God will forgive your mistake.

359. Question: A brother whom the gate of the monastery was entrusted to, he got tired because of being alone, and he asked the Great Oldman if he should take another brother with him, or not?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, if somebody wants to enter there were Jesus is, and if h wants to walk the road of the salvation, he must expect temptations and troubles at any moment. This is for he says: "Son, if you come to serve God, you will have to prepare your souls for temptations" (Sirach 2: 1[682]). And the Lord said: "Let him who comes to Me to reject himself and to take his cross (on each day) and follow Me" (Lk. 9: 33). He who wants to become His disciple, he must obey all to way to death (Phil. 2: 9)[683]. Being alone and making a little effort is better than having a companion in that work[684]. If there occurs

[682] This book is not present in KJB, but it is present in the ROB under the name: The Book of the Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach (The Ecclesiastes). The interested reader can find all the fourteen missing books on www.academia.edu, under the name Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[683] "Surrender to death" not in a temporal meaning, but in the meaning of receiving even the death, for the obedience to God. This means total surrender to God, or it means bringing yourself as sacrifice to God. he who lives with this disposition, he will always be a "living sacrifice" brought to God, and he is capable of becoming a sacrifice through death too. But he who totally surrenders himself to God, by receiving God within himself, he will be sanctified for he no longer does anything contrary to God, or separately from God, but he does only that what is pleasant to God and out of the power of God (Rom. 12: 1). In this, the believer follows Christ as man. This is for Christ has united the humanity with God by this obedience too. Christ also assumed the human will, but a will that accepted itself to fulfill the godlike will. Christ wasn't, as man, a puppet in the hand of God. But by doing with His own will the godlike will, He united the two wills without confronting them. By that Christ opened Himself as man totally to God. Christ's humbleness is not only a descent to man, but it is also a total openness to God as man, a total union - through His human will - with God. The hypostatic union is the foundation for this total union into Christ of the wills in a sole Person. The human person is given value and strength only by being the man asked for obedience to God. If the man had been simply submitted to the nature's laws, nothing could have been asked for the man, the man would have had no dignity, or no value. God cherishes the man's obedience for God values the man's total love also for the man is capable of that, for God gave the man the value of a free person.

[684] Hos could you show your manhood when you were not able to toil alone for your job? He who appointed you alone to a certain job, he trusted you, he trusted your manhood.

a need, there will always be the possibility for you to be helped by another. And if helped thus, the daring (the familiarness) won't increase, as it will do in the contrary case, if you are always together[685]. And if you do not get disgusted by tiredness, you will reach the humbleness[686]. And if you reach the humbleness, you will receive the forgiveness of your sins[687]. This is for he says: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive me all my sins" (Ps. 24: 18[688]). If you humble yourself, you will receive the grace, and the grace will help you. This is for Saint Paul, toiling more than all the Apostles, he said: "Not me, but the grace that is within me" (1 Cor. 15: 10). If you believe without doubting, you will take power to fulfill not only the job of the doorman, but other jobs too. Therefore, take heed, with trust, at the work of God and God will solve the work without you even know it. May the Lord be with you!

360. Of the same one: Ask for me, Father, power and understanding from God, for I am stupid and helpless. And when it happens that I go out to bring something from the kitchen or form the pantry, and I meet some of the Fathers or some important people, and I don't know: what should I do in such cases? And pray also for me in order I to be delivered from the defilements happening to me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If you believe that out of barren stones "God can rise the sons of Abraham" (Mt. 3: 9) and he who opened the mouth of the donkey (Num. 22: 28) can also open your mouth and make you wise, and make you sapient and give you power, God, as you already know, will give you all oft those. The gate of the monastery is the gate of God. And God [685] If you always are together with somebody, you will reach to a daring familiarness with him, and that will deprive you of seriousness.

[686] That tiredness that makes you know the narrow borders of your power, that will humble you. But that will happen with the condition of you not getting drowsy, or getting disgusted of it, but you must bear it with a constant strain.

[687] Through humbleness you receive the forgiveness of your sins, for the humbleness liberates you from your pride that stops you from feeling the need for the forgiveness and therefore it stops you from asking for forgiveness with the whole your perseverance.

[688] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 18: "Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 19: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive me all my sins." (E. l. t.'s n.)

know that His servant the doorman, he needs wisdom, and understanding, and knowledge, and power, and help, and right-reckoning. "This is for God knows what you need before you ask Him for it" (Mt. 6: 8). And if you persevere and endure, you soul will be happy. And when it happens that going and bringing something you meet some of the important persons, without hesitation you put down that what you are carrying, and welcome them with humbleness, and in the fear of God, and God will make your meeting with them to be towards the glory of His name and towards everybody's building[689], with the prayers of the saints. Amen. Regarding the defilements, if your heart gets humble and you reckon yourself as "dust and ashes" (job 42: 6), your humbleness will protect you against any defilement.

361. A brother asked the other Oldman: Tell me, Father, whom should I ask for my thoughts? And should I ask more than one Father about my thoughts?

The answer of John: You must ask him who you trust and whom you have found out about that he can bear the thoughts[690]. And trust him as you trust God. But asking another for the same thought, it is a sign of mistrust and temptation. If you believe that God spoke to His saint, why will you need another proof, or why will you need to tempt God by asking another about the same thing?

[689] Even though you are a simple man, you will welcome them with humbleness and in the fear of God, so that you will make them feel as staring from you the rays of the presence of God, and they will praise God for that what they see at you. But Barsanuphius didn't tell that to that brother in order not to make him lose his humbleness. One who is humble he doesn't see his humbleness, but his humbleness is seen by others. May the Lord make many people to meet for many times towards the glory of God, through the humbleness and the peace and the love which they communicate to one another, out of the humbleness and the peace and the love of Christ.

[690] It is difficult to keep within you and not to spread further the ugly thoughts communicated to you by somebody. In order to do that one needs a special gift and an accentuated conscience that God forbids you from spreading what you hear. That's why the priests receive the confession of the sins on the ground of a special gift received by them from God. On the other hand, in bearing the sins as they would have been yours, it consists the forgiveness of those sins too.

362. The question of the same one: And if that thought persists in troubling me after the answer from the Fathers, why should I do?

The answer of John: That means that him who asked about that thought remained hasn't benefitted from the advice he has been given, because of not fulfilling that advice in cleanness. This is for God Who speaks through the saints He doesn't mistake[691].

363. The question of the same one: Should I ask the same Father for the second time about the same thing, or should I not? I know, Father, that sometimes I have been told not to do something, and I have asked for the second time about the same thing, and then I have been told to do the opposite. Why is that?

The answer of John: Brother, "the judgment od God are depth of sea" (Ps. 35: 6[692]). God put in the mouth of him who speaks a word fitting him who asks, either for testing him, or for his heart has got changed and he is found worthy of hearing something, either for other dealing with the same thing they change themselves, and God speaks for him through His saint in another manner. So, God spoke through Isaiah to King Hezekiah. After God told him: "prepare your businesses, for you are going to die", the king's heart got softened and he go sad. And for that God told him again through Isaih: "Behold, God added to your life fifteen more years" (Isa. 38: 1-5). If God had told him through somebody else, that thing would have offended him, because of seeing that the saints say different things. Likewise, God spoke to the Ninevite's heart through Jonah: "After three days I will destroy this city" (Jonah 3: 4). And when their heart changed towards repentance, God showed His great long-patience and he left the city for the city changed towards good. That's why one shouldn't change the saint he asks, but one should ask the same saint again, so that by [691] You won't be able to get rid of an ugly thought if you do not fight that thought according to the advice of a spiritual father. This is the foundation of the confession of sins.

[692] In ROB we have" ps. 36: 6: "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preservest man and beast."; in ROB we have: Ps. 35: 6: "Your righteousness like the mountains of God, your judgments depth of sea; people and beats You will deliver, Lord." (E. l. t.'s n.)

occurring the need for God to change His answer God to do that through the same saint in order not to give birth to offence[693].

364. The question of the same one: Master, I have a cause with somebody and I needed to go to the judge. And I have taken the Fathers' opinion regarding that situation. And they told me what to do staring from that situation. And I think that I have done everything not to transgress their advices. But the solution hasn't bee according to their answer, so that I have been very tormented and knowing not what should I do. Should I cross over their advice? But I have been fearing the disobedience. Should I persevere in observing their advice? But I haven't been founding any solution by following that. Why should have done because of [693] It is being deepened here the affirmation of some theologians that not God changes Himself when He reviews the condemnation, or the forgiveness of a man, but the man changes, like the son doesn't change when the man feel his helplessness to look at it, but the man's eye has changed because it has got sick. There was an answer that disregarded the Person-like character of God by affirming about Him that He was an impersonal nature. Actually, the Person-like character of God and God's report with the man as person it hides a deep and endlessly complex mystery. God has all sorts of possibilities to answer to the man, so that He can freely choose one possibility or another, by taking in account the multiple situations and the multiple changing modes of the man. And God doesn't limit Himself these possibilities, or He doesn't want any of these possibilities to be lost, because that would annul the man as free person, or, in other words, God wouldn't take the man seriously. God wants the man to love Him freely, but God let to the man also the possibility not to love God. God allows to Himself the latitude of hoping that the man will live Him, but God doesn't force the man to love Him. Otherwise, everything would have been rigid in the relationships between man and God. Otherwise, neither God nor the man would have been true persons. God accepts this kenosis (humbleness) or the possibility of hoping and of waiting for the love from the man, and of not forcing the man's love through an unconditional provision, because if that had been the case God wouldn't have created people whom to the cherished by Him as real persons, and whose fee love God to truly rejoice of. God can willingly renounce to some provision that would force the people to love Him, in order Him not to remain without that joy provided Him by an unforced love for Him from people. This non-forcing of the people's love doesn't disturb the order and the fulness of God's inward life. Neither the non-love shows Him by some people would disturb the happiness had by God within Himself out of the consummate love among the Trinitarian Persons. This non-forcing of the man's freedom by God, through an unconditional provision of the man's deeds, it was confirmed also by Saint John Damascene. This hides a willing dependency of the prescience of God of the man's freedom, that is a mysterious dependency, one difficult to be understood, because of being the dependency of an anterior science on posterior deeds. Maybe God looks at the man's deeds on a plan that exceeds the temporal succession, but without Him abolishing the temporal succession. Anyway, the report between the prescience of God and the man's freedom cannot be and it couldn't eventually be ever clarified by the human thinking.

reaching such a crossroads or need? I wonder if I have mistaken somehow and I haven't realized that?

The answer of John: The present answer is close to the previous answer. How? Take a listen to this. You have received an answer regarding how you should do something, and you have encountered opposition in doing it. In the first place, you must blame on yourself because your heart may have got sweetened with that thing and that's why you haven't surrendered yourself totally to God. And because of that too, God hasn't allowed the thing to be fulfilled according to the Fathers' advice. So, the cause has come from you, but you find them guilty for that. Elisha sent his disciple to resurrect a dead and the dead didn't resurrect (4 Kings[694] 4: 28-32). But the guilt was not of him who sent his disciple, but of the disciple who was sent. Otherwise, how comes that Elisha himself resurrected that dead? So, you owe to do whatever you can so that the things to be fulfilled according to the answer give to you by the Fathers. And if the things don't go as advised, you will know that there has occurred a change in one of the parts and that's why God has changed the things comprised in the give answer. For instance, somebody owes you ten coins and he doesn't have where to give you those coins back from. And you have asked a Father" "What should I ask from him?". And the Father told you" "As it is right: ten". The Oldman was announced to tell you that, namely you to not forgive anything to your debtor, for that debtor of yours was callous in his heart. But that debtor of yours, by hearing that you are going to ask him for the whole his debt, he repented and prayed to God, saying: "Master, I have no power to give back all the ten coins, so that please instill the judge not to force me to give back the whole sum and I will strive for the rest of my life to be pleasant to You". And the merciful God will change the judgment. But you won't know that. So, because him who you have asked is not nearby, you will pray God remembering the name of the Father whom you have asked for an answer to your problem, saying: "God of my spiritual father, don't allow me to deviate from Your will, neither from the answer given my by Your servant, but let me know what should I do". And you will do that what you will be announced to do, by believing that God spoke to you through

[694] In KJB this book is usually called as: 2 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

His saint, but also God guides you now, by making you realize that there has occurred a change and that's why God has changed the content of the answer.

365. Question: Master, for how many times must I pray, for my thought to be announced about the change intervened to the previous answer?

Answer: When you cannot ask the Oldman, you must pray for three times for each thing. After doing so, you will take heed at towards what you heart tends, even for the least. And you will do that. This is for the announcement will be obvious and it will be doubtlessly known by your heart.

366. The question of the same one: How must I pray for three times: at diverse moments, or at the same time? This is for sometimes occur things which cannot be postponed.

The answer of John: If the time allows you, pray for three times on three different days. And if you are in a hurry, as in that hour which our Savior was caught in, and it is hard to endure, take Him as example. This is for, by being separated for three times, He told the same words (Mt. 26: 44). And even though He was not obeyed visibly, because the oikonomia (of the salvation) must have been fulfilled, He still teaches us by this in order us not to get sad and to pray even when we are not presently listened to. This is for He knows better than we do that what is useful to us. And let's not forsake the thankfulness[695].

367. The question of the same one: If the announcement is late to come after I have prayed, what should I do? And if I am the guilty one for that, but that is hidden from me, how could I realize what that is about?

[695] The threefold prayer shoes perseverance. That's why we say at the Holy Liturgy, in the persevering litany, for three times: "Lord, have mercy". But this makes us also realize that God is threefold in Persons, and therefore God is consummately loving of people. And even if our ask seemingly is not solved, we will thank God for He fulfills it in the best conditions for us.

Answer: if after the third prayer the announcement doesn't come to you, you will know that that is your fault. And if your mistake is not known by you, you will rebuke yourself, and so God will have mercy on you[696].

368. The question of the same one: What thoughts one should ask the Father about? Does he owe to fulfill the Fathers' answers, to all his questions, immediately?

The answer of John: Not all of them, but only those given him like commandments. This is for something else is the simple advice and something else is the commandment according to God. The advice is a commandment that doesn't oblige, but it only shows the man the right-path. But the commandment is like a non-rejectable yoke.

369. The question of the same one: You have showed me, Father, the difference between a commandment and the advice according to God. Tell me also the signs of each one of them. And how one knows them? And which is the benefit brought by each of them?

The answer of John: If you come at your initiative to a spiritual Father and you ask him about something, and not as one who wants to be given a commandment, but in order you to hear an answer according to God, and you will be told that what you should do, you will owe to keep in that case too that what you have been told. And even if you will be tested through that by a certain trouble, you most not get disturbed. This is for that is for your benefit. And if you do not want to fulfill that what you have been told, you won't reckon that you will have transgressed a commandment, but you will reckon that you will have overlooked something useful to you, and you will blame yourself for that. This is for he must reckon everything that comes out of the mouth of the saints as being towards the benefit of theirs who hear that. Likewise you should reckon if, even without you asking any question, some father tells you something by himself, for he is moved by some thought according to God, and sometimes in the past it had happened too. This is because, somebody among the Fathers wanted to enter a city and another Father told him: "If you enter the city, you will fall into fornication". And that one, not listening to what he was told, he entered and fell (Les sentences des Pères du désert, Solesmes, 1960, p. 80, no. 35).

And if you especially ask for a certain thing willing to be given a commandment, you have to prostrate before the Father and ask him for giving you a commandment. And after you have received that commandment, you will have to prostrate again in order him who has given you that commandment to bless you. So, you should tell him: bless me, Father, for the commandment that you have given to me, and pray for me in order I to keep it. This is for, know it from me brother, he who has given you a commandment he hasn't given you that commandment without containing a power, and he will also help your ask also by his own prayer so that you to be able to keep it[697]. And if because a kidnapping[698], you do not prostrate [697] There is a subtle difference between advices and commandments which nuances the relationships among people, but it has a savior purpose between sons and fathers. It is not here only about the "evangelical advices" referring to the life of the monks. The advice doesn't require the man an unconditional surrender of his will, as the commandment does. If you do not listen to an advice, it sometimes will happen you to fall into mistakes, whose consequences you will suffer not because of not listening to and advice or to another, but because of the evil brought into your life by those mistakes. But transgressing the commandment will be reckoned in itself as disobedience. Even if by fulfilling a commandment you haven't reached a good result, the fact itself that you have fulfilled a commandment it will turn our unsuccess towards good. The commandment ties you on your spiritual father's person. You show him respect. The advice lets you rather within the frame of your will. That's why into commandment there is also o power coming to you from God through him who has given you that commandment, by the fact that he answers with fear and with trouble for the commandment which he gives you, in front of God. That's why he who asks somebody for a commandment, he also asks him for his prayer towards God for him to be able to fulfill that commandment. He who asks you for putting your will at his disposition, he asks that with the conscience that you put you will, through him, at the disposition of God. By that, he will commit himself, with tremble, to be held accountable for you in front of God, but only if you fulfill his commandment. That's why he prays God for you to be able to fulfill his commandment, for he is aware of the fact that your salvation depends of that. Or, he feels empowered to give strength to you too, so that you to be able to fulfill that commandment. And by that, the power will come to you both from God and from him who has given you that commandment to fulfill, through a mysterious encounter among God, the spiritual father, and yourself in front of him, you won't reckon that that commandment is emptied of power, for that commandment has been strengthened through itself too[699], but you still have received that power without accomplishing the formal conditions in a strict manner. And if you can toil for fulfilling that commandment, it won't be necessary for you to turn back to that spiritual father and prostrate in front of him in order to ask for his blessing. And if you cannot toil and fulfill the commandment, you will reckon that you have received an that commandment with a lack.

370. Question: If I ask for receiving a commandment, but the Oldman doesn't give me a commandment on purpose, or if, on the opposite, I do not ask for a commandment but he gives me a commandment, will I reckon that as a commandment and mut I keep it?

The answer of John: If asked for, he purposely didn't give you a commandment, that won't be reckoned to you as a commandment even if you have asked for it. And if he reckoned to give you a commandment, even though you haven't asked for that as such, it still remain a commandment and you will have to keep it. But one must reckon as commandments also that what is written in the dogmatic canons[700], or the Fathers' answer given as decision. But for that, you should assure your thought by asking the Fathers. This is for you are not always sure of having the right meaning of the words. So, you must rather trust their answer and fulfill it without deviation, by the help of the loving of people God and with the prayers of the saints. Amen.

you. This is for you surrender yourself to God together with your spiritual father, and God will give you power both directly and through your spiritual father.

[698] It is about a forgetfulness caused by the evil one through the temptation of another thought at that very moment.

[699] The conscience of him who gives you a commandment in the name of God, it will bring you power from God.

[700] In the Volos Edition, the editor thinks that there isn't about dogmas, but it is about the canons of the Synods, or of the Fathers.

371. The question of the same one: What will if do, if I have transgressed the commandment because of being tempted?
